PREFACE.

WHILE the title-page in some measure explains the design of this book, it may assist the reader still further to mention that he is entitled to look within its pages for a notice of every event which has in any way excited or moulded our national life during the last thirty years. Regarding the more important of these events, an endeavour has been made to exhibit them with such fulness as will, in ordinary cases, supersede a reference to any other authority. Brevity, of course, required to be studied in every instance; and for the purpose of bringing the kernel of the occurrence before the reader in the shortest space, it has been sought as often as possible to get the more important incidents narrated in the precise way they appeared to those who actually saw or took part in them. Any tendency that witnesses might have to exaggerate or misreport has been checked, as occasion required, by referring to other sources of unquestionable authority.

The main idea of the Annalist was to bring before the reader all the noteworthy occurrences which have taken place in our time, and to furnish him with such details regarding them as would enable him to comprehend the events in an intelligent manner. Every occurrence—metropolitan or provincial—which gave rise to public excitement or discussion, or became the starting-point for new trains of thought affecting our social life, has been judged proper matter for this volume. The measure throughout of the importance of an event has invariably been the extent to which it influenced our habits or recollections, not the apparent importance at the time it happened. This may be particularly noticed under the head of Accidents of certain classes—fires, shipwrecks, and colliery explosions, where, however calamitous in themselves, the details are in general so uniform, that little more than the mere facts of the occurrence were necessary to be recorded. When an incident was found to possess the requisite conditions for record, another object constantly present to the Compiler was, to let the reader see not only how important were the events of his own time, but the precise order in which the little occurrences making up the life or body of an event unrolled themselves in the great historic scroll.

In the proceedings of Parliament, an endeavour has been made to notice all those Debates which were either remarkable as affecting the fate of Parties, or led to important changes in our relation with Foreign Powers. A note has also been made of the progress of all important Bills through Parliament, and the majorities by which they were carried or rejected.

Foreign occurrences, so far as they affected the interests of this country, or even gave rise to public discussion here, have been recorded, it is hoped, with circumstantial accuracy. The widest possible interpretation has always been given to any event in Foreign Countries which could be considered even remotely to affect the interests of this Kingdom.

A few incidents have been recorded mainly remarkable for their curiosity ; but it was not thought likely to add to the usefulness of this compilation by making these a prominent feature of the book. Again, though a complete Obituary was no part of the plan, it was considered to be in perfect harmony with the main design the volume, to present brief notices of the death of such persons as were prominently mixed up with the public events of the time, or were widely known for their connexion with Literature, Science, or Art.

Dealing with a great variety of occurrences which could only be included or set aside from an individual opinion of their importance, it is not to be expected that the "Annals" can reach any other standard of acknowledged excellence than one of degree corresponding to the utility with which each reader finds it facilitate his searches, and illustrate or enlarge his knowledge. Mere word-books, or books written with reference to a single branch of inquiry, may through time attain that kind of perfection which includes all it is possible to exhibit for the reader's information. Here there can at best be only such an approximation to completeness as is consonant with the exercise of judgment and discretion—judgment as to what it was essential to record, and discretion as to the manner of recording. Any plan so detailed and minute as to include all events, would have reduced the "Annals" to a mere Index, entering thereby on fields already well occupied, and destroying at the same time that special feature in the book of describing occurrences at a length proportionate to their apparent interest.

To correct omissions from want of judgment as well as errors from ignorance, the writer looks for such help as Criticism fairly applied can always furnish to the first issue of a work, dealing so frequently with names and dates. A few matters omitted by accident have been added at the end.

Though the events are set down day by day in their order of occurrence, the book is, in its own way, the history of an important and well-defined historic cycle, framed in a manner likely to inform only less exactly than those higher classed treatises where events are generalized and commented upon with reference to some theory or party. In these "Annals" the ordinary reader may make himself acquainted with the history of his own time in a way that has at least the merit of simplicity and readiness ; the more cultivated student will doubtless be thankful for the opportunity given him of passing down the historic stream, undisturbed by any other theoretical or party feeling than what he himself has at hand to explain the philosophy of our national story.

Some trouble has been taken to verify the dates of the more important occurrences, a labour not always easily accomplished, owing to the vague manner in which the precise day was originally indicated. Phrases like "recently," "last week," or "a few days back," give much trouble to the careful annalist. Without pretending that perfection has been attained in even such a simple matter as this, it is hoped that no error has been committed likely to mislead to any serious extent either the general reader or special student.

As the utility of a work of this kind greatly depends on the readiness with which the required incident can be found, considerable care has been taken in the construction of the Index. Framed mainly to facilitate a reference to occurrences, it was judged better to classify many of the entries under general headings, than to index exactly with reference to persons and places. At the same time it will be found that the latter system has not been altogether excluded from the scheme; for while every event in the text has been entered primarily under the letter where it appeared most natural to place it, many occurrences of importance have two, and even three cross-references identifying them with some locality or individual. It was found that exclusive adherence to either system would lessen the usefulness of the Index as a guide to a collection of facts so numerous and varied as almost to defy classification. Wherever the general headings admitted of entries being made with an exclusive regard to proper names, a sub-alphabetical arrangement has been carried out; in others it was thought that the incident sought for would be sooner seized by simply following the order of occurrence. The single exception to this latter rule occurs under the head "Parliament," where the entries are too varied and unconnected to permit of the chronological system being applied. With these explanations, the reader may be reminded that an Index at best can only aid the memory, and never supersede it altogether. For an inquirer who has only a vague notion that some occurrence did take place at an indefinite period, but who neither knows where it happened, who took part in it, or any details from which the precise character of the event could be gathered—for such an inquirer no index yet devised can afford much help. The "Annals" Index will be found in some respects even fuller than the text, for in the case of such occurrences as the meetings of Learned Societies, and Annual Festivals, which admitted of only brief entries in the text, it was thought best to confine them to the Index altogether, and show the event there year by year.

The main foundation for a work like the "Annals," was, of course, the newspaper of the day; but these watchful recorders of events required to be themselves watched, and even corrected and modified, wherever the passing current of feeling tended to obscure or twist the facts of an occurrence. The reader will see how frequently this has been done by the references made to personal and official records, consisting for the most part of Memoirs, Diaries, Parliamentary Votes and Debates, Diplomatic Correspondence, the proceedings of Learned Societies, and Law Reports. In addition to these, and tending greatly to facilitate the labour of compilation, the volumes most frequently consulted were the comprehensive Date Books of Haydn and Townsend, the useful series of Annual Registers extending over the period, and the Companion to the Almanac so long issued under the careful supervision of Mr. Charles Knight.

The Table of Administrations is designed to assist the reader in following the various political changes noticed in their chronological order in the "Annals."

ANNALS OF OUR TIME.

June 20.—Accession of Queen Victoria.—On Tuesday morning, shortly after 2 o'clock, the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Lord Chamberlain left Windsor for Kensington Palace—where the Princess Victoria was residing with her mother—to inform her Royal Highness of the King's death. The details of the interview current in society at the time are thus set down by Miss Wynn:—"They reached Kensington Palace at about 5: they knocked, they rang, they thumped for a considerable time before they could rouse the porter at the gate; they were again kept waiting in the courtyard, then turned into one of the lower rooms, where they seemed forgotten by everybody. They rang the bell, and desired that the attendant of the Princess Victoria might be sent to inform her Royal Highness that they requested an audience on business of importance. After another delay, and another ringing to inquire the cause, the attendant was summoned, who stated that the Princess was in such a sweet sleep she could not venture to disturb her. Then they said, 'We are come to the Queen on business of state, and even her sleep must give way to that!' It did; and to prove that she did not keep them waiting, in a few minutes she came into the room in a loose white nightgown and shawl, her nightcap thrown off, and her hair falling upon her shoulders, her feet in slippers, tears in her eyes, but perfectly collected and dignified."—Diaries of a Lady of Quality, pp. 296, 297. Lord Melbourne was immediately sent for, and the Privy Council summoned to assemble at Kensington at 11 o'clock. At that hour the Queen, with the Duchess of Kent, entered the council chamber, attended by her officers of state, and took her seat on a throne erected for the occasion. The Lord Chancellor then administered to her the usual oaths, binding her to govern the kingdom according to its laws and customs. She first received the homage of her uncles, the dukes of Cumberland and Sussex, the Queen with admirable grace standing up and preventing the latter from kneeling. The Cabinet Ministers and other privy councillors present took the oath of allegiance and supremacy, kneeling before the throne. The former surrendered their seals of office, which her Majesty returned, and Ministers kissed her hand on re-appointment. A declaration was drawn up, and signed by all present, acknowledging faith and constant obedience to "our only lawful and rightful liege Lady Victoria, by the grace of God Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Defender of the Faith." Her Majesty was pleased to make the following Declaration:—"The severe and afflicting loss which the nation has sustained by the death of his Majesty my beloved uncle, has devolved upon me the duty of administering the government of this empire. This awful responsibility is imposed upon me so suddenly, and at so early a period of my life, that I should feel myself utterly oppressed by the burden were I not sustained by the hope that Divine Providence, which has called me to this work, will give me strength for the performance of it, and that I shall find in the purity of my intentions, and in my zeal for the public welfare, that support and those resources which usually belong to a more mature age, and to longer experience. I place my firm reliance upon the wisdom of Parliament, and upon the loyalty and affection of my people. I esteem it also a peculiar advantage that I succeed to a sovereign whose constant regard for the rights and liberties of his subjects, and whose desire to promote the amelioration of the laws and institutions of the country, have rendered his name the object of general attachment and veneration. Educated in England, under the tender and enlightened care of a most affectionate mother, I have learned from my infancy to respect and love the constitution of my native country. It will be my unceasing study to maintain the Reformed religion as by law established, securing at the same time to all the full enjoyment of religious liberty; and I shall steadily protect the rights, and promote, to the utmost of my power, the happiness and welfare of all classes of my subjects." Her Majesty was also pleased to take and subscribe the oath relating to the security of the Church of Scotland. The following day (Wednesday) was fixed for making proclamation of her accession to the throne.

21.—Her Majesty left Kensington between 9 and 10 A.M. for St. James's Palace, where she was received by members of the Royal Family, Cabinet Ministers, and officers of the household. In a short time she made her appearance at the window of an ante-room adjoining the audience chamber, and was received with deafening cheers. Her Majesty was observed to look fatigued and pale, but acknowledged the cheers with which she was greeted with ease and dignity. She was dressed in deep mourning, with white tippet, white cuffs, and a border of white lace under a small black bonnet, which was placed far back on her head, exhibiting her fair hair in front, parted over the forehead. Her Majesty was accompanied to the window by Lord Melbourne, Prime Minister, and Lord Lansdowne, President of the Council. In the courtyard beneath the window of the presence chamber was Garter King-at-arms, with heralds, pursuivants, and other officials in their robes of state. The proclamation read was in these words:—“Whereas it hath pleased Almighty God to call to his mercy our late Sovereign Lord, King William the Fourth, of blessed memory, by whose decease the imperial crown of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland is solely and rightfully come to the High and Mighty Princess Alexandrina Victoria; We, therefore, the lords spiritual and temporal of this realm, being here assisted with those of his late Majesty's Privy Council, with numbers of other principal gentlemen of quality, the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and citizens of London, do now hereby with one voice and consent of tongue proclaim that the High and Mighty Princess Alexandrina Victoria is now, by the death of our late Sovereign, King William the Fourth of happy memory, become our only lawful and rightful liege Lady Alexandrina Victoria I. Queen of Great Britain and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. to whom we acknowledge all faith and constant obedience with all humble and hearty affection, beseeching God, by whom kings and queens do reign, to bless the Royal Princess Alexandrina Victoria with long and happy years to reign. God save the Queen.” When Garter King-at-arms had ceased reading, the band played the National Anthem, and the Park and Tower guns pealed out a jubilant chorus.

22.—A royal message laid on the table of both Houses of Parliament, stating that it was inexpedient, in the judgment of her Majesty, that any new measure should be recommended for their adoption beyond such as might be requisite for carrying on the public service from the close of the present session to the meeting of the new Parliament. The debate which ensued was characterised by an entire unanimity as to the excellences of the late King, though there was a wide difference of opinion touching the shortcomings of Ministers.

24.—Mr. Montefiore (afterwards Sir Moses) chosen Sheriff of London; the first Jew chosen for that office in England.

27.—Ernest Augustus, duke of Cumberland, and since the death of William IV. King of Hanover, enters his kingdom.

cellor of the Exchequer. The gross income for the ensuing year he estimated at 47,240,000*l.* and the expenditure at 45,786,000*l.* The Customs he considered likely to produce 21,100,000*l.*, and the Excise 13,800,000*l.* The amount of tea cleared for home consumption in 1836 was 49,844,000 lbs. and the duty 3,886,000*l.*

July 4.—Grand Junction Railway, from Liverpool to Birmingham, opened.

5.—The King of Hanover issues a proclamation calling in question the Constitution of 1833. The Constitution (he affirmed) was neither in form or substance binding on him, and he was not satisfied that it gave any guarantee for the permanent prosperity of his subjects. Writing to the Duke of Buckingham, he says, “I had a most difficult card to play, and until I could see my way plainly I could not act true to my principles. . . Radicalism has been here all the order of the day, and all the lower class appointed to office were more or less imbued with these laudable principles. . . But I have cut the wings of this democracy.”

8.—The late King William IV. buried this night with great solemnity in the Royal Chapel of St. George, Windsor. Chief mourner, the Duke of Sussex. The Dowager-Queen Adelaide was present in the royal closet.

13.—Her Majesty and the Duchess of Kent leave Kensington and take up their residence in Buckingham Palace.

17.—Parliament prorogued by the Queen in person. The royal speech for the occasion was prepared with unusual care, and delivered in a style which disarmed criticism. “It will be my care (her Majesty said) to strengthen our institutions, civil and ecclesiastical, by discreet improvement wherever improvement is required, and to do all in my power to compose and allay animosity and discord.” This being the first visit of the Queen to Parliament, an unusual amount of enthusiasm was shown. Every spot from which a view of the pageant could be obtained was densely crowded, and deafening cheers greeted the youthful sovereign at every step. In the Gazette of the same evening appeared a proclamation dissolving this parliament (the third of William IV.).

24.—An extraordinary and fatal parachute descent was made by Robert Cocking, painter, from Mr. Green's balloon, which rose in Vauxhall Gardens about 8 o'clock. Over Kennington-common Mr. Green said the balloon was stationary for a time, and Cocking, then swinging in his basket below, wished to know their altitude. “About 1,000 feet,” Mr. Green replied. “Very well; let me know when we arrive at about 1,500 feet, and at every additional 500 feet, until we arrive at 5,000 feet, for that is the altitude at which I wish to descend.” This was done, and the parachute severed, when the balloon shot up with the velocity of a rocket. The parachute, unable to resist the pressure of the atmosphere, collapsed round the poor inventor, and came thundering to the earth. The fall was seen by several people in the neighbourhood of Norwood. The unfortunate man died almost instantly from the injuries he received on reaching the ground. Mr. Green and a companion made a descent at Maidstone about 9 o'clock.

Considerable public excitement consequent on the results of the general election. Sir Francis Burdett retired from Westminster, recommending Sir Geo. Murray as his successor; Mr. Leader, who formerly opposed Sir Francis, elected along with Gen. Evans. Mr. Hume rejected in Middlesex, and elected for Kilbarney.

August 5.—Died at her residence in Piccadilly, Harriet, Duchess of St. Albans, aged sixty-six. Her father, Matthew Mellon, held a commission in the East India Company's service, but died shortly before she was born. Her mother married a second time, and afterwards went on the stage, taking young Harriet with her for juvenile characters. She continued on the stage, meeting with great favour, till her marriage with Mr. Coutts, the banker, in 1815. He died in 1822, at the advanced age of eighty-seven, leaving her universal legatee, with a share in the business of the banking-house. The personality was sworn under 600,000*l.* In 1827 she married William, duke of St. Albans, then in the twenty-seventh year of his age, and on her death bequeathed to his grace 10,000*l.* per annum, Sir Francis Burdett's house in Piccadilly, and an estate at Highgate.

7.—A meeting held in the King's Head, Poultry, in aid of the Paisley weavers, 14,000 of whom had been out of employ for four months.

14.—A boy three years and a half old murdered in the playground at Leeds by an idiot youth named Jeffgate.

16.—Died William Daniell, R. A.

23.—Irruption of water into the Thames Tunnel. One of Mr. Brunel's assistants writes: "Seeing a quantity of loose sand falling near the gallery, I gave the signal to be hauled into the shaft. I had scarcely done so when I observed the ground give way, and the water descending in a thousand streams, like a cascade." Within an hour the Tunnel was entirely filled. No lives were lost.

26.—Railroad from Paris to St. Germain (the first in France) opened.

September 5.—Collision in the Thames between the Apollo steamer, from Yarmouth, and the Monarch, a Leith packet. The Apollo sank, but those on board, with the exception of stewardess and two children, were saved by the Monarch crew.

Died at his cottage, near Durham, Count Barowloski, the well-known Polish dwarf. His height was under thirty-six inches, but his body was of the most perfect symmetry, and his mind cultivated to an extraordinary degree by travel and study.

9.—News received of the mutiny and murder on board the British ship Fanny, Captain M'Kay. A mixed crew of Manilla men and Lascars fell upon the Europeans, murdered the commander and other officers, and plundered the ship, which they afterwards sank.

13.—Letter received by the Geographical Society from Capt. Back, R.N. stating the obstacles which had prevented his carrying out the mission of discovery on the N.W. shore of the Hudson Bay territories, on which he had started in H.M. ship Terror in June 1836, and from which he had now returned.

Meeting of British Association held at Liverpool: Pres. the Earl of Burlington.

14.—Fire at an india-rubber and shell shop in the Strand, when three inmates on the second floor—Mr. Harris, his child, and servant—lost their lives.

October 3.—The old royal stud sold at the Hampton Court paddocks. Total realized, 15,692 guineas.

Died at Aremberg, aged 54, Hortense Eugénie de Beauharnais, ex-Queen of Holland, mother of Prince Louis Napoleon.

8.—Died, in his 72d year, Samuel Wesley, musician, son of Charles Wesley and nephew of the founder of Methodism.

17.—Died at Weimar, aged 55, Johann Nepomuk Hummel, composer and pianoforte player.

25.—Heard in the Court of Common Pleas the case of libel raised by Mr. Easthope, M.P. one of the proprietors of the Morning Chronicle, against C. M. Westmacott, of the Age. The libel was contained in a placard issued for electioneering purposes; a verdict for 40*l.* damage was given against the defendant.

November 1.—Decree of the King of Hanover annulling the Constitution of 1833.

3.—Another irruption of water into the Thames Tunnel; one man drowned.

6.—The Papineau riots commenced at Montreal by the opponents of Government, known as the "Fils de la Liberté."

9.—This being the first Lord Mayor's Day since her accession, the Queen proceeded through the city in state to dine with his lordship (Sir John Cowan, Bt.) at Guildhall. The Queen left Buckingham Palace at 2, accompanied in the state carriage by the Duchess of Sutherland, Mistress of the Robes, and the Earl of Albemarle, Master of the Horse. The Royal Family, ambassadors, Cabinet Ministers, and nobility followed in a train of two hundred carriages, extending nearly a mile and a half. The day was kept as a holiday throughout London, and, though the weather was very bad, nothing could exceed the enthusiasm with which her Majesty was greeted by the dense crowds she passed. At Temple Bar the Lord Mayor delivered the keys of the city to the Queen, which she restored in the most gracious manner to his lordship, who then took his place immediately in front of the royal carriage. On passing St. Paul's, the senior scholar of Christ's Hospital delivered an address of congratulation, and the National Anthem was sung by the pupils. Guildhall was reached about half-past 3 o'clock. A throne and chair of state were placed upon a raised platform at the east end of the banqueting-hall. The Queen wore the order of the Garter, and a magnificent diamond circlet on her head. After the banquet, the Lord Mayor proposed, "The health of her most gracious Majesty," which her Majesty acknowledged, and gave in return "The Lord Mayor, and prosperity to the City of London." The only other toast, "The Royal Family," was given by the Lord Mayor. Her Majesty left for Buckingham Palace at half-past 8. The city was illuminated in the evening.

15.—The new Parliament opened by commission, for preliminary business. The Right Hon. James Abercromby re-elected Speaker.

20.—Parliament opened by her Majesty. The royal speech concluded:—"In meeting this Parliament, the first that has been elected under my authority, I am anxious to declare my confidence in your loyalty and wisdom. The early age at which I am called to the sovereignty of this kingdom, renders it a more imperative duty that, under Divine Providence, I should place my reliance upon your cordial co-operation, and upon the love and affection of all my people." The customary address was carried in the Lords without a division, and in the Commons by a majority of 509 to 20.

23.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer, after a debate of some length, obtains the consent of the House to the appointment of a Committee to inquire into the Pension List.

In Canada, Colonel Gare retires from the attack of St. Denis, but the rebels leave the place a few days afterwards, on learning the success of Colonel Wetherell at St. Charles.

December 6.—The House of Commons, when discussing certain points of order connected with Irish affairs, forgets its decorum so far as to compel the Speaker, on the following evening, to intimate his intention of resigning should such a scene be repeated.

12.—Seven professors of Göttingen, including Ewald, the brothers Grimm, and Gerwinus, having protested against the recent decree of the King of Hanover, are deprived of their offices and means of livelihood.

14.—1,300 men under Sir John Colborne attack and defeat a body of Canadian rebels, who had entrenched themselves in the fortified village of St. Eustache, Lower Canada.

15.—Reduction of postage dues before both Houses of Parliament.

16.—Message from her Majesty, recommending to the consideration of Parliament an increase of the grant formerly made to the Duchess of Kent. 30,000*l.* voted.

22.—Debate in the Commons on the affairs of Lower Canada, the Assembly having refused to entertain the supplies, or proceed otherwise to the despatch of business. The complaints were: arbitrary conduct on the part of Governors; insufficiency of the Legislative Council; illegal appropriation of public money; violent prorogation of the Provincial Parliament; Government connivance at the insolvency of the Receiver-general; and, to the British portion of the community, the additional grievance of being subject to French law and procedure.

Heard in the Court of Queen's Bench, the action brought by Thomas Duncombe, M.P. against T. S. Daniel, barrister, for libel at the time of the late Finsbury election. Verdict for the plaintiff, with 100*l.* damages. Sum divided among Finsbury charities.

23.—Captain Burnes, British agent at Cabool, reports to the Governor-general that M. Vicovich, the Russian agent, had informed Dost Mahomed the Russian Government desired him to state his sincere sympathy with the difficulties in which he was placed, and the pleasure it would afford it to assist him in repelling the attacks of Runjeet Singh. The Russian Government, he continued, was ready to furnish him with a sum of money for this purpose, and would continue the supply annually, expecting in return the Ameer's good offices.

Parliament prorogued by the Queen to the 16th January.

26.—Riot at Sheephead Workhouse, Leicestershire. The mob smashed the windows and destroyed the furniture, but dispersed on the military being brought from Nottingham.

28.—Fire at Davis' wharf, on the Thames. Damage estimated at 150,000*l.*

29.—Colonel M'Nab, in the course of operations against the rebels on Navy Island, Niagara River, seizes the steamer Caroline, engaged in carrying supplies, sets her on fire, and permits her to drift over the Falls.

January 7.—Hard frost commenced.

10.—The Royal Exchange burnt. The flames were first perceived issuing from Lloyd's coffee-room, in the north-west corner, about half-past 10 o'clock. Owing to the intense frost there was much difficulty in procuring water, and the flames were not got under till the fire had in a measure exhausted itself, at noon the following day. Two hours after its outbreak, the whole range of offices belonging to the Exchange Insurance Company, Lloyd's captains' room, and underwriters' room were one mass of fire. The flames reached the new tower about 1 o'clock, and the bells, eight in number, which had been chiming during the destruction, fell one after the other, carrying along with them the roof, stone-work, and arch over the central entrance. The Lord Mayor and several aldermen were present during the greater part of the conflagration. The police were assisted by a party of soldiers from the Tower and the Bank guard. The statue of Sir Thomas Gresham, the founder, which had escaped the Great Fire of 1666, was totally destroyed. So vivid and extensive was the conflagration, that it was seen at Windsor with the greatest distinctness. It was generally believed that the fire originated from the over-heating of a stove in or below one of Lloyd's rooms.

11.—Concluded in the High Court of Justice, Edinburgh, the trial of five Glasgow cotton-spinners, charged with mobbing, threatening, and conspiring to burn and murder. On the eighth day of the trial the jury, after deliberating five hours, returned by a majority a verdict against all the prisoners, who were each sentenced to seven years' transportation.

13.—Died, in his eighty-seventh year, John Scott, Earl of Eldon, Attorney-General for six years, and Lord Chancellor for nearly twenty-five. He finally resigned the great seal in April 1827, but would probably have held office for some years longer, had he agreed in the policy of yielding the Roman Catholic claims. His personal property was sworn under 600,000*l*.

15.—The jury, in the case of Miss Neville, tried in the Irish Court of Queen's Bench, find that she was not capable of managing her own affairs. Her delusions were of a religious character.

Sir Francis Head, having had the misfortune to differ from the Home Government on one or two points of Colonial policy, resigns the office of Lieutenant-governor of Upper Canada.

16.—Parliament re-assembles. Lord John Russell introduces a bill to suspend the existing constitution of Lower Canada, and at the same time moves an address to the throne, pledging the House to assist her Majesty in restoring tranquillity to her Canadian dominions.

Earl of Durham appointed Governor-general and High Commissioner for the adjustment of the affairs of the provinces of Lower and Upper Canada.

Decision in the Court of Queen's Bench, that no steamboat shall navigate between London Bridge and Limehouse Reach at a greater speed than five miles an hour.

20.—Thermometer in Hyde Park at 6.30 A.M. 3° Fahr. The Thames blocked with ice, so that people could pass from shore to shore below bridge.

22.—Mr. Roebuck heard at the bar of the House of Commons against the Canadian Bill.

24.—Died in Kensington Union Workhouse, Charles Baron Kierrulf, a Swedish nobleman and brigadier-general in the army. He was discovered in a state of destitution in November last.

29.—Canada Suppression Bill read a third time in the House of Commons.

Lord Brougham, in the course of presenting an anti-slavery petition from Leeds, took occasion to speak at length, and with great animation, on that traffic, which he said flourishes under the very expedient adopted to crush it, and increases in consequence of the very measures resorted to for its extinction.

February 8.—Canada Bill passed the House of Lords; Lords Ellenborough, Fitzwilliam, and Brougham dissenting.

Navigation resumed on the Thames, the thaw having commenced on the 6th.

13.—A great meeting of women held at Elland, in Yorkshire, to protest against the New Poor Law Amendment Act. The measure was denounced with great fervour.

The question of trades' unions brought under the notice of the House by Mr. Wakley and Mr. D. O'Connell. The Government promised inquiry.

15.—Mr. Grote's annual motion regarding the ballot defeated on a division, showing 315 to 198.

20.—Mr. Fielden, M.P. for Oldham, moves the repeal of the Poor Law Amendment Act. Sir Robert Peel stated that, considering that the experiment had lasted only four years, it was as satisfactory as any man could expect. Motion rejected.

21.—Silvestre de Sacy, eminent Orientalist, died at Paris, aged 80.

25.—At Notting-hill, a pedestrian, named Earle, performed the task of walking twenty miles backward, and the same number forward, in eight hours.

26.—Various outrages committed on females during the past week by a character known as "Spring-heeled Jack," or "The Ghost."

28.—Mr. O'Connell reprimanded by the Speaker for a recent speech at the "Crown and Anchor," imputing dishonesty to members of Election Committees.

March 6.—Sir W. Molesworth introduces a vote of censure on Lord Glenelg, Secretary for the Colonies, but withdraws it after a discussion of two nights, in favour of an amendment, proposed by Lord Sandon, declaring that the present condition of Canada was owing to the ambiguous, dilatory, and irresolute course of her Majesty's Ministers. Division—for Ministers, 316; against, 287.

Destructive fire in Paper-buildings, Temple, presumed to have arisen from a candle left burning in the chambers of Mr. Maule, M.P.; Nos. 12, 13, and 14, four houses, comprising about eighty chambers, totally destroyed. The Attorney-general was one of the greatest sufferers.

8.—Decision of the Court of Session in the Auchterarder case. The Lords of the First Division, having considered the cases for the Earl of Kinnoul, Rev. Robert Young, and the Presbytery of Auchterarder, find that the Earl has legally and effectually exercised his right as patron, and that the Presbytery in refusing to take trial of Mr. Young's qualifications have acted to the hurt and prejudice of the pursuer, and contrary to the provisions of the statutes libelled on.

15.—Mr. Villiers moves that the House resolve itself into a committee to consider the Act relating to the importation of corn. In favour, 95; against, 300.

16.—Boiler explosion on board the Victoria, of Hull, when running an experimental trip from London to the Nore. Chief-engineer Allen, hearing the explosion when on deck, rushed into the engine-room and stopped the engines, but was so frightfully scalded that he died in a few hours. Three assistant engineers were also killed.

May 2.—Died in Bethlehem Hospital, Jonathan Martin, the incendiary who fired York Minster on the 2d February, 1829.

7.—Trial commenced at Paris of the individuals charged with being concerned in a plot against the life of the King of the French. The principal actor was one Hubert, a currier, who, when arrested in December, had concealed in his hat the plan of a machine resembling Fieschi's, but more scientifically constructed. A letter written in cypher was also traced to him, which, after much study, was deciphered, and detailed the plan of attack. "We intend to hire an apartment in the neighbourhood of the Chamber of Deputies, and a stable in the same house, where we will place the material necessary for the construction of the two machines, which will be put together the day before the opening of the session. When the King shall have reached within a certain distance we shall bring out the machines from under the gateway, and in three minutes I pledge myself to have foudroyé the King and the whole of his staff. In the meantime, two men stationed on the roof of the house will throw Congreve rockets on the Chamber of Deputies, which will be in a blaze in less than five minutes." Hubert was sentenced to transportation for life, three others to five years' imprisonment, one to three years, and three acquitted.

8.—Riot in the churchyard of Tuam, caused by the Protestant curate attempting to read the English service over the grave of a person said to have died a Roman Catholic.

Riot at Truro, caused by the churchwardens attaching goods belonging to four dissenters in the town who refused payment of church rates.

12.—Public dinner given to Sir Robert Peel at Merchant Taylors' Hall by 300 Conservative Members of the House of Commons. In the course of a lengthy exposition of his policy, Sir Robert said, "My object for some years past has been to lay the foundations of a great party, which, existing in the House of Commons, and deriving its strength from the popular will, should diminish the risk and deaden the shock of collisions between the two deliberative branches of the legislature."

17.—Died at his hotel, in the Rue de Florentin, Paris, in his eighty-fourth year, Prince Talleyrand, statesman and diplomatist. His will forbids his autobiography to be published before 1868.

21.—Reported robbery of 12,000*l.* in sovereigns, from the residence of T. Rogers, bill-broker, Mile End, by thieves, who had apparently secreted themselves in the house. Rogers was afterwards apprehended, and committed on suspicion of attempting to defraud his creditors by reporting the robbery. He was, however, liberated on 26th July.

24.—Launch, at Limehouse, of the steamship British Queen, intended to carry goods and passengers between Liverpool and New York. She was considered the largest vessel in the world, being 275 feet in length, and 40 feet in breadth between the paddle-boxes; tonnage, 1,860 tons.

26.—Eliza Grimwood found murdered in her bedroom, Wellington-terrace, Waterloo-road. She was wounded in several places, but the immediate cause of death was a wound in the neck, extending nearly from ear to ear, and severing the windpipe. Her left thumb was also cut, as if she had struggled with the murderer. The unfortunate woman lived with a person named Hubbard, a bricklayer, separated from his wife, and had been in the habit of taking persons home with her from the theatres. On the Friday night she was said to have met with a person in the Strand, who had the look of a foreigner, and dressed like a gentleman. At the inquest, the person able to speak to Eliza Grimwood's latest movements was a companion named Catherine Edwin, who was with her in the Strand when the foreigner came up. He was an Italian, but could speak English fluently, and had been acquainted with the deceased for months. He frequented the neighbourhood of the Spread Eagle, Regent-circus, and wore a ring given him by the deceased, bearing the words "Semper fidelis." He also carried a clasp-knife, with which the wounds might have been inflicted. With this person she entered a cab, and drove home about midnight. He was not afterwards seen, and how or when he left the house was never ascertained. Hubbard slept in an apartment alone, and discovered the body (he said) when going out to work in the morning. He awoke a commercial traveller who slept in the house with another woman, and then alarmed the police. The deceased was about twenty-five years of age, of sober habits, and had saved a little money. At the inquest a verdict of wilful murder was returned against some person or persons unknown. On the 11th June Hubbard was committed to Horsemonger Lane prison, in consequence of an anonymous letter purporting to come from the person who accompanied Eliza Grimwood home, but no evidence being forthcoming before the magistrate he was discharged, and afterwards went to America. On the 13th June the effects of the murdered woman were sold on the premises, and realized high prices.

28.—Riotous proceedings commenced at Boughton, Kent, under the leadership of John Thom, alias Sir William Courtenay, a character who had formerly made himself conspicuous in the neighbourhood of Canterbury. He had been for some time confined in a lunatic asylum, but since his release had been living among the peasantry of Boughton, boasting of his birth, and the great possessions unjustly withheld from him. He also blasphemously styled himself the Saviour of the world. In the character of a political reformer, and under pretence of relieving them from the terrors of the New Poor Law, he gathered a band of nearly 100 ignorant and discontented people, and drew them up near Bossenden farm on the evening of the 30th. On the following morning he deliberately shot a constable named Mears. The country now became alarmed, and a party of military was sent from Canterbury to break up the gang. On seeing the soldiers advance, Courtenay again deliberately drew his pistol, and shot Lieut. Bennett, of the 45th regiment, who was riding in advance of his party, and fell dead upon the spot. The soldiers then immediately fired, when Courtenay and eight others fell dead, two were mortally wounded, and a number crippled for life. Before the engagement Courtenay administered the Sacrament in a wood, and addressed his followers as their Saviour. At the close of his harangue several of the deluded victims knelt down at his feet and worshipped him. So earnest were they in their belief, that for some time after his death they actually expected him to rise from the dead as he had promised, and at the burial of the body the officiating clergyman, being apprehensive of a disturbance on this ground, omitted that portion of the service relating to the resurrection of the dead.

31.—The General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, in the course of a discussion touching the settlement of Mr. Young in Auchterarder, resolved, by a majority of 183 to 142, that it would regard any application to a civil court by its members as a breach of ecclesiastical discipline. The case originated in the exercise of an interim act of Assembly passed in 1834, enacting "That it shall be an instruction to Presbyteries that if, at the moderating in a call to a vacant pastoral charge, the major part of the male heads of families, members of the vacant congregation, and in full communion with the church, shall disapprove of the person in whose favour the call is proposed to be moderated in, such disapproval shall be judged sufficient ground for the Presbytery rejecting such person, and that he shall be rejected accordingly."

June 17.—The Great Western steamship arrives in New York from Bristol, after a passage of fifteen days, thus completing the first steam-voyage across the Atlantic.

25.—Great storm in Lancashire, accompanied by destruction of life and property.

28.—Lord Durham calls together his first Special Council, and issues an ordinance designed to restore tranquillity to Canada.

Coronation of Queen Victoria.—The morning dawned rather untowardly, but cleared up in the forenoon, and continued favourable throughout the day. The procession left Buckingham Palace soon after 10 o'clock, and passed up Constitution-hill, along Piccadilly, St. James's-street, Pall Mall, Charing Cross, and Parliament-street, to Westminster Abbey, which was reached about half-past 11. Her Majesty was received with immense enthusiasm by the multitude of eager spectators who lined the route. At the door of the Abbey she was received by the great officers of state, and then proceeded to her robing chamber. At 12 o'clock the grand procession passed up the nave into the choir. As the Queen advanced slowly towards the centre of the choir to the chair of homage, the anthem, "I was glad," was sung, and the Westminster boys chanted, "Vivat Victoria Regina." On reaching a chair placed midway between the chair of homage and the altar, the Queen knelt, and repeated her private prayers. The "Recognition" then took place by the Archbishop of Canterbury: "Sirs, I here present unto you Queen Victoria, the undoubted Queen of this realm; wherefore all you who are come this day to do your homage, are you willing to do the same?" The universal acclamation then burst forth, "God save Queen Victoria." The prescribed prayers, Litany, and Communion Service were then said by the Archbishop; and a sermon, on 2 Chron. xxxiv. 31, preached by the Bishop of London. Then followed the administration of the oath, the Veni Creator, the anointing, and the coronation. The Dean of Westminster took the crown from the altar, and passed it to the Archbishop, who reverently placed it on the Queen's head. From every part of the crowded edifice there then arose the enthusiastic cry, "God save the Queen." The peers and peeresses put on their coronets, the bishops their caps, and the kings of arms their crowns; trumpets sounded, drums were beat, and the Tower and Park guns fired by signal. The presentation of the Bible, Benediction, and Homage were the next features in the ceremony, after which the Queen received the two sceptres, and an anthem, "This is the Day," was sung. The Sacrament was then administered, at the conclusion of which her Majesty was invested in her royal robes by the Lord Chamberlain, and proceeded to the west door of the Abbey, wearing her crown, and holding the sceptre with the cross in her right hand and the orb in her left. It was about a quarter to 4 o'clock when the royal procession passed through the nave in the same order in which it had entered. In their return to the Palace the Queen wore her crown, and the royal and noble personages their coronets. Among many foreigners of distinction present, Marshal Soult (French Ambassador) was particularly noticed and applauded. In the evening the Queen entertained a dinner-party, and witnessed from the Palace the discharge of fireworks in the Green-park. The Duke of Wellington also gave a grand ball at Apsley House. The theatres and nearly all the other places of amusements were, by her Majesty's command, opened gratuitously for the evening. The immense concourse of people which filled London during the day conducted themselves with the greatest order, and no accident of any moment occurred.

During the Coronation-rejoicings at Liverpool the first stone of St. George's Hall was laid.

29.—Died at Fraserburgh, Aberdeenshire, Alexander Jolly, Bishop of Moray, in the eighty-third year of his age and forty-second of his episcopate. During his long life he presented a rare union of simple piety with profound learning.

Wreck of the steamer Forfarshire, trading from Hull to Dundee, on the Fern Islands. Her machinery becoming disabled, the vessel drifted southward for about five hours, when she struck at 3 o'clock A.M. on the outer rock. The hull almost instantly parted, and, with one exception, the whole of the cabin passengers, twenty-five in number, were drowned. The captain was washed overboard with his wife in his arms. Of a crew of twenty-two, ten were drowned; eight were preserved in an open boat and taken to Shields. Four of the crew and five steerage passengers were taken off the wreck by the dauntless intrepidity of Grace Darling and her father, the keeper of Longstone lighthouse. She induced her father to enter the lifeboat, and with great difficulty they reached the wreck, when Darling himself picked the survivors off, while his heroic daughter managed to keep the boat from being dashed to pieces.

6.—Ferdinand, Emperor of Austria, crowned at Milan.

17.—London and Birmingham Railway opened throughout.

21.—Young and Webber, two of the seconds in the Mirfin and Eliot duel, convicted of murder, and sentenced to death, afterwards commuted to one year's imprisonment.

24.—John Larner, under pretence of being the proper heir, makes a forcible entry into Stanfield Hall, Norfolk, then in the possession of Isaac Jermy. The house was afterwards surrounded by military, who conveyed Larner and all his disorderly followers to prison.

16.—Raphoe Palace, then unoccupied, destroyed by fire.

Died at Paris, in his seventieth year, the Rt. Hon. Robert Cutlar Ferguson, Judge Advocate-general and M. P. for the Stewartry of Kirkcudbright. Mr. Ferguson won a foremost place at the bar, both in England and Calcutta, and was one of the most prominent members of the Reform party in the beginning of the century. He was tried along with the Earl of Thanet for aiding O'Connor in his attempted escape from Maidstone Court-house, and sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment in the King's Bench.

20.—Count Nesselrode acquaints Lord Clancricarde that Count Simovich had acted at the court of the Shah in a manner entitling Great Britain to complain, and that the ambassador had been in consequence recalled.

21.—Riots at Todmorden, caused by the refusal of Overseer Ingham to collect a rate imposed by the guardians under the New Poor Law. The constables who attempted to execute a distress warrant on Ingham were forced to promise to execute no more warrants, and were then stripped and beaten.

22.—In the Court of Queen's Bench Mr. Disraeli, M. P. appeared to receive sentence for a libel on Mr. Austin, a barrister, judgment having gone against him by default. Mr. Disraeli said that as to his offence against the law he threw himself entirely on the mercy of the judge. He thought his apology was such as a gentleman should cheerfully make, and with which the offended party should be content. As to his offence against the bar he appealed to the Bench to shield him from the vengeance of an irritated and powerful profession. Apology accepted, and prayer for judgment withdrawn.

24.—Rev. M. A. Gathercole sentenced to three months' imprisonment for libels published in the Watchman newspaper concerning nurseries in Stockton and Darlington.

22.—The Queen goes in state to Drury Lane Theatre.

28.—Died, Sir William Beechey, R.A.

February 1.—Case of Lady Flora Hastings.
—Lord Melbourne informs Sir James Clark, M. D. that a communication has been made by Lady Tavistock respecting Lady Flora Hastings (in the Duchess of Kent's household), whose appearance had given rise to a suspicion in the Palace that she might have been privately married. Sir James stated, that while deprecating such suspicions he was bound to admit that Lady Flora's appearance in some degree countenanced them, but would not venture to give an opinion without more ample means of observation than she had permitted. On the 16th Sir James acquaints Lady Flora with the existing suspicions, when she stated that for these suspicions there was not the slightest ground. Next day Sir James Clark and Sir Charles Clarke signed the following certificate:—"We have examined with great care the state of Lady Flora Hastings. . . . and it is our opinion, although there is an enlargement of the stomach, that there are no grounds for suspicion that pregnancy does exist, or ever did exist." Lady Flora Hastings thereafter continued her duties at the Palace, and received many marks of sympathy both from the Queen and the Duchess of Kent.

4.—The Baptist missionaries of Jamaica address the Governor on the willingness of the blacks to work, if reasonable wages are given, and describe their own sect as distinguished in the island by "the misrepresentations and calumnies of unreasonable and wicked men."

6.—Parliament opened by the Queen in person. The Speech contained the following allusion to the Chartist agitation:—"I have observed with pain the persevering efforts which have been made in some parts of the country to excite my subjects to disobedience and resistance to the law, and to recommend dangerous and illegal practices. For the counteraction of all such designs I depend upon the efficacy of the law, which it will be my duty to enforce, upon the good sense and right disposition of my people, upon their attachment to the principles of justice, and their abhorrence of violence and disorder." In the debate on the Address in the Lords, Lord Brougham made a bitter attack on O'Connell, for insinuating, at a public meeting in Dublin, that Lord Norbury had been assassinated by his own son.

8.—Lord Glenelg resigns the office of Colonial Secretary, and is succeeded by Lord Normanby.

9.—Discovery of the Balleny Islands, a group of five, in lat. 66° 22' of the Antarctic circle.

11.—Lord Durham's Report and other papers respecting Canada laid on the table of the House of Lords by Lord Melbourne.

15.—Five of the Canadian rebels executed at Montreal.

18.—Lord Brougham proposes that the petitions in favour of the abolition of the Corn Laws be referred to a committee of the whole House, and that evidence be heard at the bar. The motion was negatived without a division.

Explosion of fire-damp in the William mining pit, Cumberland, and loss of twenty-three lives.

19.—Mr. Villiers's annual motion on the Corn Laws was this year defeated by a majority of 371 against 172.

March 5.—Three prisoners tried at Cavan for attempting to assassinate the Rev. M. P. Beresford, when proceeding to church on the 22d of July last. The principal of the gang was sentenced to transportation for life.

An attempt made to injure Madame Vestris, by sending her a box filled with explosive matter. The design frustrated by a carpenter at the theatre forcing the lid in instead of out.

7.—During a debate in the House of Commons on the condition of Ireland, O'Connell denounces certain Irish members, who had calumniated their country by supporting a motion for an inquiry as to the increase of crime there.

The Marchioness of Hastings writes to the Queen, praying farther inquiry into the origin of the suspicions against her daughter, the Lady Flora. Lord Melbourne refuses to interfere; upon which the Marchioness demands the removal of Sir James Clark as her Majesty's physician; to which Lord Melbourne replies that the demand is unprecedented and objectionable.

8.—Lady Flora writes an account of the Palace conspiracy to her uncle, Hamilton Fitzgerald, at Brussels. "The Queen endeavoured to show her regret by her civility to me, and expressed it handsomely, with tears in her eyes." The Duchess of Kent had also stood by her gallantly. The affair had made her ill, but she was getting round, and hoped soon to be better.

9.—Francis Hastings Medhurst stabs a fellow-pupil, named Alsop, during a quarrel, at the house of their teacher, Mr. Sturmer, of Uxbridge. The coroner's jury found a verdict of wilful murder, but by the magistrates Medhurst was committed on the charge of manslaughter only. Edward William Bunney, a pupil, heard the altercation, and saw Medhurst draw a knife, and stab Alsop in the bowels. The latter cried out, "He has stabbed me!" and fell down on both knees at the mantelpiece.

18.—The Imperial Commissioner Lin issues an edict, addressed to all foreigners, prohibiting the importation of opium into Chinese ports under severe penalties.

25.—Two boxes of gold-dust, valued at 4,600*l.* stolen from the St. Katherine's Docks.

26.—A committee of the Chartist Convention appointed to draw up a petition, praying that Mr. John Frost might be reinstated as magistrate.

Died, in Vauxhall Bridge-road, London, aged sixty-seven, Capt. Johnson, who, in 1809, was taken out of prison, where he was confined for smuggling, in order to pilot the English fleet of the Walcheren expedition into Flushing harbour. For this service he received a pension of 100*l.* per annum, upon condition that he should refrain from smuggling.

April 1.—Public meeting in Edinburgh to support the Ministry, but the Chartists mustered in great force, and succeeded in ejecting the Lord Provost from the chair, after which they passed a series of resolutions completely opposed to those originally intended.

A riot at Devizes, arising out of a Chartist demonstration. Vincent and others entered the town at the head of about 1,000 men, armed with bludgeons, and attempted to address them in the market-place. The populace rose against the agitators, and but for the interference of the civil authorities serious results were likely to happen.

11.—Died John Galt, novelist, aged 60.

13.—Larner, charged with unlawfully entering Stanfield Hall, was convicted at the Norfolk assizes, and sentenced to three months' imprisonment.

