For our latest news, we should say it is superior to the British Queen in size; it is large, oblong, or rather conical, with the specified tendril圆满。 It is said by Mr. Sanders to be an excellent bearer, and so far as we can see, it is probably the best we have of the kind. The common Lairess are killed by hundreds, at least cut quite down to the ground. Last year they suffered very severely under a killing frost. The flowers inns, which was inordinately last year, has its spire turned, and this is a very fine way in which it has the white or golden leaves generally turned brown. The large Acanthas had been killed by the cold, and the only one that had grown from the ground last year. The Cryptomeria has not suffered much. P. Russelliana is the only one that has grown by itself, and the Cedra of Lebanon also. All the trees that had been cut last winter have cut very sharply the catalogue of early 1867.

Early Rhusb (see p. 265).—Your correspondent who has this year planted a new tree on the north side of a public place in the town of Rhusbark with cement walls and footway, which was added several times in the year. They have grown fast and well, and are now in a very healthy state. We have a very fine example of the tree, and it is growing very well. The last two years there have been a few more of them, and we hope they will continue to grow so. The tree is particularly well suited to the soil and climate of the place, and it is likely to succeed very well. We have seen some of them growing in the same place, and we hope they will continue to grow so.

Quan-ning guide for Quan-ning, I set out early next day to visit my new acquaintance. Leaving the hotel, I passed a small stream where the water was arrested by granite stones. On each side of the road were trees of fine beauty—the variety called by the name of the species. It is a very remarkable one, and very beautiful, not only on account of the demand for the full-grown specimen, but also for the fact that it is the typical species in the early part of the season. Here, too, were dense woods of pines, spruces, and other conifers, and such like representatives of a cold or temperate climate. The Chinese character appears to differ from the European in many respects, and I think I may say that it is a very beautiful one. I have seen them both to India, and I am happy to hear this both are now growing in the adobe of the country. The abode of the Chinese has long been a desert land in India; many fruit trees have been introduced into India, but we have not had much success with them. We have succeeded in introducing the tree, and we think it will be a great improvement in the gardens.

Our road was long and rugged, and we were gradually attaining a higher elevation. The road was well marked and no difficulty in finding our acquaintance. The next day, the weather was fine, and we were able to arrive at the place in good time. We were welcomed by the master of the house, and we found that his garden was fully as beautiful as the one we had seen the day before. We were able to see a great deal of the country, and we were very well pleased with what we saw.

We have observed a table spread and covered with many good things, which were an offering to Buddha, and before which we had to sit down and eat. As the valley in which the temple is placed is fully 3000 feet above the sea, I felt the air much cooler than it was on the Plain, and I was able to enjoy the fresh air and the beauty of the place. We were able to see the temple from the hillside, and we were very well pleased with what we saw.

We then went to the master's house, and we were able to find our way out through the doors, windows, or broken roof, or, in any way it could. My position here was not a very good one, but I was able to get a little warmth from the fire. We then went to dinner, and we were able to do so without any uncomfortable feelings. The master of the house had given us some prospect of being able to get the services of the Mr. Wang. The priests and some of the visitors now came in, and the meal began. The meal was very well appointed, and it was all very well cooked. We had a very good time, and we were very well pleased with what we saw.

Our road led us up to the head of the valley in the direction of the temple. We were very much pleased with what we saw as we ascended, and we were very well pleased with what we saw as we neared the temple. We were very much pleased with what we saw as we ascended, and we were very well pleased with what we saw as we neared the temple. We were very much pleased with what we saw as we ascended, and we were very well pleased with what we saw as we neared the temple. We were very much pleased with what we saw as we ascended, and we were very well pleased with what we saw as we neared the temple. We were very much pleased with what we saw as we ascended, and we were very well pleased with what we saw as we neared the temple. We were very much pleased with what we saw as we ascended, and we were very well pleased with what we saw as we neared the temple. We were very much pleased with what we saw as we ascended, and we were very well pleased with what we saw as we neared the temple. We were very much pleased with what we saw as we ascended, and we were very well pleased with what we saw as we neared the temple. We were very much pleased with what we saw as we ascended, and we were very well pleased with what we saw as we neared the temple. We were very much pleased with what we saw as we ascended, and we were very well pleased with what we saw as we neared the temple. We were very much pleased with what we saw as we ascended, and we were very well pleased with what we saw as we neared the temple.