citizens or not and their authority was so great that a decree of the senate could not come into force, if the tribunes of the people had protested against it. They were sacrosancti i e no one dared, under pain of death to lay hands upon them. The senatus consulta, or decrees of the senate were subscribed with the letter T as a proof that they were sanctioned by these tribunes. Val Max. They had vetoes instead of licitors to wait upon them and fulfil their commands Liv Gell. They were the guardians of the rights of the citizens against the encroachments of the senate. Hence their doors were not allowed to be closed even by night that the people might have recourse to them at all times and one of them was obliged always to be on their seats (subsellia) in the forum, in order to be ready at hand in case of an appeal to them. There are numberless examples in Livy of the manner in which they were troublesome to the generals and senate and stirred up the people against them. One tribune could protest against and invalidate a decree of the rest and the senate often availed themselves of this and gained over one tribune or more to act against the others examples of this are not rare in Livy. And so at first they were not senators i e did not sit in the senate but a tribune before the senate-house when they received the decrees of that body and either approved or rejected them. In order therefore, to make them more favourable to the senate it was at last decreed that they should be senators for in the year 623 a law was made that none but a senator should be made a tribunus plebis. Sylla abridged their power by taking from them the right of proposing laws to the people Cic. Cæsa again ordained that any one who had been a tribune of the people should not be capable of receiving any other office. But this was repealed by Cotta Pompey and Crassus. That in the time of Cicero the tribunes had the power of proposing any thing in the senate and of assembling that body may be seen from Cic ad Div. Cic Phil Gell 7 8. N B. When Augustus desired to become absolute he could express his purpose by no milder term than that of assuming the potestas tribunicia. Suet Aug 27 (cf Tac Ann 3 36) which denoted the highest power in Rome.

Tribus us f (τρίφυς Æol τριφυς) A tribe i e a division of the Roman people. Rome was divided at first into three tribes but the number was gradually increased to thirty five of which thirty one were country (rusticæ) and four city (urbane) tribes. At first the city were more honourable than the country tribes but when the censor Q Fabius Maximus had placed all the meaner people in the city tribes the country tribes became the more respectable. Hence tribu movere Cic to degrade remove from one s tribe a mark of disgrace inflicted by the censor tribum ferre i e suffragia tribus Liv tribus iure vocata id i e which voted after the prærogativa pro tribu fieri ædilem i e per tribum prærogativa id N B I When the people voted according to the tribes the assembly was called Comitia tributa. 2. | Decem sestertia | - | 80 | 14 | 7 | 0 | | |
| Centum sestertia, or centum millia sestertium | - | 807 | 5 | 10 | 0 | | |

N B The marks denoting a Sestertius nummus are IIS LLS HS which are properly abbreviations for 2½ asses — Observe also that when a line is placed over the numbers centena milia is understood as in the case of the numeral adverbs thus HS \overline{MC} is millies centies HS; whereas HS MC is only 1100 Sestertii — The Roman Pondo Argentii is computed at a little more than 3½ of our money