Medhurst tried for the murder of Alsop, at Sturmer's school. Justice Coleridge, in sentencing Medhurst to three years' imprisonment, admitted the absence of malice or premeditation on the part of the prisoner, and commented severely on the master's conduct in leaving the pupils together when he knew they were quarrelling.

15.—Capt. Elliot and several British merchants imprisoned at Canton by Commissioner Lin.

16.—Debate in the House of Commons concerning the Irish policy of the Government, lasting four nights, and ending in a majority for the Government of twenty-two.

20.—The "London Equitable Loan Company, of Glasgow," having advertised the Duke of Wellington as one of their patrons, the Duke writes to Mr. P. Mackenzie that he thinks them a gang of swindlers, and will put himself to any reasonable trouble to expose them before a magistrate.

23.—Numerous petitions presented to Parliament in favour of Mr. Rowland Hill's Penny Postage scheme.

24.—The Marquis of Lansdowne entertains her Majesty at Lansdowne House.

29.—Stirling Peerage Case.—Commenced at Edinburgh, before the High Court of Justiciary, the trial of Alexander Humphry, or Alexander Stirling, styling himself Earl of Stirling, charged with forging, using, and uttering documents. The first document was an extract from a pretended charter, by Charles I. in favour of William, first Earl of Stirling, conveying to him the whole of Nova Scotia, and a large portion of Canada, with powers to create baronets. Mr. Humphry, as representing the above Earl of Stirling, raised two actions against private parties, which were dismissed. He was then served heir to the Earl of Stirling in right of his mother, and sought infeoffment of certain lands claimed. Upon this, the officers of state in Scotland took measures to reduce this service and infeoffment; and the pleas of Mr. Humphry not being considered satisfactory by the Lord Ordinary (Cockburn), he was called on to produce further proof. This he sought to supply by an old map of Canada, on the back of which was written what purported to be extracts from the charter of King Charles, these extracts having been made, it was alleged, in 1707 by a person who had seen the original in Canada. There were also various certificates attached to the map, bearing the names of Louis XV. and Fénelon, the Bishop of Nismes. This document, Humphry alleged, was given him by Madlle. Le Normand, a fortune-teller in Paris. Various other documents mentioned in the libel were found to have come from the same quarter. The trial lasted four days, during which the most eminent experts in France and Britain were examined concerning the documents. The prisoner's counsel, Mr. Patrick Robertson, made a feeling and eloquent speech on his behalf. The jury found the documents on the map forged, but that it was not proved that the prisoner forged them, or uttered them knowing them to be forged. The other documents they found were not proven to be forged, or uttered by the prisoner knowing them to be forged. On the verdict being pronounced, the prisoner fell into the arms of his friend. Lord Meadowbank pronounced judgment, and absolved the prisoner.

Chartist riot at Llanidloes, Wales. The Trewyn Arms Inn ransacked, and the inmates expelled. The mob were armed with guns, pistols, and pikes, and seemed to be, for a while, in entire possession of the town.

May 3.—The House of Lords dismiss the appeal in the Aucherarder case, and affirm the judgment of the court. Lord Brougham and the Lord Chancellor spoke at considerable length.

Cheltenham Theatre destroyed by fire.

Message from the Queen to Parliament, recommending a legislative union of the two Canadas.

Government issues a proclamation empowering magistrates to apprehend all persons illegally assembled for drilling, or meeting armed with bludgeons in a manner calculated to cause breaches of the peace.

4.—The opium in the British factories at China having been all delivered up, Captain Elliot, with some difficulty, obtains the release of the merchants, and others, held in confinement under the orders of Commissioner Lin.

The Duke of Newcastle dismissed from the Lord Lieutenancy of Nottingham, for refusing to make additions to the commission of the peace recommended by the Lord Chancellor, because the parties were not of his opinions in politics, and did not belong to the Established Church.

Mr. Abercromby announces his intention of retiring from the Speakership of the House of Commons.

6.—Concluded at 2 o'clock A.M. debate in the House of Commons on the Government proposal to suspend the constitution in Jamaica, because the Assembly there had refused to adopt the Prisons Act, passed by the Imperial Legislature. Majority of only five for Ministers in a house of 583.

7.—Lord Melbourne, in the Lords, and Lord John Russell, in the Commons, announced the resignation of Government, in consequence of the vote on the Jamaica Bill—a measure requiring more than ordinary support and confidence.

8.—Henry Vincent, delegate to the Chartist National Convention, arrested on the charge of inciting to riot at Newport.

On the recommendation of Lord Melbourne, the Queen sends for the Duke of Wellington to assist her in the formation of a government. The Duke explains that, as the principal difficulty of a new ministry would be in the House of Commons, he would recommend that Sir Robert Peel should be at once consulted. This was immediately done, and Sir Robert intimated that though he was not insensible to the difficulties that might beset a new Government, yet having been a party to the vote of the House which led to those difficulties, nothing would prevent him from giving her Majesty every assistance in his power. In the evening Sir Robert submitted to her Majesty the names of the Duke of Wellington, Earl of Aberdeen, Lords Lyndhurst, Ellenborough, Stanley, Sir James Graham, Sir Henry Hardinge, and Mr. Goulburn, as colleagues with whom he was prepared to act. To these colleagues, as Sir Robert Peel afterwards explained, he mentioned that in all the subordinate appointments in the Household, below the rank of a Lady of the Bedchamber, he would propose no change to her Majesty; and that in the superior class, he took it for granted the holders would at once resign their offices.

9.—During an interview with the Queen, Sir Robert Peel states that it would be of great importance as an indication of her confidence if certain offices of the Household of the higher rank, which might not be voluntarily relinquished by the ladies holding them, were subject to some change. Her Majesty stated in reply that she must reserve the whole of these appointments for herself.

The Globe, a ministerial paper, announces, "The determination which it is well known her Majesty has taken, not to allow the change in the Government to interfere with the ladies of her Court, has given great offence to the Tories."

10.—The Queen to Sir Robert Peel: "The Queen, having considered the proposal made to her yesterday by Sir Robert Peel, to remove the Ladies of her Bedchamber, cannot consent to a course which she conceives to be contrary to usage, and is repugnant to her feelings."

Sir Robert Peel to the Queen: "Having had the opportunity through your Majesty's gracious consideration of reflecting upon this point, he humbly submits to your Majesty that he is reluctantly compelled by a sense of public duty, and of the interest of your Majesty's service, to adhere to the opinion which he ventured to express to your Majesty. He trusts he may be permitted at the same time to express to your Majesty his grateful acknowledgments for the distinction which your Majesty conferred upon him by requiring his advice and assistance in the attempt to form an administration, and his earnest prayer that whatever arrangements your Majesty may be enabled to make for that purpose may be most conducive to your Majesty's personal comfort and happiness, and to the promotion of the public welfare."

11.—The Melbourne Ministry recalled. At a Cabinet meeting the following minute was adopted:—"Her Majesty's confidential servants having taken into consideration the letter addressed to her Majesty by Sir Robert Peel on the 10th of May, and the reply of Sir Robert Peel of the same day, are of opinion that, for the purpose of giving to the Administration that character of efficiency and stability, and those marks of the constitutional support of the Crown, which are required to enable it to act usefully to the public service, it is reasonable that the great officers of the Court, and situations in the Household held by Members of Parliament, should be included in the political arrangements made in a change in the Administration; but they are not of opinion that a similar principle should be applied or extended to the offices held by ladies in her Majesty's household."

Meeting of the Society for the Protection of Religious Liberty, when the Duke of Sussex congratulates the country on the return of the Liberal party to power.

13.—Explanations in the House of Commons by Lord John Russell and Sir Robert Peel, regarding the ministerial crisis.

The small remnant of the Chartist National Convention removes its sittings from London to Birmingham. They were met at the railway by a mob of about 5,000 people, and conducted through the principal streets, to the great terror of the peaceably-inclined. At their first meeting a majority of the delegates adopt a manifesto, urging their supporters to withdraw any money they might have in banks, to deal exclusively with Chartists, to rest a "sacred month" from all labour, and to prepare themselves with the arms of freemen to defend themselves. In the Northern Star Feargus O'Connor urges that their memorial to the Queen, asking her to dismiss her present ministry, and appoint another which would make the People's Charter a Cabinet measure, "should be presented by a deputation of 500,000 men, proceeding in peaceful and orderly procession, each with a musket over his arm."

Cardinal Tesch died.

14.—Meetings held throughout the country to express approval of the Queen's rejection of the conditions sought to be imposed on her by Sir Robert Peel.

17.—Prince Louis Napoleon writes from "17, Carlton House Terrace," to the editor of the Times, "I see with pain in your Paris correspondence that it is wished to cast upon me the responsibility of the late insurrection. I rely upon your kindness to refute in the most distinct manner this insinuation. The intelligence of the bloody scenes which took place has caused me as much surprise as grief. If I were the soul of a plot, I would also be the chief actor in it in the day of danger; nor would I shrink back after a defeat."

18.—Disturbance at Glasgow on the occasion of her Majesty's birthday. At night a mob 200 strong mustered on the Green, and, armed with stobs, marched up to the Cross with the view of creating a disturbance. They were, however, overpowered by the police, and the most prominent carried off to prison.

Died at Florence, Caroline Murat, sister of Napoleon I. and ex-Queen of Naples.

21.—Lord Palmerston writes to Mr. McNeill, at Shahrood, authorizing him to inform the Shah that his designs upon Affghanistan are in complete contravention of the spirit of the alliance subsisting between the two nations.

22.—Three motions discussed by the General Assembly regarding the Auchterarder case. Dr. Cook proposed that the Veto Act having been found to infringe on civil and patrimonial rights, Presbyteries should be instructed to proceed with settlements in the manner practised before the Act was passed. Dr. Muir sought to make an addition, to the effect that Presbyteries, in settling presentees, ought to consider their suitability to the mind and situation of the people of the parish. Dr. Chalmers, while admitting that the House of Lords had settled the mere "civil right" in the Auchterarder case, insisted that the principle of non-intrusion was an integral part of the Church's constitution which should not be abandoned, and that no presentee should be forced upon any parish contrary to the will of the congregation. For Dr. Chalmers's motion as against Dr. Muir's, the numbers were 197 to 161; and as against Dr. Cook's, 204 to 155. Dr. Chalmers's motion was therefore carried by a majority of 49.

24.—Capt. Elliot and the British merchants leave Canton.

25.—Great Chartist demonstration on Kersal Moor, near Manchester. Feargus O'Connor said he came there because the magistrates and the Queen pronounced the meeting illegal and unconstitutional. "I have good authority for asserting (he said) that all the Hanoverian clubs in London are at work to know how they can dispose of our young Queen, and place the bloody Cumberland on the throne in her stead." Other violent speeches were delivered by Rushton of Manchester, Fletcher of Bury, and others.

27.—Mr. Charles Shaw Lefevre elected Speaker of the House of Commons.

30.—Mr. T. B. Macaulay addresses the electors of Edinburgh with the view of succeeding Mr. Abercromby (now Lord Dunfermline) in the representation of the city.

31.—In the Court of Queen's Bench Lord Denman gave judgment in the case of Stockdale v. Hansard—an action for defamatory libel against the printers to the House of Commons for the publication of the Report of Commissioners of Prisons, in which certain strictures were made on some obscene books printed by the plaintiff. Lord Denman said that the supremacy of Parliament, on which the claim for exemption from responsibility was made to rest, might have been recognised as a valid authority, but the report complained of was not made by the sanction of the three co-ordinate powers acting harmoniously together; but by the House of Commons singly, a usurpation of authority abhorrent to the constitution of England. A jury summoned afterwards to assess damages awarded 100*l.* to Stockdale.

June 3.—The Lords of the Committee of Privy Council recommend by their report that the sum of 10,000*l.* granted by Parliament in 1835, towards the erection of normal or model schools, be given in equal proportion to the National Society and the British and Foreign School Society. They also recommend that no further grant be made now or hereafter for these schools unless the right of inspection be retained in order to secure a uniformity in the several schools, with such improvements as may from time to time be suggested by the Committee.

4.—Lord John Russell intimates the abandonment of the Government scheme of education in consequence of the opposition manifested by various religious bodies.

10.—An attempt made by a madman to enter Buckingham Palace, with designs against the Queen. He was seized by a sentry, and afterwards sent to Bridewell.

13.—Duel at Wimbledon between Lord Londonderry and Mr. H. Grattan, M.P., arising out of a statement made by the latter that the Queen would not live six months if the Tories came into power. Lord Londonderry received his opponent's fire, and fired himself in the air.

Murder of Capt. Bergholty, in cold blood, on board his vessel at Monkwearmouth, by the mate. After the murder the body was thrown over the ship's side, and then attached to a small boat and rowed by Ehlert and one Müller up towards the bridge, where it was found on a sandbank by the police.

14.—The Lord President of the Court of Session pronounces censure on seven members of the Presbytery of Dunkeld, for their contempt of Court in having inducted a minister to the church and parish of Lethendy, in defiance of the interdict of the Court.

Mr. Attwood, M.P. for Birmingham, presents the Chartist petition to the House of Commons. It showed, he said, 1,280,000 signatures, and had been adopted at no fewer than 500 public meetings. It required twelve men to carry it out of the House.

15.—A woman, describing herself as Sophia Elizabeth Guelph Sims, makes application at the Mansion House for advice and assistance to prove herself the lawful child of George IV. and Mrs. Fitzherbert.

18.—Opening of railways from Newcastle to North Shields, and from Newcastle to South Shields and Sunderland.

21.—The Earl of Winchelsea presents a petition to the House of Lords, demanding the repeal of the Catholic Emancipation Act, on the ground of its injury to the Established Church.

23.—Died at the convent at Jûn, in the Lebanon, Lady Hester Lucy Stanhope, aged 73.

24.—Tried at the Central Criminal Court, the Caspars, father and son, Emanuel Moses, and Alice Abrahams, as principals and accessories in the great gold-dust robbery—102 lbs. worth 5,000*l.* They were convicted principally on the evidence of an informer named Moss, who described the means taken by the younger Caspar to secure the gold. he had charge of as clerk to Hartley and Co.

Revolt of Mehemet Ali, Pacha of Egypt.

27.—Died at Lahore, in his sixtieth year, Maharajah Runjeet Singh, chief of Lahore. Four princesses—his wives—and seven slave girls, were permitted to burn themselves on his funeral pyre. He left the celebrated diamond "Koh-i-noor," so long coveted by the princes of India, as a legacy to be worn by the chief idol of Juggernaut.

28.—Explosion at St. Hilda's colliery, South Shields. The site of the disaster was nearly two miles from the shaft, and therefore considerable time elapsed before even the intrepid men who volunteered to search could reach the sufferers. Sixty lives were lost on this occasion.

29.—The Morning Post gives currency to a story, that the Duchess of Montrose and Lady Sarah Ingestre were among those who hissed her Majesty on the Ascot racecourse. Lady Lichfield was said to be implicated in conveying this report to her Majesty, but afterwards denied in writing that she had given utterance to such a calumny.

4.—Chartist riots at Birmingham. Two thousand assembled in the Bull Ring about 9 o'clock at night, and, when desired to disperse, they fell upon the constables, and wounded two of them severely. The military ultimately dispersed the rioters, and enabled the police to apprehend ten of the more prominent of them. The General Convention therefore issued a proclamation, declaring "That a wanton, flagrant, and unjust outrage had been made upon the people of Birmingham by a bloodthirsty and unconstitutional force from London, acting under the authority of men who wished to keep the people in degradation."

5.—Died at Buckingham Palace, from enlargement of the liver, Lady Flora Hastings, aged 33. Shortly before her death her Majesty had an interview with Lady Flora. Her death was generally understood to have been accelerated by the painful occurrences in the Palace at the beginning of the year.

8.—Tried at Edinburgh, an action raised by Sir David and Lady Milne against George Horne for slanderous allegations contained in a book written by the defender, entitled "Memoirs of an Aristocrat." Damages awarded 1,000*l.*

12.—Mr. Goulburn's motion for the postponement of the Penny Postage Bill defeated by a majority of 213 to 113; and Sir Robert Peel's motion, resisting the promise of the Government to make up any deficiency which the Act might give rise to, was also defeated by a majority of 184 to 125.

Discussion in the House of Commons on Mr. Attwood's motion to submit the grievances described in the Chartist Petition to a Select Committee. For, 46; against, 235.

15.—Another Chartist riot in Birmingham. The mob, having mustered in great force at the Bull Ring, formed themselves into order of procession, and in passing through the streets attacked the houses and shops of those known to be opposed to their views, or where they thought suitable plunder could be obtained. Encouraged in their excesses by the timidity of the magistracy, the rioters set fire to several shops, and it was at one time feared the whole city would fall a prey to their fury. As it was, the neighbourhood of the Muster-ground presented an appearance which compelled the Duke of Wellington to declare was worse than that of a city taken by storm. This furious outbreak was ultimately put down by the military without loss of life. The damage committed was estimated at from 40,000*l.* to 50,000*l.*

17.—The Queen annoyed, when taking an airing in Hyde Park, by a man on horseback, who persisted in crossing before her Majesty, waving his hand, and placing it on his breast.

Refusing to desist from his ridiculous conduct, he was given into custody by Capt. Cavendish. The offender described himself as a traveller for a wholesale house in the City. He was afterwards committed to prison for two months.

18.—The Llanidloes rioters tried at the Montgomeryshire assizes, and sentenced to various terms of imprisonment.

19.—Feargus O'Connor tried for a libel on the Warminster guardians by inserting in his newspaper a statement to the effect that they had starved a boy to death. A verdict of guilty was returned, and the defendant entered into recognizances to appear for judgment when called on.

20.—Chartist riot at Newcastle, though the Northern Union had previously issued a placard calling upon its members to respect the lives and property of all the inhabitants, in consequence of their nightly meeting not having been interfered with.

Great dinner to Mr. Macready, Duke of Sussex in the chair.

22.—In the National Convention, Delegate O'Brien moves to rescind a former resolution fixing the 12th of August as the commencement of the "sacred month," on the ground that the people were not generally prepared yet for that event.

23.—The important frontier fortress of Ghuznee, Afghanistan, stormed by a British force, under the command of Lieut.-General Keane, commander of the Army of the Indus. "At daylight, on the 22d," he writes, "I reconnoitred the place, in company with the chief engineer and others, with the view of making such arrangements as were necessary for carrying the place by storm. Instead of the tedious process of breaching (for which we were all prepared), it was resolved to blow in the Cabool Gate, the weakest point, with gunpowder. A few minutes before 3 o'clock this morning, the explosion took place, and proved completely successful. With the view of paralyzing the enemy, a heavy fire was then opened upon the citadel and ramparts of the fort, and about the same time the storming party, led with great gallantry by Brigadier Sale, succeeded in establishing a position within the fort. The struggle here was very sharp for a time, but the courage and fortitude of our army overcame all opposition, and by 5 o'clock the British standard was planted on the citadel, amidst the cheers of all ranks. Our casualties in killed and wounded amounted to about 200. Of the garrison 500 were killed, and a large number made prisoners."

24.—Disturbance by Jews at the Garrick Theatre, in consequence of the production of a play founded on the recent gold-dust robbery.

Fracas in the streets of Manchester between the editors of the Guardian and Courier, arising out of personalities indulged in through their newspapers.

26.—The Prussian seaman, Ehlert, tried at Durham assizes for the murder of his captain, and sentenced to be executed. He was condemned mainly on the testimony of an apprentice, whose assistance he had secured to carry out the crime.

29.—The new Postage Duties Bill passed the House of Commons.

30.—Trial of Bolam at the Northumberland assizes for the murder of Joseph Millie, at Newcastle (Dec. 7, 1838). The jury returned a verdict of manslaughter, and Baron Maule sentenced him to transportation for life.

31.—Lord John Russell writes to the magistrates of Manchester, warning them to be watchful of the movements of evil-disposed people, who were seeking to obtain money from householders and shopkeepers, by threatening them with personal danger and loss of business, or marking down their names and reporting them as enemies.

August 2.—Vincent, Edwards, Townsend, and Dickenson, Chartist agitators, tried at Monmouth for sedition, and sentenced to terms of imprisonment varying from six to twelve months.

At a meeting of the Exeter Town Council, the City Treasurer declared that he had neither money nor credit, and that the city did not possess sufficient funds to pay 3*l.* for a supply of potatoes to the jail.

In the House of Lords, Lord Brougham carries his motion for an address to the Crown on the subject of the Portuguese slave-trade.

3.—Five of the Birmingham rioters tried at Warwick; Howell, Roberts, and Jones sentenced to death, but afterwards reprieved.

At the Crown Court at Bodmin, Felix Lovell, for twenty years a clerk in the Customs, was sentenced to fourteen years' transportation for embezzling 300 sovereigns and various bills of exchange.

6.—The Chartist National Convention removes from Bolt Court, Fleet-street, to the Arundel Coffee-house, where they issue a declaration concerning the postponement of "the sacred month." Though the people are not generally prepared to carry out the month in its entirety, the delegates are convinced that "most of the trades may be induced to cease working on the 12th for two or three days, in order to devote the whole of that time to solemn processions and meetings for deliberating on the present awful state of the country."

7.—Cabool captured, and entered by Shah Soojah, accompanied by the British Envoy, the commanding officer of the army, and a squadron of British cavalry. After traversing the streets and reaching the palace in the Bala Hissar, a royal salute was fired, and congratulations offered to his Majesty on regaining the throne of his ancestors. Envoy Macnaghten describes the breaking-up of the army and flight of Dost

Mahomed Khan. "He was not accompanied by any person of consequence, and his followers are said to have been reduced below the number of 100 on the day of his departure."

8.—The Postage Duties Bill passes the House of Lords.

Died at Rockhall, Dumfriesshire, Sir Robert Grierson, the fourth baronet of Lag, a lieutenant on half-pay, in the 11th Foot. He was over 100 years of age, and had drawn half-pay for seventy-six years.

11.—This (Sunday) afternoon, a body of about 500 Chartists met in West Smithfield, and walked in procession to St. Paul's Cathedral, which they occupied for some time. At Manchester, in conformity with O'Connor's advice, they also took possession of the Cathedral, but left abruptly on the preacher announcing as his text, "My house is the house of prayer, but ye have made it a den of thieves."

12.—At Manchester, Bolton, Macclesfield, and various other centres of industry, the Chartists sought to raise disturbances by compelling working-men to cease from their labour. No excitement throughout the country generally.

15.—Came on at Chester Assizes the trial of the Rev. J. R. Stephen, charged with misdemeanour, in so far as he had attended an unlawful meeting, and incited those present to a disturbance of the public peace. He spoke for five hours in defence, was found guilty, and sentenced to eighteen months' imprisonment in Knutsford Jail.

16.—Lord Tavistock writes to the Chronicle denying that Lady Tavistock took any part whatever against Lady Flora Hastings, or ever imparted any suspicion, or made any communication, direct or indirect, to her Majesty concerning that lady.

17.—Penny Postage Act passed.

24.—Slave-trade Suppression Act (Portugal) passed.

26.—Tried at Liverpool the case of Rutter v. Chapman, involving the validity of the Manchester Charter. The judge directed a verdict for the defendant, on the ground that the Privy Council could grant the charter on the petition which had been presented from Manchester; but allowed Mr. Cresswell to tender a bill of exceptions, on which the case could be argued in the court above.

27.—Parliament prorogued. In the Speech her Majesty said:—"It has been with satisfaction that I have given my consent to a reduction of the Postage Duties. I trust that the Act which has been passed on this subject will be a relief and encouragement to trade, and that by facilitating intercourse and correspondence it will be productive of much social advantage and improvement." It was with great pain, it was mentioned, she "had been compelled to enforce the law against those who on longer concealed their design of resisting, by force, the lawful authorities, and of subverting the institutions of the country."

28.—Tournament at Eglinton Castle.—The tilt-yard was formed on a lawn a little south of the castle. A wooden paling, about five feet in height, served to keep back the crowd; while the grand stand, with seats for 800 persons, and two smaller galleries right and left, containing 700 each, formed nearly the whole southern side of the arena. At each end of the arena, and within the enclosure, the encampments or positions of the various knights were pitched. The rising ground on the northern side of the lists was completely covered with spectators, and in various places throughout the park, wherever a glimpse of the lists could be obtained, vehicles crowded with visitors were drawn up. The weather, unfortunately, was most unfavourable. The rain commenced to fall heavily in the forenoon, which not only led to a curtailment in the splendour of the grand procession from the castle, but damped the enthusiasm of many who had undertaken long journeys to be present at this revival of ancient state. After the procession had moved round the arena, the King of the Tournament (the Marquis of Londonderry) and the Queen of Beauty (Lady Seymour), with their attendants, took their places on the grand stand, and the knights, with their suites, withdrew to their respective tents. Some jousting then took place in the tilting-ground, the most noticeable encounters being those between the Earl of Eglinton (Lord of the Tournament) and the Marquis of Waterford (Knight of the Dragon). There was also a broadsword encounter between Louis Napoleon and Mr. Lamb, Knight of the White Rose. On the following day (Thursday), the weather put a complete stop to all outdoor display; but on Friday the sports were resumed, and carried through with great spirit. Throughout the kingdom the interest in the Tournament was so great, that it was calculated no less than 100,000 visitors gathered round "the Castle o' Montgomery" on the first day of the spectacle.

Died at Northampton, aged seventy years, William Smith, LL.D., F.G.S., "the father of English Geology."

29.—Affray at Egham Races between a band of thimble-riggers and certain soldiers of the 45th regiment.

30.—Mr. Macnaghten, the British Envoy at Cabool, writes, "Everything is going on well here. Two regiments of infantry, and one of cavalry, are to be left at Cabool, and another at Jellalabad, where it is thought Shah Soojah intends to winter."

Grand entertainment at Dover to the Duke of Wellington, as Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports. The toast of the day was spoken to by Lord Brougham, who bestowed boundless praise on the noble Duke.

The Directors of the Thames Tunnel Company give a dinner in the Tunnel to celebrate the reaching of low-water mark.

Sept. 3.—Miss Ellen Tree makes her first appearance in the Haymarket Theatre after her return from America, as Viola, in "Twelfth Night."

The Presbytery of Aberdeen declare their intention of withdrawing their certificate from Professor Blackie, on the ground that he did not sign and accept the Confession of Faith in that unqualified manner required by the Act of Parliament.

4.—In the Presbytery of Glasgow, the Rev. Mr. Fairbairn, of Bridgeton, calls attention to the extraordinary revival of religion which had manifested itself among the people of Kilsyth. The Rev. Mr. Burns afterwards addressed the Presbytery, detailing the chief characteristics by which this revival was distinguished.

7.—Fall of a house on the east side of the Edgware-road; a maid-servant killed.

11.—At the Surrey Sessions, John Benchey and Martha Stone, indicted for stealing, with great violence, from the person of Robert Young, W.S., Edinburgh, a watch, pair of spectacles, and wig, were sentenced to ten years' transportation.

A young woman named Margaret Moyes committed suicide by throwing herself from the top of the Monument. At the inquest a witness, living in Monument-yard, said he saw the deceased in her descent. She turned round twice, and made motions with her arms. He found her on the ground, the left arm several feet from the body, and a good deal of blood flowing. A rope was found on the railings, which she had used as a stirrup to mount to the top. The jury returned a verdict of temporary insanity, with a recommendation to the Corporation to rail in the top of the Monument, to prevent the recurrence of similar acts.

12.—Robbery in the United Service Club-house, which led to an inquiry, ending in the dismissal of Mr. Fenn, the steward.

13.—First experiment made in England with the invention of M. Daguerre. M. St. Croix, just arrived from Paris, exhibited the instrument and process in presence of a select party of scientific men and artists, and succeeded in producing a picture of the place of meeting, No. 7, Piccadilly.

Daniel O'Connell issues a manifesto from Derrynane, pressing upon his countrymen the necessity of registering, to prevent a flood of evils from overwhelming the land; for "at no period of English history did there exist towards Ireland, among the English people, a stronger spirit of hate and antipathy than at present."

14.—Dissolution of the Chartist National Convention.

18.—Brigadier Dennie encounters Dost Mahomed at Bamecan. The Dost defeated, with considerable loss.

20.—Feargus O'Connor arrested at Manchester on a judge's warrant for seditious conspiracy.

21.—Lucy Brown, a young woman, seduced and afterwards discarded by a merchant in London, commits suicide by leaping from the bridge into the Serpentine.

23.—Colonel Pasley, R. E. succeeds in raising a portion of the wreck of the Royal George by an explosion of gunpowder. The mainmast, pieces of the hull, capstan and tiller, and several guns were brought up by the aid of divers, who descended after the explosion. The operations were continued with interesting results for some seasons.

27.—Meeting of British Association at Birmingham: Pres. Rev. W. Vernon-Harcourt.

October 1.—Mr. Macaulay, the new War Secretary, writes to his Edinburgh constituents an address, dated "Windsor Castle," in which he says, "I have accepted office because I am of opinion that in office I can most effectually promote the success of those principles which recommended me to your favour. I shall quit office with far more pleasure than I accepted it, as soon as I am convinced that by quitting it I should serve the cause of temperate liberty and progressive reform."

7.—The creditors of the late Duke of Kent waited upon the Queen to present an address of thanks for her payment of the Duke's debts. No less than 50,000*l.* is said to have been furnished by her Majesty's privy purse for this filial act.

9.—Robbery of a box, containing 5,000*l.* in gold and notes, from the boot of the coach running between Manchester and the Potteries.

Suspension of specie payments in Philadelphia and other cities of the Union.

10.—Prince Albert and his father, the hereditary Prince of Saxe Coburg, arrive at the Tower, and proceed first to Buckingham Palace, and then to Windsor, on a visit to the Queen.

13.—James Bryan, a native of Ayrshire, and a person of weak intellect, presents himself at Windsor as a suitor for the hand of her Majesty.

14.—Fight between English and Irish navvies employed on the Chester and Birkenhead Railway. The military were called in to disperse the combatants.

15.—The British Queen arrives at Portsmouth with news of a financial crisis in New York, and the probable suspension of several banks.

The Queen Dowager leaves Bushy Park for a "a progress" through Warwickshire and Devonshire.

17.—Poulett Thomson arrives at Quebec as Governor of British North America.

18.—The Queen of the French struck on the cheek with a stone thrown into the royal carriage near the Tuileries by a mad woman named Giordet.

Another suicide from the top of the Monument. Several spectators saw a lad deliberately climb over the iron breastwork of the gallery, stand upon the edge of the coping outside, turn round, so as to have his back to the railing over which he had clambered, and then, after a moment's pause, leap to the earth. The body was shockingly mangled, and death instantaneous. A Bible which he had carried up was found on the floor of the gallery. The lad was named Hawes, and not over fifteen years of age.

19.—Sir John Colborne, who had rendered great services in the settlement of Canadian affairs, leaves Montreal for England.

22.—A false account published by London papers of the death of Lord Brougham, by the overturning of his carriage near Penrith, with comments on his character.

24.—Banquet at Edinburgh to Sir John Campbell, one of the city members, and Attorney-General. In reply to the toast of the evening, the learned gentleman passed in review the work of the session, and the measures taken to obstruct it by the Opposition.

26.—"Much has been said in some quarters of the payment out of her Majesty's privy purse of the debts of the late Duke of York. We have no desire to withhold from her Majesty the credit justly due to such an act of grace. But it should not be lost sight of that the Duke's executors had succeeded in Chancery in establishing their claim against the Crown to the mines of Cape Breton, as comprised in a grant of the mines of the province of Nova Scotia, which the Crown had made to the Duke for sixty years from 1826. The Crown must either have paid the Duke's debts, or suffered the mines to be worked for the benefit of the creditors."—Morning Post.

31.—At a meeting of the Canterbury Conservative Registration Society, Mr. Bradshaw, M.P. for Canterbury, made a violent attack on the Queen, Court, and Ministers. Her Majesty (he said) was the Queen only of a faction, and as such a partisan as the Lord Chancellor himself; and as for the Minister, nothing was too low or too foul for his purpose, and he could only crawl on by casting behind him every feeling of honour and high principle.

November 4.—Serious Chartist riots at Newport, Monmouthshire. According to a preconcerted arrangement numerous disaffected "hill men," chiefly under the leadership of John Frost and Zephaniah Williams, commenced their march on Saturday night (2d), armed with guns, pistols, swords, crowbars, and pickaxes. Sacking the villages through which they passed, and compelling the adult male population to join them, they reached Tredegar Park about four o'clock this morning, 20,000 strong; there they waited two hours for another division from Pontypool and its neighbourhood, under the leadership of William Jones. This junction being effected, they formed into two divisions, and entered Newport, one marching down Snow-hill, the other through Charles-street, and both joining in the centre of the principal street. The magistrates, having private information as to the intention of the rioters, were at the time assembled in the Westgate Arms Inn, supported by a party of the 45th Foot, under the command of Lieut. Gray. Led by John Frost, the mob directed its course to the Westgate Inn, and at once proceeded to demolish the house and fire upon the soldiers within. Before a soldier was allowed to act the magistrates attempted to restore peace by remonstrating with the deluded men. Finding this ineffectual, however, the Mayor (Mr. T. Phillips) gave the soldiers an order to load. "While the men were loading I heard several shots fired in the passage of the house, and the windows of the room containing the soldiers were beaten against on the outside. I was wounded in the arm and hip in the act of opening the window-shutter before the soldiers fired." Lieut. Gray said, "I directed the men to spare their ammunition. We began with twenty-two rounds, and fired about three upon the average. I believe the mob fired deliberately upon us after we had unmasked ourselves by opening the window. I stood before them in my uniform, and the soldiers in a line behind me. We found nine dead bodies." The rioters broke up under the steady fire of the soldiers, and retired to the outskirts of the town, carrying their wounded, and some of their dead, with them. Frost was apprehended next day, and on his person were found a brace and a half of pistols, a flask of powder, and a large quantity of balls and caps.

6.—H.M. frigates Volage and Hyacinth attacked by a squadron of twenty-eight Chinese junks at Hong Kong. "The effects of our shots were soon visible, one junk having blown up, three sunk, several shattered and deserted by their crews, and the remainder retiring in great confusion to the anchorage above the battery." — Captain Smith to Admiral Maitland.

8.—Twelve lives sacrificed at Radstock Wells-way Pit, Somersetshire, by some malignant person cutting the rope which let the men down to the workings. The cage fell a distance of 756 feet.

9.—The Queen commands Lord Normanby to express to Mr. T. Phillips, the Mayor of Newport, her high approval of the conduct of himself and other magistrates, on the occasion of the recent outbreak there, in token of which she afterwards conferred upon him the honour of knighthood.

bourne, in returning thanks for "Her Majesty's Ministers," was received with noisy signs of disapprobation. The tumult latterly became so outrageous and undignified, that the Lord Mayor was compelled to interfere, by declaring that the company were not paying that respect to himself and the Sheriffs which they had a right to expect.

12.—Stockdale raises a new action against Messrs. Hansard, printers to the House of Commons, contending for 50,000*l.* damages. Messrs. Hansard are instructed not to respond, and the case is heard by the Under-Sheriff and a jury in Red Lion-square, who award 600*l.* damages.

Fire in Widigate-alley, Bishopsgate, in which eight lives were lost.

15.—Colonel Pasley, R.E. reports the discontinuance, for the present, of efforts to raise the wreck of the Royal George at Spithead. During the recent experiments, 12,940 lbs. of powder had been spent in blasting, and they had succeeded in raising about 100 tons of wreck.

16.—Service of plate, valued at 1,250 guineas, presented to Mr. Robert Stephenson, the engineer, by the contractors of the London and Birmingham Railway, at a public dinner in the Albion Tavern.

20.—The Commander-in-chief, Lord Hill, censures Colonel Thomas and other officers for being present at a political dinner at Ashton-under-Lyne, where abusive language was used concerning the Queen.

Murder of Rev. John Williams, missionary, in South Sea Islands.

23.—At a special meeting of the Privy Council, her Majesty announces her resolution to ally herself in marriage with Prince Albert of Saxe Coburg and Gotha.

24.—Marshal Valer writes to the French Minister of War, that Abd-el-Kader had formally intimated his intention of waging war against the French colonists.

29.—Lieut. Basil Gray, who commanded the military at Newport, gazetted to an unattached captaincy without purchase.

December 2.—Died at her residence in Picardy-place, Edinburgh, Miss Innes of Stow, sister to the late Gilbert Innes, banker, whom she succeeded in a fortune estimated at not less than one million sterling.

In his address to Congress, President Van Buren discusses at some length the unsettled question of the north-eastern boundary between the United States and the British possessions.

Father Mathew, a Dominican friar, administers the temperance pledge in Limerick to a vast assembly. Thousands of poor people were on their knees, bareheaded, in Mallow-street, while the rev. father, and two other clergymen, were administering the pledges.

Died Frederick VI. King of Denmark, in the 72d year of his age, and 33d of his reign; succeeded by his son, Christian VIII.

3.—Inquest on the bodies of the ten men killed in the attack on the Westgate Arms Inn, Newport. Verdict, "That deceased came to their deaths through an act of justifiable homicide, by some persons unknown."

5.—A uniform postage-rate of fourpence per half-ounce on extra-metropolitan letters introduced, as preparatory to a penny rate.

6.—Edict of Emperor of China, putting an end to British trade. Last servant of East India Company leaves.

10.—Opened at Monmouth, the special commission for the trial of the rioters in South Wales. Three hundred and fifteen special jurors were summoned, and twenty-four gentlemen of station were sworn on the grand jury; thirty-eight prisoners awaited trial. The jury found a true bill for high treason against John Frost and thirteen others. The court adjourned to the 31st instant.

11.—Promotion of Indian officers: Lord Auckland to be earl, Sir John Keane baron, and W. H. Macnaghten and Henry Pottinger to be baronets.

22.—Strathbogie case. The Court of Session having granted an interdict on the application of the Rev. J. Cruickshank, and six other ministers, members of the Strathbogie Presbytery, suspended by the Commission of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, the ministers who were appointed in conformity with the Assembly's order were thereby formally prohibited from entering the churches, churchyards, or school-houses, or in any manner interfering with the legal rights of the suspended ministers. In defiance, however, of this injunction, an attempt was made this day (Sunday) to execute the sentence of suspension pronounced by the Commission of the General Assembly against two members of the Strathbogie presbytery, the ministers of Mortlach and Keith.

24.—Public meeting in Edinburgh, for taking steps to erect there a national memorial to the Duke of Wellington.

24-27.—Extensive landslip on the Dorsetshire coast, between Lyme-Regis and Seaton, accompanied by earthquake shocks.

Died Dr. Davies Gilbert, F.R.S. &c. aged 72.

26.—Mutiny on board the Indiaman Mercmaid, suppressed without loss of life, by the calmness and decision of the ship's officers.

30.—Died at sea, on board his flag-ship, the Wellesley, Rear-Admiral Sir Frederick Maitland, K.C.B. After Napoleon's flight from Waterloo, when resolved to deliver himself up to "the most powerful, the most constant, and the most generous of his enemies," he surrendered unconditionally to Captain Maitland, then commanding the Bellerophon off Rochfort.

Died William Hilton, R.A. aged 53.

31.—Trial of John Frost, for high treason, at Monmouth, before Chief Justice Tindal, Baron Parke, and Mr. Justice Williams. The Attorney-General prosecuted, and Sir Frederick Pollock and Mr. Kelly defended Frost. At the commencement of the proceedings, an objection was taken that the list of witnesses had not been delivered to the prisoner in conformity with the statute. The Chief Justice reserved this objection for consideration by the judges at Westminster. Evidence was then led, showing the prisoner's complicity in various arrangements made for the outbreak, as well as his active participation in the excesses of the rising at Newport. James Hodge, one of the men whom Frost had compelled to march into Newport with him, said, "When we arrived at the Welsh Oak, the prisoner said the guns should take the front, the bludgeons next, and then the people without arms. On his giving these orders, I went up to him, to ask in the name of God what he was going to do. He said he was going to attack Newport, and take it, and blow up the bridge to prevent the Welsh mail from proceeding to Birmingham. There would be three delegates, he said, to wait for the coach there, an hour and a half after the time; and if the mail did not arrive, the attack was to commence at Birmingham, and from thence to the north of England; and that was to be a signal for the whole nation." The trial lasted till the 8th of January, when the jury brought in a verdict of guilty, with a recommendation to mercy. Williams was tried on the 9th, and Jones on the 13th January, when similar verdicts were returned. Upon this, five of the ringleaders withdrew their former pleas and pleaded guilty, on the understanding that their sentence should be commuted to transportation for life. On the 16th, Chief Justice Tindal passed sentence of death on Frost, Williams, and Jones. On the 28th Jan. the judges informed the Secretary of State for the Home Department, that a majority of their body, in the proportion of nine to six, were of opinion that the delivery of the list of witnesses was not a good delivery in point of law. In consequence of this difference of opinion, the sentence of death was remitted: the three prisoners were transported for life.

January 4.—A hostile meeting at Wormwood Scrubs between Mr. Horsman, M.P. and Mr. Bradshaw, M.P. in consequence of the former having stated at Cokermonth that the latter "has the tongue of a traitor, but lacks the courage to become a rebel." Shots were interchanged, after which Mr. Bradshaw caused his second to state that he regretted the expressions made use of at Canterbury (Oct. 31), which he felt on reflection were unjust towards her Majesty. Mr. Horsman thereupon withdrew his imputations.

5.—Edict of Emperor of China, terminating for ever all trade and intercourse with England.

6.—Inquest held on the body of Mary Davis, the wife of a farmer near Newport, who had committed suicide in consequence of threatening language used by a Chartist who called at her house for signatures to his petition. She was bewildered about the Chartists, she said, a few minutes before she died, and wanted to go out of the way. Verdict, "Temporary insanity."

Died at Bath, in her eighty-eighth year, Madame D'Arblay (Miss Burney), a distinguished authoress of the latter part of last century.

7.—In a debate on the Address in the French Chamber of Deputies, M. de Lamartine said, "France ought not to legitimise and make hereditary the dynasty of Mehemet Ali. To do so would be to proclaim war for a century against England in the East. That Power would never consent to recognise the existence of a Power which would hold the keys of the Arabian Gulf, and impede her intercourse with India. The system of policy with regard to the East ought to be to partition the lifeless and decaying empire of the Sultan. It was already crumbling to pieces, and every stone that fell from it would cause a shock, and struggle, and disturbance in Europe."

8.—Four lives lost on the ice in St. James's Park.

9.—Anti-Corn Law banquet at Manchester, held in a pavilion erected for the purpose in Peter-street.

10.—Commencement of Rowland Hill's system of Penny Postage. The number of letters despatched from London was about four times the average quantity, and no less than seven-eighths were prepaid.

15.—The Chinese Commissioner Lin publishes a letter to the Queen of England, "for the purpose of giving her clear and distinct information." Passing in review the various attempts of the Emperor to repress the opium trade, he concludes by an abstract of the new law about to be put in force. "Any foreigner bringing opium to the Celestial Land with design to sell the same, the principals shall most assuredly be decapitated and the accessories strangled, and all property found on board the ship shall be confiscated. The space of a year and a half is granted within which if any bringing opium by mistake shall voluntarily deliver the same, he shall be absolved from all consequences of his crime."

Sentence of death pronounced on Frost, Williams, and Jones. (See Dec. 31.)

17.—Stockdale, the printer, committed to the custody of the Serjeant-at-Arms for contempt of the House and high breach of privilege in raising another action against Messrs. Hansard. (See 12 Nov. 1839.)

21.—Sir Fitzroy Kelly presents petitions from the Sheriffs of London, expressive of their sorrow at having incurred the displeasure of the House of Commons in Stockdale's case, and stating that they had acted in the belief that it was their duty to their sovereign and the Court of Queen's Bench, whose sworn servants they were. The House resolved, by a majority of 101, that they had been guilty of a breach of privilege, and should be committed to the custody of the Serjeant-at-Arms.

24.—The Bishop of Exeter presents a petition to the House of Lords, signed by 4,000 inhabitants of Birmingham, alleging the danger to morals from the spread of the system denominated Socialism, and praying their Lordships to take steps to check the evil.

Lord John Russell submits a proposal to the House to settle 50,000*l.* per annum on Prince Albert. Reduced on the 27th, in consequence of Mr. Hume's amendment, to 30,000*l.*

Prince Albert invested with the Order of the Garter at Gotha.

25.—The Serjeant-at-Arms, in return to a writ of Habeas Corpus, appears in the Court of Queen's Bench with the Sheriffs of London in custody. After hearing counsel on both sides, the judges were of opinion that this was a good and sufficient return to the writ, and remanded them to the custody of the Serjeant-at-Arms.

30.—Mr. Bullhead, a linendraper, commits suicide by throwing himself from the tower of Glastonbury Church, while in a state of dependency, caused by pecuniary losses.

31.—Conclusion of debate on Sir J. Y. Buller's no-confidence motion. For Ministers, 308; against, 287.

February 1.—The State of Pennsylvania declared insolvent.

The Emperor's sub-inspector at Canton issues an edict, stating that he had received instructions to seize all the English in Macao, including Captain Elliot and the two interpreters, Gutzlaff and Morrison.

7.—Treaty for the marriage of her Majesty with Prince Albert signed at London.

10.—Marriage of the Queen and Prince Albert.—As soon as daylight broke this morning the metropolis presented all the characteristics that mark the opening of a universal and joyous holiday. Crowds were hastening from all quarters in the direction of Buckingham Palace, or the Chapel Royal, St. James's, where the ceremony was to be performed. At the Palace the Duchess of Kent and twelve bridesmaids were in attendance on her Majesty at an early hour. Prince Albert and his party left the Palace about a quarter of an hour before her Majesty's departure, 12 o'clock. Her Majesty on arriving at St. James's was conducted to her apartments behind the Throne-room, where she remained, attended by her maids of honour and train-bearers, till summoned by the Lord Chamberlain to take her part in the procession. As the bridegroom's procession moved along the colonnade leading to the chapel he was loudly cheered, and appeared delighted with his reception. The royal procession passed along the colonnade a few minutes later, entering the chapel about twenty minutes to 1 o'clock. Her Majesty wore a Honiton lace robe and veil, of the most exquisite workmanship. The only ornament on her head was a wreath of orange-flowers and a small diamond pin, by which the nuptial veil was fastened to her hair. Her train was of white satin, with a deep fringe of lace. Prince Albert met her Majesty on the haut-pas, and conducted her to her seat on the right side of the altar. The ceremony was then proceeded with by the Archbishop of Canterbury. At the conclusion the several members of the Royal Family congratulated her Majesty and the Prince in an unceremonious and cordial manner. The Prince then took her Majesty's hand, and led her out of the chapel, the spectators all standing. On reaching the Throne-room, the marriage register was signed and attested by the Royal Family and officers of state. The Queen and Prince Albert immediately afterwards returned to Buckingham Palace in one carriage, and were welcomed most heartily by the cheers of her subjects. The royal bridal party left in the afternoon for Windsor Castle. The rejoicings throughout the kingdom in connexion with the event were universal and enthusiastic.

