

MIND:

A QUARTERLY REVIEW

OF

PSYCHOLOGY AND PHILOSOPHY.

No. 1. JANUARY, 1876.

156 PAGES. PRICE, $4.00 PER YEAR.

Published by D. Appleton & Co., New York.

THIS new and important periodical, devoted to the science of mind in its modern aspects, has a broad claim upon the thoughtful classes of the community—teachers, professors, physicians, lawyers, clergymen, students, and all interested in the general advance of ideas.

MIND is edited by Prof. Croom Robertson, of University College, London, assisted by Prof. Bain and a large number of the ablest psychologists of England; and it will be an organ for the publication of original researches, and a critical record of the progress made in psychology and philosophy in England, on the Continent, and in the United States. Mental phenomena will be taken up on the physiological side, as well as on the side of consciousness, as displayed in the inferior races of mankind, and in the lower animals; in its abnormal phases, as insanity and idiocy; in its relation to language, and in its bearing upon the subject of education. It will also give careful reports of the state and progress of psychological study in the universities of different countries.

The work has been received with great favor by the press, as is shown by the following quotations:

"The papers now presented afford a gratifying foretaste of the future character of the work. The selection of topics is judicious; and the treatment, in the main, solid and instructive, free from fanciful speculations, and marked by wide learning and sound reasoning. There are no traces of devotion to an exclusive school, but everything promises a loyal allegiance to the cause of liberal thought and generous culture."—N. Y. Tribune.

"The experiment of an exclusively psychological and philosophical review in England will be observed with interest, and we heartily wish it success. We welcome the promise of the first number, and hope the editors will avoid playing into the hands of any school or party."—London Athenæum.

"Its list of contributors includes all the most famous names in modern English philosophy: Prof. Bain, Mr. Herbert Spencer, Mr. G. H. Lewes, Mr. James Sully, Mr. Mark Pattison, Mr. Henry Sedgwick, Mr. Hodgson, Mr. Venn, and the editor, Prof. Croom Robertson. Such names are a guarantee that the new Review will have, in reality, the two chief merits which it claims—that it will put its readers in possession of everything of value that is being done in psychology and philosophy all over Europe, and that it will not be the organ of one school of thought, but will open its columns fairly to all sides. A review conducted on such principles can hardly fail to have a powerful influence on European thought. It is to appear only once in a quarter, and nothing is to be done for it in a hurry, nothing by half-competent hands."—London Examiner.

"We cannot conclude without a cordial welcome to a very spirited experiment in English literature, and an emphatic recommendation of it to all who are interested in the progress of English philosophy."—London Academy.

"It is with no small satisfaction that we notice the appearance of a new quarterly journal in which the claims of physiology, as the basis of a large amount of psychology, will be fully recognized. Its appearance and prospects of success point also to a much more widespread interest in philosophy than was taken in it even ten years ago."—London Lancet.