13.—Ministers defeated by a majority of 10 on Mr. Herries' motion regarding finance.

14.—The Court of Session delivers judgment in the Strathgogie case, extending the interdiction, originally granted for two Sundays, to a period unlimited, and sanctioning its effect throughout the entire parishes of the seven suspended ministers.

26.—Her Majesty and Prince Albert visit Drury Lane in state, being their first appearance in public since their marriage.

March 3.—Hostile meeting on Wimbledon Common between Louis Napoleon and Count Leon, a reputed son of the Emperor Napoleon. The police interfered, and carried the parties to Bow-street, where they were bound over to keep the peace.

8.—The newspapers publish a correspondence between Lady Seymour, the Eglinton Queen of Beauty, and Lady Shuckburgh. Lady Seymour writes to know the character of a servant named Stedman, and whether she was a good plain cook, or not. Lady Shuckburgh replies, that having a professed cook and housekeeper, she knows nothing about the under-servants. Lady Seymour explains that she understood Stedman, in addition to her other talents, had some practice in cooking for the little Shuckburghs. The housemaid is instructed to answer this note, and say, "Stedman informs me that your ladyship does not keep either a cook or housekeeper, and that you only require a girl who can cook a mutton-chop; if so, Stedman, or any other scullion, will be found fully equal to cook for, or manage the establishment of the Queen of Beauty."

9.—Steeplechase at Sheffield, between a hunting-horse and Cootes the celebrated runner; won by the latter.

10.—Dinner to Mr. Byng, in celebration of his services for fifty years as Member of Parliament for the County of Middlesex.

17.—Feargus O'Connor tried at the Yorkshire Assizes for inciting the working classes, through his speeches and writings, to rebellion. Judgment deferred.

Action by Lady Bulwer against the publisher of the Court Journal, for inserting a paragraph to the effect that she had conducted herself in an offensive manner to Mr. Henry Bulwer, at a party in Paris. Damages awarded, 50*l.*

23.—Fire at Fordington, Dorsetshire, ending in the destruction of fifty-four small houses.

25.—The Anti-Corn Law League assemble at Brown's Hotel, Palace Yard, and pass resolutions designed to secure the abolition of the corn duties.

27.—Lady Bulwer again brings an action against Messrs. Lawson and Thackeray, this time in the Tribunal of Correctional Police, Paris, but is defeated on the plea that her husband was not a consenting party to the proceedings.

31.—Up to this date, the total number of petitions presented against the Corn-laws was 2,141, bearing 980,352 signatures. In favour of the Corn-laws, 2,886, bearing 138,051 signatures.

April 6.—Mr. Temple Frere drowned at Cambridge, when attempting to save the life of a fellow-student in the river.

9.—Termination of debate on Sir James Graham's motion censuring Ministers for the involved condition of our relations with China. Majority for Ministers, 10.

29.—Disturbance in the Italian Opera-house, caused by the non-engagement of Signor Tamburini.

It is reported regarding the wood pavement in the Metropolis that, over the portion laid down in Oxford-street during the last sixteen months, there had travelled 7,000 vehicles and 12,000 horses, with scarcely any appearance of wear or change on the surface.

A gardener, named Smith, attacks three police officers in the prison yard at Huddersfield with a pruning-knife, and inflicts such injuries on Duke, the chief of the force, that he dies in a few hours.

May 1.—A penny postage envelope, designed by W. Mulready, R.A. issued to the public.

6.—The Gresham Committee meet to decide between the plans of Mr. Tite and Mr. Cockerell for the new Royal Exchange. The former chosen by a vote of 13 to 7.

Lord William Russell found murdered in his bedroom, No. 14, Norfolk-street, Park-lane. "This morning," said the housemaid, "I rose about half-past six, and went down stairs about a quarter before seven o'clock. I went into the back drawing-room, and there I saw his lordship's writing-desk broken open, and his keys and papers lying on the carpet. I opened the dining-room and found the drawers open, and the candlesticks and several other pieces of plate lying on the floor. I ran up stairs and told my neighbour servant the cook, with whom I slept, what had happened. I also told the valet, who slept in an adjoining room, and asked him what he had been doing with the silver, for it was lying all about. He said he had been doing nothing with it, but he got up and went down stairs, when he declared the place had been robbed. I then said, 'For God's sake go and see where his lordship is.'"

He went into his lordship's room, and I followed him, when on opening the shutters we found his lordship in bed murdered. We then ran into the street, and alarmed some of the neighbours. Dr. Elsegood was amongst the first who went into the room afterwards." "I found his lordship in bed in the front room on the second floor, lying on his back, partially towards his right side. A towel was thrown over his face, which I removed. He appeared to have been dead about four hours. On removing the towel I found a wound extending from the left shoulder down to the trachea, four or five inches in depth, and seven inches long. The wound, which had been inflicted by some sharp instrument, must have caused almost immediate death. The deceased could not have inflicted such a wound on himself, and then placed the cloth over his face." In a confession made in prison on the 22d June, the valet Courvoisier described the manner in which the murder was committed, thus :—"As I was coming up stairs from the kitchen, I thought it was all up with me. [Lord William Russell had been complaining of his conduct.] My character was gone, and I thought murdering him was the only way to cover my faults. I went into the dining-room and took a knife from the sideboard. On going up stairs I opened his door and heard him snoring in his sleep. There was a rushlight burning in his room at this time. I went near the bed by the side of the window, and then I murdered him. He just moved his arm a little, and never spoke a word. I took a towel which was on the back of the chair and wiped my hand and the knife. After that I took his key and opened the Russian leather box, and put it in the state in which it was found in the morning. The towel I put over his face, and undressed and went to bed."

Lord Stanley postpones his motion on the Irish Registration Bill, in consequence of the absence of Lord John Russell, caused by the death of Lord William.

8.—Workmen searching the house of Lord William Russell find two bank-notes for 10*l.* and 5*l.*, hidden behind the skirting board adjoining the sink in the butler's pantry, and to which Courvoisier only had access. In that portion of the house they also ultimately find the missing rings, locket, and gold coins secreted in obscure corners. "The watch and seal were in my jacket pocket which I had on until the Friday morning, and then I undid the ribbon and took the seal off. Having the watch in my pocket, the glass came out; but I did not know what to do with it, as the police were watching me. I dropt some of the pieces of glass about the dining-room, and at different times put the large pieces in my mouth, and afterwards having broken them with my teeth spat them in the fire-place. I afterwards burned the ribbon, and put the watch under the lead in the sink."—Confession. On the evening of the 10th Courvoisier was taken into custody, and conveyed to Bow-street.

9.—Lord Palmerston writes to Earl Granville at Paris: "Her Majesty's Government having taken into consideration the request made by the Government of France for permission to remove from St. Helena to France the remains of Napoleon Buonaparte, your Excellency is instructed to assure M. Thiers that her Majesty's Government will, with great pleasure, accede to this request."

10.—The newspapers publish the details of an attempt at murder said to have been made by the Swiss governess in the household of the Duke of Argyll. About midnight she was noticed with a knife in her hand making for the duchess's room, and secured mainly through the presence of mind of the youngest Lady Campbell.

Attempt to shoot the Queen and Prince Albert by Edward Oxford, potboy.—About six o'clock this evening the Queen and Prince left Buckingham Palace by the garden gate opening from Constitution-hill. They were seated in a very low German droschky, drawn by four horses with postilions, preceded by two outriders, and followed by two equestries. A number of people, assembled to witness her departure, were ranged in two lines outside the gate. After the carriage had proceeded a short distance up Constitution-hill, so as to be quite clear of the crowd, a young man on the Green Park side of the road presented a pistol, and fired it directly at her Majesty. The Prince, hearing the whistle of the ball, turned his head in the direction of the report, and her Majesty at the same instant rose, but Prince Albert suddenly pulled her down by his side. "The report of the pistol" (says Perks, a witness) "attracted my attention, and I heard a distinct whizzing or buzzing before my eyes, between my face and the carriage. The moment he fired the pistol he turned himself round as if to see if any one was behind him. He then set himself back again, drew a second pistol with his left hand from his right breast, presented it across the one he had already fired, which he had in his right hand, and fired again, taking very deliberate aim." Several persons at once rushed upon him. He was then calm and collected, admitted firing the pistols, and went away quietly with two of the police to Queen-square station. He there gave his name as Edward Oxford, 17 years of age. The Queen, as might be supposed, appeared extremely pale from the alarm, but rising to show that she was unhurt, ordered the postilions to drive to Ingestre House, the residence of the Duchess of Kent, where her Majesty and the Prince remained a short time. On returning by Hyde Park the royal pair were received by a large gathering of ladies and gentlemen, and escorted to Buckingham Palace, which they reached about twenty minutes past seven o'clock. In the evening large numbers of the nobility called at the Palace to offer their congratulations.

11.—On examination before the Privy Council Oxford made the following declaration:—"A great many witnesses against me. Some say I shot with my left, others with my right. They vary as to the distance. After I fired the first pistol Prince Albert got up as if he would jump out of the coach, and sat down again as if he thought better of it. Then I fired the second pistol. This is all I shall say at present." On searching his lodgings a quantity of powder and shot was found, and the rules of a secret society, styled "Young England," prescribing among other things that every member should, when ordered to meet, be armed with a brace of loaded pistols and a sword, and a black crape cap to cover his face. The prisoner was this day committed for trial on the charge of high treason in its most aggravated form—a direct attempt on the life of the Queen. The surmises as to the attempt being part of a wide-spread conspiracy, were not established by the careful inquiries to which the outrage led.

12.—At a Court held this afternoon at Buckingham Palace, a joint address from both Houses of Parliament was presented to her Majesty, expressive of indignation at the late attempt against her life, and heartfelt congratulations on her preservation. Her Majesty replied, "I am deeply sensible of the mercy of Divine Providence, to whose continued protection I humbly commend myself, and I trust that under all trials I shall find the same consolation and support which I now derive from the loyal and affectionate attachment of my Parliament and my people." Addresses were also presented by many public bodies throughout the kingdom. Indeed, for some weeks the excitement produced by the outrage absorbed all other topics of public interest.

16.—In the debate on the second reading (26) of the Church of Scotland Benefices Bill, Lord Aberdeen reprobated the conduct of the Assembly, characterised their objection to his bill as monstrous and unheard of, and repelled the charge that it was the prelude to a tyranny designed to unchristianize the parishes of Scotland, and trample on the rights of conscience.

17.—The Lord William Bentinck and the Lord Castlereagh, troop-ships, wrecked off Bombay harbour.

18.—Commenced in the Central Criminal Court, before Chief Justice Tindal and Baron Parke, the trial of François Benjamin Courvoisier, for the murder of Lord William Russell. Counsel for the prosecution, Messrs. Adolphus, Bodkin, and Chambers; for the prisoner, Mr. Charles Phillips and Mr. Clarkson. The first witness examined was the housemaid, Sarah Mancel, who spoke to the appearance of the house on the morning of the murder, and the conduct of the prisoner when they found their master murdered. On the second day an important witness turned up, viz. Charlotte Piolaine, of the Hôtel Dieppe, Leicester-square, who spoke to the fact of the prisoner (formerly a servant there) having left a portion of the missing plate with her, some days before the murder was committed. "He had a paper parcel in his hand, and asked me if I would take care of it until the Tuesday following, when he would call for it. I said, 'Certainly, I would;' and he left it with me and went away. I put the parcel in a closet, locked it up, and never saw the prisoner till this day. I took the parcel out of the closet yesterday for the first time in consequence of a statement read by my cousin out of a French newspaper, to the effect that it was likely, seeing that the prisoner was a foreigner, he might have disposed of the missing plate at some of the foreign hotels in London." On the following morning the prisoner made a confession of guilt to his counsel, Mr. Phillips; but after consultation with the judges it was considered proper to carry on the original line of defence, particularly as the prisoner himself wished this done. Mr. Phillips continued to discharge his irksome task to the close of the trial, on the third day, when the jury returned a verdict of guilty. "The age of your victim," said Chief Justice Tindal, "his situation of master, had no effect on you. To atone to society, which has received a shock by your crime, and to prevent the recurrence of it, you must suffer an ignominious death. What may have been your precise or actual motive it is impossible to state. I fear it has been the lust of filthy lucre. It has been demonstrated in this instance by the providence of God, in no ordinary manner, that the crime committed in darkness should be brought to light." The prisoner was sentenced to be executed on the 6th of July.

20.—Severe strictures passed on the Tory press for affecting to believe that the attempt of Oxford was a mere Whig trick to secure the ministry in office.

21.—General thanksgiving for her Majesty's recent escape.

24.—Sir J. J. Gordon Bremer issues a notice declaring the river and harbour of Canton in a state of siege.

29.—Tried at Durham Sessions, Robert Taylor, charged with many acts of bigamy, and obtaining money under the pretence of being heir to large properties. Two cases were proved against him, and he was sentenced to imprisonment for two years and a half.

Experiments with Clegg and Samuda's atmospheric railway at Wormwood Scrubs.

July 5.—Bombardment and capture of Tinghae, the capital of Chusan, by the squadron under Sir Gordon Bremer.

6.—Execution of Courvoisier. His appearance on the scaffold was the signal for a shout of execration from the thousands assembled below, but he appeared totally unmoved, and stood firm while the executioner fastened the noose. He died after a brief struggle.

10.—The trial of Oxford concluded at the Central Criminal Court. The jury gave effect to the plea of insanity, urged by his counsel, Mr. S. Taylor and Mr. Bodkin, by coupling their verdict of guilty with a declaration that they believed the prisoner to be insane. Lord Denman: "Then the verdict will stand thus: not guilty on the ground of insanity. The prisoner will be confined in strict custody, as a matter of course." The prisoner walked briskly from the bar, apparently glad the long trial was over.

Lord Aberdeen withdraws his Scotch Benefices Bill.

13.—Crowded meeting of the Loyal National Association of Ireland, held in Dublin, when O'Connell delivered an harangue, promising repeal within a year.

A royal message read in the House of Lords, recommending the introduction of a Regency Bill to the attention of their lordships. In compliance therewith, a bill was introduced by the Lord Chancellor, constituting Prince Albert sole regent in the event of her Majesty's demise before her offspring attains legal age.

15.—Convention signed at London between the Courts of Great Britain, Austria, Prussia, and Russia, on the one part, and the Ottoman Porte on the other, for the pacification of the Levant.

24.—Discussion in the House of Commons on the case of John Thorogood, confined in Chelmsford jail for refusing to pay 5s. 6d. for Church rates.

28.—Died at Cowes, aged 48, John George Lambton, Earl of Durham. Endowed with talents of a high order, and possessed of great natural courage, the deceased nobleman attached himself with great eagerness to the Reform party, and, short as was his public career, had the happiness of seeing the triumph of many of those principles for which he so warmly contended. He had been in failing health almost since his return from America in 1839.

29.—Ovation in Manchester to the Glasgow cotton-spinners on their return from transportation.

August 1.—Action commenced at Lewes assizes by Richard Heaviside against Dr. Lardner, for compensation for the seduction of his wife. In summing up, Baron Gurney said one point urged in favour of the defendant was that he was chastised by the plaintiff; and if he had put the defendant's life in danger, it would certainly go in mitigation of damages; but under the peculiar circumstances he would leave that entirely to the jury. They must not estimate the damages by the pecuniary resources of the defendant, but by the injury the plaintiff had sustained. He had lost an affectionate wife, and his children were deprived of the instruction and example of a mother. Damages 8,000*l.*

6.—This morning, about 4 o'clock, the City of Edinburgh steamer, from the Thames, arrived off Boulogne, with Prince Louis Napoleon, fifty-eight followers, eight horses, and two carriages. On landing, the party immediately proceeded to the barracks, where, having secured the sentinel, the Prince made overtures to the soldiers, and offered them a considerable increase of pay. This, however, had no effect, and he then went through the town, distributing proclamations to the citizens and soldiers. Few joined them; and very soon the National Guard were assembled, and the party driven to the sands. Here some of them attempted to regain the steamer, but the boat upsetting they were precipitated into the water, when the National Guard fired and killed several. Some were drowned; and Prince Louis himself was picked up half a mile out, and carried to the guard-house, along with General Montholon and Colonel Vaudrey. The whole of the survivors were arrested during the day, and the steamer taken possession of till it could be ascertained whether the owners were aware of the purpose for which she was chartered. A London morning paper, speaking of the attempt, says, "The maniac Louis Napoleon is said to be in the present instance nothing but an unfortunate instrument in the hands of certain Stock Exchange adventurers."

7.—Act of Parliament passed prohibiting the use of climbing-boys as chimney-sweepers.

11.—In closing Parliament, her Majesty said: "The violent injuries inflicted upon some of my subjects by the officers of the Emperor of China, have compelled me to send to the coasts of China a naval and military force for the purpose of demanding reparation and redress."

13.—Riots at Calne, Wilts, arising out of the opposition of the poorer classes in the district to the new constabulary force. One special constable killed, others injured, and several houses sacked.

15.—The foundation-stone of the Scott monument, at Edinburgh, laid with masonic honours by Sir James Forrest, Grand Master, and provost of the city. The inscription on a plate deposited in the stone recorded that the admirable writings of Sir Walter Scott "were allowed to have given more delight, and suggested better feeling, to a larger class of readers in every rank of society, than those of any other author, with the exception of Shakspeare alone, and were therefore thought likely to be remembered long after this act of gratitude on the part of the first generation of his admirers should be forgotten." Addresses delivered by the Grand Master and Sir William Rae.

27.—Attempted murder of William Mackreth, in a bedroom of the Angel Inn, Ludlow. There was a severe wound in the throat, but not sufficient to cause death. It was generally believed the criminal in this instance had made a mistake, the intended victim being one Ludlow, a Birmingham cattle-dealer.

28.—Presentation of the freedom of the City of London to Prince Albert. "I shall always," said the Prince in reply, "remember with pride and satisfaction the day on which I became your fellow-citizen, and it is especially gratifying to me, as marking your loyalty and affection to the Queen."

29.—Rev. Hugh Stowell tried at Liverpool, for a libel on a Catholic clergyman in Manchester, whom he declared to have subjected one of his people to the indignity of walking on his hands and knees two hours a day for nine days, as a penance for sin. Verdict for the plaintiff, damages 40s.

September 12.—Duel on Wimbledon Common between Lord Cardigan and Lieut. Tuckett, in consequence of the Earl obtaining information that Lieut. Tuckett was the author of certain letters in the newspapers reflecting, as his lordship supposed, on his character as an officer and a gentleman. The first shot was ineffectual on both sides. Mr. Tuckett received his adversary's second ball in the back part of the lower ribs. The ball was extracted, and no fatal result followed. The miller of Wimbledon, with his wife and son, witnessed the duel from his mill, and being a constable, took the parties into custody. They had exchanged shots about twelve yards from each other.

19.—The Globe and other newspapers publish the details of a mess squabble between Lord Cardigan and Capt. J. W. Reynolds. Capt. Jones delivered the following message to Capt. Reynolds, after a mess dinner, at which the latter had called for a bottle of Moselle, placed, as usual, on the table in a black bottle. "The colonel has desired me, as president of the mess committee, to tell you that you were wrong in having a black bottle placed on the table at a great dinner like last night, as the mess should be conducted like a gentleman's table, and not like a tavern or pot-house."

22.—Died, at Clarence House, St. James's, the Princess Augusta, sixth child and second daughter of George III. and Queen Charlotte, and born in 1768.

25.—Fire in Plymouth Dockyard, and total destruction of the Talavera, 74-gun ship, and the Imogen frigate, then in dock. The Minden was also much charred and burnt, and the Adelaide Gallery destroyed, with all its interesting memorials of old ships, except the Royal George's capstan.

28.—Commenced before the Court of Peers, of France, the trial of Prince Louis Napoleon, and other persons concerned in the landing at Boulogne. They were defended by M. Beryer, but the address of this eloquent advocate did not avail much, as the Peers found the prince guilty, and sentenced him to perpetual imprisonment in a frontier fortress. The others were sentenced to imprisonment for various terms of years.

October 2.—Attempt of an incendiary to fire the dockyard at Sheerness. Smoke having been observed issuing from the Camperdown, 120 guns, search was made, when part of the vessel was discovered to be on fire, but as it had just commenced it was got under before much damage was done. On further inspection, trains of oakum, pounded resin, and other inflammable materials were found laid throughout the ship in various directions.

5.—Concluded at Brighton the court-martial on Captain Reynolds, arising out of charges preferred against him by his commanding officer, the Earl of Cardigan, for writing an improper and intemperate letter. "I beg to tell your lordship," he wrote, "that you are in nowise justified in speaking of me at all at a public party, given by your lordship, and more particularly in such manner as to make it appear that my conduct has been such as to exclude me from your lordship's house." Capt. Reynolds, to the astonishment of many, was dismissed the service, and the evidence of some of his witnesses severely censured.

6.—Conclusion of the poll, rendered necessary by a combination to exclude Alderman Harmer, of the Dispatch, from the office of Mayor, to which he succeeded by rotation, Pirie, 2,741; Johnson, 2,713; Harmer, 2,294.

10.—Engagement near Beyrout, between the allied troops and Ibrahim Pacha, in which the latter is completely defeated, and forced to retreat to the mountains. Beyrout is evacuated the same night, and made the headquarters of Gen. Smith.

14.—Proceedings in the Wandsworth Police Court concerning the duel fought between the Earl of Cardigan and Capt. Tuckett on Sept. 12. Both were committed for trial on the charge of felony.

15.—A musket shot fired at the King of the French in the evening, when his Majesty was passing along the Quay of the Tuileries, on his return to St. Cloud, but no one hurt. Darmes, who fired the shot, was instantly arrested, and avowed the crime.

20.—Lord Palmerston writes to Earl Granville at Paris: "Say to M. Thiers that nothing can be more unjust than to assert that England has wished not to allow France any share in the settlement of the Turkish question. But as long as France insists that the question shall be settled only in her own way, against the opinion of all the other powers, and in opposition to the engagements which the Four Powers have contracted with the Sultan, it is surely France that excludes herself from the settlement, and not the other powers that exclude her."

22.—Died at Holland House, aged sixty-seven, the Right Hon. Henry Richard Vassall, Lord Holland, celebrated in the political and social life of the past half-century.

24.—Sir John Macdonald, Adjutant-General, reads, by order of the Commander-in-chief, a memorandum to the officers of the 11th Hussars at Brighton barracks. Speaking of the commanding officer, Lord Cardigan, he says, "He must recollect that it is expected from him not only to exercise the military command over the regiment, but to give an example of moderation, temper, and discretion. Such a course of conduct would lead to far less frequent reference to his lordship from the 11th Hussars than had been the case in the last few months."

25.—John Henty, carpenter, tried by court-martial at Sheerness, for (among other counts) making a false report to his superior officer, on the extent and circumstances of the fire in the Camperdown. The Court found the charge established, but, in consideration of the prisoner's previous good character, sentenced him to be only severely reprimanded.

Accident at Farringdon, Great Western Railway, caused by the driver of a goods train neglecting to lessen his speed as he approached the station. The driver and guard were killed, and four passengers, in a truck, severely injured.

27.—Distressing case of hydrophobia at Kirkcaldy, in a boy, aged six, and a girl, aged two, who had been severely lacerated by a rabid dog at Carronbrae, about seven weeks previously.

November 2.—Major-General Sir Robert Sale intercepts Dost Mahomed when attempting to enter the Gharebund Pass, and scatters his followers among the mountains.

3.—Bombardment and capture of St. Jean d'Acre by the allied fleet, under the command of Admiral Stopford. The attack commenced about two o'clock, and became general at three. At twenty minutes past four a large magazine blew up, by which one entire regiment, on the ramparts, was sacrificed. During the night the place was evacuated. British loss, 22 killed and 42 wounded; Egyptians killed, about 2,000. Speaking of the effects of the explosion, an officer who witnessed it says, "The whole neighbourhood was torn up, as it were, from the very bowels of the earth, and scattered in great masses in every direction, men, women, children, horses, and asses intermingled in the most ghastly manner. A vast hollow, about a mile in circumference, is now presented, surrounded to a great distance by dead bodies."

Surrender of Dost Mahomed Khan. Sir William Macnaghten writes to the Secretary of the Indian Government: "I was returning from my evening ride, and within a few yards of my own residence, when a single horseman galloped up to me, and having satisfied him that I was the envoy and minister, told me that Dost Mahomed Khan was arrived, and sought my protection. Dost Mahomed rode up to me, and alighted from his horse. After the usual salutation, I begged him to mount again, and we proceeded together to my residence, in the compound of which I have pitched a tent for the ex-chief, and provided him with everything necessary for his comfort. He put his sword into my hand as a token of submission, but I at once returned it to him, and he seemed grateful for this mark of confidence."

5.—Kurrach Singh dies at Lahore. His favourite wife and three female attendants sacrifice themselves on the funeral pile. On the return of the procession to the palace, a beam fell on the new sovereign, Nebal Singh. He died in a few hours.

6.—Accidental bursting of another magazine in Acre, attended with a loss of nearly 300 lives.

10.—Exciting municipal contest in Edinburgh, caused by the state of Church parties. The non-intrusion party in the council, with some aid from the Tories, carry Sir James Forrest as Lord Provost, against Mr. Adam Black, by 17 to 14.

12.—John Thorogood relieved from Chelmsford jail, after imprisonment of twenty-two months for refusing to pay a Church-rate of 5s. 6d. An unknown individual paid the rate and costs.

13.—Severe storm on the north-east coast. The Syria was broken to pieces near Sunderland pier, and four of her crew drowned. In the Irish Sea the fury of the gale was also severely felt. The City of Bristol steamship, trading between Waterford and Bristol, foundered off Warnes Head, with twenty-nine persons on board. Only two were saved.

Contest for the High Stewardship of Cambridge University. On this, the third and last day of polling, the numbers stood, Lord Lyndhurst, 973; Lord Lyttelton, 487.

21.—This afternoon, at ten minutes before 2 o'clock, the Queen was safely delivered of a Princess.

30.—The Belle Poule frigate, commanded by the Prince de Joinville, arrives off Cherbourg, with the remains of the Emperor Napoleon.

December 2.—A youth, named William Jones ("the boy Jones"), gains access to Buckingham Palace, and continues secreted there several days. His presence was first detected by Mrs. Lilley, the nurse of the Princess Royal, who summoned some attendants, and had the intruder drawn from his hiding-place under the sofa. He gave various accounts of the manner in which he obtained admission, as well as his object, but the Privy Council did not think there was much cause for alarm. He was therefore sentenced to three months' imprisonment as a rogue and vagabond.

Admiral Stopford writes to Mehemet Ali:—"I am very sorry to find that Commodore Napier should have entered into a convention with your Highness for the evacuation of Syria by the Egyptian troops, which he had no authority to do, and which I cannot approve or ratify. . . . I hope this hasty and unauthorized convention will not occasion any embarrassment to your Highness. It was no doubt done from an amicable motive, though under a limited view of the state of affairs in Syria."

6.—Prosecution of Hetherington in the Court of Queen's Bench for issuing a blasphemous publication, entitled "Haslam's Letters to the Clergy of all Denominations." Verdict, guilty. Sentence deferred.

15.—Remains of the Emperor Napoleon laid with great pomp in the tomb at the Invalides, Paris.

17.—John Green, a "ganger," or superintendent of labourers, on the Edinburgh and Glasgow Railway, murdered by two Irishmen at Crosshill. One of them struck Green on the head with a long iron poker, while the other repeatedly jumped upon the body. A witness, working on the line at the time, said, "On going to my work at the south end of Crosshill Bridge, in the morning, I saw five or six people standing in the middle of it, but when I came up to them they all laid their heads together, and spoke as if they did not wish me to hear. Green, the ganger, came up at this time, and stood looking at the line over the bridge. One of the men then stepped out from the others, took five or six rapid strides, and struck Green on the head with a rod of iron. Green put his hand to his head and cried out, 'O Lord, murder!' I saw three or four blows struck by the same person, and then I ran away to call assistance." The outrage had its origin in jealousy between the English and Irish workmen on the line.

Jan. 3.—Thunderstorm in the metropolis and neighbourhood. Spitalfields Church and Streatham Church were seriously damaged.

Fire at Dundee, originating from a stove in a passage betwixt the Steeple and South churches. The East Church, or Cathedral, a remarkable and much admired building, and also the South and Cross churches, were completely destroyed.

7.—Commodore Bremer opens fire from his squadron on the Bogue Forts, Canton River, and reduces two, over which he plants the British flag.

Death at Lambeth Palace, caused by workmen heating a pan of charcoal in the room they were repairing. One man was entirely suffocated, and the rest of the survivors had a narrow escape.

8.—Alexander M'Rae sentenced to death by the High Court of Justiciary, Edinburgh, for a capital offence committed on the body of Marjory M'Intosh, near Doggaroch Loch, on the Caledonian Canal.

11.—Samuel Scott, the American diver, accidentally hangs himself when performing his rope-trick on Waterloo Bridge, preparatory to leaping into the river.

14.—Mehemet Ali restores the Turkish fleet, this transaction completing his submission to the Sublime Porte.

16.—Inundation at Brentford, caused by the bursting of the banks and locks of the Grand Junction Canal. At Shrewton and Maddington, on the same day, there was a considerable destruction of property by floods, from the sudden melting of snow in the neighbourhood.

18.—O'Connell visits the Orange district of Ulster in the course of his repeal agitation, and meets with numerous evidences of unpopularity.

20.—The Emperor of China issues an edict: "Whereas Keshen has reported to us the measures he has taken in reference to the circumstances of the English foreigners; that as these rebellious foreigners are without reason, and refuse to listen to our commands, a dreadful example of severity ought to be made in their regard. If the rebellious foreigners dare to approach our inner shores, let them be immediately exterminated." Keshen, in detailing to the Emperor the various encroachments of the barbarians, writes: "Your slave is vexed to death thinking of these things, even till he loathes his food, and till sleep has forsaken his eyelids, forasmuch as he does not shrink from the heavy guilt he is incurring in taking all these facts, the result of his diligent inquiries, and annoying with them the ears of Heaven's Son." Keshen was soon after degraded, and delivered over to the Board of Punishment.

Charles Elliot, H.M. Plenipotentiary, announces the conclusion of preliminary arrangements for a treaty of peace with China. The island of Hong Kong to be ceded to England, an indemnity of six million dollars to be paid, and the trade of Canton to be opened up.

21.—Great Radical meeting at Leeds, designed to bring about a coalition with the Chartists. Resolutions in favour of universal suffrage were almost unanimously carried; but the speakers differed widely from each other on the remaining "points" of the charter.

The moderate section of the Strathgogie Presbytery meet at Marnoch to induct Mr. Edwards into the ministry of that parish. The circumstances connected with this ordination occasioned much discussion. A protest against the proceedings was read amid great excitement, and at its conclusion the audience set up a loud shout of approval. A portion, representing, it was said, the parishioners of Marnoch, then withdrew, but the number left in the church was still very considerable, and the shouting, cheering, and hissing continued in a manner which made the carrying out of the business of the court an impossibility. An attempt was made to prevent the moderator from entering the pulpit, and pieces of wood, nails, iron bolts, &c. were plentifully thrown among the members of Presbytery. This continued for about an hour and a half, when the fury of the audience gave signs of having expended itself. Words of warning and remonstrance were then offered by two or three known sympathisers with the non-intrusion movement, and the latter part of the ordination services was conducted in the midst of comparative order and quiet.

23.—Died in Bethlehem Hospital, aged 69 years, James Hatfield, who was tried at the Old Bailey, in September 1802, for firing a loaded pistol at his Majesty King George III., and acquitted on the ground of insanity.

26.—Parliament opened by her Majesty in person.

February 1.—Captain Elliot and Commodore Bremer issue a proclamation to the inhabitants of Hong Kong, informing them that the place had become part of the dominion of the Queen of England, and that natives residing in the island must consider themselves as her subjects.

5.—The Duke of Wellington taken suddenly ill in the House of Lords, and conveyed to Apsley House.

10.—Christening of the Princess Royal in Buckingham Palace.

Lord Sydenham assumes the government of the now united provinces of Upper and Lower Canada.

14.—The Buffalo Advertiser publishes a long circumstantial account of the destruction of Niagara Falls. "At half-past seven a wide space of the frontal bastion near to Goat Island fell down, but what was actually taking place could only be surmised, as the great confluence of water hid the immediate stage of operations from sight. At half-past eight the Middle Tower and all the adjoining ground-work had disappeared. The tower sank into the gulf like a subsiding wave. Goat Island followed next. On the British side the wall of loose friable rock was gored and ploughed away until the Table Rock, so much resorted to by visitors, fell down in fragments, the spiral staircase toppled, and for a while it was expected that the hotel would follow. It still stands, though in a perilous posture, all the furniture having been removed."

16.—The Earl of Cardigan tried in the House of Lords for shooting at Captain Tuckett, with intent to do him bodily harm. The case broke down on a formal objection raised by the prisoner's counsel, Sir William Follett. The prosecution, he said, had failed in proving a material part of their case, inasmuch as no evidence had been given that Captain Harvey Garnett Phipps Tuckett was the person alleged to have been on Wimbledon Common on the 12th September last, and whose card only bore the name Captain Harvey Tuckett. The peers present returned a verdict of "not guilty," with the exception of the Duke of Cleveland, who added, "Not guilty, legally."

19.—Wynyard Park, the seat of the Marquis of Londonderry, destroyed by fire, supposed to have originated in a flue of the chapel forming the west wing of the premises, and first seen about midnight. There were only two servants in the house at the time, the Marquis and Marchioness being abroad with their attendants. The whole of the building, and by far the greater part of the rich furnishings, were completely destroyed.

22.—Decision in the Exchequer on the long pending question regarding the validity of the charter of the city of Manchester. The question was raised in a suit Rutter v. Chapman, tried in 1839, before Mr. Baron Maule, at Liverpool, when the learned judge directed the jury to find for the validity, subject to a bill of exceptions for argument in Exchequer. The Attorney-General conducted the case for the Liberals, and Mr. Cresswell that of the Tory opponents of the corporation. The original judgment in favour of the charter was now confirmed on all points, and costs allowed.

25.—Close of the debate on the first reading of Lord Morpeth's Irish Registration Bill. Majority for Ministers, 5.

27.—Fall of two houses adjoining the Dispatch office, in Fleet-street. The tenants being warned of their danger shortly before, no life was lost, nor was there any casualty of the slightest nature.

March 2.—In answer to Lord Dalhousie, Lord Aberdeen states that though his bill of last year had been well received by nearly one-half of the Church of Scotland, yet as it had been furiously condemned by the other, and opposed also by the Government, he had resolved to abandon it, and had no other measure to propose—a resolution in which he was confirmed by recent proceedings of the dominant party in the Church.

3.—Commences at the Central Criminal Court the trial of the two Wallaces, charged as accessories in the wilful destruction of the ship Dryad, on her voyage from Liverpool to Santa Cruz, in October 1839, for the purpose of defrauding certain assurance companies and others. In summing up the Lord Chief Justice said, the jury must be satisfied that the captain wilfully cast the ship away with the intention of defrauding the underwriters; second, that the goods insured never had been shipped; and lastly, that a concerted scheme was prepared in London, to which the prisoners were consenting parties, and by whose aid it was carried out. They were each found guilty, and sentenced to transportation for life.

4.—A gravedigger buried in St. Bride's churchyard, by the falling in of the grave in which he was working.

5.—Rev. Dr. Gordon, Edinburgh, writes to the Duke of Argyll, that the Non-intrusion Committee had no instructions from the General Assembly even to propose the abolition of patronage, as one way of settling the present difficulties of the Church of Scotland, far less to press it as the only way of putting an end to the present unhappy collision between the civil and ecclesiastical courts.

15.—Meeting of the Vice-Chancellor and heads of houses at Oxford, to censure No. XC. of "Tracts for the Times." It was resolved—"That modes of interpretation such as are suggested in the said tract, evading rather than explaining the sense of the Thirty-nine Articles, and reconciling subscription to them with the adoption of errors which they were designed to counteract, defeat the object, and are inconsistent with the due observance of the statutes of the University." The following day the Rev. J. H. Newman addressed a letter to the Vice-Chancellor, acknowledging himself to be the author of Tract XC., and stating that his opinion remained unchanged of the truth and honesty of the principle therein maintained, and of the necessity of putting it forth. "I am sincerely sorry for the trouble and anxiety I have given to the members of the board, and I beg to return my thanks to them for an act which, even though founded on misapprehension, may be made as profitable to myself as it is religiously and charitably intended."

The boy Jones enters Buckingham Palace for the third time, but is seized almost immediately by a constable on duty. Instead of sending him to prison again, the police magistrate, before whom he was brought, induced his parents to let him be placed on board one of her Majesty's ships.

21.—The Rev. Mr. Guthrie, a prominent Non-intrusion agitator, addresses various meetings at Dublin on the Church of Scotland. "I will cheerfully go," he said, "where my fathers went before, to the dark dungeon; I will even go, like James Guthrie, to the Grass-market, and lay my head on the block; but I will sooner suffer this right hand to be cut off than lay it on the head of an Edwards of Marnoch."

22.—The Rolls Court order a commission to examine certain aged witnesses at the Court of Hanover, regarding the royal jewels bequeathed to the House of Hanover by Queen Charlotte.

28.—Robbery of plate and various articles of vertu at Windsor Castle, supposed to have been committed by a person in the employ of the inspector-general of palaces.

29.—A meeting having been called at Deptford on the subject of a repeal of the Corn-laws, a body of Chartists, as was their custom, took up a prominent position in the hall, and endeavoured in various ways to interrupt the proceedings. Acting upon the advice of the lecturer, Mr. Sydney Smith, the audience turned upon the Chartists, and after a short struggle succeeded in ejecting the whole of them.

April 1.—The Paris Fortification Bill passes the Chamber of Peers.

2.—Rev. J. Keble, in a letter to Justice Coleridge, concerning Catholic subscription to the Thirty-nine Articles, discusses the duties and difficulties of English Catholics in the present religious crisis.

3.—Josiah Misters executed at Shrewsbury for the attempted murder of Mr. Mackreth in the Angel Inn, Ludlow. He died declaring his innocence.

4.—Death of General Harrison, newly-elected President of the United States. He was succeeded by Vice-President Tyler.

5.—The Liverpool newspapers refer with serious apprehension to the non-arrival of the President steamship, which sailed from New York on the 11th March, with twenty-nine passengers. Insurance made with difficulty at 25 per cent.

11.—The Earl of Cardigan causes 100 lashes to be administered to Private Rogers of the 11th Hussars, in the riding-school at Hounslow, immediately after Divine service, and before the men could return to barracks.

13.—Accident at one of the furnaces in the old works at Dowlais Iron Works. At three o'clock an alarm was raised that the loose stones were giving way, but only one of the men was able to leave the hole where they were at work, when the whole mass, to the estimated weight of 100 tons, came down on the scaffolding erected to carry on the repairs, and completely buried eight of the men.

15.—Settled before Baron Rolfe, at Liverpool, the Brindle Will case. The question the special jury had to decide was whether the late Mr. Heatley, of Brindle, who devised his landed property to the defendant, the Rev. T. Sherburne, a Catholic priest, was competent to make a will. His competency to do so was disputed by the plaintiffs in the case, who claimed through their wives, as heirs-at-law of the testator. An arrangement was come to between the parties, in terms of which a verdict was entered for the defendant.

19.—Public dinner in Liverpool to welcome Commodore Sir Charles Napier, on his return from service in the Levant.

20.—Explanation on the Sunday flogging case made by Mr. Macaulay in the House of Commons. "It was a proceeding," he said, "which could not be reconciled with good sense or good taste, but it was not without precedent in both departments of the service. Such steps would now, however, be taken as would prevent the recurrence of any similar case."

21.—Wreck of the Irish emigrant vessel, Minstrel, on Red Island Reef, and loss of 147 lives.

22.—Order from the Adjutant-General expressing surprise that Lord Cardigan should have carried out the sentence of a court-martial on Sunday, and prohibiting such a course in future, except in extreme necessity.

23.—Doolan, Redding, and Hickie, tried at the Glasgow Circuit Court, for the murder of John Green, at Crosshill, on December 17th. A witness, George Cox, said: "I remember, in our lodgings on the Wednesday night before the murder, Doolan told me he had been 'sacked' or dismissed by Green, and that he intended to make him unable to sack another. Redding said Green was a strong supple fellow, and that he would not be able, and offered to go with him. Doolan said he required no assistance, and could do it himself quite well with the poker, taking hold of the poker at the same time. We all slept in the house that night. When we left in the morning I saw Doolan take the poker, and put it under the sleeve of his slop. On coming to the work I saw Doolan run across the bridge, and make a stroke at Green with the poker. Redding then struck him several blows with a bar of iron, which Hickie brought to him out of the smithy." A number of witnesses were examined as to the movements of the prisoners between the murder and their apprehension, and two or three spoke to the fact of Redding being for some weeks in possession of a watch stolen from the body of the murdered man. The jury brought in a verdict of guilty against all three, but recommended Hickie, as an accessory, to the merciful consideration of the court. The Lord Justice Clerk said, "A deliberate and premeditated murder, originating in revenge on the part of one man, is a crime, I am happy to say, rare in this part of the country. It is a crime, however, by no means rare in another part of her Majesty's dominions, whence these persons have lately emanated; and I am sorry to think that the brutal conduct and many escapes from justice in that country may have encouraged them to enter into this foul and deliberate conspiracy." Lord Moncrieff passed sentence of death on all three, and fixed the place of execution as near as possible to the scene of the murder at Crosshill.

26.—Lord Howick's amendment on the Government Registration of Voters (Ireland) Bill carried by a majority of 21 against the Ministry.

27.—Mr. Walter, Conservative, elected M.P. at Nottingham, by a majority of 296 over the Government candidate.

30.—St. George's Hotel, Albemarle-street, destroyed by fire, owing to ignition of the curtains in Lady Harcourt's bedroom. There were about fifty people in the hotel, but all escaped uninjured.

May 6.—The Duke of Argyll introduces a bill for the better regulation of Church Patronage in Scotland.

—Lord John Russell intimates that the preliminary arrangements between the Chinese Government and Captain Elliot had been disapproved of by our Government, and that Captain Elliot would be recalled.

8.—In the Arches Court, Sir H. Jenner Fust gives judgment against the defendant in the case of Mastin v. Escott, involving the validity of lay baptism. This suit was promoted by Mastin on the ground that Escott, vicar of Gedney, Lincolnshire, had refused to bury the infant children of two of his parishioners.

10.—An Anti-Corn Law Meeting compelled to adjourn from the large Assembly-room, Edinburgh, to an ante-room, in consequence of the noisy opposition of a body of Chartists and monopolists.

11.—At a farewell dinner, given at Malta to Sir R. Stopford by the officers of the fleet, the Admiral claimed all the merit of the operations in Syria to himself, and said that had Sir Charles Napier not been present others would have been found to do his duty.

12.—Fire at Stoke Canon, near Exeter, ending in the destruction of fifteen houses.

14.—Doolan and Redding executed at Crosshill, for the murder of Green. At the place of execution it was supposed there could not be less than 100,000 people, exclusive of the thousands who thronged the streets of Glasgow, to obtain a sight of the cavalcade and the two unfortunate beings who formed its chief attraction. They were attended by Bishop Murdoch. Their demeanour throughout was calm and collected. The scaffold was erected in a field a short distance from the bridge on which the murder was committed, and the two culprits had the fatal spot full in their view when they mounted the ladder.

Dreading some attempt at rescue by the Irish labourers on the railway, the magistrates had on the ground 500 of the 58th foot and 1st Royal Dragoons, besides a detachment of the 4th Dragoons from Edinburgh, and three pieces of artillery. After hanging the usual time the bodies were brought back to the city, and interred within the prison.

—The number of petitions presented up to this date in favour of the repeal of the Corn Laws was 1,607, signed by 474,448 people. The petitions against repeal amounted to 540, signed by 30,934.

18.—Conclusion of Sugar Duties' debate, on Lord Sandon's motion, after eight nights' duration. Majority against Ministers, 36.

20.—The General Assembly commences its sittings at Edinburgh.—Dr. Gordon unanimously chosen moderator. A paragraph in the Queen's letter earnestly recommended the members to inculcate upon the flocks under their charge lessons of good order and obedience to the Constitution under which they live.

21.—The British land and sea forces commence an attack on Canton, which is continued till the forts commanding the principal parts of the town are in their possession. The Chinese then sue for a short truce, during the continuance of which Plenipotentiary Elliot is induced to recommence negotiations, and offensive operations are suddenly drawn to a close. Major-General Gough writes:—"The flags of truce still appeared upon their walls at daylight on the 27th, and at a quarter past six o'clock I was on the point of sending the interpreter to explain that I could not respect such a display after my flag had been taken down, and should at once resume hostilities. At this moment an officer of the Royal Navy, who had been travelling all night, handed me a letter from her Majesty's Plenipotentiary. Whatever might be my sentiments, my duty was to acquiesce; and the attack, which was to commence in forty-five minutes, was countermanded." The terms required by the Plenipotentiary were, the evacuation of the city by all troops which did not belong to the province; the payment of 6,000,000 dollars within a week to England; and British troops to remain in position till the same was paid. The British loss was 15 killed and 127 wounded.

24.—Sir Robert Peel gives notice that he will, on Thursday next, move a resolution to the effect, "That her Majesty's Ministers do not sufficiently possess the confidence of the House of Commons to enable them to carry through the House measures which they deem of essential importance to the public welfare, and that their continuance in office under such circumstances is at variance with the spirit of the Constitution."

25.—Mr. T. Duncombe presents petitions said to be signed by 1,300,000 people, praying for the remission of all sentences upon political prisoners, and the adoption by Government of the People's Charter.

27.—Debate in the General Assembly on the Strathbogie case, ending in the deposition of the seven ministers, for yielding obedience to the civil court. On a division, Dr. Chalmers's motion was carried by a majority of 97; 222 voting for it, and 125 for Dr. Cook's amendment. "The Church of Scotland (said Dr. Chalmers) cannot tolerate, and, what is more, she cannot survive, the scandal of quietly putting up with delinquencies so enormous as those into which their brethren have fallen. We must vindicate our outraged authority, though that vindication were indeed the precursor of the dissolution of the National Church." A protest against the sentence of deposition was read by Dr. Cook. "The parties deposed (he said) had done nothing which was not sanctioned both by ecclesiastical and civil law, and we cannot, without violating what we owe to the Church and to the State, cease to regard these excellent men still as ministers, or refuse to hold communion, just as if the proceedings against them had never been instituted." The Assembly Hall was crowded in every part during the day, and numbers even surrounded the doors outside. Contrary to his usual custom the Royal Commissioner, Lord Belhaven, was present in the evening, and sat till the discussion was over, about three o'clock in the morning. Mr. Edwards, the newly inducted minister of Marnoch, was deposed next day.

29.—Colonel Wymer attacks a company of Affghans near Khelat-i-Ghilzie, and after a smart fight compels them to retreat, leaving eighty of their men dead on the field.

—Interdict served on the General Assembly, prohibiting them from carrying into effect the sentence of deposition on the Strathbogie ministers. The Non-intrusion party object to the legality of the service, the papers having been left with their officer at the door, by a messenger-at-arms.

June 1.—Died at sea, off Gibraltar, Sir David Walkie, R.A., aged 55.

2.—A public meeting held in the Assembly Rooms, Edinburgh, for the purpose of expressing sympathy with the seven ministers of Strathbogie, and strong disapprobation of the conduct of the majority in the General Assembly. Lord Dunfermline presided.

—Anti-Corn Law meeting at Manchester, Mr. Cobden in the chair. The Chartists and monopolists mustered in great force, and attempted to take possession of the place of meeting; but after a noisy struggle they were completely overpowered and dispersed.

4.—Conclusion of debate on Sir Robert Peel's No-confidence motion. For, 312; against, 311; Ministers being thus in a minority of one. Lord John Russell undertakes to state the intentions of the Government on Monday. In the meantime he intimates the withdrawal of his motion on the subject of the Corn Laws.

5.—Public intimation given that the underwriters, being satisfied of the loss of the President, are ready to settle with parties who have claims on them for losses.

7.—The British Consul at New York holds a court of inquiry concerning the loss of the President. Capt. Cole, of the Orpheus, left New York in company with her on the morning of the 11th of March, and continued in sight until the evening of the 12th. He last saw her about midway between the Nantucket Shoal and the St. George's Bank, rising on the top of a tremendous sea, pitching and labouring heavily. It was his belief that the President did not survive that gale, but foundered, with all on board, within a few hours after he saw her. In this opinion the most of the other nautical men present concurred.

—Lord John Russell announces the intention of the Ministry to advise the dissolution of the present Parliament, and the calling of a new one as early as possible. Sir Robert Peel therefore intimates his withdrawal of all objections to the granting of supplies for six months.

8.—Astley's Amphitheatre totally destroyed by fire, about 5.30 A.M., within three-quarters of an hour. Mr. Ducrow and his family had a narrow escape, and one of the female servants in the house was suffocated. There were about fifty horses in the stable, besides two zebras and a few asses. Only a small number were saved. The loss on the whole was estimated at 30,000*l.* The calamity so affected Mr. Ducrow that he lost his reason.

11.—At a meeting of the United Secession Synod in Glasgow a resolution, moved by Dr. Heugh, was carried, dismissing the appeal of Mr. Morrison from a sentence of the Presbytery of Kilmarnock, and continuing his suspension on the ground of errors in doctrine. Dr. Brown, of Edinburgh, opposed the sentence of suspension, because he was convinced that most of the doctrines charged against Mr. Morrison do not be proved contrary to Scripture.

12.—One woman killed, and a large number injured, in the church of St. Thomas, Ashton, in consequence of a rush to the doors, caused by a report that one of the galleries was giving way.

—Dinner and presentation of plate to the London sheriffs, in token of "high admiration of the conduct of those gentlemen, who preferred to endure a painful and protracted imprisonment rather than submit to the undefined and arbitrary privilege assumed by the House of Commons."

—In his address to the electors of London, Lord John Russell states that, "in framing the measures lately announced to Parliament, it has been the wish of the Queen's Government to lighten that kind of taxation which, while it yields nothing to the Exchequer, presses heavily on the people. They had also sought to unchain the industry of the great and prevailing interests of the community."

14.—Mr. Macaulay, M.P., in his address to the electors of Edinburgh, states that the question now before the constituencies is simply whether they wish new contributions exacted from the people, or new markets opened up to them.

—Admiral Stopford writes from Malta to Sir Charles Napier, denying that he had ever accused the Commodore of arrogating to himself the whole honour of the Syrian campaign.

15.—The Queen and Prince Albert visit Oxford on Commemoration Day.

—Lord Aberdeen presents a petition from the seven suspended ministers of Strathgogie, praying the House to interfere to prevent the sentence of suspension being carried into effect; but Lord Melbourne, while sympathizing with their position, declines to commit the Government to any direct course of action in their behalf.

21.—Anniversary of Battle of Trafalgar. Launch of the Trafalgar man-of-war, at Woolwich, in the presence of the Queen, and an immense gathering of people. At the request of her Majesty, the vessel was christened by Lady Bridport, a niece of Lord Nelson, and the wine used was a portion of that taken from the Victory after the battle of Trafalgar. There were about 500 people on board at the time of the launch, 100 of whom had taken part in the action after which the vessel was named.

22.—Parliament prorogued by the Queen in person. A Gazette Extraordinary was published next day, announcing its dissolution.

23.—Nomination day at Tamworth. In the course of his address, Sir Robert Peel said, "My object in political life was not so much to gain a position of official power, but to build up that great party, which has been gradually acquiring strength, and now presents, in firm united ranks, a body of 300 members of Parliament. The rumours you have heard of jealousies and differences of opinion are altogether without foundation. The party which has paid me the compliment of taking my advice and counsel is a united party, and no difference of principle prevails as to the course which we ought to pursue. So far as the Corn Laws are concerned, I cannot consent to substitute a fixed duty of 8*s.* per quarter for the present ascending and descending scale. The proposition of buying corn in the cheapest market is certainly tempting in theory; but before you determine that it is just, you must ascertain the amount of the burdens to which land in other countries is subjected, and compare them with the burdens imposed upon land in this country. I think a prudent statesman would pause before he subverted the principle on which protection is given to agriculture in this country."

—Trial of Mr. Moxon for blasphemy, in publishing Shelley's works, before Lord Denman and a special jury, in the Court of Queen's Bench. This case was originated by Henry Hetherington, a bookseller in the Strand, who, in April, 1840, had been sentenced to four months' imprisonment for selling Haslam's "Letters to the Clergy." Mr. Moxon was defended by his friend Mr. Serjeant Talfourd, who, in a speech of great power and beauty, pointed out the distinction between a man who publishes works which are infidel or impure because they are infidel or impure, and publishes them in a form and at a price which indicate the desire that they should work mischief, and one who publishes works in which evil of the same kind may be found, but who publishes them because, in spite of that imperfection, they are, on the whole, for the edification and delight of mankind. Lord Denman explained to the jury that they were bound to take the law as it had been handed down to them. The only question for their consideration was whether the work in question deserved the imputations which were cast upon it in the indictment. The jury, after deliberating for a quarter of an hour, declared the defendant guilty.

25.—Public dinner to Mr. Chas. Dickens in the Waterloo Rooms, Edinburgh, Professor Wilson in the chair. "I feel (he said, in replying to the toast of his health,) as if I stood among old friends whom I had intimately known and highly valued. I feel as if the death of the fictitious creatures, in which you have been kind enough to express an interest, had endeared us to each other, as real afflictions deepen friendship in actual life."

27.—Election riot at Carlisle, in which two constables lose their lives.

29.—Polling day in the City of London, ending in the return of two Conservatives and two Liberals, the former being Masterman and Lyle, and the latter Sir M. Wood and Lord John Russell. His lordship was lowest on the poll of those elected.

30.—Great Western Railway opened throughout from London to Bristol.

July 1.—Mr. Russell, the famous "Jerry Sneak" of Foote's "Mayor of Garratt," takes a farewell benefit at the Haymarket, after having been in the profession for 64 years.

5.—Sixty-four persons drowned at Rotherham, Yorkshire, by the capsizing of a vessel at launching, owing to the fact that, as the vessel was leaving the stays, the persons on board rushed to the leeward side, to see the effect of the dash into the water, thus causing the vessel to overbalance and overturn before she reached the water, which was about three feet from the ways.

10.—The Free-Trade candidates, Lord Howick and Lord Morpeth, defeated in North Northumberland and the West Riding.

19.—In thanking the electors of London, Lord John Russell thus refers to the results of the recent elections:—"In the English cities and boroughs there is a small majority in our favour. In the Scotch cities and boroughs a very decided majority in the same way. In the Irish boroughs and counties there is also a majority in favour of the policy of the present Ministers. In the Scotch counties the majority will be the other way, and in the English counties that majority will be overwhelming."

26.—Her Majesty and Prince Albert leave Windsor to visit the Duke of Bedford, at Woburn, and Lord Melbourne, at Bocket Hall.

28.—Eleventh Annual Meeting of British Association at Plymouth. Pres. Dr. Whewell.

August 4.—Messrs. William and Robert Chambers entertained at Peebles and presented with the freedom of their native town "in testimony and approbation of their eminent services in literature, education, and popular improvement."

6.—Nine workmen killed, and four injured, by an explosion in Thornley Pit, near Sunderland. About a dozen others were got out unharmed.

9.—Burning of the steamship Erie, trading between Buffalo and Chicago, and loss of 170 lives.

—Sir Henry Pottinger and Admiral Parker arrive at Macao to supersede Captain Elliott and Sir J. Bremner.

11.—The Commission of the General Assembly, on the motion of Mr. Candlish, agree by a large majority to institute proceedings against certain ministers and elders who had assisted at the communion in the parishes of the suspended ministers, Strathbogie. A protest was made by Dr. Cook and others, expressive of their intention to appeal without delay to a competent tribunal for a decision as to which of the contending parties in the struggle was to be considered the Established Church of the country.

14.—Accident to the royal hunting party near Virginia Water, caused by the dogs starting the horses in some of the carriages drawn up there to see the hunt. One of the postillions was much injured, and several narrow escapes were made from being thrown into the water.

—Wheat quoted at 86s. per quarter.

15.—Inauguration of the Napoleon column at Boulogne. "On this spot (so it was recorded), 16th of August, 1804, Napoleon in presence of the Grand Army distributed the decoration of the Legion of Honour to the soldiers and citizens who had deserved well of their country,—the four corps commanded by Marshal Soult, and the flotilla under the command of Admiral Bruer. Wishing to perpetuate the remembrance of this day, Louis Philippe I.,

King of the French, finished this column, consecrated by the Grand Army of Napoleon."

16.—In the case of the will of James Wood, late mercer and banker of the city of Gloucester, Lord Lyndhurst delivers the judgment of the Privy Council, pronouncing in favour of the validity of the codicil.

— Tried at the Croydon Sessions the great libel case of Bogle against Lawson, the publisher of the Times newspaper. It arose out of a communication in the Times of 26th May, respecting an "Extraordinary and extensive forgery and swindling conspiracy on the Continent," in which it was insinuated that Mr. Allan Bogle, of the firm of Bogle, Kerrick, & Co., bankers at Florence, was a party. The conspiracy was an attempt to defraud Messrs. Glyn and various bankers on the Continent by presenting forged letters of credit. The other parties said to be implicated were, the Marquis de Bourbell, and Louis d'Argeson, who attended to the engraving of the plates in London, Cunningham Graham of Gartmore, who designed the fac-similes (a step-father of the plaintiff Bogle), and his son, Alexander Graham. The two Grahams resided at Florence. The conspirators succeeded in possessing themselves of one of Messrs. Glyn's genuine letters of credit, and produced from it an imitation so perfect that one of the partners in the house was for a time unable to distinguish between the two. With this instrument, multiplied by numerous copies, they started their scheme of depredation in Brussels, Cologne, Ghent, Turin, Bologna, and even Florence itself, with astonishing rapidity, and had they not been wholly deficient in caution might have escaped detection for a much longer period than they did. It was proved that within a few days they succeeded in obtaining upon these forged letters of credit no less than 10,000*l.* Owing to a rule of evidence excluding from consideration certain private letters between the parties, the jury were not able legally to identify the plaintiff with the conspiracy, and they therefore returned a verdict in his favour, with a farthing damages. Lord Chief Justice Tindal refused to allow him costs of suit. Though the verdict was thus technically against the Times, the mercantile community were so sensible of the value of the exposure that a sum of 2,700*l.* was subscribed for the purpose of defraying the great expense to which it had been subjected in getting up evidence in the case. This offer the proprietors declined, but the money was afterwards invested in conformity with their desire in founding "Times Scholarships" at Oxford and Cambridge for boys in Christ's Hospital and City of London School. Memorial tablets were also put up in those schools, in the Royal Exchange, and over the door of the Times Office.

17.—Conference of Clergy at Manchester on the subject of the Corn Laws. An address was made by Mr. Cobden, and resolutions carried unanimously approving of the abolition. About 700 clergymen were present.

24.—Parliament opened by Commission. Referring to the necessity of increasing the public revenue, the Royal Speech contained the following paragraph:—"It will be for you to consider whether some of the duties are not so trifling in amount as to be unproductive to the revenue, while they are vexatious to commerce. You may further examine whether the principle of protection upon which others of these duties are founded be not carried to an extent injurious alike to the income of the State and the interests of the people. Her Majesty is desirous that you should consider the laws which regulate the trade in corn. It will be for you to determine whether these laws do not aggravate the natural fluctuation of supply, whether they do not embarrass trade, derange the currency, and by their operation diminish the comfort and increase the privation of the great body of the community." In the debate on the Address in the House of Lords, the Earl of Ripon's amendment was carried against the Ministry by a majority of 72.

— Died at his house, near Fulham Bridge, Theodore Edward Hook, aged 53, the well-known journalist and novelist.

26.—Lord Chancellor Cottingham issues new rules, orders, and regulations for the business of the Court of Chancery.

— The City of Amoy assaulted and taken possession of by the British forces; the fleet under the command of Admiral Parker, and the land forces under Sir H. Gough.

28.—Concluded at three o'clock this morning the debate on the Address in the House of Commons, when 269 voted for Ministers, and 360 against. Majority against Ministers, 91. Lord John Russell then named a Committee of the Opposition to draw up an answer to the Address.

— Meeting at the Thatched-house Tavern, presided over by Sir Robert Peel, for the purpose of considering the most appropriate method of doing honour to the memory of Sir David Wilkie. A statue in the National Gallery was ultimately resolved upon, and a subscription commenced for carrying it out. Lord John Russell proposed one of the resolutions.

30.—Ministers intimate their resignation of office, in consequence of the vote come to on the Address.

31.—Sir Robert Peel sent for by the Queen, and undertakes to construct a Ministry.

September 3.—The Gazette publishes a minute of the Council held at Claremont this day, when the new Ministers were sworn into office. First Lord of the Treasury, Sir Robert Peel; Lord Chancellor, Lord Lyndhurst; President of the Council, Lord Wharcliffe; Hon e Secretary, Sir James Graham; Foreign do., Lord Aberdeen. Leader in the House of Lords, without office, Duke of Wellington.

7.—The Gazette announces several changes in the Household offices, the most important being the appointment of the Duchess of Buccleuch to be Mistress of the Robes, in room of the Duchess of Sutherland.

9.—Twenty-five houses destroyed by fire at Fordington, near Dorchester.

— Vauxhall Gardens sold by auction for 20,000*l.*

11.—Strike of the masons at the new Houses of Parliament, owing to a dispute with the foreman regarding their "Union."

13.—Attempt to assassinate the Duke of Orleans, while passing through Paris with three of his brothers at the head of the 17th Light Infantry. The shot did not take effect on the Duke, but one of the officers was wounded, and his horse shot under him.

14.—Mr. Gladstone at Newark said, "There are two points on which the British farmer may rely; the first of which is, that adequate protection will be given to him, and the second is, that protection will be given him through the means of the sliding scale."

16.—Riot at Monkwearmouth, on the occasion of "chaining" Lord Howick at the close of the poll with Attwood. A shower of stones was thrown from the Reform Tavern by some Chartists, and the landlord, Liddell, fired a gun among the crowd. No one was seriously hurt, but the party in the street, exasperated by these proceedings, commenced an attack on the tavern, which they completely sacked, and to some extent destroyed. After some difficulty Liddell was apprehended, and the gun secured by Sir Hedworth Williamson.

19.—Death of Lord Sydenham, Governor of Canada, from lock-jaw, the effects of a fall from his horse.

21.—Robert Blakesley murders Bourden, landlord of the King's Head, Eastcheap, by stabbing him in the belly, and makes a murderous attack with a knife on two women,—one of them the wife of the murdered man, and the other her sister, wife of the murderer.

— The lighthouse on Sunderland pier, weighing 300 tons, and 75 feet high from the base, was moved by screw power for 140 feet from its original position. This day it was moved 11 feet in 15 minutes.

— London and Brighton Railway opened.

25.—President Tyler issues a proclamation warning the lawless marauders on the frontier line of Canada of the danger they run in the attempt to involve the two countries in hostilities. If any of the parties concerned in such proceedings fell into the hands of the British authorities, they would not be reclaimed as American citizens, nor would any interference be made in their behalf.

October 7.—A desperate attempt at Madrid by a band of conspirators, in the interest of the queen's mother, to storm the palace and get possession of the person of the young queen. Through the loyalty and courage of the guard the enterprise was defeated, though not before the conspirators had twice forced an entry into the royal apartments. Don Diego Leon, one of the leaders, was soon afterwards apprehended and shot.

— Parliament, described by the Whigs as "the Do-nothing," prorogued by Commission.

12.—Accident at the Victoria Theatre from the gallery stairs giving way under the pressure of a crowd.

— Major-Gen. Sir Robert Sale despatched by General Elphinstone from Cabul with the 13th Light Infantry and the 35th Native Infantry, to force the Khoord Pass, the Ghilzie chiefs having gathered at Tezeen, with the view of cutting off communication with British India. They entered the pass this day, and continued fighting their way to Gundamuck, which was reached on the 30th. They entered the ruined fortress of Jellalabad on the 12th November, and commenced to repair the walls. The state of the country would not permit any attempt to reach Cabul with supplies.

— Concluded at Utica the trial of Alexander McLeod, charged with being concerned in the destruction of the Caroline in 1837, and the death of Dupree, an American citizen. The apprehension of McLeod on American territory had given rise to much correspondence between the two countries, and it was at one time feared it might lead to a serious embroilment. All apprehension, however, was set at rest by the jury returning a verdict of acquittal on all the counts.

14.—At the meeting of the Norwich Branch of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, a band of Chartists interrupts the proceedings, and causes the chairman, Lord Wodehouse, to leave the room.

18.—Extraordinary high tide in the Thames, with much destruction of property. At high water the depth at the entrance of St. Katherine Dock was thirty-one feet. All the approaches to the Thames police office were cut off, and wherries employed to convey suitors to and from the court. The whole of the lower part of Westminster was inundated. If Parliament had been sitting, members could only have reached the House in boats. Palace-yard and the adjacent streets were under water. The floor of Westminster Hall, the Temple gardens, and the Duke of Buccleuch's gardens, were completely overflowed. A vitriol and naphtha manufactory in Battersea Fields suffered to the extent of 2,000*l.*

21.—Destruction by fire of Derby Town-hall, erected in 1828, at a cost of 12,000*l.* The fire was observed about two in the morning by a policeman on duty, and it continued raging till six, in spite of great efforts. The town records were destroyed, and various documents belonging to the revising barrister.

22.—Reward offered by fire-offices for the discovery of incendiaries in Warwickshire. Numerous fires about this time in Bedfordshire, Nottingham, and Yorkshire.

23.—Distress in the manufacturing districts. At a meeting held in Leeds to consider the condition of the poor it was reported that out of 4,752 families in that town, containing 19,936 individuals, 16,156 were unemployed. The average weekly income of each was $11\frac{1}{4}d.$, or something less than $1\frac{3}{4}d.$ per day.

26.—Sir William Macnaghten writes from Cabul to the Secretary of the Indian Government, explaining the facts connected with the rising of certain Ghilzie chiefs who, on account of the reduction of their allowances, had taken possession of some of the passes leading to the city. "There is no enemy to oppose us (he writes) on the open plain, and should we hereafter be forced into hostilities, a desultory mountain warfare will doubtless be that with which we shall have to contend." He therefore recommended the organization of three infantry corps of mountaineers to take the place of an equal number of regulars.

—The London journals draw attention to serious frauds in Exchequer Bills, accomplished through the connivance of Mr. Beaumont Smith, of the Comptroller's office.

28.—A miser, named Smith, died in his house, Seven Dials, London, in the possession of funded, leasehold, and freehold property, valued at 400,000*l.*

29.—Lord Palmerston writes to Mr. Byng regarding the pronunciation of the name of his horse "Iliona," about which bets had been taken up at Newmarket. "There can be no doubt that in point of prosody the o in Iliona, or Ilione, is short. Virgil settled the question in his first Æneid, when he says:—

'Præterea sceptrum, Ilione, quod gesserat olim Maxima natarum Priami.'"

—A mob of fanatical Orangemen attack the Dublin and Cork mail-coach, and severely maltreat an aged gentleman, whom they took for the Roman Catholic Bishop of Cork.

30.—The Duke of Wellington declines to receive a deputation relative to the distressed operatives of Paisley. "A meeting," he writes, "to discuss their distresses is not necessary in order to draw his attention to them, and his other occupations render it necessary that he should decline to receive the deputation. He begs the deputation to observe that he is not in the Queen's political service, that he does not fill any political office, and exercises no power or authority."

31.—Fire at the Tower of London. About half-past 10 P.M. the sentry of the Scotch Fusilier Guards, on the ramparts next to Tower Hill, observed a large body of smoke ascending as if from the centre of that part of the buildings known as the Grand Storehouse and Small Armoury. He sounded an alarm by discharging his musket, and the garrison immediately turned out. Unfortunately, not a drop of water was to be had, and from the dryness of the place, and the quantity of timber in the building, the total destruction of the armoury became inevitable. In less than a quarter of an hour after the discovery an immense body of fire was raging with uncontrolled fury. Engines soon arrived from the different metropolitan stations, but were utterly useless from want of water, though fully manned by the Foot Guards and relays, all carefully provided. Two hours elapsed before a supply could be procured; the flames in the meantime extending in the direction of the Jewel Tower, on the one side, and chapel and White Tower on the other. The regalia were fortunately saved, and placed in the house of the governor, Major Ebrington, without the loss of a single jewel. At two o'clock, when the fire had reached its fiercest power, considerable alarm was excited by the approach of the flames towards a magazine attached to the armoury; but at this time the tide was up, and the supply of water so abundant, that all danger from such an explosion was soon at an end. The powder itself, to the weight of about 9,000 tons, was got out and thrown into the moat near the Cradle Tower. The fire was supposed to have been caused by the overheating of a stove in the Round Table Tower. The total loss in stores and buildings was estimated at 200,000*l.*

November 2.—Daniel O'Connell elected Lord Mayor of Dublin, being the first appointment of the kind under the new Municipal Corporation Act.

—Serious disturbances at Cabul. Between 200 and 300 men attack the residence of Sir Alexander Burnes, and murder Sir Alexander, his brother, Lieut. Burnes, and Lieut. Broadfoot, who was in the house at the time. "The immediate cause of this outbreak in the capital was a seditious letter addressed by Abdoollah Khan to several chiefs of influence at Cabul, stating that it was the design of the envoy to seize and send them all to London. The principal rebels met on the previous night, and relying on the inflammable feelings of the people of Cabul, they pretended that the king had issued an order to put all infidels to death."—Memo-randum by Sir William Macnaghten. Three days afterwards the enemy obtained possession of the commissariat fort, thus not only greatly elating the Affghans outside the walls, but ultimately compelling the Envoy to negotiate with Akbar Khan for evacuating the city.

7.—Dr. Solomon Alexander consecrated First Bishop of England and Ireland in Jerusalem.

9.—This morning, at twelve minutes before eleven o'clock, the Queen was safely delivered of a prince. The event was made known by the firing of the Park and Tower guns.

—Discussion in the Edinburgh Town Council, on the case of Butters, confectioner, Grass-market, who, at the instigation of Mr. Guthrie's kirk-session, had been taken before Baillie Grieve, and fined 8s., with 2l. 13s. expenses, for keeping open his door on the Sunday, and selling sweetmeats to children in the neighbourhood. Being unable to pay the fine, he was lodged in the Calton jail, the council resolving that a complete inquiry should be made into the case.

10.—Illness of the Queen Dowager. "The Queen Dowager had some hours of refreshing sleep in the night, but there is no alleviation of her Majesty's symptoms this morning."

11.—Riot at Culsamond, on the occasion of inducting Mr. Middleton as assistant minister of the parish. An excited mob took possession of the church, and, with deafening yells, compelled the presbytery to retire to the manse, and there complete the ordination. The uproar was continued till midnight; the mob breaking the seats and windows of the church, or refreshing themselves with whisky and tobacco.

14.—Shocking tragedy in Burnley barracks. Private Morris, of the 60th Rifles, in a fit of jealousy, it is supposed, murders Lieut. O'Grady, and a female servant employed about the mess-room, by stabbing them with a carving-knife, and then commits suicide with the same weapon.

—Died at Paris, aged 75 years, the Earl of Elgin, famous for introducing into this country the remains of ancient art known as the Elgin marbles.

15.—Sir Robert Sale writes from Jellalabad, explaining the impossibility of returning to Cabul in his present position. "A regard for the honour and interests of our Government compels me to adhere to my plan already formed, of putting this place into a state of defence, and holding it, if possible, until the Cabul force falls back upon me, or succour arrives from Peshawur or India."

—Execution of Blakesley for the murder of innkeeper in Eastcheap.

17.—Attempt to set fire to the Horse Guards, and the barracks behind the National Gallery, by throwing in small hand-grenades.

—Great commotion in Dublin, on the occasion of Daniel O'Connell attending the levee of the Lord Lieutenant. The Corporation proceeded to the castle in full state, and the new Lord Mayor was favourably received.

20.—Cavanagh, the "fasting man," detected at Reading as an impostor, and sentenced to three months' imprisonment.

23.—The Gazette announces the brevet promotions consequent upon the birth of the Prince of Wales.

25.—Died suddenly at his residence, Pimlico, from spasm of the heart, Sir Francis Chantrey, R.A., sculptor.

December 1.—Meeting called by the Lord Provost in the Glasgow Royal Exchange, to devise means for relieving the distress in Paisley. It appeared that there were not fewer than 14,000 people in the town and neighbourhood in absolute want.

—Died Dr. G. Birkbeck, founder of mechanics' institutions, aged 65.

4. Tried at the Central Criminal Court Edward Beaumont Smith, charged with forging and uttering fraudulent Exchequer Bills to an immense amount. He pleaded guilty, and read a statement, explanatory of the gradual manner in which his necessities led him to commit the crimes with which he stood charged. "Whatever speculation (he said) may have been carried on by those who have used these Bills, no profit ever reached me, or ever was intended to do so. Year after year Bills have been wrung from me, under pretence of redeeming and cancelling those outstanding, in order to prevent discovery, and afterwards, by the repeated misapplication of them, the necessity was created for more, to accomplish the original purpose; and thus the frightful crime which has taken place was occasioned." A subsequent statement was to the effect that no person of rank or public character was in any way mixed up in the transaction, the sole parties being himself, Solari, Rassallo, and another whose office was in Basinghall-street, where they used to arrange their plans. He believed the total amount fabricated to be about 340,000l. the whole of which was wasted in gambling transactions on the Stock Exchange. Sentenced to transportation for life.

9.—Sir William Macnaghten writes from Cabul to the Hon Mr. Erskine, Bombay:—"We have now been besieged thirty-eight days by a contemptible enemy, whom the cowardice of our troops, and certain other circumstances which I will not mention, have emboldened to assume an attitude of superiority. Our provisions will be out in two or three days more, and the military authorities have strongly urged me to capitulate. This I will not do till the last moment."

10.—A Commercial Convention of the Midland Counties meets at Derby to consider the grievances under which the various manufacturing interests are placed by the restrictive policy of the Government. Resolutions approving of a relaxation of the tariff and the entire abolition of the Corn Laws were carried without opposition.

11.—Treaty entered into at Cabul between Sir William Macnaghten, on the one part, and Akbar Khan, with the principal chiefs of tribes, on the other. Immediate and ample supplies to be furnished to the troops previous to evacuating Afghanistan; Dost Mahomed to be released; and Shah Soojah to retire into private life, with a guaranteed payment of a lac of rupees annually.

16.—Explosion of a gasometer at the Dundee Gas Works. Two boys sitting in the retort house were killed, and the most of the property in the neighbourhood seriously damaged. During the commotion caused by this occurrence a serious fire was raging in Westward's Flax Mill, at the other end of the town.

23.—Murder of Sir William Macnaghten, and Captain Trevor, while engaged in a conference with Akbar Khan. On the road to the interview the Envoy sent back all his escort except ten men, among whom were Captains Trevor, Lawrence, and Mackenzie. The latter gave the following account of the occurrence to Lieutenant Eyre: "I observed that number of men armed to the teeth had gradually approached to the scene of conference, and were drawing round in a sort of circle. This Lawrence and myself pointed out to some of the chief men, who affected at first to drive them off with whips; but Mahomed Akbar observed that it was of no consequence, as they were in the secret. I then heard Akbar call out 'Begur, begur' (seize, seize), and turning round I saw him grasp the Envoy's left hand with an expression in his face of the most diabolical ferocity. I think it was Sultan Jan who laid hold of the Envoy's right hand. They dragged him in a stooping position down the hillock; the only words I heard poor Sir William utter being 'Ay barae Khooda' (for God's sake). I saw his face, however, and it was full of horror and astonishment." Next day Lady Sale records, "Numerous reports are current, but all agree in this, that both the Envoy's and Trevor's bodies are hanging in the public chok; the Envoy's decapitated and a mere trunk, the limbs having been carried in triumph about the city. A fallen man meets but little justice; and reports are rife that the Envoy was guilty of double dealing with Akbar Khan and Amenoolah Khan." At the moment the Envoy was seized, Mackenzie, Trevor, and Lawrence were disarmed, and forced away behind different chiefs. Trevor was cut down by Sultan Jan, but Lawrence and Mackenzie succeeded in saving their lives, and got back in a few days to the city. Lawrence then mentioned that he saw the Envoy grappling with Akbar, and the latter fire a pistol at him.

24.—Early this morning a gang of armed burglars entered the dwelling-house of John Awdry, South Wraxhall, Somerset, and compelled his two daughters to point out all the valuables in the house, which they seized and carried off. Sophia Awdry said, "Between two and three o'clock I heard the lock of my door move. I had not been asleep, and said, 'Who is it? come in.' In a few seconds the door was opened, and three men came in. They had large sticks in one hand and candles in the other. They all came round my bed, and one held a stick over my head, and said, 'If you will lie still we will not hurt you, but otherwise we will dash your brains out.' I answered, 'I shall be quiet; what do you want?' One said they were starving and must have money. 'We have not been used to such ways, but it is no use resisting; we are ten.'"

They afterwards went leisurely over the house and took everything they wished. The gang were all apprehended in a short time, and sentenced by Justice Coleridge to transportation for life.

29.—Serious commercial failures reported in Glasgow; among others that of Wingate, Son, & Co.; which had the effect of closing almost the whole of the few mills kept going in Paisley.

January 6.—The British forces, consisting of about 4,500 fighting men and 12,000 followers, commence their disastrous retreat from Cabul. "All," writes Lady Sale, "was confusion before daylight. The day was clear and frosty, the snow nearly a foot on the ground, and the thermometer considerably below the freezing point. When the rear-guard left cantonments they were fired upon by Affghans. The servants who were not concerned in the plunder all threw away their loads and ran off. Private baggage, commissariat, and ammunition were nearly annihilated at one fell swoop. The whole road was covered with men, women, and children, lying down in the snow to die." Fighting their way inch by inch among a people wild with hatred and fanaticism, it was two days before they reached the entrance of the Khoord Cabul Pass, only ten miles from Cabul. This formidable defile was about five miles in length, and shut in on either side by a line of lofty hills, every point of which seemed alive with fierce and treacherous Ghilzies. In this pass the immense multitude got jammed together in one monstrous unmanageable mass. Captain Skinner returned to remonstrate with Mahomed Akbar, who promised a cessation of hostilities if Major Pottinger and Captains Lawrence and Mackenzie were given up to him in addition to others. This was done, "and once more," writes Lieut. Eyre, "the living mass of men and animals was in motion. At the entrance of the pass an attempt was made to separate the troops from the non-combatants, which was but partially successful, and created considerable delay. The rapid effects of two nights' exposure to the frost in disorganizing the force can hardly be conceived. The idea of threading the stupendous pass before us in the face of an armed tribe of bloodthirsty barbarians, with such a dense irregular multitude, was frightful, and the spectacle then presented by that waving sea of animated beings can never be forgotten by those who witnessed it." Notwithstanding Akbar's pretended attempt to restrain the Ghilzies, their attacks were as frequent and cruel as ever, and it was calculated that in the pass alone over 3,000 lives were lost. On the 9th Lady Sale, Lady Macnaghten, Mrs. Trevor, and some other ladies were given up to Akbar, and so placed for a time beyond the dangers and dreadful privations of the camp. "There was but faint hope," writes Lady Sale, "of our ever getting over to Jellalabad, and we followed the stream. But although there was much talk regarding our going over, all I know of the affair is that I was told we were all to go, and that our horses were ready, and we must be immediately off." On the evening of the 10th it was determined, by a forced march, to try and reach Jugdulluk, a distance of twenty-two miles, but at eight in the morning they were still ten miles from that station. Here General Elphinstone and Brigadier Shelton were given up as additional hostages, and here commenced a conflict with the treacherous Affghans, which lasted, foot by foot, and day by day, till the entire force left could not muster more than twenty muskets. Strong barriers were at some places put up across the defile, when the Affghans rushed in on the pent-up crowd and committed wholesale slaughter. Not more than forty, it was thought, managed to clear the barrier, and of these the greater part were slain at other points or taken into captivity. Dr. Brydon alone escaped, and was the only officer of the whole Cabul force who reached the garrison of Jellalabad in safety.

7.—A Chartist Convention commences its sittings in Glasgow, and is attended by sixty-three delegates, among whom was Feargus O'Connor, representing the ancient burgh of Ruthlen.

11.—An Anti-Corn Law conference commences its sittings at Edinburgh.

15.—Brigadier Wild, having resolved to march forward to Jellalabad, enters the Khyber Pass, and captures the small fort of Ali Musjid, situate in a difficult part of the defile. From want of support by the native army he is compelled to abandon his conquest, and fall back on Peshawur.

17.—The foundation-stone of the new Royal Exchange laid by Prince Albert. The civic authorities met the Prince at Guildhall, where his Royal Highness arrived shortly before two o'clock. After a short stay there the procession was marshalled, and moved along Cheapside to a pavilion erected over the site in Cornhill. A Latin inscription placed in the foundation-stone referred to the burning of the two former Exchanges, and set forth that the City of London and ancient Company of Mercers again undertook "to restore the building at their own cost, on an enlarged and more ornamental plan, the munificence of Parliament providing the means of extending the site and of widening the approaches and crooked streets in every direction, in order that there might at length arise, under the auspices of Queen Victoria, built a third time from the ground, an Exchange worthy of this great nation and city, and suitable to the vastness of a commerce extending over the habitable globe." The Lord Mayor (Pirie) afterwards entertained the Prince and company in the Mansion House.

20.—Close of the contest for the Professorship of Poetry at Oxford, between Rev. Isaac Williams and Rev. James Garbett. After several meetings of the friends of both candidates to ascertain their relative strength, the numbers claimed were—Garbett, 921; Williams, 623. The latter thereupon retired.

22.—Visit of the King of Prussia to England. He was received on landing at Greenwich by Prince Albert, the Duke of Wellington, and other persons of distinction.

25.—Christening of the Prince of Wales at Windsor. The ceremony was performed, amid much splendour, by the Archbishop of Canterbury, with water specially brought from the river Jordan for the purpose. The King of Prussia acted as sponsor.

28.—Died in the York-road, Lambeth, A. Ducrow, equestrian, aged 48 years. He left the sum of 800*l.* for the erection of his tomb in Kensal Green Cemetery, and the interest of 200*l.* invested in the 3½ per cents. to be spent annually in the purchase of flowers for its adornment.

31.—The Duke of Buckingham withdraws from the Cabinet, on the ground, as was stated, of his opposition to the Ministerial plan of dealing with the Corn Laws.

February 1.—Two people killed and several injured by the falling of an old dismantled house in Charles-street, Drury-lane.

4.—Parliament opened by the Queen in person. Addressing the House of Commons, her Majesty said, "You will have seen with regret that, for several years past, the annual income has been inadequate to bear the public charges; and I feel confident that, fully sensible of the evil which must result from a continued deficiency of this nature during a peace, you will fully consider the best means of averting it." To "My Lords and Gentlemen" her Majesty recommended the consideration of the laws relating to the importation of corn, and other articles, the produce of foreign countries. She also observed with deep regret the continued distress in the manufacturing districts, a distress, she said, which was borne with exemplary patience and fortitude.

9.—Sir Robert Peel introduces his new sliding scale of corn duties to the House of Commons. A duty of 20*s.* to be levied when wheat is at 51*s.* per quarter, descending to 1*s.* when the price is 73*s.*, with rests or stops at 53*s.*, 54*s.*, 66*s.*, and 68*s.*, designed to diminish the possibility of tampering with the averages. With respect to the duty on other kinds of grain, he proposed to preserve the same proportion between them and wheat as was maintained in the existing scale: a maximum duty of 8*s.* on oats, and 11*s.* on barley, rye, &c. During the sitting great excitement was manifested both within and around the House of Commons. A number of Anti-Corn Law delegates attempted to take possession of the lobbies, but after some resistance they were induced by the police to retire outside.

10.—The largest meeting of the Anti-Corn Law delegates which has yet been held took place this day in the Crown and Anchor. Sir Robert Peel's new sliding scale was denounced as altogether unsatisfactory, and in no way calculated to relieve the distresses of the people.

14.—Grand ball in the Park Theatre, New York, in honour of Charles Dickens. About 2,500 people were present.

15.—Conclusion of the debate on Lord John Russell's amendment, "That this House, considering the evils which have been caused by the present Corn Laws, and especially by the fluctuation of the graduated or sliding scale, is not prepared to adopt the measure of her Majesty's Government, which is founded on the same principles and is likely to be attended by similar results." For the original motion, 349; for the amendment, 226. Majority for Ministers, 123.

16.—Riot at Northampton on the occasion of burning Sir Robert Peel in effigy.

17.—Robbery of 1,500*l.* in sovereigns, and 500*l.* in Bank of England notes, from the boot of the Perseverance coach, running between Manchester and Blackburn. The robbery was effected at Bury, chiefly through the aid of a man who had managed to put the bank box in the inside of his carpet-bag before the coach started from Manchester.

18.—Opening of the Edinburgh and Glasgow Railway. For months back this event was looked forward to with extraordinary interest, and in the two cities it connected, as well as at all the prominent parts of the line, the greatest excitement prevailed. Tickets were issued by the directors to the shareholders, city dignitaries, and others, to the number of 1,100, and the whole party were safely conveyed along the line. A banquet in Glasgow closed the day's rejoicings. The line had taken about three years to construct, and cost fully one million and a quarter.

22.—A special meeting of the shareholders called to consider the question of running a morning and evening train between Edinburgh and Glasgow on Sundays. After a long and somewhat bitter discussion, in which Sir Andrew Agnew and Mr. Makgill Crichton took a prominent part, the motion for running the trains, proposed by Mr. McNeil, was carried by a majority of 3,954 shares, or 554 votes.

— Came on for hearing in the Court of Exchequer the great betting case of Richard Thornton v. Portman and others. The defendants, for the purpose of protecting themselves and others, purchased the betting debts of a defaulter named Gurney, in order that by paying them in full they might secure his and their winnings. They accordingly required Thornton to pay his loss of 1,350*l.*; but that gentleman, having heard that certain parties had been settled with on terms of composition at less than 20*s.* in the pound, refused to meet the demand, unless the defendants would give him a personal guarantee to repay the sum due from him, in the event of their not having paid all Gurney's losings in full on or before the last day of the Houghton meeting. The guarantee was given, and plaintiff gave them a cheque for 1,250*l.* and an order on one Atkins for 100*l.* This latter sum, the plaintiff urged, was never received, and he now sued for the repayment of the 1,250*l.* on the ground that the defendants had failed to fulfil the condition under which it had been paid to them. The jury found for the plaintiff, who handed over the amount to Christ's Hospital.

23.—Correspondence between Mr. P. Shaw, advocate, and Mr. Makgill Crichton, regarding insinuations made by the latter at the Sunday-train meeting against Sir C. Shaw. Crichton in his last letter writes,—"I am now satisfied that the statements referred to by you were erroneous impressions, and are calculated to convey imputations against his character which are unfounded. I therefore retract them: I regret having made them, and offer to your brother my apology."

24.—Conclusion of the debate on Mr. Villiers' motion for the repeal of the Corn Laws. Mr. Cobden, taking advantage of Sir Robert Peel's admission that it was impossible to fix the price of corn by any legislative enactments, said, "I would be obliged to him if he would not try to do it. It is a simple open avowal that we are met here to legislate for a class against the people. There is no use in resorting to sophistry, no good in disguising the truth in a dexterous combination and shuffling of figures." Majority for Ministers 303, in a House of 483.

March 1.—Surrender of Ghuznee by Lieut.-Col. Palmer. "It is with much concern (he writes to the officer commanding at Jellalabad) I acquaint you that I have been compelled to enter into terms to evacuate the citadel and forts within ten days. . . . In capitulating I have only acted up to the orders of Major Pottinger and General Elphinstone, who directed me to evacuate the citadel and city on the arrival of Rohilla Khan. This chief arrived, and promised to escort us in safety to Cabul." The garrison were hardly out of the city when the treachery of the Affghans began. Day after day their attacks continued, and the troops were reduced to the last extremity of hunger and thirst, under a galling fire from the surrounding enemy. The Sepoys were the peculiar object of the hatred of the Ghilzies. Colonel Palmer was seized and tortured, to make him give up treasure alleged to have been buried by the British troops. None ever reached Cabul but a few prisoners, kept alive for ransom.

— Explosion of D'Ernst's firework factory, Lambeth, and destruction of the whole of the inmates—four in number.

2.—The Bishop of London addresses a pastoral to his clergy, expressive of his desire to have a collection made in their churches for the Colonial Bishopric Fund, in conformity with the resolution agreed upon at Lambeth Palace when the erection of Colonial sees was fixed.

3.—The City of Edinburgh steamer drifts from the pier at Ostend and becomes a complete wreck.

4.—Mr. Cobden draws the attention of the House to personal slanderous assertions made by Mr. Ferrand, to the effect that while calling for a repeal of the Corn Laws he was working his own mill night and day, and by so doing had amassed a large fortune. Mr. Ferrand admitted that he had charged many Anti-Corn Law manufacturers with so acting, but denied saying they were all guilty. The Speaker ruled that it was irregular and contrary to the rule of the House to question the positive denial of the honourable gentleman.

9.—Robert Goldsborough tried at the York Assizes for the murder of William Huntley at Crathorne in 1830. Acquitted.

10.—General Nott repels an attack on Candahar with such effect that the enemy broke up their encampment and left him in quiet possession of the place.

— The Chinese attempt to drive the British out of Ningpo, but are defeated in the centre of the town with great slaughter.

11.—The Times publishes details from private letters of the evacuation of Cabul, and the subsequent slaughter of the British in the Khoord Pass. Dr. Brydon was stated to have arrived at Jellalabad, 18th January, wounded and confused from injuries and fatigue. The news not generally credited.

12.—Captain James Ross's explorative expedition in the South Polar Seas narrowly escapes destruction. During a heavy breeze the Erebus and Terror were driven into violent collision with an extensive chain of icebergs. The Erebus was much damaged.

13.—George Lucas murders three of his children, and then commits suicide.

18.—Dr. Candlish, on behalf of the Central Church Defence Committee, submits his scheme for the support of a ministry and the maintenance of ordinances among the members of the Non-erastian Church of Scotland.

19.—Accident in Wombwell's menagerie, Stafford. A rash visitor, named Martin, reaching his arm into the tigress' den, was seized by the tigers, and mangled so severely that death ensued in a few days.

20.—The Earl of Munster commits suicide.

21.—Explosion of the Telegraph high-pressure steamer at Helensburgh pier, Dumbarton-shire, and loss of fifteen lives.

24.—Trial of the Culsalmond rioters before the High Court of Justiciary. A verdict of not proven returned against all the parties charged, except Dr. Robertson, who was said to have been a leader in the disturbance, and was found not guilty.

25.—Storm in the Forth of Clyde; much destruction of property both on shore and at sea.

27.—Brigadier-Gen. England repulsed in the Rujuk Pass, when attempting to relieve Gen. Nott in Candahar. He falls back upon Quetta.

April 1.—Inundation at Derby. The streets under water for several hours, and one young woman drowned in her bed.

3.—Arrival of the Overland Mail with news of the dreadful disasters in Afghanistan. The Duke of Wellington was reported to be deeply affected, declaring that in all his experience, or in all history, he had never heard of so lamentable a sacrifice of life in a British force. A letter from Lady Sale to her husband, the hero of Jellalabad, giving an account of the outbreak of Cabul, excited much interest and enthusiasm for her ladyship.

5.—At half-past 3 A.M. the troops under the command of General Pollock commence their march to force the Khyber Pass. From Jumrood on the east the pass extends for twenty-eight miles towards Jelallabad. As far as the fort of Ali-Musjid it is deep and uninterrupted. For seven miles beyond the ascent is somewhat uniform, till near Sundu Khana, where for two miles it runs along the face of a frightful precipice, like the galleries of the Simplon. General Pollock found the mouth strongly fortified and the enemy in force on the heights on either side, but two columns advanced and gained the crest of the hill, driving all before them. On the 9th the advance guard reached Sundu Khana, and the whole force had cleared the pass before the 14th, being the first instance of an army forcing its way through these defiles against an enemy. On the 16th the troops under General Pollock entered Jellalabad amidst enthusiastic greetings on both sides. The garrison mounted the walls of the fortress, and loud cheers, mingling with the roar of cannon, attested the joy with which the beleaguered troops welcomed the arrival of their deliverers.

— Concluded in the Commission Court, Dublin, the trial of Robert Caldwell, attorney, for assault with intent on the person of Mrs. James Corbett. The outrage was alleged to have taken place in Mr. Corbett's house. Prisoner's counsel pleaded previous familiarity, and submitted letters said to have passed between the parties. The jury, however, returned a verdict of guilty, and the prisoner was sentenced to two years' imprisonment.

6.—The police discover in the stable of Gardard Lodge, Roehampton, London, part of the body of a female. The police were drawn to the place in consequence of a pawnbroker in Wandsworth having charged the coachman Good with stealing a pair of trowsers from his shop. Good evinced great concern when the officers entered the stable in search of the missing garment, and when their attention was directed to the fourth stall he suddenly rushed out, locked the door upon them, and fled. In that stall, beneath a little hay, they found an object which at first they could not well make out, but which turned out to be the trunk of a female, with the head and limbs cut off, the abdomen cut open, and the entrails extracted. The whole of the cuts through the flesh had been made with a sharp knife, but the bones were hacked with some blunt instrument. The stable-door was at once burst open and the alarm given, when on further search a quantity of burnt bones belonging to the body was discovered in the fire place of the harness-room. It was impossible to identify the remains, but from inquiries instantly set on foot there was no doubt that they were those of a woman brought by Good or his wife to the Lodge the preceding Sunday. At the inquest the jury found that the body was that of Jane Jones, or Good, and that Daniel Good had wilfully murdered her. Good eluded pursuit for nearly a fortnight, but was then discovered working as a bricklayer's labourer at Tunbridge by a man who had formerly been in the police force at Wandsworth. He was at once taken before the magistrate. While under examination he took a comb from his pocket and with it turned back the hair from his forehead, as if to hide a bald place—a circumstance which corresponded with a known peculiarity of the murderer Good. He persisted in stating that his name was O'Connor, and knew nothing about the murder. He was committed to Maidstone jail, where he was again identified by two officers, and conveyed by them back to London.

7.—At daylight this morning Sir Robert Sale attacks the besieging force of Akbar Khan outside the walls of Jellalabad. "The Affghans," he writes, "made repeated attempts to check our advance by throwing forward heavy bodies of horse, which twice threatened to force the detachments of foot under Captain Havelock; but in a short time they were dislodged from every point of their position, their cannon taken, and their camp involved in a general conflagration. The battle was over and the enemy in full retreat in the direction of Jughman by about 7 A.M. The defeat of Mahomed Akbar in open field by the troops whom he had boasted of blockading has been complete and signal." Colonel Dennie, of the 13th Light Infantry, was shot during the engagement.

8.—Lord John Russell introduces an amendment on the Government Income Tax scheme, on the ground that it was inquisitorial, and had hitherto been considered in the light of a war reserve only. The debate lasted till the 13th, when, on a division, Ministers had a majority of 106, in a House of 510 members.

13.—Lord Melbourne submits a resolution affirming the principle of a fixed instead of a fluctuating duty on corn, but is defeated by a large majority.

17.—A religious service performed by signs to the inmates of the Deaf and Dumb, Refuge, Holborn.

23.—Commencement of the sale of the property of Strawberry Hill. A wooden building was erected on the lawn for the purpose of accommodating the visitors, there not being an apartment in the dwelling-house large enough. The sale opened with the library of books, to which six entire days were devoted.

—Died a prisoner in the hands of Akbar Khan Major-General Elphinstone, the commander of the British forces in Affghanistan.

24.—Serious fires, supposed to be the work of incendiaries, took place in Huddersfield, Kidderminster, and Bridport.

29.—Bungaree, the Australian pugilist, dies from injuries received in a fight with Broome at Newmarket.

—The new Corn Law Bill receives the royal assent.

May 2.—Demonstration of Chartists in the metropolis on occasion of taking their monster national petition to the House of Commons. The procession mustered in the square of Lincoln's Inn Fields about one o'clock, and proceeded by way of Holborn, Tottenham-court-road, the New-road, Langham-place, and Regent-street, to Westminster, which was reached between three and four o'clock. The petition, described as having 3,317,702 names appended, was borne on the shoulders of sixteen men, representing different trades in the metropolis. Being too large for admission at the door of the House, it was broken up and carried in piecemeal by a long line of men. On the presentation of the petition Mr. Duncombe moved that the petitioners should be heard at the bar by counsel. Mr. T. B. Macaulay opposed the motion, drawing special attention to one passage in the petition complaining of the obligation to pay the National Debt, and to another remonstrating against the monopoly of property in land. Sir Robert Peel opposed the motion because it was an impeachment of the whole constitution and social order of the kingdom, and the business of the country could not be suspended while the House inquired whether it would be fitting to sponge out the National Debt and repeal the Union. Mr. Roebuck described the petition as drawn up by a cowardly and malignant demagogue. On a division there appeared, for the hearing, 49; against, 287.

2.—Lady Chantrey presents to the University of Oxford her husband's valuable collection of original busts, and copies from the antique, on condition that a permanent place is assigned to them in the sculpture gallery.

3.—In the Consistory Court Dr. Lushington decides against the legality of the Braintree Church-rate levied by a minority of the vestry for the repair of the church.

5.—A policeman shot, and two others wounded, by an armed footpad who had been prowling for some days about the neighbourhood of Highbury-barn. On being pursued to Highbury-vale he seems to have resolved on keeping his pursuers at bay. He placed his back against a hedge, and pulled out another pistol in addition to the one he was seen to load. Police-constable Daly approached nearer than any one else to him and advised him to surrender. He said he would not, and would murder the first man who touched him. Daly, assisted by a broker named Mott, then went up to take him in custody, when he fired both pistols off at once. Both Daly and Mott fell, the former being shot dead through the heart, and the latter badly wounded. The assassin then gave himself up, and was conveyed to Islington station. He gave his name as Thomas Cooper, bricklayer, Clerkenwell, and stated that starvation had compelled him to take to the road.

—A fearful conflagration burst out in Ham-burgh, lasting five days, and burning the largest and wealthiest part of the city. On the evening of the 6th a witness writes: "A great part of this rich and flourishing town has fallen a prey to a fire which hourly sweeps in volumes through street upon street with merciless fury. It burst forth at twelve o'clock on Wednesday night, and has so gained up to this time, aided by high winds, in the midst of misdirected efforts to extinguish it or arrest its progress, that it rages now with increased violence over a space so wide, that I believe it will yet require the sacrifice of nearly one half the remainder of the town to place a sufficient gap to bar its continuance to the destruction of the whole of this ancient city. Three of the five principal churches were destroyed, the Borsenhalle, the Old and New Exchange, the Senate House, the Post Office, and domestic dwellings to an extent that made a third of the population houseless. From 150 to 200 lives were also sacrificed. English Insurance Offices were involved to the extent of about one million sterling.

6.—Mr. Roebuck brings under the notice of the House of Commons the suspicious circumstances connected with the withdrawal of several election petitions, the result, as he alleged, of a corrupt compact between the parties interested. He put the question direct to various members whose case had been postponed by the Committee, but they generally repudiated his right to interfere with their private arrangement. The House, however, consented to the appointment of a select committee to inquire into the compromise of election petitions.

—Explosion in Hodge's Distillery, Church-street, Lambeth, and great destruction of spirits and other property by fire.

7.—Earthquake at St. Domingo, demolishing the town of Cape Haytien, and destroying, it was calculated, not fewer than 10,000 lives. A fire broke out afterwards, destroying the powder magazine, and with it the remnant of the inhabitants who had escaped the earthquake.

8.—Horrible occurrence on the railway between Paris and Versailles. A train of seventeen carriages, filled with from 1,500 to 1,800 passengers, who had been taking part in the king's fête, left Versailles about six o'clock, drawn by two engines. Between Meudon and Bellevue the axle of the first engine broke and the body fell to the ground. The second engine smashed it in pieces and passed over it, when the boiler burst and the unfortunate stoker was thrown into the air. The impetus which the carriages had received, aided by an engine behind, brought three of them over the wreck, when they took fire, and the doors being locked, the whole of the passengers were consumed amid excruciating agonies. The next three carriages also took fire, and though the whole of them were not entirely consumed, very few of the passengers were able to escape; only two or three, indeed, who managed to crush themselves through the window. About 150 of the passengers in the carriages behind were crushed and broken in the most dreadful manner. The list of killed was officially set down at fifty, but it was generally thought many more perished in the flames. In some of the compartments there was no possibility of separating or identifying the charred masses of humanity. Two stokers, at first stupefied by the smoke, and then calcined by the fire, remained for a considerable time after they had expired standing at their post and grasping the tools they had been using.

10.—Disturbance in Paradise-terrace, Lambeth, caused by the attempt of an officer of the Court of Session to serve an order upon the Dowager Lady Cardross to deliver up two of her children to their grandfather, the Earl of Buchan. The small house in Paradise-terrace to which she had retreated continued in a state of siege for several days.

11.—A royal letter issued to the Archbishop of Canterbury for a collection in aid of the relief of the working classes in England and Scotland.

12.—The Queen gives a fancy dress ball in the Throne Room, Buckingham Palace, with a success and magnificence unrivalled since the days of Charles II. Her Majesty appeared as Queen Phillipa, consort of Edward III., and Prince Albert as Edward III. himself. The costumes of those in her Majesty's own circle belonged mostly to this era. The Duchess of Cambridge was received in state as Anne of Brittany at the head of her Court. Dancing was engaged in for some hours. At one o'clock the Lord Steward conducted her Majesty and the Prince to supper, which was served amid a blaze of splendour from costly salvers, vases, tankards, and jewelled cups. After supper the Queen danced a quadrille with Prince George of Cambridge, their vis-à-vis being the Duchess of Buccleuch and the Duke of Beaufort. Her Majesty left the ballroom at half-past two. The tent of Tipoo Sultan was erected within the Corinthian portico adjoining the Green Drawing-room, and used as a refreshment-room.

14.—Trial of Daniel Good at the Central Criminal Court, before the Lord Chief Justice, Baron Alderson, and Justice Coltman. (See April 6.) His reputed wife, Mary Good, was also charged as being an accessory after the fact. They both pleaded not guilty. The trial of Daniel Good was proceeded with separately, and lasted till 8 o'clock P.M., when the jury brought in a verdict of guilty. The Chief Justice then passed sentence of death, after which Good made a rambling statement to the effect that a witness, Susan Butcher, produced on the trial was the cause of the whole, the woman Jones having committed suicide in the stable through jealousy of his connexion with that person. The body, he said, was cut up and partially burned by a stranger, who offered to do it for a sovereign. He concluded his address, "Good night all, ladies and gentlemen; I have a great deal more to say, but I am so bad I cannot say it." He was then removed. The woman Mary, or Moll Good, was dismissed.

23.—In the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland the Rev. Mr. Cunningham moves that "The Assembly having considered the overtures on patronage, resolve and declare that patronage is a grievance attended with injury to the cause of pure religion in this Church and kingdom, is the source of all the difficulties in which the Church is now involved, and therefore ought to be abolished." An amendment to the effect that it was inexpedient in the present circumstances to adopt the motion was proposed by the Procurator. The debate lasted till 2 A.M. next morning, when a division took place; 216 voting for the motion, and 147 for the amendment. On the 27th a majority in the Assembly deposed Clerk of Lethendy, and Livingstone of Cambusnethan, for resisting decrees of presbyteries; Duguid, of Glass, was declared to have forfeited his licence, on account of accepting induction at the hands of deposed ministers; and Mr. Middleton was rejected as the presentee to Culsalmond, on the ground of having violated the Veto Act. Next day Captain E. Dalrymple gave rise to a bitter personal discussion, by charging Mr. Cunningham with having had his veracity impugned in the newspapers—a crime, he said, worse than any for which the ministers were deposed, and giving him good reason to object to Mr. Cunningham's commission. The Captain was ultimately induced to retract his expression. On the 30th the Assembly, taking into consideration the solemn circumstances in which the Church was placed, resolved and agreed on the famous Claim, Declaration, and Protest, which henceforward became a basis for the proceedings of the majority. It was forwarded with an address to the Queen, signed by the Moderator.

— Execution of Daniel Good for the Roehampton murder. He died affirming his innocence in the face of a yelling, tumultuous mob.

26.—Grand ball in her Majesty's Theatre for the benefit of the Spitalfield weavers. Her Majesty was present with a brilliant circle.

— The British forces defeat the Boers at Port Natal, and occupy the place.

30.—John Francis attempts to shoot the Queen. Colonel Arbuthnot, one of the Eque-ries, said "At the time, between six and seven o'clock, we were coming down Constitution-hill. When about half-way down I observed the prisoner, and on the carriage reaching him he took a pistol from his side and fired it in the direction of the Queen. He was not above seven feet from the carriage, which by instruction was proceeding at a rapid rate then; he should say twelve or thirteen miles an hour." The Queen exhibited her usual calm demeanour under the outrage. Francis was seized instantly by private Allen of the Fusilier Guards and police-constable Trower, who was attempting to dash the pistol out of his hand when the shot was fired. He was taken to the lodge adjoining the palace, where he was searched, and a ball, with a little powder and the still warm pistol, were taken from his person. Francis preserved a dogged silence regarding his motive, and refused to give any explanation about his antecedents; but it was soon ascertained that he was the son of a machinist in Drury-lane Theatre, and had for some months been out of employment. He was examined in the first instance before the Privy Council, and then committed to Newgate. Her Majesty attended the Italian Opera in the evening, and received an enthusiastic welcome. Congratulatory addresses were voted next day by both Houses of Parliament, and many were afterwards forwarded by corporate bodies throughout the kingdom.

June 1.—Ann Friesdale, a young woman of remarkable beauty, found drowned in the Regent's Canal, supposed to have been thrown in.

3.—In Glasgow large masses of the unemployed muster on the Green, and having formed themselves into marching order, commence a begging tour through the city.

4.—Explosion at Apothecaries' Hall, caused by the bursting of a bomb-shell, on which Mr. Hennell, the principal analyser, was operating. He was blown to atoms, and everything in that part of the building destroyed.

— Royal proclamation issued regarding light-sovereigns and half-sovereigns in circulation.

— Disturbance at Chatham, between the seamen belonging to certain colliers in the Medway and the soldiers of the 26th Foot, then in garrison. Several officers belonging to the regiment were seriously abused.

6.—Lord Congleton commits suicide, by hanging himself from the bedpost with a neckerchief.

7.—Lord Ashley obtains leave to bring in a bill for restricting the employment of women and children in mines and factories. In the course of his speech he made a powerful use of the revolting facts brought to light by the special commission appointed to inquire into this subject.

11.—Provision riots in Ireland. At Ennis the mob seized a boat being loaded with meal and flour for Kilrush, and took possession of the whole cargo. Towards evening the disorder in the town greatly increased, and the police fired among the mob, when two were killed and several wounded. In Cork an attack was made on the potato market, but the mob failed to force an entrance.

12.—Died, after a few hours' illness, of heart disease, the Rev. Thomas Arnold, D.D., Head Master of Rugby School.

13.—In the House of Lords the judges decide the case of Lady Hewley's Charity in favour of Trinitarian Protestant Dissenters, and against the claims made by Unitarians to participate therein.

14.—Lord Campbell brings under the notice of the House of Lords the case of police-constable Simpson, whose evidence had been rejected on a trial at Stirling, on the ground that he lay under suspicion of being an Atheist. After an explanation by the Lord Chancellor, the motion for the production of papers was withdrawn.

15.—A female monster in Liverpool mutilates the body of her new-born infant by cutting off its head, legs, and arms with a pair of scissors.

— Commencement of a series of highway robberies in the neighbourhood of Bristol by a gang of armed ruffians.

17.—Mr. Fox Maule presents a petition from the non-intrusive party in the Scotch Church, but Sir Robert Peel explains that Government had given up all intention of interfering in the dispute at this time.

— Trial of Francis at the Central Criminal Court for attempting to shoot the Queen. He was found guilty, and sentenced to death.

On the conclusion of Chief Justice Tindal's address he fell insensible into the arms of one of the turnkeys, and in that state was carried out of the court. The sentence was afterwards commuted to transportation for life.

23.—A band of English colonists, on attempting to take possession of land at Cloudy Bay, Wairoo, sold to them by the New Zealand Company, are set upon by natives, and nineteen of them killed.

— Tried in the Court of Common Pleas the action raised by Mr. Macready, late lessee of Drury-lane, against Mr. Harmer, of the Despatch, for articles of criticism in that journal affecting his moral character. Verdict for the plaintiff, damages 5*l.*

24.—Royal proclamation, announcing the issue of half-farthings, but no one to be compelled to take more in payment than the value of one sixpence.

25.—The Marquis and Marchioness of Waterford thrown out of a carriage when driving through their grounds. The Marquis escaped unhurt, but her ladyship was severely cut and bruised.

27.—Cook's circus, on Glasgow-green, destroyed by fire, originating in an escape of gas. The horses were got out, but portions of the properties were destroyed. Occurring at an early hour of the evening, there were only a few people in the gallery, and they escaped without injury.

30.—Destructive fire in Bermondsey, the damage to property being estimated at 100,000*l.*

July 2.—Food riot in Dumfries, and the shops of various mealmongers on each side of the Nith plundered.

3.—A deformed youth, named Bean, levels a pistol at her Majesty when passing from Buckingham Palace to the Chapel Royal, St. James's. He was committed to trial for misdemeanour, the capital charge being abandoned. The pistol was loaded, but it did not go off. Bean was not caught at the time—a circumstance which led to the apprehension of a large number of hump-backed people in the metropolis.

4.—Execution of Cooper for the murder of Constable Daly at Highbury.

5.—In the House of Commons Lord Worsley draws the attention of the Secretary-at-War to the reports regarding certain disrespectful words said to have been used by Colonel Henry Dundas when speaking of the Queen. Sir H. Hardinge stated, in reply, that the Colonel having failed to absolve himself from the grave offence, was now dismissed from the position of Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, and placed on the half-pay list.

9.—A body of Anti-Corn Law delegates, numbering 144, obtain an interview with Sir Robert Peel on the subject of their grievance; but the Premier refuses to give them any pledge as to his future conduct.

11.—Mr. Villiers' motion, that the House resolve itself into a committee to consider the laws relating to the importation of corn, lost on a division by 117 to 231.

12.—Sir Robert Peel introduces a bill for the better protection of the Queen's person against minor offences, making offenders liable to seven years' transportation, or imprisonment with corporeal chastisement.

13.—Death of the Duke of Orleans, eldest son of the King of the French, from the effects of a fall out of his cabriolet near the Porte Maillot.

15.—Affair of honour between Captain Boldero and the Hon. Craven Berkeley. The meeting arose out of an article in the Morning Chronicle, purporting to record expressions made use of by Captain Boldero in the library of the House of Commons, regarding the punishment to which Col. Dundas had been subjected for using language disrespectful of the Queen. "If any one," he was reported to have said, "drunk or sober, choose to swear at the Queen in my presence, I should take no notice of it; I am not an eavesdropper." Berkeley denied all knowledge of the article, but affirmed the general correctness of the report. The parties met in the neighbourhood of Osterley Park, and exchanged shots without effect. Explanations then took place, and the principals left the ground with their friends.

18.—Meetings held this day in Liverpool, Manchester, and Leeds, to consider the great and daily increasing distress of the country, and with the view, if possible, of inducing her Majesty's Ministers to take steps, before the dissolution of Parliament, for carrying out some remedial measure. Deputations were appointed to wait on Sir Robert Peel and other members of the Government.

19.—A trotting-match takes place in the grounds attached to the Rosemary Branch Tavern, when a grey pony, twelve hands and a half high, is ridden by one of Mr. Batty's monkeys, dressed in racing costume, and accomplishes a distance of fourteen miles in fifty-seven minutes.

21.—The city of Chin-Kiang-Foo, commanding the entrance to the Grand Canal, stormed and taken by the British forces under Sir Hugh Gough. The Tartar general, when he saw that all was lost, retired to his house, which he commanded his servants to set on fire, and sat in his chair till he was burned to death. One of the scaling-party writes:—"It is impossible to compute the loss of the Chinese, for when they found they could stand no longer against us, they cut the throats of their wives and children, or drove them into wells or ponds, and then destroyed themselves. In many houses there were from eight to twelve dead bodies, and I myself saw a dozen women and children drowning themselves in a small pond the day after the fight." The first man who reached the top of the battlement was Lieut. Cuddy, of the 55th, who planted the English ensign on the walls, under the fire of the enemy, and then coolly assisted the foremost of his party up the scaling-ladder. The killed and wounded on the British side amounted to 169.

26.—Captivity of Col. Stoddart and Capt. Conolly at Bokhara. Lady Sale records in the journal of her captivity:—"Col. Stoddart and Capt. Arthur Conolly are prisoners at Bokhara. The latter had been enthusiastically employed in endeavouring to effect the release of slaves in Kokhan. The King of Bokhara conquered the chief of that country, and placed Conolly in confinement at Bokhara. He and his fellow-prisoner, by the last account, had been 126 days confined in a dungeon underground without light; they had never changed their clothes or washed, and their food was let down to them once in four or five days. A native who had compassion on them received a message through the person who took their food to them, and through him Conolly has communicated with his family here, who also are now powerless to assist him."

28.—The Rev. Archibald Campbell Tait, Fellow and Tutor of Balliol, elected Head Master of Rugby School.

—Thunder-storm in the metropolis, during the continuance of which the lightning struck and injured the spire of the church of St. Martin-in-the-Fields.

—Debate in the House of Commons on the report and recommendation of the Select Committee appointed to inquire into the compromise of election petitions. Mr. Russell, one of the members for Reading, and a person implicated in the inquiry, taunted Mr. Roebuck with being an unfit person to have the conduct of such an inquiry, having himself sat in the House as the paid agent of the rebel colony of Canada. On a division, the recommendation of the Committee to delay the issue of new writs for the different boroughs was negatived by 136 to 47.

August 1.—Opening of the Thames Tunnel. About 500 visitors pass through from the Wapping side to Rotherhithe.

—The colliers and iron-miners in the Airdrie and Coatbridge districts strike work for an advance of wages. They were joined in a few days by the workmen in the Glasgow district, giving rise to great inconvenience throughout the whole of the west of Scotland.

4.—Alarming disturbances break out in the manufacturing districts. The spinners and weavers of Staleybridge strike, in consequence of a proposal to reduce their wages, and the men, banding themselves together, succeed in turning out all the hands in the Ashton and Oldham mills. Gathering strength as they went on, they entered Manchester in great force, but divided into sections, when they saw the military approaching. The mills here were mostly stopped, and attacked by the mob, the rioting continuing, with more or less severity, over a week. During three days twenty-three people were taken to the infirmary in consequence of affrays between the military or special constables and the mob. As in other towns, they were chiefly under the direction of Chartist demagogues. On the 7th the town of Stockport was the scene of serious rioting. The mob forced an entrance into the union workhouse at Snowheath, and carried off 672 loaves and 7l. in copper money. Next day a conflict took place between the workmen and military in Preston, when the latter were compelled to fire; two or three were fatally wounded. Stockport, Macclesfield, Dudley, Bolton, and Huddersfield were all kept in terror by bands of excited operatives, demanding "a fair day's wage for a fair day's work." On the 15th, at Burslem, the house of Mr. Parker, a magistrate, was burnt to the ground, and the Town Hall, police offices, and several private houses ransacked. Here also the military were compelled to fire, killing three unfortunate agitators, and wounding a dozen others. In Dunfermline the weavers set fire to Watson's factory and had possession of the town for the greater part of a night.

5.—The House of Lords give a final decision regarding Lady Hewley's bequest of "certain manors in York, in trust to support godly preachers of Christ's Holy Gospel," a phrase taken to designate Protestant Dissenters. In process of time the trust fell entirely into the hands of Unitarians, but attention was drawn to the subject by the report of the Charity Commissioners, and a bill was filed in Chancery to dispossess them. The Vice-Chancellor and Lord Chancellor decided against the claim of the Unitarians. Lord Cottenham now pronounced judgment, affirming the decree of the Court below, with costs.

7.—General Nott leaves Candahar to join General Pollock at Cabul, his route lying along the valley of the Tumuk river up to its source in the hills near Muhoor. He encountered an Affghan force near Ghuznee, and scattered it without much loss on his own side.

9.—Treaty signed at Washington by Lord Ashburton on the part of the British Government, and Mr. Webster on behalf of the American, regarding the north-west boundary of the two countries, the suppression of the slave-trade, and the extradition of criminals, questions which had given rise to much correspondence between the two countries.

12.—Parliament prorogued by the Queen in person. The concluding paragraph of the speech expressed the confidence she had that when "my lords and gentlemen" returned to their counties, they would do their utmost to encourage, by example and exertion, that spirit of order and submission to the law, without which there could be no enjoyment of the fruits of peaceful industry, and no advance in the course of social improvement.

14.—Proclamation issued regarding the multitudes of lawless and disorderly persons who by force and violence were entering mills and manufactories, and by threats and intimidation preventing peaceable people from following their usual occupation. During the week of greatest anxiety to the Government,—from the 18th to the 25th,—a clerk was sent down from the London post-office, with directions, under the authority of a Secretary of State's warrant, to open the letters of six parties named therein, all taking a prominent part in the disturbances. Two following warrants authorized him to open the letters of ten other persons. Most of these parties were afterwards apprehended, indicted, and convicted before the Special Commission appointed to try the parties charged with exciting the disturbances in the manufacturing districts.—Report of Secret Committee on Post-Office.

17.—A seditious placard, urging the people to rise against the authorities, issued in Manchester by the Executive Committee of the National Chartist Association.

19.—Jane Cooper, a domestic servant, commits suicide by throwing herself from the top of the Monument. She took advantage of the momentary absence of the guard to clamber over the railings, and precipitate herself into Fish-street-hill.

20.—Incendiary fires in two Liverpool timber-yards, supposed to have been caused by parties connected with the sawyers' strike combination.

— Father Mathew visits Scotland, and distributes his temperance pledges to masses of people in Edinburgh, Glasgow, and other cities.

— General Pollock commences his march from Jellalabad to Cabul. The first conflict took place about two miles from Gundamuck, where 12,000 Affghans were repulsed and forced to retire upon Cabul.

24.—George White, a Birmingham Chartist, writes to Brother Cooper in Leicester:—"My house has been surrounded with police these two nights, and a warrant has been issued for my apprehension. I have nevertheless marched with the sovereign people, and addressed them in defiance of their warrant. There was some ugly work last night. My body-guard chucked a raw lobster (a policeman) into the canal, and the town has been paraded by soldiers, our lads cheering and marching with them like trumps."

— Consecration of five colonial bishops in Westminster Abbey.

25.—Owing to the number of suicides from the Monument, the City Lands Committee resolve to enclose the top.

— Bean tried for assaulting the Queen with a pistol, and sentenced to eighteen months' imprisonment in Millbank.

26.—Treaty of peace concluded with China. 21,000,000 dollars to be paid within three years; Canton, Amoy, Foo-chow-foo, Ningpo, and Shanghai to be thrown open to British merchants; and the island of Hong Kong to be ceded in perpetuity, to her Britannic Majesty.

29.—The Queen and Prince Albert embark at Woolwich on their first visit to Scotland.

September 1.—The Queen arrives off Inchkeith about 1 o'clock this morning, and lands at Granton pier: 5 o'clock, where she was received by the Duke of Buccleuch, lord-lieutenant of the county. The royal cortège proceeded by way of Inverleith-row and Cannonmill-bridge to the boundary of the city of Edinburgh, where it was expected her Majesty was to be received by the lord provost and magistrates of the city. From a misunderstanding as to the hour of landing they had not left the council-chamber, where some of them had been sitting the most of the night, and the procession continued its course through the city by way of Pitt-street, Hanover-street, Princes-street, and the Calton-hill. At Parson-green the dragoons closed up to the royal carriage, and a quicker pace was continued along the road to Dalkeith Palace. Edinburgh was filled with visitors from various parts of Scotland, and great preparations had been made for giving her Majesty a truly royal welcome; but the enthusiasm was somewhat checked by the want of proper arrangement as to the precise time when the city would be reached. To make up, as far as possible, for the disappointment thus experienced, her Majesty re-entered the city on the Saturday following, and was received in great state by the magistrates. Sir Robert Peel, who accompanied her Majesty in a separate carriage, was alternately cheered and hissed. The route, thickly packed with spectators, was from Holyrood, up the Canongate and High-street to the Castle, and then by way of the Earthen-mound and Princes-street to Dalmeny Park, the seat of the Earl of Rosebery. A gallery erected at the end of Princes-street-gardens unfortunately gave way, and between fifty and sixty people were more or less injured. The foundation-stone of Victoria Hall, designed for the use of the General Assembly, was laid this day, with a grand Masonic display in honour of her Majesty's visit. The Queen attended Divine service in Dalkeith private chapel on the 4th, and gave a reception in the Palace on the 5th. She left Dalkeith on the 6th, and visited the Earl of Mansfield, at Scone, the following day; the Marquis of Breadalbane, at Taymouth, on the 8th (where deer-stalking was engaged in by Prince Albert); and Lord Willoughby D'Eresby, at Drummond, on the 9th. Her Majesty departed from Granton pier on the 15th, after a stay in Scotland of fourteen days. In a letter addressed to the Lord Advocate, Lord Aberdeen was instructed to say, "The Queen will leave Scotland with a feeling of regret that her visit on the present occasion could not be farther prolonged. Her Majesty fully expected to witness the loyalty and attachment of her Scottish subjects; but the devotion and enthusiasm evinced in every quarter, and by all ranks, have produced an impression on the mind of her Majesty which can never be effaced."

5.—Tried at the York assizes and Lancashire assizes about 150 individuals charged with mobbing and rioting during the recent disturbances in these districts. They were sentenced to various terms of imprisonment. A Special Commission sat in other counties for the same purpose.

— General Nott recaptures the fortress of Ghuznee, on his march to Cabul. "I ordered," he writes, "the fortification and citadel to be destroyed, because it had been the scene of treachery, mutilation, torture, starvation, and cruel murder to our unresisting and imprisoned countrymen."

13.—General Pollock defeats Akbar Khan in the Valley of Tezeen. No farther opposition being offered to the advance of the British through the passes, they encamped on the race-ground at Cabul two days afterwards. The city was taken possession of on the 15th.

20.—Release of the Affghan captives, confined by Akbar Khan in various parts throughout the Tezeen valley and at Bameean. At the pass near Kote Ashruffe, Sale left his infantry to hold the position, and proceeded at the head of the 3d Dragoons. "A party of Sultan Jan's men," writes Lady Sale, "were in the neighbourhood. Had we not received assistance our recapture was certain, but as it was they dared not attack the force they saw. It is impossible to express our feelings on Sale's approach. When we arrived where the infantry were posted, they cheered all the captives as they passed them, and the men of the 13th pressed forward to welcome us individually. On arriving at the camp, Capt. Backhouse fired a royal salute from his mountain train guns; and not only our old friends but all the officers in the party came to offer congratulations and welcome our return from captivity."

23.—Fire in Crampton-street, Liverpool, which spread into Farnby-street and Neptune-street, destroying a number of large warehouses and sheds filled with costly merchandise. The damage was estimated at 700,000*l.*, one-half being covered by insurances. About twenty lives were supposed to have been lost during the three days the conflagration raged.

24.—Died at Kingston House, Knightsbridge, aged 82, the Marquis Wellesley.

27.—Foundation-stone laid of the Victoria Harbour, Dunbar.

— Inquiry into the fraud and conspiracy practised upon Mr. Woolley, a Bristol timber-merchant. Ann Morgan and Mary Ann Byers (with the latter of whom he had been entrapped into a marriage) were committed to prison.

29.—General M'Caskill storms and captures the town of Istalif, Kohistan. By General Pollock's instruction the place was set on fire, a proceeding which excited both native and European soldiers to other acts of wanton cruelty and plunder, much commented on afterwards.

31.—Feargus O'Connor arrested, on the charge of exciting to sedition, in Manchester and other towns, during the disturbances in August last.

October 1.—Lord Ellenborough issues a proclamation from Simla, announcing that the British army now in possession of Afghanistan would be withdrawn to the Sutlej. "The Governor-General will leave it to the Affghans themselves to create a government amidst the anarchy which is the consequence of their crimes. To force a sovereign upon a reluctant people would be as inconsistent with the policy as it is with the principles of the British Government, tending to place the arms and resources of that people at the disposal of the first invader, and to impose the burthen of supporting a sovereign without the prospect of benefit from his alliance." The date of this despatch was afterwards disputed in Parliament, on the ground that Lord Ellenborough could not possibly know that one of the main objects of the expedition, the rescue of the prisoners, had been accomplished at this time. Mr. Macaulay alleged that the proclamation had been ante-dated, for the purpose of contrasting with the manifesto of Lord Auckland against the Affghans.

— Cargoes for America are so difficult to procure at Liverpool, that the owners of the Sydney agree to take out 180 Mormon converts for 115*l.*; the owners of the Henry accept of 100*l.* for conveying 140, being a little more than 15*s.* per head.

10.—The Bishop of London delivers a Charge to his clergy in St. Paul's, having reference principally to Puseyite innovations, which he mildly censured.

11.—In his opening charge at the Lancashire Special Commission, Lord Abinger made reference to public meetings in a manner severely criticised. "An assembly," he said, "consisting of such multitudes as to make all discussion and debate ridiculous and a farce, never can be assembled for the purpose of deliberate and calm discussion. If, therefore, an assembly consists of such multitudes, or if you find that all attempts at debate are put down, and that the only object of the parties is to hear one side, the meeting ceases to be one awedly for deliberation, and cannot protect itself under that pretension."

12.—Evacuation of Affghanistan by the British forces. The united armies of General Pollock and General Nott commence their march from Cabul back to Peshawur. A great portion of the city was left in ruins, and the Char Chouk, or principal bazaar, where the remains of Sir William Macnaghten had been exposed to insult, was blown up. The British army now spread devastation and slaughter on every side of their route. "No troops," writes General Pollock, "could feel otherwise than excited at the sight of the skeletons of their late brethren in arms, which still lay covering the road from Gundamuck to Cabul; and as if the more to raise a spirit of revenge, the barricade at Jugdulluck was literally covered with skeletons." Jellalabad, so ably defended by Sale, was one among many other places levelled with the dust. General Pollock reached Peshawur on the 3d November, and on the 6th General Nott with the rear division emerged from the Khyber Pass at Jumrood. Major-Gen. England left Quetta, and marched towards British India by the Bolan Pass.

13.—Grace Darling, the heroine of the Longstone Lighthouse, dies at Bamborough, aged 25.

17.—A meeting of female politicians held in the Association Hall, Old Bailey, for the purpose of forming a female Chartist Association to co-operate with the original society.

— Dr. Buckland, Mr. George Stephenson, and Dr. Lyon Playfair, while on a visit to Sir Robert Peel, at Drayton, meet the tenantry at breakfast, and discuss various questions relating to agricultural improvement.

18.—Explosion of a steam-boiler in Bolckow's iron-works, Middlesborough, by which four workmen were killed and twenty others much scalded and bruised.

19.—David Roberts, A. R. A., entertained at a public dinner in the Hopetoun Rooms, Edinburgh, as a compliment on his return from Syria.

31.—Came on for trial at the Central Criminal Court the charge of theft raised by Lord Frankfort, Baron Montmorency, against Alice Lowe, a young woman formerly resident in his house. In the course of his evidence, his lordship said, "About 10 o'clock on the evening of the 28th of May the prisoner came to my house in a cab. I asked her what she wanted, when she said she came to see me, and intended to stop. I kept her cab waiting till nearly 1 o'clock, and then, when I saw that she was determined to stop, I sent it away.

She remained with me till the 22d of July." With reference to the various articles of jewellery alleged to have been stolen by her, the jury considered they had been given to her in presents, and, without retiring, returned a verdict of Not guilty.

November 5.—A woman named Frances Bennett, residing at Ruardean-hill, in the Forest of Dean, confesses to having murdered each of her six children soon after birth, and buried them under the pavement of the brew-house, with the assistance of the person who cohabited with her. On examination the skeletons were found where she described.

7.—Meeting to receive report of auditors of Times' Testimonial Fund, the Lord Mayor in the chair.

8.—Capt. Douglas, of the 49th Madras Infantry, committed to prison as a deserter, preparatory to bringing against him charges of malversation and acceptance of bribes when in India.

10.—At a stormy meeting of the Marylebone Vestry, Mr. Hume, M.P., carries his motion, approving of a grant being made from the funds of the vestry to aid in erecting a monument to the Scottish Reformers of 1793.

— Her Majesty visits the Duke of Wellington at Walmer Castle.

14.—Mr. Norton, the police-magistrate, makes inquiry concerning a painful case of destitution in Stepney. Two young women, daughters of the late Major Reynolds, of the 5th West India Regiment, being left utterly unprovided for at his death, were now trying to preserve their existence by making shirts for a slop-shop at 1½*s.* each. Public attention was now drawn to the case, and a subscription raised in their behalf.

16.—Proclamation from the Governor-General (Lord Ellenborough) to all the princes, and chiefs, and people of India:—"My brothers and my friends, our victorious army bears the gates of the Temple of Somnauth in triumph from Afghanistan, and the despoiled tomb of Sultan Mahmoud looks upon the ruins of Ghuznee. The insult of 800 years is at last avenged. The gates of the Temple of Somnauth, so long the memorial of your humiliation, are become the proudest record of your national glory, the proof of your superiority in arms over the nations beyond the Indus. To you, princes and chiefs of Sirhind, of Rajwarra, of Malwa, and Guzerat, I shall commit this glorious trophy of successful war. You will yourselves, with all honour, transmit the gates of sandal-wood through your respective territories to the restored Temple of Somnauth. The chiefs of Sirhind shall be informed at what time our victorious army will first deliver the gates of the temple into their guardianship at the foot of the bridge of the Sutlej."

— Opening of the Glasgow Corn Exchange.

18.—A whale, sixteen feet long, caught in the Thames off Deptford pier.

21.—Division Orders by Major-General Sir C. J. Napier, dated at Succur:—"Gentlemen as well as beggars may, if they like, ride to the devil when they get on horseback; but neither gentlemen nor beggars have a right to send other people there, which will be the case if furious riding be allowed in camp or beyond." The offender to be arrested, and Capt. Pope to inflict punishment.

22.—Proposal made in the Edinburgh Town Council to pass a vote of censure on the Lord Provost, Sir James Forrest, for various offensive expressions he had used regarding the majority of that body at a dinner given to Councillor Johnstone.

— The Anti-Corn-Law League hold a meeting in Manchester, at which they resolve to raise 50,000*l.* as a fund for sending lecturers throughout the country, and otherwise informing the public mind.

30.—The Fleet and Marshalsea Prisons closed. The prisoners were removed to the Queen's Prison, under the authority of an Act passed last session. There were seventy in the Fleet and three in the Marshalsea.

December 1.—The Queen directs letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal, granting the dignity of Baronet to Lieut.-Gen. Sir Hugh Gough. Sir Wm. Parker, Sir Henry Pottinger, and Major-Gen. Nott were created Knights Grand Cross of the Bath, and Major-Gen. Pollock Companion of the Bath.

10.—Died at Hardwicke Grange, near Shrewsbury, aged 70, Lord Hill, Commander-in-Chief.

13.—Correspondence between Peter Borthwick and Mr. Carter, regarding the statement made by the latter when undergoing his examination in the Insolvent Court.

14.—At a late hour this evening a fire broke out in a dwelling-house in the Minories. Two women were killed by throwing themselves out of a window on the second floor, and five were consumed inside.

25.—During early mass in Galway Point chapel, a false alarm was raised that the gallery was falling, and in the rush to escape thirty people were killed, and many more bruised.

30.—Bursting of the embankment of Glanderstone Dam, near Barrhead, Renfrewshire, and loss of nine lives. The print-works of Springfield and Arthurlie were almost swept off their sites by the current.

31.—Miss Newell, an insane woman, attends at the Guildhall Police Court, for the purpose of urging her claim to the sovereignty of England. She had obtained, she said, a Divine revelation to that effect. Shaking hands with the presiding magistrate, Sir Chapman Marshall, she remarked, "Pardon me, if I take leave of you in the words of the good old song, 'Adieu, thou dreary pile!'"

1843.

January 4.—Sir James Graham replies to the Memorial and Addresses of the last General Assembly of the Church of Scotland. "Her Majesty's ministers," he answered, "now understanding that nothing less than the total abrogation of the rights of the Crown and of other patrons will satisfy the Church, are bound with firmness to declare that they cannot advise her Majesty to consent to the grant of any such demand."

7.—The Velveten Correspondence.—Sir Robert Peel having accepted from Mr. Barlow, of Ancoats Vale Works, the gift of a piece of the new fabric known as velveten, and stamped with a free-trade design, writes, "that he was not aware till to-day that the specimen of manufacture bore any allusion to matters which are the subject of public controversy. He begged, therefore, to return that which had been accepted under an erroneous impression."

14.—The much-talked-of gates of Somnauth carried into Delhi in state, under a canopy of crimson and gold.

15.—A force raised by the Ameers of Scinde to protect their rights on the Indus, attack and capture the British residency, Hyderabad. Next day they are defeated near Meeanee, by Sir Charles Napier, leaving above 1,000 men dead on the field.

16.—Fire in Rolls' floor-cloth manufactory, Old Kent-road. Three dwelling-houses adjoining were also burnt down, and altogether it was estimated that property was destroyed to the extent of 50,000*l.*

17.—The Commissioners of Woods and Forests interfere to prevent the Marylebone Vestry erecting a monument to the Scottish political martyrs in Regent-circus, on the ground that the freehold was vested in her Majesty, and the vestry had no control there except for purposes of lighting and cleansing.

18.—The Morning Herald publishes a letter from Constantinople, of the 21st December, giving an account of the execution of Colonel Stoddart and Captain Conolly at Bokhara.

20.—Daniel McNaughten shoots Edmund Drummond, private secretary to Sir Robert Peel, when passing along Whitehall, between the Admiralty and Horse Guards. Police-constable Silver, in describing the manner of the attack, said he saw Mr. Drummond put his hand to his left side and reel, his coat being on fire at the time. When the assassin had fired one pistol he put it back into his breast and drew forth another, but the constable seized him at that moment, and the pistol went off in the struggle, the ball striking the pavement. It was not at first thought that the wound was fatal, but unfavourable symptoms presented themselves the day after the occurrence, and on a second examination it was found that the lowest of the ribs had been seriously injured by the pistol-ball. Mr. Drummond expired on the 25th. The ball, which was fired with the pistol close to the back, entered between the eleventh and twelfth ribs, and was found in front between the cartilages of the seventh and eighth ribs. McNaughten, as has been stated, was instantly seized, and on being taken to Gardener's-lane station, sought to defend the act on the plea that the Tories had been persecuting him for years. From other remarks he let fall it was evident that the intended victim was not the secretary, but Sir Robert Peel himself. He was committed for trial on the charge of wilful murder.

26.—Monster powder blast at Dover in connexion with the works of the South-Eastern Railway. A mine, formed of three cells, was sunk in the base of the cliff, and into this was placed the enormous quantity of 18,500 lbs. of gunpowder. The charge was fired by the voltaic battery, when not less than one million tons of chalk was dislodged by the shock, and settled gently down into the sea below.

31.—A Special Meeting of the Commissioners of the General Assembly held in Edinburgh. Resolutions carried by a majority to present petitions to Parliament, embodying their claim of right, in which two things are demanded,—an efficient measure of non-intrusion and a full recognition of an independent jurisdiction in the Church, altogether uncontrolled by the civil courts. "The Commission," it was resolved, "consider it necessary to repeat explicitly what is intimated in the claim of rights, that if the Church do not obtain the redress sought, no result can be anticipated but that those of her office-bearers and members who adhere to the great doctrines and principles for which she is now contending, must renounce their present connexion with the State, and abandon the temporal benefits of an establishment which will in that case be practically and in effect clogged with conditions which they cannot in conscience fill."

February 1.—The Rev. W. Bailey, LL.D., tried at the Central Criminal Court, and sentenced to transportation for life for forging and uttering a promissory note for 2,875*l.*, with intent to defraud the executors of Robert Smith, the well-known miser of Seven Dials.

2.—Parliament opened by Commission. Her Majesty regretted "the diminished receipt from some of the ordinary sources of revenue. She fears that it must be in part attributed to the reduced consumption of many articles, caused by the depression of the manufacturing industry of the country which had so long prevailed, and which her Majesty has so deeply lamented."

8.—Destructive earthquake experienced in the West India Islands. At Antigua, St. Thomas, and St. Christopher, the property thrown down was considerable. Pointe-à-Pitre, Guadeloupe, was entirely destroyed, and many hundreds of persons buried in the ruins.

9.—Mr. Vernon Smith moves for the production of papers connected with Lord Ellenborough's proclamation regarding the gates of Sonnauth: a proclamation, he said, which was an outrage upon the feelings of the people of India, and a source of ridicule to those of England.

10.—Captain Dalrymple, M.P. for Wigtonshire, and Mr. Horsman, M.P. for Cocker-mouth, engage in a ploughing contest at Cleland House, Lanarkshire. They both made good work, but the judge, after some hesitation, pronounced in favour of Captain Dalrymple. The ground was afterwards named "The Members' Acre."

14.—The Duke of Wellington, in the Lords, and Lord Stanley, in the Commons, move the thanks of the respective Houses to the Fleet and Army engaged in the China service. On the 20th a similar honour was paid to the Indian Army.

16.—Conclusion of the debate on Lord Howick's motion for a committee of the whole House to consider the reference in the Queen's speech to the long-continued depression of manufacturing industry. For the motion 191, against it 306. Towards the close of the debate a disagreeable feeling was created in the House through a phrase used by Mr. Cobden, to the effect that he held Sir Robert Peel personally responsible for the present lamentable and dangerous state of affairs,—words which Sir Robert (who instantly replied under great excitement) interpreted as an incentive to attacks upon his life. Amid much confusion Mr. Cobden was permitted to explain that what he meant was that the right hon. baronet was responsible by virtue of his office. Immediately before the division, about 4 A.M. another personal altercation took place between Mr. Cobden and Mr. Roebuck, regarding the approval said to have been manifested by the latter at Lord Brougham's bitter attack upon some of the League agitators in the House of Lords.

21.—Robert Elliot, the Greta Green priest, and successor of the famous blacksmith, writes to the Times, stating that he had married 7,744 persons from 1811 to 1839, the largest number in any one year being 198, and the smallest 42.

24.—The police force an entrance into the gaming-house, 34, St. James's-street, when the son of the proprietor, attempting to escape by the roof, fell into a back court, and received injuries from which he died next morning.

26.—At the funeral of the notorious Richard Carlisle in Kensal-green Cemetery, a disturbance is created by the objection of the relatives to have the funeral service read at the grave.

March 1.—Commenced at Lancaster, the trial of Feargus O'Connor and fifty-eight others, charged with being concerned in the late disturbances in the manufacturing districts. O'Connor and fourteen others were found guilty on the fifth count, charging them with exciting dissatisfaction and persuading workmen to leave their labours, but as there was some doubt whether this was an offence or not, Baron Rolfe reserved the point for consideration by the Court of Queen's Bench. Sixteen were found guilty on the fourth count, for employing threats to compel men to leave their work. Judgment deferred till next term. The rest were acquitted.

— The first instalment of the Chinese indemnity, amounting to 1,000,000*l.*, arrives at the Mint in five wagons, each drawn by four horses, and escorted by a detachment of the 60th Regiment.

3.—Commenced at the Old Bailey the trial of Daniel McNaughten for the murder of Mr. Drummond. The Solicitor-General, Sir William Follett, having stated the main facts of the case, and adduced witnesses in support thereof, a large array of medical evidence was adduced in defence to show that the crime had been committed under the influence of an irresistible impulse, over which the prisoner had no control. The jury returned a verdict of Not guilty, on the ground of insanity, and the prisoner, who did not appear in the least affected by his trial, was removed from the bar to be kept in confinement during her Majesty's pleasure.

6.—Joshua Jones Ashley, formerly a banker and army-agent in Regent-street, tried at the Central Criminal Court for stealing knives, forks, and spoons from various clubs with which he was connected. Found guilty, and sentenced to seven years' transportation. At the close no less than sixteen pawnbrokers were called, each of whom produced from four to two and a half dozen of silver tablespoons and forks, which were identified by the secretaries of the respective clubs, and handed over to them.

7.—Mr. Goulburn, Chancellor of the Exchequer, applies at Bow-street Police-office for a warrant to arrest John Dillon, late an officer in the navy, who had threatened to shoot him.

8.—Mr. Fox Maule's motion for a committee to take into consideration the petition of the Commission of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, negatived by a majority of 211 to 76 votes.

9.—Mr. Vernon Smith's motion, that the Sonnauth proclamation of Lord Ellenborough was unwise, indecorous, and reprehensible, negatively by a majority of 242 to 157.

10.—James Stevenson, a Cameronian enthusiast, who had travelled from Lochwinnoch, Renfrewshire, was examined at the Mansion-house, on the charge of using threatening language regarding the Queen and Sir Robert Peel. From the conversation which took place between the prisoner and the Lord Mayor, the unfortunate man appeared to have gone crazy on the subject of the Kirk.

— At an early hour this morning earthquake shocks are reported to have been felt throughout the north of England and the south of Scotland.

16.—The Town Council of Glasgow pass a vote of censure on the Lord Provost (Sir James Campbell), for inciting the Government to bring in a general police bill for the city, instead of supporting the three local bills prepared under the sanction of the Council.

21.—Died at his residence, Keswick, aged 69, Robert Southey, LL.D., Poet-laureate.

— A special meeting of the Commission of the General Assembly held in Edinburgh, when a minute is agreed to, stating that in the circumstances the Commission "deem it incumbent upon them to announce to the Church and to the country, as they now do with the utmost pain and sorrow, that the decisive rejection of the Church's claims by the Government and by Parliament appears to them conclusive of the present struggle, and that, in the judgment of the Commission, nothing remains but to make immediate preparations for the new state of things, which the Church must, so far as they can see, contemplate as inevitable."

— Lord Palmerston draws the attention of the House to the terms of the Ashburton treaty, or capitulation, as he called it. Sir Robert Peel explains that the papers moved for could not be produced at the present time without detriment to the public interest. The motion was therefore withdrawn on the 23d.

24.—Major-General Napier writes from Dubba to Lord Ellenborough:—"The forces under my command marched from Hyderabad this morning at daybreak. About half-past 8 o'clock we discovered and attacked the army under the personal command of Meer Shere Mahomed, consisting of about 20,000 men of all arms, strongly posted behind one of the large nullahs by which this country is intersected in all directions. After a combat of about three hours the enemy was wholly defeated with considerable slaughter, and the loss of all his standards and cannon."

25.—Ceremonial opening of the Thames Tunnel.

— At the Nenah assizes the Rev. John Mahon, priest of Tomavera, was examined as a witness in the trial of two men named Larkin and Gleeson, charged with shooting at Patrick Tierney, when he admitted having denounced

(56)

Tierney in the chapel, in the morning of the day on which the attack was made.

27.—A bill introduced into the House of Commons for the purpose of enabling a new company to carry out the Aërial Transit patents originally granted to Mr. Henson.

29.—Numerous Presbyterian meetings held throughout Scotland on this day, when the Non-intrusion withdrew from the Moderates, and send up separate lists of ministers and elders for the ensuing Assembly.

April 1.—Augustus Sintyemick attempts to shoot the Rev. Mr. Haydon, in St. Paul's Cathedral, during the afternoon service. The pistol missed fire, and was almost instantly taken possession of, when it was found to contain a charge of powder and five shots. Sintyemick was at once seized.

5.—The police make a sudden descent upon the Dublin gaming-houses, and lodge most of the proprietors and frequenters in prison. Fines of different amounts were afterwards inflicted.

6.—William Wordsworth gazetted Poet-laureate to her Majesty.

7.—Explosion at Stormont Main Colliery, near Newcastle, and loss of twenty-seven lives.

12.—William Sharman charged with attempting to bribe Lord Monteaige, by enclosing 5*l.* in a letter to him, requesting an appointment in the Custom-house or Post-office. As the appointment was not made, Sharman raised an action to recover the amount; but the Commission now intimated that instead of inflicting any further punishment they would simply order the 5*l.* to be paid over to the Exchequer Fund, as conscience money.

13.—Explosion in Waltham powder-mill, when nearly the whole of the works were destroyed, there being over 2,000 lbs. in each of the two departments blown up. Seven lives were lost.

16.—Wreck of the Solway, one of the West India mail-steamers, on a rock twenty miles west of Corunna. Captain Duncan, the surgeon, and a midshipman, were the only officers saved. Sixty of the passengers and crew perished in the ship.

19.—The defeated Amerees of Scinde arrive as captives in Bombay, on board H.M. sloop Nimrod.

21.—Died at Kensington Palace, aged 70 years, Augustus Frederick, Duke of Sussex, and uncle to the Queen.

24.—At Sunderland, a sailor named Ferry, who a few days before had escaped from the lunatic asylum at Gateshead Fell, murders his wife and two children, by attacking them with a fire-shovel.

25.—This morning, at five minutes past 4, the Queen was safely delivered of a princess.

— Launched from the Pembroke dockyard, amid great rejoicing, her Majesty's steam-yacht, Victoria and Albert.

26.—The South Sea whaler Diana blown up at St. Helena. At the time of the explosion, which was known to have been the work of an incendiary, an investigation was going on before the Island authorities regarding the murder of the captain by the second mate.

May 1.—An anonymous person writes to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, stating that while he had made a true income-tax return on his legitimate trade, he had been for some time engaged in smuggling, and begged to hand him 14,000*l.*, the profits of three years' transactions in that way, as conscience money.

2.—The number of petitions presented up to this date against the New Factory Bill amounted to 11,611, bearing 1,757,297 signatures. The petitioners were mainly Dissenters, who objected to the educational clauses of the bill.

5.—Sir Robert Peel introduces his scheme for relieving the spiritual wants of the kingdom, by the endowment of additional ministers and the augmentation of small livings. He proposed to authorize the advance of 600,000*l.* by the Bounty Board to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, on the security of certain revenues of the Ecclesiastical Fund; this advance, to the extent of 30,000*l.* a year, to be used, not in the erection of churches, for which private liberality would be sufficient, but solely for the endowment of ministers.

8.—An association of noblemen and officers in both branches of the service formed to suppress duelling as sinful and irrational.

9.—Mr. Villiers introduces his annual motion on the subject of the Corn-law, which after five nights' debate is negatived by a majority of 381 to 125. On the last night of the discussion Mr. Cobden, departing from his usual style of showing the evil effects of the system on manufacturing interests, carried the war into the enemy's country by showing that the laws injured the farmer. "The farmers," he said, "are now disposed utterly to distrust everybody who promises them anything; and the very reason they are ready to look on us with friendly eyes is that we never promised them anything. We tell them distinctly that legislation can do nothing for them. It is a fraud. They must never allow bargaining for loaves and rent to be mixed up with politics. They must deal with their landlords as with their wheelwrights and saddlers, with a view to business, and business alone."

11.—At a meeting of the Repeal Association in Dublin, O'Connell denounces the Duke of Wellington, Sir Robert Peel, Lord Brougham, and others, for their vindictive hatred of Ireland, and promises that when her Majesty visits her Irish subjects she will hear of nothing but Repeal from one end of the country to the other.

13.—Singular accident to Mr. Brunel, engineer. While amusing the children of a friend by seeming to pass a half-sovereign piece into his mouth and out at his ear, it suddenly slipped and became lodged in the trachea. Various efforts were made to extract it, but they proved unavailing, and surgical aid was called in. Various consultations took place among the most eminent professional men, and an apparatus was constructed for inverting the body of the patient in order that the weight of the coin might assist the natural effort to expel it by coughing. The first attempt in this way failed, but to-day, on being again inverted, Mr. Brunel felt the coin quit its place on the right side of the chest, and in a few seconds it dropped from his mouth, without causing distress or inconvenience.

15.—Given at the Court of St. James's, her Majesty's Letter to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland. "The faith of our Crown," it went on, "is pledged to uphold you in the full enjoyment of every privilege which you can justly claim; but you will bear in mind that the rights and property of an Established Church are conferred by law; it is by law that the Church of Scotland is united with the State, and that her endowments are secured; and the ministers of religion claiming the sanction of law in defence of their privileges, are specially bound by their sacred calling to be examples of obedience. The act ratifying the Confession of Faith, and settling Presbyterian Church Government in Scotland, was adopted at the Union, and is now the Act of the British Parliament. The settlement thus fixed cannot be annulled by the will or declaration of any number of individuals. Those who are dissatisfied with the terms of this settlement may renounce it for themselves, but the union of the Church of Scotland with the State is indissoluble, while statutes remain unaffected which recognise the Presbyterian Church as the Church established by law within the kingdom of Scotland." The document was signed by Sir James Graham.

18.—Disruption in the Church of Scotland. To-day the anxiously anticipated Assembly commenced its sittings in Edinburgh. Shortly before 1 o'clock Divine service was commenced in the High Church, and a sermon preached by Dr. Welsh, the retiring Moderator, taking for his text the words, "Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind." On the conclusion of the services the Assembly adjourned to St. Andrew's Church, which was fitted up as a temporary Hall of Assembly. The Royal Commissioner, Lord Belhaven, and Dr. Welsh, entered the crowded assembly about the same time, half-past 3 o'clock. After prayer Dr. Welsh rose and said, "According to the usual form of procedure, this is the time for making up the roll; but in respect of certain proceedings affecting our rights and privileges which have been sanctioned by her Majesty's Government, and by the Legislature of the country, and more especially in respect that there has been an infringement on the charter of our constitution, so that we could not now constitute this court without a violation of the terms of the union between Church and State in this land, as now authoritatively declared, I must protest against our proceeding further. The reasons that have led me to come to this conclusion are fully set forth in the document which I hold in my hand, and which, with the permission of the House, I shall now proceed to read." Immediately after the reading of the Protest, which was successively signed by ministers and elders, the retiring Moderator handed the memorable document to the clerk, and left the chair. He proceeded towards the door of the Assembly, followed by Dr. Chalmers, Dr. Gordon, Dr. Macfarlane, of Greenock, Dr. Brown of Glasgow, R. S. Candlish, of Edinburgh, and the whole body of adhering ministers and elders. A loud cheer burst from the gallery, which, however, was suddenly hushed, and the whole audience stood gazing intently on the scene below, while the members of Assembly who remained also looked on in silence, as seat after seat became vacant. Whenever the leaders of the movement made their appearance outside they were received with bursts of applause from the masses assembled in George-street, and which was continued and reiterated with enthusiasm as they marched through the streets leading to Tanfield Hall, Canon-mills. The procession consisted of about 1,000 persons, walking four abreast. At Tanfield the new Free Assembly was formally constituted, and Dr. Chalmers elected Moderator amid the most enthusiastic displays of feeling. In the old Assembly Principal Macfarlane of Glasgow was elected Moderator. The ten years' conflict thus ended in the separation of the contending parties. On the 22d the sentence of deposition formerly pronounced against the Strathbogie ministers was declared by the old Assembly to be of no effect, by a majority of 148 to 33. The minority in this case urged that though the original sentence was harsh and possibly unnecessary, yet having been pronounced by a competent court it ought to have been more observed than it was. The Free Assembly sat till 30th May, the time being mostly occupied with discussions relating to the fabric of their constitution. Up to that date the total number of ministers who signed the Protest was 444; of these 139 filled quoad sacra charges.

20.—Lady Jane Colville burnt to death in her own drawing-room, Rosslyn House, Hampstead, by her dress coming in contact with a taper placed on the floor for convenience.

21.—Dr. Pusey, in the course of a sermon in Christ Church, Oxford, avows a belief in transubstantiation and the mass. The Vice-Chancellor demanded a copy of the sermon for examination by a Board of Heresy.

24.—The will of Richard Arkwright, son of the inventor of the spinning-jenny, proved in the Prerogative Court. His heir came into the possession of about 8,000,000*l.*

25.—Daniel O'Connell removed from the commission of the peace for the county of Kerry.

29.—In the Established Assembly Dr. Simpson reads the answer to the Protest which had been drawn up by a committee appointed for the purpose. The answer generally denied the allegations in the Protest, holding that the Church Courts and not the Civil Courts had gone beyond their jurisdiction; and that on the whole there was no valid or sufficient ground in the Protest for the secession from the Establishment, in which when they get their licence they were solemnly sworn not to follow devious courses.

30.—Orange riots at Carlow, Tyrone. Thirty houses gutted in the presence of the police.

June 2.—Dr. Pusey writes to the Vice-Chancellor, protesting against his suspension of two years as an act unstatutable as well as unjust. "I have ground to think," he says, "that as no propositions out of my sermon have been exhibited to me as at variance with the doctrines of the Church, so neither can they, but that I have been condemned either on a mistaken construction of my words, founded on the doctrinal opinion of my judges, or on grounds distinct from the formularies of the Church."

—Lord Dudley Stuart assaulted by a Polish refugee of bad character, when entering the rooms of the Polish Literary Institution.

3.—B. T. Nyman, from America, delivers a lecture on mesmerism at the London Mechanics' Institution, and produces numerous practical illustrations.

6.—The Duke of Sutherland writes to the Rt. Hon. Fox Maule:—"I dislike religious persecution, and I trust that I shall always be an opposer of measures tending to it or intolerance. I cannot but think, however, that such are at present directed against the Establishment, and that if, as a proprietor, I were to grant sites for building for the purpose of opposing the ministrations, to do which a desperate spirit has been evinced, I should not only acquiesce in, but even sanction and encourage it, and this I should consider very wrong."

8.—Monster Repeal Meeting at Kilkenny. Almost the entire male population of that county, with considerable portions of Tipperary, Carlow, Wexford, Waterford, and Queen's County, are said to have been present: 300,000 was the estimated number, 12,000 of whom were horsemen. The Agitator made a long address. "The Irish Parliament," he concluded, "is not dead, it is only sleeping, and here am I sounding the trumpet of her resurrection."

9.—Samuel Moyer examined at the Home Office for the offence of sending a letter to Sir James Graham, volunteering "to risk his life against Mr. O'Connell's, as he might be ordered." He now disavowed all evil intention towards the Agitator, and stated that the letter was the result of a drunken freak. He was bound over to appear at the Central Criminal Court when called upon.

10.—Disturbance at Carmarthen by "Rebecca and her Daughters." They marched through the town about 1,000 strong, took possession of the workhouse, and remained till the afternoon, when they were broken up by a troop of dragoons sent from Cardiff, and eighty of them taken prisoners. Their list of grievances embraced the removal of all the turnpike-gates in the county, the abolition of tithes, and rent-charge in lieu of tithe, the total abolition of the present Poor-law and of church-rates. The following evening another mob assembled at Mydrim, Rebecca being on horseback in full attire. They called at the public-houses of the place, cleared the cellars of all the ale, and about 10 o'clock set out for St. Clears'; there they demolished the turnpike-gate, and obtained through intimidation sums of money at different houses. This destruction of turnpike-gates by bands of disguised Rebeccaites continued for months to be an almost nightly occurrence in different parts of South Wales. At the time of the outbreak there were between 100 and 150 gates, including side-bars and chains, in the county of Carmarthen; nearly the half of these were destroyed, and in places where they were renewed the toll-house was generally destroyed along with the gate. Two or three sharp encounters took place with the authorities, but their familiarity with the district generally enabled the rioters to elude their pursuers. Their name was presumed to be derived from a preposterous application of a passage in the Book of Genesis, "And they blessed Rebekah, and said unto her, Let thy seed possess the gate of those which hate them."

15.—Sir James Graham announces that it is not the intention of Government to proceed with the educational clauses of the Factory Bill. The success of the measure, he said, depended upon its being received as a measure of concord and conciliation, and it had been framed with that view; but soon after its introduction he found that the great body of Dissenters had insuperable objections to it. Extensive modifications had been made to meet these objections, but in that he had been wholly disappointed. The petitions against the clauses in their original form were 13,369, bearing 2,068,059 signatures; and in their amended form, 11,228, with 1,745,686 signatures.

17.—The Free Church of Scotland issues a Pastoral Address, explanatory of their position, appealing to the people as the true Church of their fathers,—the Church which holds the principles that they held, which bears the testimony that they bore, and which is now suffering in the cause of that great truth for which they suffered.

19.—Inauguration of the Memorial erected "in reverence of the memory" of John Hampden, on Chalgrove Field.

—Testimonial of silver plate subscribed for by lovers of the national drama, presented to Mr. Macready by his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge.

—The Judges assemble in the House of Lords to deliver their opinions on the questions submitted to them with reference to criminals insane or reputed insane. On the fourth question, If a person under an insane delusion as to existing facts commits an offence in consequence thereof, is he thereby excused? the Judges were unanimously of opinion that the party accused was equally liable with a person of sane mind. If the accused killed another in self-defence, he would be entitled to an acquittal; but if committed for any supposed injury, he would then be liable to the punishment awarded by the law to his crime.

20.—Audabon, writing from "110 miles above Fort Union," informs Dr. Bachman of his discovery there of a new quadruped of the kangaroo species.

25.—Died at his residence in Albemarle-street, aged 65 years, John Murray, publisher.

26.—The Governor-General of India writes to the Secret Committee from Allahabad:—"The battle of Meenace entirely changed the position in which the British Government stood with respect to the Ameers of Scinde. To have placed confidence in them thereafter would have been impossible. To have only exacted from them large cessions of territory would have been to give them what remained as the means of levying war for the purpose of regaining what was ceded. Foreigners in Scinde, they had only held their power by the sword, and by the sword they have lost it. . . . Their removal from the country with which they were no longer to be connected as sovereigns was a measure of obvious expediency, and has apparently had the beneficial effect I intended from it."

28.—Riotous scene at the Oxford Commemoration, on occasion of conferring the degree of D.C.L. on Mr. Everett, the American Ambassador, and formerly, it was alleged, a Unitarian preacher. The effect of the uproar was entirely to put a stop to the usual proceedings of the day; and the Vice-Chancellor was obliged to dissolve the Convocation without either of the prize essays being recited.

July 1.—Lieut.-Col. Fawcett, of the 55th, shot in a duel near Camden Town by his brother-in-law, Lieut. Munro, of the Royal Horse Guards. The latter made his escape from the ground with a friend. The quarrel related to family affairs. At the inquest the jury returned a verdict of Wilful Murder.

— The Newcastle Journal writes: — “It is stated that Bright, the Anti-Corn-Law agitator, is expected to visit the wool fair, which will be held at Alnwick shortly, in order to scatter the seeds of disaffection in that quarter. Should he make his appearance, which is not improbable, it is to be hoped there may be found some stalwart yeoman ready to treat the disaffected vagabond as he deserves.”

3.—Opened in Westminster Abbey the Exhibition of Cartoons, the result of the prizes offered by the Royal Commission for the encouragement of the Fine Arts, with a view to the decoration of the interior of the new Houses of Parliament. There were 140 subjects, varying in size from ten to fifteen feet. Three prizes of 300*l.* each, three of 200*l.* and three of 100*l.* were awarded to the most successful competitors.

7.—Came on for hearing in the Court of Exchequer, the case of Westmacot v. Clark, being an action to recover from the defendant, Mary Ann Clark, one of the sisters and next of kin of the late Baroness de Feucheres, a sum of money for the services of the plaintiff in recovering for her, as one of the next of kin, her share of the property left by the late baroness. Mr. Thesiger having explained the extraordinary difficulties surmounted by the plaintiff in securing for the next of kin against many other claimants the very large properties left to the baroness by the Duc de Bourbon, under whose protection she lived, it was arranged, on the suggestion of the Court, to settle the matter by arbitration. The sum ultimately awarded was 15,548*l.*, of which 5,453*l.* was for actual disbursements; 6,344*l.* for personal services, and 3,751*l.* for the plaintiff's costs of the reference.

11.—Celebration in Edinburgh of the Bicentenary of the Westminster Assembly.

— At the weekly meeting of the National Repeal Association in Dublin, the rent collected for the week was announced as amounting to 1,690*l.* Intimation was also given that several magistrates had been dismissed for joining the Repeal Association.

12.—Concluded the debate on Mr. Smith O'Brien's motion for a Committee of inquiry into the condition of Ireland, when Ministers found themselves having a majority of only 79 in a House of 407.

18.—A small steamboat scuttled and sunk in her berth at the east end of Loch Katrine, presumed to have been the work of some of the boatmen who formerly carried on the trade of the lake.

19.—Wreck of the Pegasus, Hull and Leith steamer, and loss of upwards of forty lives.

She left Leith harbour this afternoon at half-past 5 o'clock, and about midnight struck, in calm weather, upon a reef off the inner Fern, known as the Goldstone Island. The captain attempted to run the vessel ashore, but the damage received was so serious that she foundered within 300 yards of the spot where she struck. An attempt was made to launch the boats, but the delay in getting them into the water was considerable, and the rush of passengers and crew to take possession caused them to be swamped with the sinking ship. About 5 A.M. the steamer Martello came upon the wreck, and picked up six of the survivors, four of whom had contrived to float about with hatches and benches, and two who had clung to the topmast, still a few feet above water. One of them, named Bailie, a servant in attendance on Mr. Torry, had carefully stripped himself to swim during the few minutes allowed for preparation. When the ship was fast settling by the head, he saw the Rev. Mr. Mackenzie praying on the quarter-deck, surrounded by most of the male and female passengers with their children.

24.—Mr. Cobden insulted and hustled in the Corn Exchange, Mark-lane. Mr. Ruding, one of the proprietors, writes:—“Sir, I beg to express my deep regret, as one of the proprietors of the Corn Exchange, at the scandalous treatment which you experienced this morning during your visit here, in which regret I believe every respectable party connected with the Corn Exchange sincerely joins, whatever political opinions they may entertain.”

27.—Mr. Bright returned as Member of Parliament for Durham City, by a majority of 78 over his Tory opponent, Mr. Purvis.

29.—The Queen and Prince Albert proceed down the Thames in the royal barge to inspect the Tunnel.

31.—Commission of Lunacy opened regarding Mr. Dyce Sombre, the son of Gen. Sombre and the Begum or Princess of Schind. The most prominent evidence of insanity was jealousy of his wife. He had addressed a letter to the Archbishop of Canterbury, calling upon him to produce another lady of rank, and let her have a duel with Mrs. Dyce Sombre of three fires. It also desired Lord St. Vincent, her father, to bring a roan horse, well broken, adding, that when the ground had been consecrated by a duel, he would reconsecrate it by bringing her home on the horse. The jury found that he had been of unsound mind from October 1842.

August 1.—In most of the metropolitan theatres the performances were for the benefit of the family of Mr. Elton, who had perished in the wreck of the Pegasus.

2.—Collision between the peasantry and the police at Turloughman fair, near Galway. The police discharge their muskets to protect themselves. Two men (one a magistrate) killed, and eight or ten wounded.

3.—Mr. Arcona, brother of the well-known architect, commits suicide by throwing himself off Waterloo-bridge.

— Lord Panmure writes to the seceding elders of Edyell parish :—“ You foolish men, return to your good old kirk, where there is plenty of room, and when more is necessary you will be provided with it. . . . Let peace, and comfort, and harmony surround your firesides, and you will always find in me, as principal heritor, a friend ready to promote your welfare and happiness.”

4.—Joseph Atkinson, “ the priest of Lamberton toll-bar,” tried at Newcastle assizes, before Mr. Justice Cresswell, and sentenced to seven years’ transportation, for celebrating an irregular marriage at Berwick.

— Correspondence between the Vice-Chancellor of Oxford (P. Wynter) and Mr. Badeley, regarding the acceptance of a memorial deprecating the sentence passed on Dr. Pusey. The Vice-Chancellor thinks the memorial deserving of the strongest censure, and refuses to receive it.

11.—Tried at Appleby assizes the case of Robinson v. Bird and others, involving the possession of the Brougham Hall estates. Bird, in support of his claim, had trespassed upon the estate, and taken from the stable a horse belonging to the plaintiff. It appeared that in 1726 James Bird, an attorney, was the owner of Brougham Hall. He left two granddaughters, and they sold the interest of the Birds to Lord Brougham’s ancestor—his great-great-uncle—for 5,000*l.*, and by this transaction the estate was brought back to the family to whom it had for generations belonged. The attempt of the defendant to make Lord Brougham now prove his title failed on the ground that he had no standing whatever to interfere with the property. Verdict for the plaintiff, damages 40*s.*

12.—Lieut. Mackay, Adjutant of the 5th Fusiliers, shot on parade at Parsonstown Barracks by one of the soldiers he was drilling.

15.—Great Repeal demonstration on Tara-hill. “ At 2 o’clock,” writes ‘One who has whistled at the Plough,’ who was present, “ when, as I may say, the tide was at its height, when thousands yet arriving were about to be driven back by tens of thousands leaving, at that hour on and around Tara there were above one million of people, probably 1,200,000. Taking into account the throngs that filled the roads, and never got within miles of Tara, there were certainly one million and a half drawn from their homes by the business of the day.” O’Connell addressed the multitude :—“ When you get your Parliament,” he said, “ all your grievances will be put an end to. Your trade will be restored, the landlord will be placed on a fair footing, and the tenants who are now so sadly oppressed will be placed in their proper position. I believe I am now in a position to announce that in twelve months’ more you won’t be without hearing an hurrah for the Parliament on College Green. Old Ireland is a lovely land, blessed with the bounteous gifts of nature, and where was the coward who would not die for her? (Cheers.) These cheers will penetrate to the extremity of civilization, for your movement is the admiration of the world.”

19.—Calamitous series of fires in the Metropolis. The most destructive broke out in an oil and colour warehouse in Tooley-street, and extended to the church of St. Olave, which fell a prey to the flames during the performance of the marriage service, the hands of two couple being united by the vicar under the cupola of the chancel while streams of water and burning timber were falling about them. The building known as the Shot Tower, but more recently used as a telegraph for the communication of messages from the Downs and other parts of the coast, also caught fire, and almost instantly the flames burst forth at every window from the basement to the summit. The tower itself fell in a shower of fire shortly before 4 o’clock. At Topping’s Wharf, adjoining the seat of the fire, the vessels moored alongside sustained considerable damage. While the fire was raging here in most alarming strength, an explosion took place in the fire-works manufactory of Mr. Newberry, in Fetter-lane, which scattered the shop front and all its contents into the street, and set the adjoining properties on fire on every side. While the engines were being brought up a large quantity of gunpowder exploded, and blew the back part of the premises on to the houses in Bartlett’s-passage, occasioning great destruction of property in that quarter, and throwing the occupants into a state of the wildest confusion. When the excitement was at its height, Mr. Newberry threw himself from the second-floor window of his premises, and sustained such severe injuries that he died in a few minutes. Four other occupants of the upper storey, after making the most frantic appeals for help, were surrounded by the flames, and perished almost within sight of the horrified spectators. Minor explosions of powder and bursting of pyrotechnic displays were taking place so frequent as to render any attempts at aid out of the power of firemen or constables. Besides these, other five fires were raging at nearly the same time : one at Stratford ; one at Houndsditch ; one at High-street, Borough ; one at Snows-fields ; and one at Pudding-lane.

20.—The divers engaged at the wreck of the Pegasus recover large quantities of luggage from the hold, including most of the theatrical wardrobe of Mr. Elton. Many of the bodies were also recovered floating in the neighbourhood of the wreck.

22.—Father Mathew administers the pledge at various meetings in London. On the 23d he visited Greenwich, and was received by about 20,000 people on Blackheath. The publicans attempted an opposition display.

—“Rebecca and her Daughters” make a daring display at the Pothynid gate, on the Swansea road. They destroy the toll-house, and compel the parish constable to walk round the ruins on his knees while they administer sixty lashes.

24.—G. W. Hamilton, calling himself a solicitor, was sentenced at the Central Criminal Court to ‘fourteen years’ transportation, for attempting to extort money from the friends of Miss Hopper, Bayswater, by threatening to send to the Satirist a report of the visits he untruthfully charged her with making to a house of ill-fame.

25.—Tried at the Central Criminal Court Lieut. Cuddy, of the 55th, and Mr. Gulliver, surgeon in the Royal Horse Guards, charged with being assistants at the fatal duel near Camden Town on the 1st July. The charge against Gulliver was withdrawn, and he was admitted as a witness against Lieut. Cuddy, but his evidence did not explain much beyond the fact that the fatal shot was the result of a mistake. A verdict of Not guilty was returned, and Lieut. Cuddy, known as a brave soldier in the China war, was discharged.

—Robert Taylor, charged with no fewer than five acts of bigamy, sentenced at the Liverpool assizes to fourteen years’ transportation.

26.—Parliament prorogued by the Queen in person. In the Royal Speech reference was made to the disturbances in Wales and the repeal agitation in Ireland.

28.—Her Majesty and Prince Albert leave Windsor Castle for Southampton, where they start in the new yacht, Victoria and Albert, on a marine excursion to the coast of France.

30.—The Times’ correspondent writes from Carmarthen, that the spread of dissent has contributed in no small degree to the present state of lawless organization which exists in Wales.

31.—Robert Dodd murdered in Cobham Park by his son, a young man subject to sudden fits of insanity, and who was well known among artists as the designer of the cartoon, “St. George after the death of the Dragon,” recently exhibited in Westminster Hall.

September 2.—The Queen and Prince Albert arrive at Treport, where they are welcomed by the King and Queen of the French. The first interview on board the royal yacht was one of great interest. Her Majesty, who had been anxiously watching the arrival of the King’s barge, went to the head of the ladder as soon as his Majesty went alongside in order to receive him. The King went up with a quick step, and immediately on reaching the deck kissed the Queen and shook hands with Prince Albert. On landing at Treport, the King presented her Majesty to his queen, by whom she was conveyed to the pavilion over which waved the flags of France and England. Her Majesty, after resting a while at the pavilion, received the congratulations of the authorities, including the parish priests of Eu and Treport. In the evening the royal party set out for the Château d’Eu, where a grand banquet was served up. Her Majesty sat between the King and the Prince de Joinville. On the 4th a fête champêtre was given at the Mont d’Orléans, a beautiful spot in the Forest of Eu. The visit lasted till the 7th, each day being marked by some special feature of festive or military display.

—“Rebecca” writes to the Welshman:—“We don’t care a straw for all the soldiers, rural police, and special constables, for Rebecca can bring into the field a better force and a much more numerous one. Rebecca is more than a hundred thousand strong. If God spares her life, she will work out the redemption of her poor oppressed children.”

7.—Fire in the old Castle Tavern, Bristol, when the landlord, a helpless, bedridden man, was burnt to death.

—Public meeting in the Crown and Anchor Tavern, to consider what means should be adopted for ascertaining the fate of Colonel Stoddart and Capt. Conolly, the Bokhara captives. It was intimated that Dr. Wolfe, who had long been in that part of the East, was ready to set out on the mission.

8.—The Bishop of Norwich introduces Father Mathew to a large meeting there:—“I meet you here,” he said, addressing the Apostle of Temperance, “not as a priest, but as a Christian brother, upon neutral ground, where all denominations of Christians may delight to visit and unite together in a common and holy cause.” The right reverend prelate here bowed before the chairman, and extended his hand to Father Mathew, which was cordially grasped and shaken by the latter amidst the cheers of the assembled thousands.

9.—The Cardigan and Paget correspondence. —The Dublin Evening Post having copied from the Satirist an account of the improper intercourse of the Earl of Cardigan with Lady William Paget, that officer now writes that the alleged facts are entirely untrue, and a foul calumny against both the parties accused. Lord William Paget, with reference to this denial, writes: “With a full conviction that I am painfully right, I shall rest my case, without further comment, in the hands of my legal advisers, until the result of a deliberate trial at law upon the evidence then to be adduced shall determine the guilt or innocence of the Earl of Cardigan.”

10.—“Rebecca” and her followers murder an old woman, keeper of a tollgate. Government offered a reward of 500*l.* for the discovery of the ringleaders, and afterwards appointed a Special Commission to inquire into the operation of the Turnpike Laws in Wales.

12.—The Queen and Prince Albert leave Brighton, in the royal yacht, on a visit to the King of the Belgians. During the ensuing week they visited Bruges, Ghent, Brussels, and Antwerp.

—Six Liverpool thieves confined in the prison of Castle Rushin, Isle of Man, contrive to break out, and seizing the governor's pleasure-boat in the bay, sail off in the direction of Ireland. Some of them were afterwards captured in Anglesea.

16.—Numerous fires in London. About forty occurred between this date and the 21st.

19.—Disturbance at Roskeen, Tain, on the occasion of the settlement of the Rev. John Mackenzie as minister of that parish. At the trial of the rioters, Mr. Gibson, of Avoch, the presbytery clerk, said, on proceeding towards the church they met two or three brethren returning in a state of great excitement, having been prevented entering the church by the mob. They remained together till the lord-lieutenant and convenor of the county arrived, and then proceeded towards the church, but were driven back by stones. The presbytery were forced to take shelter behind a range of stables, where they remained half an hour. Sheriff Jardine read the Riot Act, and the coast-guard fired, but still the members could not reach the church for the mob, and they retired to Fortrose, where the process of induction was completed.

23.—A witch impostor tried at Dingwall, Ross-shire, and sentenced to three months' imprisonment, for obtaining money under a false pretence of curing diseases and recovering stolen property.

26.—The Lord Mayor entertains General Espartero at the Mansion House. The Corporation present him with an address, expressive of their sympathy with him in his "forced retirement."

October 1.—Another of the series of monster Repeal meetings took place this day (Sunday) at the Rath of Mulloghmast, county of Kildare. O'Connell arrived, seated in the front of an open carriage, and dressed in the scarlet velvet robe and gold chain which he wore as Lord Mayor of Dublin. He was accompanied by the majority of the corporation of Dublin in their official robes. In the course of his address, O'Connell said, "I thought this a fit and becoming spot on which to show our unanimity, and on which, in the open day, to evince our determination not to be misled by any treachery. Oh, my friends, I'll keep you free of treachery. There will be no bargain, no compromise, nothing but repeal and a Parliament of our own. Confide in no false hopes till you hear me say, 'I'm satisfied!' And I'll tell you where I'll say that—near the statue of King William on College Green. Amongst the nations of the earth Ireland stands No. 1 in the physical strength of her men, in the purity and beauty of her daughters, and in the religion, fidelity, bravery, and generosity of her people generally." Near the close of the meeting the Irish national cap, made of green velvet lined with blue, in the form of an old Milesian crown, was placed on O'Connell's head amid the acclamations of the multitude. "He would wear it," he said, "while he lived, and have it buried with him when he died."

—A blacksmith named Thomson enters the Secession Church, Main-street, Glasgow, where St. George's Free congregation were assembled for worship. Ascending to the pulpit, he then compositely fills a glass with whisky, and proposed as a toast "The Crown and the Congregation." On attempting to leave the church he was seized by one or two of the astonished onlookers, and conveyed to the police-office. Next day he was fined 10*l.* for the offence, or failing payment, sixty days in Bridewell. The outrage, he said, had been committed to gain a bet of 5*s.*

4.—Painful exhibition at Stirling. Allan Mair, a grey-haired, stooping, but hale old man, 84 years of age, was executed in front of the court-house for the murder of his wife. A few minutes past 8 o'clock the prisoner was carried out of his cell to the court-room where the customary religious exercise was engaged in. He cried a good deal at this time, the tears streaming through his bony fingers when he pressed them to his face, and every now and then he wrung his hands in intense agony at the injustice to which he thought he had been subjected. He was carried out of the court-room and placed in a chair beneath the drop. In compliance with his earnest desire he was here permitted to speak, which he did with great vigour for fully ten minutes, denouncing with the most fearful imprecations every one who had taken any part in his apprehension, examination, or trial. This cursing, as he called it, of the witnesses, with all the curses of the 109th Psalm, was continued even after the white cap had been drawn over his face. When the bolt was drawn he raised one of his hands, which had not been properly pinioned, to the back of his neck, seized the rope convulsively, and endeavoured to save himself, but his grasp relaxed after a short and violent struggle. Allan Mair was a well-known character in the Stirlingshire district. He had been brought up on the farm of Blackstone, in Muiravonshire parish, and then removed to Heatherstocks, during the possession of which he alienated the most of his means in raising trespass actions against his neighbours. All through life from the period of his dashing youth, he was known as a kind of wild, roving, litigious Ishmaelite. In his latter days he had a small allowance from the parish in which he resided.

7.—The Lord Lieutenant issues a proclamation, prohibiting the great Repeal gathering announced for next day at Clontarf. Another proclamation followed from O'Connell, intimating that the meeting was abandoned. At the weekly Repeal meeting on Monday he said he did not hesitate to repeat, if he were to go to the scaffold for it, that if the Government had intended to entrap the people into a massacre they would not have acted otherwise than they did. A Repeal banquet took place the same day in the Kotunda.

8.—A Shields pilot rode across Tynemouth bar at low-water. At high-water, on the same day, the William Brandt, of Archangel, 1,000 tons burthen, sailed over it, being the largest laden vessel which ever left the Tyn.

10.—The Special Commission of the Free Church issue an address to the inhabitants of Ross-shire, warning them to lay aside that disorderly spirit which they had recently shown at the settlement of Established ministers within their bounds.

14.—The Rev. J. H. Newman writes to a friend:—"I would tell you in a few words why I have resigned St. Mary's, as you seem to wish, were it possible to do so. But it is most difficult to bring out in brief, or even in extenso, any just view of my feelings and reasons. The nearest approach I can give to a general account of them is to say that it has been caused by the general repudiation of the view contained in No. X.C. on the part of the Church. I would not stand against such an unanimous expression of opinion from the Bishop, supported, as it has been, by the concurrence, or at least silence, of all classes in the Church, lay and clerical." On the 25th, "It is not from disappointment, irritation, or impatience that I have, whether rightly or wrongly, resigned St. Mary's, but because I think the Church of Rome the Catholic Church, and ours not a part of the Catholic Church because not in communion with Rome, and because I feel that I could not honestly be a teacher in it any longer."

— Daniel O'Connell and John O'Connell enter bail to answer any charge of conspiracy and misdemeanour which may be preferred against them by the Attorney-General next term. The Agitator immediately issued an address "To the People of Ireland." "If you will during this crisis follow my advice, and act as I treat you to do, patiently, quietly, legally, I think I can pledge myself to you that the period is not distant when our revered Sovereign will open the Irish Parliament on College Green."

23.—Opening of Conciliation Hall, Dublin, by the Repeal Association.

25.—The Queen and Prince Albert visit Cambridge, and receive addresses from the Heads of Universities. In the afternoon the royal party set out for Wimpole, the seat of the Earl of Hardwicke, where they remained over the night.

26.—A Special Commission sits at Cardiff for the trial of the "Rebecca" rioters. Those against whom the grand jury found true bills mostly pleaded guilty, and were sentenced to various terms of imprisonment.

27.—About midnight a gang of armed burglars enter the rectory of Sutton Bonington. They plundered the house and barbarously ill-treated the Rev. R. Meek, on attempting to make his escape in his night-dress to the nearest village. He was insensible for some time, but recovered consciousness when being led back by one of the gang through his own hall. They had all masks, he said, made of a kind of black calico, with large eyeholes cut in them, and hanging down below the chin. Under threat of instant death they compelled the other inmates of the house to bring the valuables to them, which were carefully packed up and removed by the burglars. At the ensuing Nottingham assizes (December 18th) four of the gang were sentenced to transportation for life.

November 3.—The Morning Chronicle publishes the first of Sydney Smith's amusing letters on Pennsylvanian repudiation.

4.—Fatal affray at the Patent Saw Mills, Cork, originating in a dispute about the ownership. Dr. Quarry, one of the partners, was shot, and two workmen badly wounded.

8.—The grand jury charged with the indictments against O'Connell and others return into Court with true bills against all the parties. The traversers appeared upon their recognizances, and the judges sanctioned the application made to them by the Attorney-General that they should be called on to plead within four days. Before the expiry of this time they put in a plea of abatement. The trial was ultimately arranged to commence on the 15th January.

9.—Came on for sentence before the High Court of Justiciary, Henry Robinson and Thomas Potheron, charged with selling blasphemous and indecent publications. The first was sentenced to imprisonment for twelve months and the second to fifteen months.

— Queen Pomaré writes to the King of the French that the sovereignty of Tahiti had been seized by the French admiral, because she was accused of violating the treaty of September 1843. "I never intended when I placed my crown on my flag to condemn the treaty and insult you, O King. Your admiral only required a slight change in it; but had I acceded to his desire, I would have been despised by my great chiefs." She further protested against the harsh measures of the admiral, and hoped for liberation and compassion from the King.

11.—Luton Hoo, the seat of the Marquis of Bute, destroyed by fire. Most of the furniture was saved, and also the books and paintings.

12.—Sacrifice of the Mass offered up in the parish chapel of Ballintra, Donegal, for the spiritual and temporal benefit of the Liberator.

14.—The Anti-Corn-Law League resolve to raise 100,000*l.* to promote the object they have in view. 12,600*l.* subscribed in Manchester during the day.

15.—A little girl frightened to death in Ratcliffe-highway by one of her companions suddenly appearing in a white dress and black mask.

19.—Tribute Sunday in Ireland. 3,490*l.* collected for the maintenance and defence of O'Connell.

21.—The Times declares the League to be a great fact. The number of its members, the amount of its funds, and the extent of its labours are all facts. "It is our duty to recognise, not conceal them; to meet them, not to slight them; to extract from an admitted evil the good which may lurk beneath. . . . Let some concession be proposed, some neutral ground fixed on, and the voice of discord will be hushed."

28.—The Queen and Prince Albert, with the Queen Dowager, visit Sir Robert Peel at Drayton Manor; next day the Duke of Devonshire, at Chatsworth; and finally the Duke of Rutland, at Belvoir.

December 2.—Came on for hearing in the Court of Queen's Bench the case of the Duke of Brunswick against Holt and the two Branders, for libels published in the Age newspaper. The libels were contained in a number of articles, described by Serjeant Talfourd as conveying abominable imputations in a dark and cowardly manner. The jury returned a verdict of Guilty.

8.—At the Guildhall Police Court Sir Peter Laurie permits an operative tailor to expose and substantiate by evidence the evils of the "sweating system," as practised by the lower class of clothiers in London.

20.—A party of Ojibbeway Indians exhibit themselves at Windsor Castle, under the auspices of Mr. Catlin.

— Numerous incendiary fires about this time in the counties of Essex, Suffolk, and Norfolk.

— Died in obscurity in Edinburgh, where he lived under the name of Thomas Wilson, the Rev. Percy Jocelyn, once Bishop of Clogher, but degraded for a crime committed in London in 1822.

— The Governor-General of India announces his intention of interfering in the affairs of the Scindia district. "The British Government has so long deferred intervention in the distracted affairs of the Gwalior state, in the sincere hope that the chiefs themselves would establish an administration willing and able to satisfy its reasonable demands, and to maintain the accustomed friendly relations between the two states. The British Government can neither permit the existence of an unfriendly government within the territories of Scindia, nor that those territories should be without a government capable of coercing its own subjects. . . . The Governor-General will therefore direct the immediate advance of forces amply sufficient to effect all the just purposes of the British Government,—to obtain guarantees for the future security of its own subjects on the common frontier of the two states,—to protect the person of the Maharaja,—to quell disturbances within his Highness's territories, and to chastise all who shall remain in disobedience."

27.—Between 4 and 5 o'clock this morning a murder is committed in the cottage of John Geddes, a farm labourer, living at Blaw Wearie, in the parish of West Calder. James Bryce, his brother-in-law, had called on him the night before to borrow money on the pretence that one of his children was dead. Geddes refused to give him any, but permitted Bryce to remain all night, as he had about twenty miles to walk back. He awoke him early to start on his return journey. Geddes arose at the same time to make him some brose for breakfast. They had some angry words about the money, as also about a watch formerly left for a small loan. "I was sitting by the fire with the tongs in my hand. He had just put the pot on, and was turning round, when it came into my head to murder him, and I struck him with the tongs. He never spoke, but I kept beating him after he was down. I struck him many blows, and when he began to stir I took a cord which was lying on the floor, and put it round his neck to strangle him should he come to life again." Bryce secured what money he could find in the house, and made his escape from the locality. He was apprehended near Dumfries on the 12th January.

28.—Fire in Liverpool, commencing in Brancker's extensive sugar refinery, and destroying a large range of premises filled with stock and machinery. One or two lives were lost.

29.—The army of Gwalior, under the command of Gen. Sir H. Gough, Commander-in-Chief, and in presence of the Governor-General, defeat the native forces at Maharajpore. "Your lordship," writes Sir H. Gough, "must have witnessed with the same pride and pleasure that I did the brilliant advance of those columns under their respective leaders, the European and native soldiers appearing emulous to prove their loyalty and devotion; and here I must do justice to the gallantry of their opponents, who received the shock without flinching, their guns doing severe execution as we advanced, but nothing could withstand the rush of British soldiers." On the same day the left wing of the army, under Major-General Grey, defeated the Gwalior troops at Punnier.

January 1.—The Marquis of Westminster writes to the chairman of the council of the Anti-Corn-Law League, "I have much pleasure in sending a contribution of 500*l.* to your fund; and I venture to express a hope that you will not relax your endeavours until you have obtained from Government, in whatever hands it may happen to be, the fullest measure of free-trade compatible with what is due to the maintenance of public credit."

2.—Two blacksmiths belonging to the Mormon body tried at the Chester assizes for causing the death of a female disciple by their violence at the ceremony of immersion. The evidence failed to connect the prisoners with the offence, and Justice Wightman instructed the jury to return a verdict of Acquittal.

3.—The Oxford delegates of appeal in Congregation give judgment in favour of Dr. Hampden, and against Mr. M'Mullen, a candidate for the degree of Bachelor of Divinity, who refused to write on the exercises given out by Dr. Hampden.

5.—The Queen's carriage upset at Harton, near Datchet; but her Majesty and companion, the Marchioness of Douro, escape unhurt.

12.—Tried before the High Court of Justice, Edinburgh, and acquitted, Christina Cochrane, or Gilmour, charged with poisoning her husband at Lochinvar. She was the first person surrendered on a criminal charge by the United States under the Ashburton Treaty.

13.—Came on for hearing in the Rolls Court the case of the Duke of Brunswick v. the King of Hanover, being a prayer that two instruments, and the appointment thereunder of the Duke of Cambridge as guardian of the fortunes of the plaintiff might be void, and the defendant liable to account for the personal estate and the produce of the sales of the real estates of the plaintiff received by the defendant as for his use since his appointment to the guardianship. Lord Longdown decided that the alleged acts of the defendant under the instrument were not acts in respect of which the court had jurisdiction, or which the defendant was liable to be sued for in this court.

15.—Commenced in Dublin the trial of Daniel O'Connell and eight others, charged with conspiracy and misdemeanour. The evidence during the proceedings had reference chiefly to the language quoted in the huge indictment as having been used by the traversers at various repeal demonstrations. On the 27th Mr. Shiel, M.P., delivered his great speech on behalf of John O'Connell.

19.—The Gazette contains the following notice with reference to one of the principals in the late fatal duel:—"Lieut. and Adjutant A. T. Monro of the Royal Regiment of Horse (66) Guards (Blue) is superseded, being absent without leave."

— A private rehearsal of sacred music, the composition of Prince Albert, takes place in the Queen's private chapel, under the superintendence of Dr. Elvey.

23.—Died in St. James's-place, aged 74, Sir Francis Burdett.

30.—Scene at the O'Connell trial between the Attorney-General and Mr. Fitzgibbon, counsel for one of the traversers. On the return of the Court after refreshment, Mr. Fitzgibbon rose and said, "My lord, while I was endeavouring during the adjournment of the Court to take a little rest, rendered so necessary by my state of health, a note was placed in my hand signed by the Attorney-General, which note I deemed it my duty to throw back again, and I now ask him to place it in your lordship's hands." The Attorney-General making no movement, Mr. Fitzgibbon paused a few minutes, and then went on. "He will not. Then I must tell the Court the substance of its contents. In that note the Attorney-General tells me that I have in my address to the Court given him a personal offence, and that if I do not apologize at once to name my friend—(sensation). I do not deny, my lord, that his position is one of difficulty. In the peculiar circumstances of the case it is for him to say whether he thinks it manly to adopt the course he has taken. I leave him, my lord, in your hands." The Attorney-General replied, "The language complained of I have taken down, and it attributes to me that I have been actuated by dishonourable motives in the conduct of this prosecution, and influenced by the effect that failure might have on my party and my professional advancement." A mutual friend of the learned gentlemen having interposed with the sanction of the Court, the Attorney-General withdrew the note, stating that he had been very much irritated at the time of writing it. This personal matter disposed of, Mr. Fitzgibbon resumed his address to the jury on behalf of his clients.

February 1.—Parliament opened by the Queen in person. The Speech made reference to the condition of Ireland, the state of the revenue, and the revision of the charter of the Bank of England.

6.—Sir James Graham introduces a bill to amend the Factory Act. No child under eight to be employed in factories, nor any young person under sixteen. Children not to work more than six hours and a half daily, and young persons and women not more than twelve. Work on Saturdays to cease at 4 o'clock.

8.—Lord Ashley moves an address to the Crown, praying that her Majesty "will be graciously pleased to take into her consideration the situation and treatment of the Ameers of Scinde; and that she will direct their immediate restoration to liberty and the enjoyment of their estates, or with such provision for their future maintenance as may be considered a just equivalent." On a division 68 voted for the motion, and 202 against it.

11.—At Bolton the keeper of a menagerie, on entering one of the dens, is set upon by a leopard and worried to death.

12.—Verdict given in O'Connell's case, being the twenty-fifth day of trial. Sentence deferred.

—Thanks of both Houses voted to the army of Scinde.

15.—The water breaks into the Landshipping Colliery, Haverfordwest, which was wrought beneath the river, and completely destroys the works. Fifty-eight men and boys were in the pit at the time, only eighteen of whom escaped.

17.—Establishment of a "Society for the Protection of Agriculture," designed to counteract the efforts of the Anti-Corn-Law League. Duke of Richmond chairman.

23.—Lord John Russell's motion for a Committee of the whole House, to inquire into the condition of Ireland, negatived by a majority of 324 to 225. The debate lasted nine nights, the question being treated as one involving the entire policy of the Government towards that part of the kingdom. Such of the traversers and their counsel as were members of the House left Ireland for the purpose of engaging in the debate. Mr. O'Connell spoke on the last night, and was answered by Sir Robert Peel, the last speaker on the ministerial side.

26.—Proceedings in the Court of Queen's Bench regarding the great frauds on the Custom-house. The charge in the case was conspiracy to defraud the Crown of certain duties upon goods imported, by the fabrication of false entries and the insertion of the leaves on which these false entries were made into the Blue-books in which the "light entries" were made by the landing waiters, and on which the duties were charged. By the connivance and aid of Homersham and Burnby, two of these officers (the former since dead, and the latter the principal witness against the defendants), Messrs. Mottram and Williams, silk merchants, Wood-street, and their clerk, Horsley (indicted with them), had carried on a course of fraud on the revenue for a considerable time and to a large amount. The present case was of necessity limited to one charge, but Burnby estimated the gross amount of the fraud at from 400,000*l.* to 500,000*l.* annually between the years 1837 and 1842, the time over which the transactions spread. Horsley had absconded, but the other defendant, Mottram, was now convicted. Sentence deferred.

27.—Tried in the Court of Common Pleas, an action for Crim. Con. brought by Lord William Paget against the Earl of Cardigan. The principal witness for the prosecution was a person named Winter, who swore that he had been directed by Lord William Paget to lie under a sofa in the back drawing-room in a position in which he was capable of seeing what passed in the front drawing-room, for the purpose of observing and hearing what passed between Lord Cardigan and Lady Paget; that in this situation he had partly seen and heard matters which, if true, could leave no doubt that criminal intercourse had taken place between the parties. The cross-examination of this witness tended very much to damage his evidence, and also reflected on the conduct of the plaintiff. Immediately on the conclusion of Sir W. Follett's speech for the defendant, the foreman of the jury announced that they would spare the Lord Chief Justice the trouble of summing up. Their verdict was "For the defendant."

March 1.—Mr. T. Duncombe moves for a return of all moneys paid to Hughes, Ross, and Jackson, reporters for Mr. Gurney at the Repeal demonstrations, on account of any communications made by them to the Government. Sir James Graham said he was not prepared to assent to any resolution, the effect of which would be to hold these people up to public execration and possibly to expose them to popular fury. "I think it my painful duty to risk the incurring of such obloquy. It is my proud satisfaction that upon the whole I have succeeded in administering the law, asking for no extraordinary powers; and in putting down dangerous turbulence in England, and in bringing to condign punishment great public offenders in Ireland, I have faithfully and honourably, I trust, pursued the path of duty, and am not to be deterred by any attacks of the hon. member." The motion was lost by a majority of 144 to 73.

3.—D'Aubigny, commander of the French establishment in Tahiti, writes: "A French sentinel was attacked last night. In reprisal I have caused to be seized one Pritchard, the only daily mover and instigator of the disturbances of the natives. His property shall be answerable for all damage occasioned to our establishments by the insurgents; and if French blood is spilt, every drop shall recoil on his head."

4.—Came on for trial in the Central Criminal Court the charge of libel raised at the instance of Lord William Paget against Thomas Holt, proprietor of the Age newspaper, in so far as he had alleged that the case heard in the Court of Common Pleas was a conspiracy on the part of Lord William and others to extort money from Lord Cardigan. The jury returned a verdict of Guilty; but in respect that the defendant was at present undergoing a sentence passed upon him in the Court of Queen's Bench in the case of the Duke of Brunswick, the Recorder deferred passing another sentence upon him in the meantime. On the 9th the defendant was brought up for judgment, and sentenced to four months' imprisonment in Newgate, to commence at the expiry of his present term in the Queen's Prison.

5.—At the annual meeting of the proprietors of the Thames Tunnel it is stated that 2,038,477 people had passed through it from 25th March last. This had produced 8,478*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.*, besides 460*l.* paid by stall-keepers.

6.—At the Northampton assizes a French-woman named Nathalie Miard was indicted for endeavouring to extort 400*l.* from the Rev. C. Marsh, rector of Barnock, and son of the late Bishop of Peterborough. It appeared that when in London the prosecutor was in the habit of frequenting a house of ill fame kept by Madame Lodon. Here he became acquainted with the prisoner, and with her proceeded to Paris, where they lived together for some time. The result of their intercourse was the birth of a child; and for the purpose of keeping down all knowledge of the circumstances in his parish, the prosecutor had from time to time paid Miard considerable sums, till her demands became so extravagant that he said he could not supply them. The jury returned a verdict of Not guilty, which was received with applause by a crowded court.

8.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer introduces his plan for the reduction of the Three-and-a-half per cents. His intention was to propose the conversion of the Three-and-a-half into Three-and-a-quarter per cent. stock, which should continue till October 1854, after which period the interest should be reduced to three per cent. with a guarantee that for twenty years from 1854 there should be no further reduction. From 1844 to 1854 the public would save 625,000*l.* per annum, and for the year following, 1,250,000*l.* per annum.

—The Lord Chancellor introduces the Dissenters' Chapels Bill, for confirming the possession of religious endowments in the hands of Dissenters, and arresting such litigations as had recently taken place in the case of the Lady Hewley's charities,—originally given by her ladyship to Calvinistic Independents, but which had gradually passed to Unitarians, whose occupancy was successfully contested. The Lord Chancellor's Bill proposed to terminate all further legal controversy respecting the right to voluntary endowments connected with Dissenting chapels, by vesting the property in the religious body in whose hands it had been for the preceding twenty years. The measure gave rise to considerable excitement out of doors among Church people, but was ultimately carried through both Houses with slight amendments.

11.—Captain Bernal draws the attention of the House of Commons to the refusal of the War-office to allow a pension to Mrs. Fawcett, the widow of the officer who fell in the late duel. Sir H. Hardinge defended the refusal, not upon general grounds, but upon the special circumstances of the case, particularly the near relationship of the parties, the slightness of the affront, and the precipitancy of the hostile meeting.

12.—Banquet to O'Connell in Covent-garden Theatre, "to show, on the part of Englishmen, the admiration entertained towards him for forty years' constant and consistent advocacy of the rights and privileges of Irishmen." He referred to the union with Ireland, and detailed at great length the grievances under which she laboured, maintaining that a remedy could only be found in equal franchise, equal representation, equal corporate reform, and equal freedom of conscience from a Church to which they did not belong.

20.—At the Norfolk assizes Lord Abinger sentences a young lad named White to transportation for life, for sending a letter to a farmer in the parish of Blaintisham, in December last, threatening to set fire to his premises unless he gave more work.

25.—Fancy Fair in the Thames Tunnel.

29.—Waverley Ball in Edinburgh in aid of the funds of the Scott monument. One who was present writes, "The White Lady of Avenel was there; so was Anne of Geierstein, Amy Robsart, Julian Peveril, Isaac the Jew, Young Hazlewood, Sultan Saladin, monks and friars, Highlanders, Turks and Saracens, whiskered, bronzed, and turbaned. Dominic Sampson intermitted his studies, and stepping in by mistake, no doubt, found himself in presence of Vanity Fair. The veritable Baillie Jarvie of the Saltmarket popped in, lighted by Matty, with lantern in hand and coats kilted." This was the most successful fancy dress ball given in Edinburgh.

April 1.—The American dwarf, known as General Tom Thumb, appears before the Court at Buckingham Palace.

3.—John Bryce executed at Edinburgh for the murder of John Geddes, his brother-in-law, at Blaw Wearie, West Calder, on the 27th December last. Bryce made a full confession before death, and described the precise manner in which the murder was perpetrated.

4.—Fire at the Rose and Crown wine vaults, Oxford-street; six people burned.

7.—Lord Abinger, Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer, dies during the sitting of the assizes at Bury St. Edmunds.

10.—Came on for trial at the Central Criminal Court the great conspiracy and will-forgery case, in which William Henry Barber, solicitor, Joshua Fletcher, surgeon, and three others, were charged with attempting to defraud the Commissioners of the National Debt, by forging wills and personating individuals, in whose names stock was invested in the Funds. At the termination of the second case, charging them with uttering and publishing a testamentary writing purporting to be the will of Ann

Slack, and thereby obtaining possession of 3,500*l.* in the Three-and-a-half per cents., the jury returned a verdict of Guilty. Barber, who seemed greatly astonished, then declared his innocence, and said Fletcher knew quite well he was innocent. These two were sentenced to transportation for life.

15.—Dr. Wolfe writes from Merve, 230 miles from Bokhara, that the prospects of finding Stoddart and Conolly alive are getting dimmer and dimmer as he gets nearer the capital of the Khan.

16.—Mr. Hume moves a resolution for giving effect to the recommendation of the Committee of 1841 upon National Monuments, that the public should be admitted more freely into Westminster Abbey, St. Paul's, and other cathedrals throughout the country. Experience, he said, had now proved what had long been denied, that Englishmen may be admitted to places containing works of art without hazard to these works from misbehaviour. Sir Robert Peel admitted the justice of the plea, but at present the control of these buildings belonged entirely to the ecclesiastical bodies, and while that right continued theirs by law the House ought not to interfere by resolution. The motion was ultimately withdrawn, Mr. Hume expressing a wish that the sentiment now expressed would have its effect in the proper quarter.

19.—Interview of Dr. Wolfe with Nayeb Samut, the chief of artillery to the King of Bokhara. By the king's command he was then informed of the fate of Conolly and Stoddart. The Nayeb said, "During the stay of Conolly and Stoddart they took every opportunity of despatching, in the most stealthy manner, letters to Cabul; and on this account his Majesty became displeased [in June, 1842]. Both were brought, with their hands tied, behind the palace. They kissed each other, and Stoddart said, 'Tell the Queen I die a disbeliever in Mahommed, but a believer in Jesus—that I am a Christian and die a Christian.' Conolly said, 'We shall see each other in Paradise.' Then Saadat gave the order to cut off first the head of Stoddart, which was done; in the same manner the head of Conolly was cut off." —Wolfe's Narrative.

22.—Scene in the House of Commons with Mr. Ferrand, M.P. Mr. Roebuck taunts him with having stated that Sir James Graham had used his power as a minister of the Crown to procure a false return relative to the Keighley Union rates, for the purpose of crushing him. Mr. Hume also draws attention to another statement publicly made by Mr. Ferrand, to the effect that Sir James Graham had made use of his official influence to make Mr. Hogg, the member for Beverley, commit perjury as chairman of an election committee, by delivering an opinion contrary to his own feelings. Mr. Ferrand denied using the last expression, but re-affirmed the truth of the first. Sir James Graham: "I think it impossible, considering the nature of the assertion and the position which I hold by the favour of her Majesty, that the matter can rest here; and I trust therefore that he is prepared to take the proper course for substantiating so grave a charge." Mr. Ferrand appeared in his place next night, and repeated that what he had affirmed about the false return was quite true. He was proceeding to state that if he had in any way wounded the personal honour of any member—when he was interrupted by a loud burst of laughter and ironical cheering, in the midst of which he took up his hat and hurried out of the House, Sir James Graham indicating by gestures his amazement at the proceeding. Sir Robert Peel said he would venture to say that since the time when a public performer undertook to compress himself into the limits of a quart bottle there had been no case which had given rise to more disappointment to the audience than this. On the 24th it was agreed that Mr. Ferrand should have another opportunity of acknowledging or denying the accuracy of his repeated charges, and if he admitted their accuracy he was to be allowed to take proof before a select committee. On the 26th Mr. Ferrand made another attempt at explanation, but the House almost unanimously adopted the resolution of Sir Robert Peel, that the charges against Sir James Graham and Mr. Hogg were unfounded and calumnious.

25.—Amended articles against duelling issued from the War-office. They declare that it is suitable to the character of honourable men to apologize and offer redress for wrong or insult committed, and equally so for the party aggrieved to accept frankly and cordially explanation and apologies for the same.

26.—Sir Robert Peel, in answer to Mr. Macaulay, said the Court of Directors had exercised the power which the law gives them to recall the Governor-General of India.

— Dr. Lushington delivers judgment in the suit for restitution of conjugal rights by the Earl of Dysart against his wife, who by way of answer pleaded cruelty on his part and prayed for a separation. The learned judge having gone over the main points of the case, thought they did not prove any risk of personal violence if Lady Dysart had conducted herself with prudence and submission. He therefore pronounced for the prayer of Lord Dysart.

May 1.—The London police make a simultaneous attack on the West-end gaming-houses, and seize a quantity of gaming implements, about 3,000*l.* in cash, besides I.O.U.'s, and capture seventy-three people, who are fined in sums varying from 1*l.* to 60*l.*

6.—Sir Robert Peel introduces his new Bank charter and Banking regulations. In the course of one of his addresses he said, "I propose with respect to the Bank of England that there should be an actual separation of the two departments of issue and banking, that there should be different officers to each, and a different system of accounts. I likewise propose, that to the issue-department should be transferred the whole amount of bullion now in the possession of the Bank, and that the issue of bank-notes should hereafter take place on two foundations, and two foundations only—first, on a definite amount of securities, and after that, exclusively upon bullion; so that the action of the public would, in this latter respect, govern the amount of the circulation. There will be no power in the Bank to issue notes on deposits and discount of bills, and the issue-department will have to place to the credit of the banking-department the amount of notes which the issue-department by law will be entitled to issue. With respect to the banking business of the Bank I propose that it should be governed on precisely the same principles as would regulate any other body dealing with Bank of England notes. The fixed amount of securities on which I propose that the Bank of England should issue notes is 14,000,000*l.* and the whole of the remainder of the circulation is to be issued exclusively on the foundation of bullion. I propose that there should be a complete and periodical publication of the accounts of the Bank of England, both of the banking and issue departments, as tending to increase the credit of the Bank, and to prevent panic and needless alarm. I would therefore enact by law, that there should be returned to the Government a weekly account of the issue of notes by the Bank of England—of the amount of bullion—of the fluctuation of the bullion—of the amount of deposits—in short, an account of every transaction both in the issue-department and the banking-department of the Bank of England; and that the Government should forthwith publish unreservedly and weekly a full account of the circulation of the Bank.”

—Augustus Dalmas, a French chemist, murders Mrs. Sarah M'Farlane on Battersea-bridge, about 11 o'clock at night, by cutting her throat. He afterwards delivered himself up to justice, and was convicted at the Central Criminal Court; but being considered of unsound mind the extreme sentence of the law was departed from, and he was ordered to be confined for life as a criminal lunatic.

7.—Theatre Royal, Manchester, destroyed by fire. The dressing-rooms only were saved, and a part of their furniture.

15.—Sir Henry Hardinge sworn in as Governor-General of India. On the same evening the East India Company gave their customary dinner to Sir Henry on his appointment.

18.—Fire at Naworth Castle, one of the seats of the Earl of Carlisle. The building itself, and a large collection of ancient furniture and pictures, were entirely destroyed, with the exception of the tower of “Belted

Will,” where there was a series of apartments kept furnished as they had been left by that border chief.

22.—It is announced in the Free Assembly that 70,000*l.* had been collected for the Sustentation Fund, 50,000*l.* for schools, 32,000*l.* for missions; and that 230,000*l.* had been expended, or was expending, in the building of churches.

23.—The House of Lords sits as a Committee of Privileges, to consider the claims of Sir Augustus Frederick D'Este to succeed his father as Duke of Sussex, Earl of Inverness, and Baron Arklow. At Rome, in 1792, the deceased Duke had met with Lady Augusta Murray, daughter of the Countess of Dunmore, and falling violently in love with her, they were after some delay married there by an English clergyman. On returning to this country they were married by banns in St. George's, Hanover-square, which marriage, however, was admitted to be legally invalid. The openly manifested repugnance of the King to the match led to a separation after the birth of two children—the present claimant and a daughter. The chief points of the claim were submitted to the common-law judges in the form of a case. After due deliberation the judges came to an unanimous opinion that the Royal Marriage Act was in force in foreign countries as well as in England; and that a marriage at Rome, if otherwise valid, when contracted between individuals who did not come within the scope of the Royal Marriage Act, became of no effect if one of the contracting parties was included within the provisions of that Act, and had married without the consent of the King. A decision was therefore recorded that the claims of Sir Augustus D'Este had not been established.

29.—Sentence pronounced upon O'Connell and the other traversers in the Court of Queen's Bench, Dublin. With respect to the principal traverser the sentence of the Court was that he be imprisoned for twelve months, pay a fine of 2,000*l.* and enter into security and recognizances for his future good behaviour for the term of seven years in the sum of 5,000*l.* The other traversers were sentenced to nine months' imprisonment, a fine of 50*l.* and to find securities for the same time in the sum of 1,000*l.* Mr. O'Connell, on entering to take his place in the traversers' box, was received with a shout of enthusiasm by the bar and the audience. The utmost consternation and amazement was shown at the severity of the sentence. Mr. O'Connell said, “I will not do anything so irregular as to reply to the Court, but I am entitled to remind Mr. Justice Barton that we each of us have sworn positively, and that I in particular have sworn positively, I was not engaged in any conspiracy whatever. I am sorry to say that I feel it my imperative duty to add that justice has not been done to me.” Shortly after the sentence the traversers, in custody of the sheriff, took their departure for Richmond Bridewell, the prison selected by the traversers themselves. O'Connell immediately issued a proclamation headed "Peace and Quiet," urging the people to show their regard for him by their obedience to the law, and their total avoidance of any riot or violence.

June 1.—The Emperor of Russia visits London. He at first took up his quarters at the Russian Embassy, but, on the pressing invitation of the Queen, removed to Buckingham Palace as the guest of her Majesty. During his visit the Emperor had several conversations with the Duke of Wellington, the Earl of Aberdeen, and Sir Robert Peel, relative to the state of Turkey, and the events that might be expected to follow in case of the dissolution of that empire, which, in the opinion of the Czar, was an event not far distant. Their conversation ultimately took the form of a memorandum, deposited originally in the secret archives of the Foreign-office, but brought to light in after years, when the Emperor pleaded a common understanding with England in defence of his proceedings against Turkey. "Russia and England (so runs the memorandum) are mutually penetrated with the conviction that it is for their common interest that the Ottoman Porte should maintain itself in a state of independence and of territorial possession which at present constitutes that empire, as that political combination is the one which is most compatible with the general interest of the maintenance of peace. Being agreed on this principle, Russia and England have an equal interest in uniting their efforts in order to keep up the existence of the Ottoman empire, and to avert all the dangers which can place in jeopardy its safety. With this object, the essential point is to suffer the Porte to live in repose, without needlessly disturbing it by diplomatic bickerings, and without interfering, without absolute necessity, in its internal affairs. In order to carry out skilfully this system of forbearance, with a view to the well-understood interest of the Porte, two things must not be lost sight of. They are these:—In the first place, the Porte has a constant tendency to extricate itself from the engagements imposed upon it by the treaties which it has concluded with other Powers. It hopes to do so with impunity, because it reckons on the mutual jealousy of the Cabinets. It thinks that if it fails in its engagements towards one of them, the rest will espouse its quarrel, and will screen it from all responsibility. It is essential not to confirm the Porte in this delusion. Every time that it fails in its obligations towards one of the great Powers, it is the interest of all the rest to make it sensible of its error, and seriously to exhort it to act rightly towards the Cabinet which demands just reparation. The object for which Russia and England will have to come to an understanding may be expressed in the following manner:—

1. To seek to maintain the existence of the Ottoman empire in its present state, so long as that political combination shall be possible.
2. If we foresee that it must crumble to pieces, to enter into previous concert as to everything relating to the establishment of a new order of things, intended to replace that which now exists, and, in conjunction with each other, to see that the change which may have occurred in the internal situation of that empire shall not injuriously affect either the security of their own states, and the rights which the treaties assure to them respectively, or the maintenance of the balance of power in Europe. For the purpose thus stated, the policy of Russia and of Austria, as we have already said, is closely united by the principle of perfect identity. If England, as the principal maritime power, acts in concert with them, it is to be supposed that France will find herself obliged to act in conformity with the course agreed upon between St. Petersburg, London, and Vienna. Conflict between the great Powers being thus obviated, it is to be hoped that the peace of Europe will be maintained even in the midst of such serious circumstances."

3.—At the weekly meeting of the Repeal Association, Smith O'Brien stated he had deliberately and solemnly come to the conclusion that not one drop of intoxicating liquor should pass his lips until the Union was repealed.

—The Chancellor of the Exchequer proposes his resolutions on the Sugar Duties. Colonial to continue as at present, at 2*s.*; China, Java, Manilla, and other countries, when it is not the produce of slave labour, at 3*s.*; Brazil and slave-labour states to continue at 6*s.* On a division, the Government proposal was carried by 197 to 128.

—Insurrection in the island of Dominica, in consequence of a misapprehension on the part of the negroes that the taking of the census was part of a plan for reducing them once more to a state of slavery.

4.—Ascot races attended by the Emperor of Russia and the King of Saxony.

5.—Dinner to Mr. Charles Knight on the occasion of completing the "Penny Cyclopædia," and as a mark of respect to him as an author, editor, and publisher.

10.—The Repeal rent for the week announced as amounting to 3,229*l.*, being the largest sum yet collected.

11.—The private bankers memorialize Sir Robert Peel regarding the clause in the New Bank Act restricting the issue to 14,000,000*l.* upon securities. "We respectfully submit that the effect of such an absolute limitation will be to restrict the business of the country, by leading to a general withdrawal of legitimate accommodation, unless some power be reserved by the bill for extending the issue, with the sanction of the authorities above alluded to, in cases of emergency to be made apparent to such authorities." Sir Robert Peel, in reply, refused to allow of any other extension than that provided for in the Bill.

14.—The Government defeated in committee on the Sugar Duties Bill. An amendment on the first clause, proposed by Mr. Miles, lowering the duties on both British and foreign grown sugar not the produce of slave labour, was carried by a majority of 20 in a House of 462. This vote was rescinded three nights afterwards by a majority of 22 in a House of 488.

— Opening Private Letters at the Post-Office. — Mr. T. Duncombe presents a petition from M. Mazzini and three others, complaining that during the past month a number of their letters passing through the General Post-Office, written for no political purpose, and containing no treasonable or libellous matter, had been regularly detained and opened. Sir James Graham replied, that the Secretary of State had been invested by Parliament with the power, in certain cases, of issuing warrants directing letters to be opened. With respect to three of the petitioners, their statements were false; but so far as one of them was concerned, he had considered it his duty to issue such a warrant, but it was not at present in force. The powers he alluded to had been conferred by Parliament, and he hoped that Parliament would not withdraw its confidence from the Government in this respect. He declined to give any information as to which of the petitioners he referred to, or how long the warrant had remained in force.

15.—Died at Boulogne-sur-Mer, whither he had retired for the benefit of his health, Thomas Campbell, author of "The Pleasures of Hope."

— Thomas Carlyle writes to the Times:—" I have had the honour to know M. Mazzini for a series of years; and whatever I may think of his practical insight and skill in worldly affairs, I can with great freedom testify to all men that he, if I have ever seen one such, is a man of genius and virtue, a man of sterling veracity, humanity, and nobleness of mind. . . . Whether the extraneous Austrian Emperor and miserable old chimera of a Pope shall maintain themselves in Italy, or be obliged to decamp from Italy, is not a question in the least vital to Englishmen. But it is a question vital to us that sealed letters in an English post-office be, as we all fancied they were, respected as things sacred; that opening of men's letters, a practice near of kin to picking men's pockets, and to other still viler and far fataler forms of scoundrelism, be not resorted to in England, except in cases of the very last extremity. When some new Gunpowder Plot may be in the wind, some double-dyed high-treason, or imminent national wreck not avoidable otherwise, then let us open letters: not till then."

24.—In the course of a debate on Post Office espionage, Mr. Shiel charged Sir James

Graham, an English Secretary, with acting an un-English part in so far as he did, by a clandestine and surreptitious instrumentality, lend himself to the procurement of evidence for foreign powers against unfortunate exiles, and obtained by such means the revelation of secrets by which their property and their lives might be sacrificed. In this matter public opinion is against the Government. In all parts of the country there was but one feeling with respect to it, and that was a feeling of indignation at the establishment of such an inquisition.

25.—On a division, Mr. Villiers' annual motion against the Corn-Laws defeated by a majority of 328 to 124.

July 1.—The Running Rein case heard in the Court of Exchequer. This action, which excited considerable interest in the sporting world, arose out of the late Derby race at Epsom, in which the above horse, belonging to the plaintiff, Mr. Wood, had come in first. It was alleged, however, that Running Rein had not been truly described, that he was above the age which qualified him to run for the Derby, and that he ought not therefore to be deemed the winner of the race. Colonel Peel, the owner of Orlando, the second horse, claimed the stakes on the ground that Running Rein was not the horse represented, and Mr. Wood therefore raised the present action against the Colonel. Mr. Cockburn, who conducted the plaintiff's case, gave the pedigree of Running Rein, and what was said to be his true history, from his possession by Mr. Goodman as a foal to his purchase by Mr. Wood. On the conclusion of the evidence for the plaintiff, the Solicitor-General denounced the case as a gross and scandalous fraud on his part. The horse was not Running Rein at all, but a colt by Gladiator out of a dam belonging originally to Sir Charles Ibbotson, and had the name of Running Rein imposed on it. It was originally called Maccabeus, and entered for certain stakes under that designation. His allegations, however, were not against Mr. Wood, but against Mr. Goodman, who had entered into a conspiracy with other persons to run horses above the proper age. On the second day of the trial, Baron Alderson ordered the production of the horse, but the plaintiff then declared it had been taken away without his knowledge, and he was not able therefore to produce it. Mr. Cockburn afterwards stated, on behalf of his client, that he was now convinced he had been deceived, and gave up the case. Mr. Baron Alderson, in directing the jury to return a verdict for the defendant, said, " Since the opening of this case a most atrocious fraud has been proved to have been practised; and I have seen with great regret gentlemen associating with persons much below themselves in station. If gentlemen would associate with gentlemen and race with gentlemen, we should have no such practices; but if gentlemen will condescend to race with blackguards, they must expect to be cheated." Verdict for the defendant.

— Came on for hearing in the Court of Queen's Bench, before Lord Denman and a jury, the case of Kinder v. Lord Ashburton, Baring, and Mildmay, being a claim by the plaintiff for an alleged conspiracy to inflict injury on him with respect to the Parris estate of 8,000,000 acres, purchased by both parties in Mexico. The bargain having turned out bad for the house of Baring, the plaintiff alleged that to get quit of it, they bribed the authorities of Mexico to pass a law preventing aliens holding estates in that country. The Barings denied all knowledge of bribery, though they admitted their agents may have done so on their own responsibility. Verdict for the defendants.

2.—Mr. Duncombe moves for a Select Committee to inquire into the department of the Post Office usually called the Secret Office, together with the duties of the persons employed there, and the authority under which those duties were discharged. Sir James Graham admitted that the question, whatever it had been before, was now a question between the people and the Government. "I am glad, therefore, that I can at once indulge my own private feelings and my sense of public duty by consenting to be a party to a most searching inquiry into the state of the law, and the practice of the law from the earliest period down to the latest moment. I think there must be inquiry, but that inquiry must not be carried on by a Select Committee, but by a Secret Committee." A committee of this kind was appointed at the close of the debate, four members being selected from the ministerial and five from the opposition side of the House. Mr. Duncombe being in the position of accuser was omitted in conformity with the rule of the House.

— Mr. Wallace defeated by a large majority in his motion for a Select Committee to inquire into the conduct of the Lord Justice Clerk in brow beating the jury and counsel in a case heard at the last Glasgow circuit, where, in defiance of the wish of the jury, a charge of rape was departed from on his lordship insisting that the evidence was insufficient.

— At Ensham, Oxfordshire, a man burnt during confinement in the cage, where he had been placed for stabbing two people in a drunken quarrel. The cage accidentally caught fire, and before the key could be procured the prisoner was so severely burnt that he died in a few hours.

3.—Funeral of Thomas Campbell, in Westminster Abbey. The procession passed from Jerusalem Chamber to Poet's Corner.

6.—A declaration made by Fletcher that, to the best of his knowledge, Barber had no guilty knowledge of the recent will-forgeries, submitted to the Home Secretary. (See April 10.)

8.—Waverley Dress Ball at Willis's Rooms, London, in aid of the funds of the Scott monument. The ball-room was crowded with the rank and fashion of the metropolis. On Tolbecque's band striking up the "March of the English Volunteers," the procession formed by the Marchioness of Londonderry's monstre quadrille of Scott characters left the tea-room, and began its progress along the left centre of the Salon de Danse to the raised benches where the Royal Family and lady patronesses were seated. Dancing was prolonged till 5 o'clock the following morning, there being no less than twenty-six sets danced in the principal ball-room. In the supper-room Scotch reels and country-dances were kept up with spirit.

— The case of Dyce Sombre again before the Court of Chancery, Sir Thomas Wilde pleading that the commission of lunacy ought to be superseded on the ground that the singularities founded upon in his client's conduct was but the result of his Indian birth and upbringing. The Lord Chancellor dismissed the petition, as he considered the lunacy of Mr. Sombre had been proved by the highest authorities. During the progress of the case the Nabob of Surat and his suite visited the court.

12.—The Royal Commission of Fine Arts select six artists to execute works for the decoration of the new Houses of Parliament.

13.—At the assizes held at Tullamore, Peter Dolan was tried for shooting Lord Norbury on the 1st January, 1839. The prisoner was a tenant on the estate, and a notice of ejectment had been served on him along with others before the murder. The jury returned a verdict of Not guilty.

22.—Fatal occurrence at the steamboat pier, Blackfriars-bridge. The pier and steps leading to it were unusually crowded by parties anxious to witness a boat-race on the opposite side, when the main timbers supporting the stage gave way, and about twenty spectators were upset into the river. Five were taken out drowned, and the rest saved with difficulty.

— In the case of two men, named Crane and Conway, tried at Limerick for riot, the jury not being able to agree, were locked up in the usual way. At midnight they intimated that they had agreed upon a verdict, and Judge Ball came into court. When the foreman was asked to hand down the issue paper, he, with much hesitation, passed to the judge a handful of small pieces of paper, varying in size from a shilling to a fourpenny piece. Judge Ball: "What is the meaning of this?" Foreman: "My lord, this is the issue-paper. The fact is, the jury quarrelled among themselves, and tore it up in this manner. I did all I could to save it, but without effect." The judge deemed it his duty to receive the pieces, which recorded a verdict of Guilty, with a recommendation to mercy, but he intimated that he could pay no attention to the recommendation of a jury which had conducted itself in such a disgraceful manner.

23.—Capt. Warner sinks the John O'Gaunt off Brighton, in an experiment with his new and secret invention for destroying ships at sea. A smoke seemed suddenly to envelope the vessel, her mainmast shot up perpendicularly from her deck, no noise save that of the rending of timber was heard, and on the smoke and spray clearing away the smitten ship heeled over to port and sank. Between 30,000 and 40,000 people were present on the beach. Lord Ingestre, Capt. Dickenson, and Capt. Henderson signed a document, stating that the operations were "under our management and control; that the explosion did not take place by combustible matter on board or alongside the ship, but was caused by Capt. Warner, who was on board the steamer Sir William Wallace, at the distance of 300 yards; and that it took place in consequence of a signal made by us from the shore; and that the time at which such was to be made could not have been known to Capt. Warner. We further declare our belief that Capt. Warner had never been on board the vessel since it left Gravesend."

24.—Sir Robert and Lady Sale, with their widowed daughter, Mrs. Sturt, and child, and various officers of the Indian army, arrive at Lyme-Regis, and receive a welcome reception.

26.—Lord Heytesbury enters Dublin as Lord-Lieutenant in room of Lord De Grey.

27.—Died at Manchester, in his seventy-eighth year, John Dalton, chemist and philosopher.

31.—Sir Robert Peel, at the request of Lord Ingestre, consents to the publication of all the correspondence between the Government and Capt. Warner relative to his long-range and explosive shells.

August 1.—Dr. Wolffe writes from Bokhara: "To all the Monarchs of Europe.—I set out for Bokhara to ransom the lives of two officers, Stoddart and Conolly, but both of them were murdered many months previous to my departure, and I do not know whether or not this blood of mine shall be spilt. I do not supplicate for my own safety; but, Monarchs, two hundred thousand Persian slaves, many of them people of high talents, sigh in the kingdom of Bokhara. Endeavour to effect their liberation, and I shall rejoice in the grave that my blood has been thus the cause of the ransom of so many human beings. I am too much agitated, and watched besides, to write more."

—The Vicar of Liskeard temporarily suspended for omitting to read portions of the Burial Service over the body of a parishioner. The vicar pleaded that he was led to believe the man died in a state of intoxication; but the Bishop of Exeter decided that, even if this was so, the officiating clergyman had no right to condemn the dead by omitting any portion of the service.

—Lord Sandon brought up the report of the Secret Committee appointed to inquire into the law and practice of opening private letters in the Post Office. It contained a complete history of the origin and exercise of the power vested by statute in the Secretary of State, and showed the instances in which it had been employed by the members of different cabinets. "If the result of the inquiry (it is reported) had been such as to impress your Committee with a conviction of the importance of the frequent use of this power in the ordinary administration of affairs, they would have been prepared to recommend some legislative measures for its regulation and control; and it might not be difficult to devise regulations which would materially diminish the obligations to its exercise, as, for example, that no criminal warrant should be issued except on a written information on oath; that a formal record should be preserved in the Secretary of State's Office of the grounds on which every warrant had been issued, of the time during which it remained in force, of the number of letters opened under it, and of the results obtained. It is, however, on the other hand, to be considered whether any legislative measure of this kind might not have an indirect effect in giving an additional sanction to the power in question, and thereby possibly extending its use." As the report showed that the annual average of warrants had rather decreased than increased in recent years, public excitement on the subject greatly subsided, and no immediate action was taken.

—A small boat, overladen with Grissell and Peto's labourers, upset in the Severn at Diglis, and twelve drowned.

6.—This morning, at ten minutes before eight o'clock, the Queen was safely delivered of a Prince at Windsor Castle.

—Tangier bombarded by three ships of the line, under the command of the Prince de Joinville. The batteries were dismantled in about two hours.

—Burns Festival at Alloway, designed for the double purpose of honouring the memory of the poet and welcoming his sons to the land which their father's genius had consecrated. A procession of about a mile in length, composed of mason lodges, trade incorporations, and deputations from municipal bodies, marched from Ayr to Alloway, where a huge banquetting pavilion was erected in a field adjoining the monument. The banquet was presided over by the Earl of Eglinton, and placed near, in seats of honour, were Robert, the eldest son of the poet, Colonel Burns, the second, and Major Burns, the youngest of the family; also Mrs. Begg, sister, her two daughters, Mrs. Thomson (the Jessie Lewars of the bard), and various other friends and relations. The company comprised almost all that was famous in Scotland for law or literature, science or art. The croupier, Professor Wilson, in a speech of great length and eloquence, welcomed the family to their father's land. "There is but one soul," he said, "in this our great national festival. To swell the multitudes that from morning light continued flocking towards old Ayr, till at mid-day they gathered into one mighty mass in front of Burns's monument, came enthusiastic crowds from countless villages and towns, from our metropolis, and from the great city of the West, along with the sons of the soil dwelling all round the breezy uplands of Kyle, and in regions that stretch away to the stormy mountains of Morven." Appropriate toasts followed from Sir John M'Neile, Col. Mure of Caldwell, Mr. Aytoun, Mr. H. Bell, the Lord Justice General, and others. The early part of the day was favourable for the outdoor display, but towards evening, at the close of the banquet, the rain began to fall heavily, and the return to Ayr was made in a somewhat unceremonious manner.

7.—William Saville executed in Nottingham for the murder of his wife and three children by cutting their throats with a razor. When the drop fell, a sudden rush of the crowd took place down a narrow avenue known as Garner's Hill. Some of the foremost stumbled and fell, and before anything like order could be restored twelve people were killed, and thirty more or less injured.

— Sir Robert Sale entertained at the London Tavern by the Hon. East India Company. Sir Wm. Nott was also to have been present, but was prevented by indisposition. Lady Sale and Mrs. Sturt were among the ladies in the gallery.

10.—Act abolishing imprisonment for debt comes into operation, and many debtors detained in metropolitan prisons for sums under 20*l.* liberated.

15.—The French attack Mogadore. Prince de Joinville writes to the Minister of Marine:—"After having destroyed the town and its batteries, we took possession of the island and of the ports. Sixty-eight men were killed or wounded."

17.—A Tartar soldier exhibits various feats in horsemanship and sword exercise in Hyde Park, near the barracks.

21.—Demonstration at Edinburgh on occasion of laying the foundation-stone of the monument to be erected in the Calton burying-ground to the memory of the political martyrs of 1793-4. The ceremony was performed by Mr. Hume, M.P., who delivered an appropriate address. A dinner and soirée in honour of the event took place in the evening.

— James Cockburn Belaney tried at the Central Criminal Court for murdering his wife by administering prussic acid. The post-mortem examination showed death to have resulted from this poison, and it was established in evidence that the prisoner was seen to have a quantity of it in his possession a few minutes before his wife's death. The jury returned a verdict of Not guilty.

22.—A poor needlewoman, in a fit of desperation, commits suicide by throwing herself into a secluded part of the Surrey Canal. She had been in the habit, along with her sisters, of making shirts at rates varying from 1*½d.* to 3*d.* each, but during the past week had been without work at even these rates, and for two days had not tasted food.

24.—The quarries at Gehard, Kerry, having discovered a cave adjoining the works, enter to explore it, and no less than seven fall victims to the noxious vapours with which it was filled.

28.—The foundation-stone of the Durham Memorial, on Penshaw Hill, laid with masonic honours by the Earl of Zetland, Grand Master.

September 3.—The Bank of England robbed of 8,000*l.* in gold through the aid of one of the clerks, named Burgess, and a confederate, named Elder, who falsely personated Mr. Oxenford, the owner of Consols to that amount. The parties were subsequently traced by detective Forrester to the United States. Elder committed suicide, and Burgess, after a severe chase, was brought back to this country, and sentenced to transportation for life. Most of the money was recovered.

4.—This morning was appointed for the delivery of the judgment of the House of Lords on the writ of error in the case of O'Connell and others v. the Queen. Eleven questions had been referred to the judges, and upon nine of these they were agreed. Upon the third and eleventh Mr. Justice Parke and Mr. Justice Coleman dissented from the opinion of their brethren. The indictment consisted of a number of counts: some of them were found bad and some good; and if the judgment delivered by the Irish Court had been confined to the latter, it would have been unexceptionable. But the judgment was general, and therefore tacitly assumed that all the counts were good. The Lord Chancellor now moved that the judgment of the Court below be sustained. Lord Campbell moved that it be reversed. On a division, confined exclusively to law lords, the Lord Chancellor announced that the judgment of the House was that the sentence of the Court below should be reversed. O'Connell and the other prisoners were therefore at once liberated. On the order being handed to him on Friday afternoon, O'Connell read it aloud to his friends, and then returned it to his solicitor, who at once repaired to the governor and handed him the release. The news of the liberation caused the utmost excitement throughout Ireland, and demonstrations and addresses occupied the mind of the people for weeks together. The governor instantly communicated to the whole of the prisoners the welcome fact that they were now at liberty, and free to return to their homes. O'Connell repaired to his residence in Merion-square, and addressed a large assembly from the balcony. On the 7th a great procession took place in Dublin to celebrate the liberation, and the Agitator and his fellow-prisoners took formal leave of the gaol. "When the account," he says, "came to me of the decision in our favour, though the attorneys rushed into my presence, and one of them did me the honour of embracing me, still notwithstanding that kiss and the words which accompanied it, and with the full knowledge that it was so, or the attorneys would not be there, yet for a full half-hour afterwards I did not believe it."

5.—Parliament prorogued by Commission. Sir Robert Peel intimated that the outrage on Mr. Pritchard at Tahiti has been arranged amicably.

11.—Her Majesty enters the Firth of Tay, and lands at Dundee, on the occasion of her second visit to Scotland. She takes up her residence at Blair Athol, which is placed at her disposal by Lord Glenlyon. Prince Albert repeatedly engaged in deer-stalking through the forest of Glen Tilt.

— Died at Haslar Hospital, in his fifty-sixth year, Capt. Basil Hall, R.N.

— Enthusiastic reception of Sir William Nott on entering Caermarthen, his native place.

16.—Disturbance at Funchal, Madeira, through an attempt on the part of the authorities to put down Dr. Kalley, a Protestant preacher, recently liberated from prison.

27.—At the Meeting of the British Association at York, Professor Sedgwick comments with some severity on the critical remarks read by the Dean of York on Dr. Buckland's Bridge-water Treatise, and afterwards published in a pamphlet form under the title, "The Bible defended against the British Association." "We have nothing to do," said the Professor, "as members of the Association, with morals, or religion, or political truths, in which the elements of human passion are so liable to be mingled. Every one who brings a statement of facts to this meeting asserts his willingness to bide the test of observation and experiment, and when a paper is brought here which deals not with facts, but with theories and cosmogonies, we reject it altogether as in its nature unfit for our notice. Its discussion is permitted now (but will, I trust, never be permitted again) out of regard to certain opinions and feelings in which we participate with the Dean of York, and which not one of us would resign but with life itself. At the same time we are willing to show on all proper occasions (though this be a very improper one) that we are not afraid of facing any of the difficulties with which the speculative part of our subject may be surrounded."

28.—Colliery explosion at Haswell, between Durham and Sunderland. Ninety-five lives were lost, being the whole employed in the pit at the time, except three men and a boy, who were at the foot of the shaft. They also would have suffered had not the course of the explosive current been intercepted by some loaded wagons standing in a rolley-way. At that moment the approaching flame had the appearance of forked lightning, and they saw it strike the wagons and kill the horse yoked to the team. A mass of rubbish and foul air then rushed over them, and shot up the shaft, giving the first indication to those employed at the pit mouth of the fearful calamity which had happened below. The working was in the Hutton seam, about 150 fathoms deep, and immediately adjoined another and larger pit. A searching inquiry took place as to the immediate cause of the disaster, but no certain information was ever obtained. At the inquest on the bodies the jury returned a verdict of "Accidental Death."

October 1.—The iron steamer Windsor Castle, which had left Granton for Dundee with about two hundred passengers, to witness the Queen's embarkation, strikes on the Carr rocks on her return voyage, and is run ashore near Craill. The accident fortunately took place before nightfall, or the loss of life might have been considerable, as there was only one small boat on board and one oar.

6.—The King of the French lands at Portsmouth on a visit to Queen Victoria. He was received by the naval authorities, and had an address presented to him by the Mayor and Corporation before landing. "I have not forgotten," he said, in answer, "the many kindnesses I have received from your countrymen during my residence among you many years since. At that period I was frequently pained at the existence of differences and feuds between our countries. I assure you, gentlemen, I shall endeavour at all times to prevent a repetition of those feelings and conduct, believing, as I do most sincerely, that the happiness and prosperity of a nation depend quite as much on the peace of those nations by which she is surrounded as on quiet within her own dominions." Prince Albert and the Duke of Wellington arrived early in the forenoon, and accompanied the illustrious visitor to Windsor, where he was received by the Queen and ministers of state about two o'clock. On the 9th the King was installed a Knight of the Garter. He was to have left Portsmouth on the 12th, but the untoward state of the weather and a fire at the New Cross Station somewhat arrested his progress, and he departed by way of Dover and Calais to Eu the following day.

14.—Mr. Hampton, the aéronaut, in endeavouring to make a descent near Dublin, lights upon a house where the chimney is on fire. The balloon caught fire and exploded; the unfortunate voyager narrowly escaping by dropping down the side of the house.

16.—Payment of the 60,000*l.* assigned by Parliament as prize-money to be distributed among the officers and crews of her Majesty's ships of war engaged in the bombardment of St. Jean d'Acre and the various assaults made along the Syrian coast.

17.—At the Derbyshire sessions William Henry Rose, a clergyman of the Church of England, was sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment for assaulting, with intent, a girl eleven years of age, when returning from duty in the church at Glossop.

21.—In the course of her voyage from Cowes to Portsmouth the Queen goes on board the Victory, then decked out with wreaths and laurels in honour of the anniversary of the battle of Trafalgar.

— Attempt to take possession of Stoneleigh Abbey, Warwickshire, by a party of thirty men and two women, under the direction of Job Leigh, who assumed to be the rightful owner of the estate. Preparations having been made for the attack, the assailants were driven back, and most of them carried prisoners to Leamington, where they were committed for trial at the sessions on the charge of riot and assault.

23.—The foundation-stone of the new docks at Birkenhead laid with great ceremony and rejoicing. All ordinary business was suspended on that side of the river, and even in Liverpool numerous shops were closed, that the inmates might attend the festivities across the Mersey. The Birkenhead Commissioners gave the whole of their people a holiday, full wages being paid, and bread and meat distributed in plenty to every family. An immense procession perambulated the boundary lines of the new town, and congregated about two o'clock at the Woodside slip, when the ceremony of laying the stone was performed by Sir Philip de Malpas Grey Egerton, M.P. for South Cheshire.

24.—Extraordinary double suicide near Kilmarnock. This morning, about seven o'clock, the bodies of a man and woman were found lying in shallow water below an arch of the bridge. They were fastened arm to arm by two pocket-handkerchiefs, a white cambric and a red silk, the man's right arm to the woman's left. The bodies were identified as those of two strangers who had arrived a few weeks before at the Commercial Inn, and left the preceding night, with the design, as they said, of seeing the scenery in the neighbourhood. On reaching the bridge they appeared to have made the most deliberate preparation for committing suicide. They bound themselves together in the manner described above, and wading into the shallow water laid themselves down side by side, where they remained, apparently without a struggle, till the sought-for death came. A watch, jewellery, and a little money were found on the bodies. A ticket inside the hat, which with the woman's bonnet and veil were left at the water's edge, contained a card bearing the name of Atkinson, London. From subsequent inquiries the parties turned out to be a Birmingham manufacturer, named Barker, and his wife—a cousin—who had taken refuge in Scotland, after some commercial disaster.

28.—The New Royal Exchange opened by the Queen in state. The procession left Buckingham Palace at eleven o'clock, and traversing Pall Mall, the Strand, Fleet-street, and Cheapside, all gaily decorated, reached the Exchange a few minutes past twelve. The state carriages were seven in number, six of them being drawn by six horses, and the Queen's by eight of the well-known cream-coloured stud. Her Majesty wore on the occasion a tiara of diamonds on her head and a white ermine mantle on her shoulders. The City authorities joined the procession at Temple Bar, where the usual ceremony was gone through of presenting the keys. On alighting at the Exchange, the Queen and Prince Albert, preceded by the Lord Mayor with his sword of state, walked round the quadrangle, across the ambulatory, then up to Lloyd's Merchants Room, and lastly through the Underwriters' Room to the Reading-room, where, seated on a throne, and surrounded by her ministers, courtiers, and City dignitaries, she received the address prepared for the occasion. "The privilege," read the Recorder, "we this day enjoy of approaching your royal person revives the memory of the older time when your Majesty's illustrious predecessor, Queen Elizabeth, vouchsafed to adorn by her presence the simpler edifice, raised by a citizen and dedicated to the commerce of the world. . . Yielding to that eminent citizen and benefactor of his kind, Sir Thomas Gresham, the signal merit to plan and execute at his own charge this glorious work, we still rejoice to trace the assisting hand of the City and the ancient Company of Mercers from the earliest prosecution of the designs; and our gratitude is kindled on reflecting that each memorable epoch of the Royal Exchange is marked by the solicitude of the reigning monarch to raise and rebuild the structure from the ashes to which it has been twice reduced by the calamitous effects of fire. . . Deign, therefore, most gracious Lady, to regard with your royal approbation this work of our hands, the noble and well-constructed pile again raised by the citizens of London, and erected on a site rendered worthy of the object of so vast an undertaking, to endure, we fervently pray, for ages a memorial and imperishable monument of the commercial grandeur and prosperity, and of the peaceful triumphs of your Majesty's happy reign." Her Majesty read a reply expressive of the delight it gave her "to behold the restoration of this noble edifice, which my royal ancestors regarded with favour, and which I esteem worthy of my care. The relief of the indigent, the advancement of science, the extension of commerce, were the objects contemplated by the founder of the Exchange. These objects are near to my heart, and their attainment will, I trust, be recorded amongst the peaceful triumphs of my reign." Addressing the Lord Mayor, the Queen said, "It is my intention, Mr. Magnay, to confer the dignity of a baronet upon you to commemorate the event." Turning to the Home Secretary, she continued, "Sir James Graham, see that the patent is prepared." This part of the ceremony over, a return was made to the Underwriters' Room, where a sumptuous déjeuner was provided for over 1,300 guests. The healths of her Majesty, Prince Albert, the Royal Family, the Lord Mayor, and the City of London, were here duly honoured—the Queen joining in the last toast with a vivacity which showed the interest she felt in the prosperity of the City. At twenty minutes past two her Majesty proceeded down stairs to the Quadrangle. Here her ministers, members of the corporation, and all the illustrious visitors ranged themselves in a circle round her. The heralds having made proclamation, and silence been obtained, a slip of parchment was passed from Sir James Graham to the Queen, who said in an audible voice, "It is my royal will and pleasure that this building be hereafter called 'The Royal Exchange.'" This concluded the ceremonies of the day; and after a few complimentary words to the Mayor and the architect, her Majesty, still leaning on Prince Albert's arm, proceeded to the royal carriage, and was driven back to Buckingham Palace by the same route as she passed over in the forenoon. The cost of rebuilding the Royal Exchange was stated to be upwards of 400,000*l.*

30.—Sir Robert and Lady Sale visit the Queen at Windsor, and her Majesty hears from the lips of the heroic lady a narrative of the privations to which she with other captives had been exposed in Afghanistan.

31.—Fall of Radcliffe's Mill, Oldham. The arch on the topmost or sixth floor first gave way, the other arches followed, and then the whole building came down with a crash, burying in the ruins the whole of the work-people who were then employed in it, thirty-four in number. Eight men, eight women, and four boys were killed, and seven more or less hurt. The remainder were dug out without serious injury.

November 1.—Fire in Strathavan, Lanarkshire, by which forty houses, a brewery, and tan-work were destroyed, and nearly one hundred families rendered destitute.

4.—The magistrates of Castlebrack hold a court in the churchyard, for the purpose of hearing evidence touching a tombstone there, by the aid of which James Tracy sought to establish his claim to the Tracy peerage.

5.—The new arch bridging over the Glitting Mill brook, Derby, gives way on removing the scaffolding, and six of the workmen are buried in the ruins.

9.—The new Lord Mayor (Gibbs) received with great disfavour at various parts on the route of the procession to Westminster. In Walbrook Ward, which he represented in the Court of Aldermen, the feeling was particularly strong.

12.—The Queen and Prince Albert leave Buckingham Palace on a visit to the Marquis of Exeter at Burleigh.

—Explosion on board the Gipsy Queen at Blackwall, and loss of ten lives. The boilers were constructed to bear a pressure of 40 lbs. to the square inch; on the trial trip that day they had been subjected to a pressure of 10 lbs. and it seemed doubtful if it could be got any higher. After the vessel was moored, Mr. Samuda, engineer, the builder of the boat, and well known in connexion with the Atmospheric Railway, set the safety-valve to 26 lbs. and directed that pressure to be tried. A few of those below went on deck to see whether any steam was blowing off, and had hardly cleared the engine-room when the explosion occurred. All on board were involved in the calamity; three on deck were killed, and the six left in the engine-room were found, as soon as an entrance could be made, lying scalded to death. The engines were of a new construction, known as "the bell-crank" pattern, and were only patented by Mr. Samuda in the beginning of the year.

21.—Collision on the Midland Railway, between Nottingham and Beeston stations. Two passengers were killed and a great number injured.

—William Duckett and Elizabeth Williams, a young couple engaged to be married, commit suicide in a room at Mile-End by taking prussic acid.

23.—Robbery of 40,710*l.* in notes and bills of exchange from the banking-house of Rogers and Company, Clement's-lane. The safe appeared to have been entered with a key accidentally left on the premises by one of the partners.

December 2.—Sir Robert Sale entertained by the Mayor and Corporation of Southampton previous to embarking for India.

—Tried in the Court of Queen's Bench, before Lord Denman and a special jury, the case of Alexander Beresford Hope v. the Executors of Henry Philip Hope, being an action of trover, brought by the third son of Lady Beresford, against the executors of his uncle, to recover a cabinet of diamonds and other precious stones, estimated to be worth about 50,000*l.*, and which the plaintiff claimed under a deed of gift, executed in April 1838. Lord Denman left it to the jury to decide whether Mr. Henry Philip Hope, at the time of executing the deed, intended completely to divest himself of all legal rights to the diamonds, or merely to provide that such right should only vest in his nephew on his own death. Verdict for plaintiff.

3.—The Rev. W. G. Ward writes to the Vice-Chancellor of Oxford: "Whenever I am authoritatively informed of the whole method of proceeding which it is intended to pursue against me, there shall be no want of perfect openness on my side also; but nothing surely could be more unreasonable than to expect that, so long as strict secrecy is preserved on that head, I should volunteer any statement, however unimportant, or make any admission, however apparently insignificant."

—Johannes Ronge excommunicated by the chapter of Breslau for publishing a letter directed against the reverence paid to the relic known as the Holy Coat of Treves.

4.—The Grand Stand and adjoining apartments on Newcastle race-course destroyed by fire.

11.—Sir Henry Pottinger entertained at Merchant Tailors Hall by the merchants of London trading with China and the East Indies.

14.—At Drury Lane Theatre, during the performance of "The Revolt of the Harem," the dress of one of the dancers (Miss Webster) came in contact with the gas, and she was almost instantly enveloped in a body of flame. Amid the frantic cries of the audience and performers, one of the stage-carpenters made an attempt to smother the flames by throwing the poor woman down on the stage and rolling her over and over. In this way, in time, they were put out, but the injuries sustained by Miss Webster were so severe that she died three days afterwards.

17.—Collision between the river steamers Sylph and Orwell off Greenwich. The former sunk in a few minutes, but with the exception of two, who were drowned, the whole of the passengers got on board the Orwell.

21.—Dr. Pusey writes to several of the morning papers, announcing that he cannot and will not subscribe the Articles of the Church in the sense in which they were propounded by those who framed them. "I sign the Articles as I ever have since I have known what Catholic antiquity is to which our Church guides us, in their 'literal, grammatical sense,' determined, where it is ambiguous, by the faith of the whole Church, before East and West were divided."

23.—As six boys and two men were descending the shaft of the coal-pit at Carlyn's Hall, near Dudley, the chain to which the skip was attached broke, and the whole were precipitated into the sump at the bottom of the shaft, where they were crushed to death.

—Disgraceful repeal riot at Limerick during the funeral of Lord Limerick. Missiles of every kind were thrown on and into the carriages of those attending the obsequies, and there was even an attempt made to upset the hearse into the river.

January 1.—Murder at Salt Hill, near Slough. This evening Sarah Hart was found lying on the floor of her house almost insensible, by one of her neighbours who had been attracted to the spot by a noise resembling stifled screams. On approaching the house she heard the door shut, and saw a man dressed like a Quaker go along the path leading to the highway. He appeared to be greatly confused, and trembled very much. While he was opening the gate leading into the high road she asked him what was the matter with her neighbour, but he made no reply, and hurried onwards in the direction of Slough. This was John Tawell, at one time a member of the Society of Friends, but more recently engaged in business in Sydney, to the neighbourhood of which he had been transported for forgery on the Uxbridge Bank. His good conduct while in the colony obtained for him a ticket of leave after serving seven years—the third part of his time—and he set up business as a chemist and druggist, by which he amassed considerable wealth. He now resided at Berkhamstead, where he was held in fair respect, and generally reputed to be a man of property. From the suspicious circumstances attending the death of his reputed wife, Sarah Hart, a description of his person was at once telegraphed from Slough to London. He was watched on his arrival, and apprehended next day by a policeman, who closely followed him to every place he went. Tawell then denied having been to Slough, or knowing anybody there. On being handed over to the custody of the Berkshire police he admitted that the murdered woman had been in his service at one time, and that he had lately received letters pressing for money to support her children. At the adjourned inquest on the 4th, the surgeon who made the post-mortem examination reported that death had been caused by prussic acid, or some poisonous acid akin thereto.

—The merchants of London enter upon the possession of their new Exchange.

2.—The "Antigone" of Sophocles produced at Drury Lane with Mendelssohn's music.

11.—The Archbishop of Canterbury issues an address to the clergy and laity of his province, recommending forbearance and mutual concession on the point disputed between the Tractarian and Anti-Tractarian party. Where the Tractarian innovations have been introduced and submitted to quietly he would have them continued. Where they have been violently opposed he advises the clergyman not to insist upon their observance. He thinks uniformity in the mode of conducting public worship extremely desirable; but as the rubric is not very consistent with itself, he admits that the planners and advisers may be held to have contemplated the existence of some diversity when sanctioned by convenience.

15.—Her Majesty and Prince Albert leave Windsor for the purpose of visiting Stowe, the seat of his Grace the Duke of Buckingham. On one of the days the royal party repaired to a battue, which took place in preserves rigidly kept for the purpose. Beaters to the number of about fifty were made to enter at the extreme end of a thick cover, while the shooting party were stationed in positions from which the game might be most conveniently destroyed as they were driven forth into the open space of the park. Of 200 hares shot 144 were counted to Prince Albert. This feature in the festivities was much commented on at the time.

19.—A fire broke out in the old Greyfriars Church, Edinburgh, the result of which was the entire destruction of that ancient edifice, and the partial destruction of the church adjoining, known as the New Greyfriars. The flames were first observed about half-past 9 A.M. and within an hour after the whole eastern division of the edifice presented one huge whirling mass of fire, the great abundance and dry condition of the wood affording fit material for speedy combustion. Through the large window facing the gateway, the framework of which was now entirely gone, the interior was seen blazing like a vast furnace. The fire was believed to have originated from one of two stoves, which it had been the custom to light in order to heat the church before the hour of divine service on Sunday morning.

— Disturbance in St. Sidwell's Church, Exeter, arising out of the Puseyite practices observed by the Rev. Francis Courtenay. On a representation being made to the Bishop of Exeter by the Mayor, the former wrote to Mr. Courtenay:—"If you receive this letter you will understand from it that I advise you to give way at the request of the civil authorities of Exeter, and not to persist in wearing the surplice in the pulpit, unless, conscientiously and on full inquiry, you have satisfied yourself that your engagements to the Church require you to wear the surplice when you preach. I do not myself think that the matter is so free from doubt that you may not act on your bishop's advice as now given to you. Still, I do not pretend to any right to order you to wear the gown—I only advise it, and advise it with this limitation, that you can, without wounding your own conscience, comply."

21.—National testimonial presented to Rowland Hill. Mr. Larpent, the chairman of the City of London Mercantile Committee on (80)

Postage, forwarded a cheque for 10,000*l.* to the author of the penny postage scheme.

23.—A desperate conflict, attended with the loss of four or five lives, takes place at Clanfadda, near Killaloe, between a party of soldiers and two policemen, who interfered to recover two geese stolen from Farmer Gleeson in the afternoon. Several shots were fired between the parties, and one of the soldiers stabbed constable Callogan repeatedly with a bayonet. The other constable, Ellis, had a ramrod thrust into his mouth and through his neck.

24.—The Great Britain steamship starts on her trial voyage from Bristol to the Thames. She encountered a severe gale, and sustained some damage, but continued her course, and anchored in the Downs, a few minutes within twenty-nine hours from the time of departure. The distance run was 320 nautical miles. Her length of keel was 289 feet, main breadth 50 feet 6 inches, and depth of hold 32 feet 6 inches. Tonnage, 3,444 tons.

28.—James Tapping, twenty years of age, murdered Emma Wheter, in Manchester-street, Bethnal Green, by shooting her in the neck with a pistol. She was found soon after midnight lying in the street, almost dead from loss of blood. Tapping was found guilty of the crime, and executed 24th March.

February 3.—A fire consumes one of the houses in the village of Donnybrook, and on clearing away the ruins the police discover the bodies of the whole of the inmates, Captain Orsin, his wife, and two children. He had been resisting the landlord for some time, and it was supposed had committed the offences of murder, arson, and suicide.

4.—Parliament opened by the Queen in person. The Royal Speech referred to the abatement of political agitation in Ireland, "and as a natural result private capital has been more freely applied to useful public enterprises undertaken through the friendly co-operation of individuals interested in the welfare of Ireland. The health of the inhabitants of large towns and populous districts in this part of the United Kingdom has been the subject of recent inquiry before a commission, the report of which shall be immediately laid before you."

7.—As the British Museum was about closing this afternoon, a malicious person, who described himself as William Lloyd, a scene-painter from Dublin, seized a piece of granite from one of the shelves and dashed it against the case containing the Barberini Vase, better known as the Portland, from its having been purchased by the Duke of Portland for 2,000 guineas. It was deposited by his Grace in the Museum for security, as well as to gratify the public with a splendid example of ancient art. The vase was dashed into a thousand atoms, almost defying the possibility of that after-restoration which was so ingeniously effected.

On being examined at Bow-street Police Office, Lloyd said he had committed the act under nervous excitement, produced by previous intemperance. The law as it then stood did not provide for the punishment of such an outrage, and the magistrate was therefore driven to the evasion of inflicting a fine of 3*l.* the value of the glass case, or in default of payment three months' imprisonment. The fine was paid after a brief delay by an anonymous friend. An Act of Parliament was afterwards framed to protect works of art from similar disasters.

10.—The barque Henry takes fire off Blackwall. An attempt to scuttle and sink her in deep water having failed, she was towed aground on the North Flats, near Greenwich, and there permitted to burn down to her keel. A heavy snow-storm was falling at the time, and through it the flaming vessel loomed like a wintry sunset.

— Captain Burton, of the 17th Lancers, fined 50*l.* as the owner of a monkey which had attacked the wife of a market-gardener, near Hounslow. The defence was that the animal had escaped from the defendant's control, and he could not therefore be held liable for any damage it committed, but Justice Wightman ruled that if any one kept an animal feræ naturæ, he was bound to take care that it did not escape.

13.—Convocation at Oxford to condemn Mr. Ward's book, and deprive him of his degrees. Vice-Chancellor Wynter submitted the first proposition:—"That the passages now read from the book, entitled 'The Ideal of a Christian Church considered in comparison with existing practice,' are utterly inconsistent with the Articles of Religion of the Church of England, and with the declaration in respect of these Articles made and subscribed by Mr. George Ward previously and in order to his being admitted to the degrees of B.A. and M.A. respectively, and with the good faith of him the said Mr. George Ward, in respect of such declaration and subscription." Mr. Ward defended himself in a speech arguing strongly in favour of subscription in a non-natural sense. Dr. Grant, of New College, proposed, as an amendment:—"That the passages now read from the book, entitled 'The Ideal of the Christian Church considered,' are worthy of grave censure, but that the Convocation declines to express any opinion upon the good faith of the author, or to exercise the function of an ecclesiastical tribunal, by pronouncing judgment on the nature or degree of his offence." Mr. Denison entered his protest against the whole proceedings. On a division, the Vice-Chancellor's proposition was affirmed by 777 votes against 386, giving a majority of 391 against Mr. Ward. The proctors then took the votes on the second proposition for depriving Mr. Ward of his degrees, when the numbers were, for the degradation 569, against 511; majority, 58. Mr. Ward handed in a Latin protest, and left the Theatre cheered by the undergraduates. Among the non-placets were Mr. Gladstone, Dr. Hook, and Dr. Pusey.

14.—Sir Robert Peel makes his annual financial statement. He calculated the revenue for the ensuing year at 53,100,000*l.* and the expenditure at 49,000,000*l.* He thought ministers were justified in demanding an increased expenditure on account of the public service. No saving, he said, could be effected by the abolition of offices, and the reduction of salaries. A sufficient force of revenue-officers must be kept up to insure the collection of the revenue, and to give facilities to the transactions of commerce. He proposed to the Committee to continue the income-tax for a further limited period of three years, because he was convinced that the reduction in the price of articles of great importance which would follow would be, if not a complete, yet a great compensation for such a burden. The surplus of 3,409,000*l.* he devoted to the reduction of the sugar duty, the abolition of the duty on glass, cotton, wool, and on the importation of Baltic staves. It was also proposed to abolish the duty on all those articles which merely yielded numerical amounts, a step which of itself would sweep away 430 articles from the tariff. He did not deny that the financial scheme which he had explained was a bold experiment; but responsible as he was to Parliament for its success, he was not afraid to run the risk of making it. Sir Robert spoke for three hours and a half.

15.—The Statesman, a Dublin High Church and Orange paper, writes:—"The policy of our rulers is to declare decided war against our Lord Jesus Christ. We have long looked for nothing else at the hands of Sir Robert Peel, into whose policy the devil has entered, as manifestly as if an inspired historian had recorded the fact in terms similar to those which described the madness of the predestinated prototype of all such traitors."

21.—Jane Crosby, the keeper of a small public-house at Lamonby, near Penrith, takes the life of her child, aged seven years and a half, by roasting it on a large fire prepared for the purpose. After scorching it in the most shocking manner, the inhuman monster lifted the child off the fire, and held it on her knee till life was extinct, the little innocent faintly asking her elder sister for a drink of water. On trial the wretch was acquitted, the tender age of the elder child not being deemed safe for a capital conviction.

— In the course of a debate on Mr. Duncombe's motion for a new Post-Office Committee, Mr. Disraeli taunted Sir Robert Peel with simulating a passion he did not feel. "The right honourable baronet had too great a mind and filled too eminent a position ever to lose his temper; but in a popular assembly it was sometimes expedient to enact the part of the choleric gentleman. His case was not always best when he violently tapped the red box on the table. I know from old experience that when one first enters the House these exhibitions are rather alarming, and I believe that some of the younger members were much frightened, but I advise them not to be terrified. I tell them that the right honourable baronet will not eat them up, will not even resign; the very worst thing he will tell them to do will be to rescind a vote." In reply, Sir Robert said he believed Mr. Disraeli's own calmness to be simulated, and his bitterness entirely sincere.

21.—James Delarue, of Whittlebury-street, Euston-square, murdered by Henry Hocker, in the footpath leading from Chalk Farm to Belsize Park, Hampstead. Police-constable Boldock said: "After the body was discovered, Sergeant Fletcher went for the stretcher, and I was left alone. In about a quarter of an hour a man came up and joined me. I heard him singing first, and then he said, 'Halloo, policeman.' I said, 'I have a serious case here.' 'What is that,' he said. I answered, 'I think it is a person who has cut his throat.' He then said, 'It is a nasty job, policeman,' and he stooped down and felt the deceased's pulse." This was the murderer Hocker, led back by some mysterious influence to the scene where the death struggle had taken place about half an hour previous. A letter, proved to be in Hocker's handwriting, was found on the body of the murdered man. It was signed "Caroline," and purported to be from a person seduced by Delarue, under the name of Cooper. She begged him to keep an appointment at the time and place the murder was committed. The watch, rings, and other property belonging to the deceased were found in the possession of Hocker, and all his attempts to account honestly for these articles, or to account for his presence anywhere else than at the scene of the murder, broke down. At the close of his trial at the Central Criminal Court, on the 11th of April, Hocker read two statements, giving what he called the true account of the murder, but in which the persons, places, and occurrences were altogether imaginary. He was executed on the 28th of April.

22.—Died at his house in Green-street, Mayfair, aged seventy-six years, the Rev. Sydney Smith. The personal estate was sworn under 80,000*l*.

March 2.—Uprising of the Spanish pirates on board the Felicidade. This was a Brazilian schooner, captured by H.M.'s cruiser, the Wasp, in the Bight of Benin, near Lagos, on the 27th of February. She had no slaves on board, but was fitted up for the trade, and had a much greater quantity of provisions than was necessary for her crew of twenty-eight men. The schooner was therefore taken possession of, and her crew placed under arrest. Two days afterwards the Wasp captured another Brazilian schooner, named the Echo, with 430 slaves on board, and a crew of the same number as the Felicidade. The one vessel was commanded by Antonio Cerquiera, and the other by Francisco Serva. The crews were divided among the three vessels, and the Felicidade given in charge of Mr. Palmer, with seven British seamen and two Kroomen, to take to the nearest port, for the purpose of getting her condemned. Sobrino da Costa, a black slave, who acted as barber, saw and heard what took place on the morning of the 2d. "Majaval, the cook, came to the hatchway where the prisoners were confined, and called down three times, 'Get ready to kill the English sailors.' I saw Alves and Francisco get ready their knives, and heard them say, 'Let us rise.' They said to me, 'Get ready, or we will kill you as well.' I answered, 'Leave these things alone, or we shall be taken by the English cruisers.' They then threatened to kill both Ribiero and myself unless we went with them. I said, 'If this is the case, when you go I will go too.' They put their knives in their belts, and dropped their shirts over so as to hide them. Serva himself then came and called them up, and they all went on deck." Cerquiera saw them first attack the quartermaster, who endeavoured to defend himself with a handspike, but was utterly overpowered and stabbed to death. Palmer, who had been bathing in a boat astern, was run through by Majaval, and thrown overboard. The English sentry was also thrown over, but hung by the fore sheet till Joaquim cut his fingers off, when he dropped down and disappeared. The two Kroomen, horrified at what was going on, jumped overboard, and were drowned. After they had slain or thrown over the whole of the British on board, Serva gave orders to lower the peak of the mainsail as a signal to his brother-in-law on board the Echo to rise and do the same there. The signal was not answered, and Serva bore up to the Echo to inform the prisoners there that the English were all killed. He also fired two shots into her, but sailed away without making any serious attempt to recapture the vessel. Three days afterwards the Felicidade was captured by her Majesty's ship Star, when Cerquiera gave information of the tragedy that had taken place on board. Ten of those most prominently concerned were put in irons, and conveyed to England for trial. The Felicidade after this, her second capture, was sent to Sierra Leone for adjudication, under the command of Lieut. Wilson. On her voyage thither she was captured by a sudden squall, but her gallant commander, and a few of the crew, after enduring the most horrible sufferings on a feeble raft for twenty days, managed to reach land.

5.—A steam-boiler explodes at Blackwall, on the premises of Joseph Samuda, engineer, killing three men on the spot, and scalding and wounding others so severely that they died in a short time. One of the bodies and a portion of the boiler was found in the Plaistow marshes, on the opposite side of the Lea, about 150 yards from the engine works. The boiler was an old low-pressure one, which had only that morning been attached to the engine, and put to a high-pressure use. Seeing it work very slowly, Lowe, the foreman, caused a pole with a nail driven into the end to be so placed under the lever of the safety-valves as almost entirely to prevent its action, and thereby creating an enormous pressure of steam. At the coroner's inquest the jury returned a verdict of manslaughter against Lowe, but he was acquitted on trial.

5.—Sir James South, the Astronomer Royal, takes observations with Lord Rosse's monster telescope. "The night," he writes, "was, I think, the finest I ever saw in Ireland. Many nebulae were observed by Lord Rosse, Dr. Robinson, and myself. Most of them were for the first time since their creation seen by us in groups or clusters of stars, while some, at least to my eyes, showed no such grouping. The most popularly known nebulae observed this night were the ring nebulae in the Canes Venatici, or the fifty-first of Messier's catalogue, which was resolved into stars with a magnifying power of 548."

9.—Conclusion of the war in Scinde. Sir Charles Napier writes to the Governor-General:—"I have to report to you the conclusion of the war against the mountain and desert tribes, who, driven from their last refuge, the stronghold of Truckee, have this day laid down their arms. The fort of Deyrah is destroyed, and Islam Boogtie, the only chief not a prisoner, is said to be a lonely fugitive in the Ketrau country, far in the north, and ruled by a chief whose daughter Islam married."

12.—Trial of John Tawell, the Quaker, for the Salt Hill murder. The court was crowded to excess, and Aylesbury presented more the appearance of a general election than of the ordinary sitting of assizes. On the forenoon of the third day the jury returned a verdict of Guilty, and Baron Parke sentenced the prisoner to be executed in front of the County Hall, Aylesbury. The children of the murdered woman, Sarah Hart, of which the prisoner was the reputed father, and his acknowledged wife, were all present in court.

13.—Mr. Cobden's motion for a Committee to inquire into the cause and extent of the alleged agricultural distress lost by a majority of 213 against 121.

— Professor Daniell dies suddenly of apoplexy when attending a meeting of the Council of the Royal Society in Somerset House.

14.—At the inquest held on the body of Mr. Cordwell, solicitor, who was presumed to have fallen a victim to homeopathic treatment, the jury attached a declaration to their verdict, "that the afflicted gentleman had been cruelly exposed to a system of starvation while in a state of the most extreme debility, during about ten days previous to his death, he having during that long time been allowed nothing but cold water by the advice of his medical attendant."

21.—Came on for hearing, before a Commission under the Church Discipline Act, at Doctors' Commons, the charges of immorality preferred against the Rev. F. S. Monckton, perpetual curate of St. Peter's, West Hackney. The principal witnesses were Mr. and Mrs. Williams, of the Parish National Schools, and a discharged servant. They spoke as to drunkenness, indecent conversation, and undue familiarity with servants in the house. On the third of these heads the Commission found that the conduct of Mr. Monckton with regard to the female residents in his family, was degrading to him as a clergyman of the Church of England, and had produced great scandal in the Church. They considered that on this head there were sufficient grounds for further proceedings against Mr. Monckton. He was afterwards suspended for twelve months.

28.—With reference to the persecution alleged to have been endured by Dr. Kalley in Madeira, Mr. Addington of the Foreign Office is instructed to reply to the Lord Provost of Edinburgh that "Lord Aberdeen considers that that gentleman has been led by an erroneous conception of the terms of the treaty of 1842, and of the Portuguese Charter, to assume a position in which her Majesty's Government cannot uphold him, inasmuch as he appears to suppose that he is borne out in opening his private dwelling-house for the celebration of public worship, and in preaching in the Portuguese language to Portuguese subjects against the Roman Catholic religion."

— John Tawell executed at Aylesbury for the Salt Hill murder. In the course of the preceding night he wrote out a confession of his guilt, and of a previous unsuccessful attempt referred to at the trial. He lived, it appeared, in perpetual dread of his connexion with Sarah Hart becoming known to his wife, and saw no other way of relieving his apprehension than by destroying her. On the scaffold he wore his usual dress of a member of the Society of Friends. His sufferings were very protracted.

31.—Another murder, tending to keep up a most unhealthy excitement in the metropolis, committed in George-street, St. Giles's, James Connor having stabbed his paramour, Ann Tape, or Brothers, in a bedroom they had engaged for the night.

April 3.—Sir Robert Peel introduces his bill for improving the condition of the Roman Catholic College of Maynooth. He proposed to give sufficient accommodation for 500 pupils, to give suitable rooms to the president and professors, to have the repairs of the college executed as in other public buildings by the Board of Works, and to give a grant of 30,000*l.* a year not subject to an annual vote. "We do not think," he said, "that there is any violation of conscientious scruples involved in our proposition. We believe that it is perfectly compatible to hold steadfast the profession of our faith without wavering, and at the same time to improve the education and elevate the character of those who, do what you will, must be the spiritual guides and religious instructors of millions of your fellow-countrymen." The proposal gave rise to great excitement among the extreme Protestants, and the debate on the second reading lasted over the extraordinary period of six nights. Mr. Smythe having taunted ministers with formerly declaring that concession had reached its utmost limits, Sir James Graham expressed his regret at ever having used such an expression. "If I have given offence to Ireland," he said, "I deeply regret it, and I can only say from the very depth of my heart that my actions have been better than my words."

5.—Sarah Freeman sentenced to be executed at Taunton for the series of crimes known as the Shapwick murders, involving the destruction by arsenic of her husband, her illegitimate son, her mother, and her brother.

8.—Great meeting in the Waterloo-room, Edinburgh, to speak and petition against the proposed grant to Maynooth. "It is not," said Dr. Candlish, "very long till a general election will put the power in the hands of the constituencies and the people at large. It is not long to agitate till that time arrives, and I venture to say that if we take the measures now we may make it plain and palpable that agitation! agitation! will be our sole watchword until the next general election shall decide and determine whether this sin about to be perpetrated is to be repented of by the nation or no, or rather whether it is to become a national sin or no. I entertain a most gloomy and awful view of what must be the destiny of this nation if it becomes involved in the support of Antichrist. I believe that, so sure as I believe God's Word to be true, a judgment must overtake this nation if we homologate this great sin. Let every true-hearted man who trembles at the thought of anti-Christian error prevailing against the truth—let all who look forward to the destruction of Antichrist by the breathing of the Lord's mouth and the brightness of His coming—let it be the duty of all such men to stand on the watch-tower—to give Israel no rest neither day nor night—until as one man this nation rises and demands to be delivered from the plague, and from the sin, and from the death which this proceeding of Government will assuredly entail upon us."

11.—In the adjourned debate on the Maynooth Grant, Mr. Disraeli launched another philippic at the Premier:—"I know the right honourable gentleman who introduced the bill told us that upon this subject there were three courses open to us. I never heard the right honourable gentleman bring forward a measure without making the same confession. In a certain sense, and looking to his own position, he is right. There is the course the right honourable gentleman has left. There is the course which the right honourable gentleman is following; and there is usually the course which the right honourable gentleman ought to pursue. Perhaps, Sir, I ought to say that there is a fourth course, because it is possible for the House of Commons to adopt one of these courses indicated by the right honourable gentleman, and then having voted for it to rescind it. That is the fourth course, and in future I trust the right honourable gentleman will not forget it. He also tells us he always looks back to precedents: he comes with a great measure, and he always has a small precedent. He traces the steam-engine always back to the tea-kettle. His precedents are generally tea-kettle precedents."—Mr. Macaulay also taunted ministers with their inconsistent policy towards Ireland. "Can we wonder that, from one end of the country to the other, everything should be ferment and uproar, that petitions should night after night whiten all our benches like a snow-storm? Can we wonder that the people out of doors should be exasperated by seeing the very men who, when we were in office, voted against the old grant to Maynooth, now pushed and pulled into the House by your whippers-in to vote for an increased grant? The natural consequence follows. All those fierce spirits whom you hallooed on to harass us, now turn round and begin to worry you. The Orangeman raises his war-whoop; Exeter Hall sets up its bray; Mr. Macneile shudders to see more costly cheer than ever provided for the priests of Baal at the table of the Queen; and the Protestant operatives of Dublin call for impeachment in exceedingly bad English. But what did you expect? Did you think when to serve your turn you called the devil up, that it was as easy to lay him as to raise him? Did you think when you went on, session after session, thwarting and reviling those whom you knew to be in the right, and flattering all the worst passions of those whom you knew to be in the wrong, that the day of reckoning would never come? It has come; and there you sit doing penance for the disingenuousness of years. If it be not so, stand up manfully and clear your fame before the House and the country. Show us that some steady principle has guided your conduct with respect to Irish affairs. Explain to us why, after having goaded Ireland to madness for the purpose of ingratiating yourself with the English, you are now setting England on fire for the purpose of ingratiating yourselves with the Irish. Give us some reason which shall prove that the policy which you are following as ministers is entitled to support, and which shall not equally prove you to have been the most factious and unprincipled opposition that ever this country saw."

19.—Closed at half-past 3 this morning the debate on the second reading of the Maynooth Endowment Bill. Majority for Ministers, 147.

21.—At the weekly meeting of the Repeal Association O'Connell brings up a report from what he called the Parliamentary Committee, recommending it as essentially necessary for the alleviation of the misery of the people of Ireland that the Legislature should impose an absentee-tax of 10 per cent. on all landlords who were absent six months in the year, and had incomes exceeding 200*l.* per annum, such tax to be spent on some useful purpose within the estate where it was raised. He also said that now for the first time in his life he had an opportunity of praising Sir James Graham, and he did so most cordially on account of his manly speech concerning the Maynooth Endowment. He held out both hands to him with forgiveness for the past, and thought he should be placed on a pedestal with "Justice to Ireland" inscribed on its base. He had expressed his sorrow for having used the expression that concession had reached its limits, and no man was either a Christian or a gentleman who would not forgive, after the symptoms of repentance manifested by the Home Secretary.

22.—The Queen visits the Great Britain steamship off Blackwall. Her Majesty expressed herself as much gratified with the sight of the magnificent ship, and wished Captain Hoskin every success in his voyage across the Atlantic.

23.—Mr. Ward introduces his motion for placing the support of Maynooth upon the funds already applicable to ecclesiastical purposes in Ireland. After a debate of two nights it is rejected by 322 votes against 148.

25.—The Fine Arts Commission issue their fourth report regarding the decoration of the new Houses of Parliament. They point out certain portions of the building which they conceive might be properly adorned with insulated statues. These are St. Stephen's Porch and St. Stephen's Hall, in the former of which six insulated marble statues might be conveniently placed, and sixteen in the latter. In Appendix No. 2, relating to the selection of persons for the niches in the House of Lords, the Committee state that no scheme was preferable to that suggested by Prince Albert, for filling them up with effigies of the principal barons who had signed the Magna Charta.

30.—A crowded meeting at Exeter Hall to hear the statement of Dr. Wolfe relative to his Bokhara mission. :

—Mr. Macaulay writes to the Lord Provost of Edinburgh regarding his vote on the Maynooth Endowment Bill:—"I have no apologies or retraction to make. I have done what I believed and believe to be right. I have opposed myself manfully to a great popular delusion. I shall continue to do so. I knew from the first what the penalty was, and I shall cheerfully pay it."

May 1.—Hungerford Suspension Bridge opened to the public. There was no ceremony on the occasion, but it was very largely frequented by passengers till the evening; 25,000 people were supposed to have passed from one side of the Thames to the other. The entire cost was about 120,000*l.*

2.—Came on for trial in the Court of Exchequer the Excise case, Regina v. Smith, in which the defendant, an extensive distiller in Whitechapel, was charged with making use of a concealed pipe for the conveyance of spirits between the distillery and rectifying house. After a trial of eight days the Jury found for the Crown, but expressed an opinion that no evidence had been adduced to show that the pipe referred to, and the existence of which could not be denied, had been fraudulently used by the defendant. The case was ultimately compromised, the Government accepting 10,000*l.* and an obligation that the premises would be instantly altered in accordance with the Excise requirements.

—Yarmouth Suspension Bridge gives way under the pressure of a crowd congregated to see a professional clown drawn down the river in a tub by four geese. He commenced his feat with the flood-tide at the drawbridge, and had entered the North River, when a tremendous rush took place to the Suspension Bridge to see the clown pass underneath. By the time he had reached Bessey's Wharf, not far from the bridge, one or two of the rods were observed to give way, and an instant alarm was raised. But it was too late. The chains snapped asunder, and quick as thought the entire mass of human beings, estimated at from 300 to 500, were swept into the river below. Daring efforts were made by spectators of every rank to bring sufferers ashore, but the calamity was so unlooked for and overwhelming in its magnitude, that on reckoning the loss the fearful total amounted to seventy-nine, mostly women and children, either drowned in the river, or received deadly injuries from the falling balustrades. At the inquiry following the calamity, Mr. Walker, engineer, who had been sent down by the Home Office, stated that the suspending chains were of bad construction, imperfectly welded, and of an inferior quality of iron. It was also ascertained that the bridge had been widened without any increase of the suspending power. Referring to the observation that so many people had frequently been on the bridge before, he said, "When a bridge has been frequently loaded to the utmost which it will bear, it becomes weaker and weaker each time, and it may ultimately give way, although at first it was sufficiently strong to resist the weight put upon it." The engineer, Mr. Brunel, thus calculated the strength: the section of the chain at the centre of the span is 296 square (85) inches; a square inch of iron breaks with 27 or 29 tons, but $17\frac{1}{2}$ tons is taken as the impairing weight, i.e. the weight at which it begins to stretch. There is therefore for the weight the bridge will actually bear, $296 \times 17\frac{1}{2}$ tons = 5180 tons, while 296×5 tons = 1480 tons is the greatest load that can be put upon it, being 100 lbs. per square foot for a crowd standing close together.

5.—The elevation of Mr. W. F. Mackenzie to the office of a Lord of the Treasury having excited considerable discussion from its coincidence with a change of vote on the Maynooth question, he this day made the following explanation on the hustings at Peebles when seeking re-election: "I always voted against the small grant because I thought it was too small (great laughter, hissing, and hooting), but I over and over again declared, and my friends knew my opinion, that if a larger grant had been proposed I would have voted for it. (Cries of oh! and laughter.) I assure you it is true. I voted against the small grant because I thought it did mischief. I voted for the larger grant, not because I was certain it would do better, but because I think the experiment ought to be tried."

7.—The Court of Directors issue instructions to the Governor-General of India regarding the principles which would guide them in the construction of railways there, applications for making which on an extensive scale had been received from private parties. They conceived that "remuneration for railroads in India must for the present be drawn chiefly from the conveyance of merchandise and not from passengers. It cannot admit of question that wherever railroad communications can be advantageously introduced and maintained, it is eminently deserving of encouragement and co-operation from the Government." The peculiar difficulties to which the Court drew the attention of the Governor-General were,—periodical rains and inundations; the action of violent winds and the influence of a vertical sun; the ravages of insects and vermin; the destructive effects of spontaneous vegetation; the unprotected state of the country through which the railway would pass; and the difficulty and expense of securing the services of competent and trustworthy engineers. The Court proposed to depute to India three skilful engineers to suggest some feasible line of moderate length as an experiment for railroad communication in India.

8.—Opening of the Free-trade Bazaar in Covent Garden Theatre. The whole area of the pit and stage was boarded over and transformed into a "Norman Gothic Hall" filled to overflowing with the products of manufacturing industry. The grandeur of the exhibition and the excellence of the arrangements were universally admitted. About 100,000 people visited the bazaar during the seventeen days it was open, and the large sum of 25,046*l.* was received for the funds of the League. The stalls were attended to by 400 ladies, the wives and daughters of leading Free-traders.

9.—Sir James Graham introduces the Government bill to endow three new colleges in Ireland for the advancement of learning.

— In the United Secession Synod, Edinburgh, Dr. Heugh's motion, declining to open up the Atonement controversy again, was carried by 243 against 118 who voted for Dr. Hay's amendment, asking discussion on the ground that recent decisions in the Synod had given rise to much dissatisfaction and dissension.

19.—Sir John Franklin sets out with the ships Erebus and Terror on his last Arctic Exploring Expedition. He passed his first winter in a harbour at the entrance of Wellington Channel, after which date no letters were received from Sir John, his officers, or crew. His official instructions were: "To push to the westward without loss of time in the latitude of about $74\frac{1}{4}^{\circ}$, till you have reached the longitude of that portion of land on which Cape Walker is situated, or about 98° west. From that point we desire that every effort be used to endeavour to penetrate to the southward and westward, in a course as direct towards Behring's Straits as the position and extent of the ice, or the existence of land at present unknown, may admit. We direct you to this particular part of the Polar Sea as affording the best prospect of accomplishing the passage to the Pacific."

20.—Fatal duel on the shore near Gosport between Mr. Seaton, late of the 11th Hussars, and Lieut. Hawkey, of the Royal Marines. They had quarrelled and insulted each other at an entertainment in the King's Rooms, Southsea Reach, some days before. They fired at fifteen paces; in the second round Mr. Seaton fell, mortally wounded in the abdomen. Lieut. Hawkey instantly fled with his second.

26.—Fire in Raggett's Hotel, Dover-street, Piccadilly. It broke out about midnight, and consumed nearly the whole building. The house being unusually full, the greatest confusion ensued when the inmates suddenly found the flames filling the passages and staircases. The fire originated in the bedroom occupied by Miss King, of Bristol. "Between 12 and 1 o'clock on Tuesday morning," she said, "I went into an adjoining room to obtain some water to make liquorice tea. On returning to my bedroom I heard a crackling noise, and instantly perceived a large mass of flame issuing from the door." She did not leave the candle in her bedroom, and could not say how the fire originated. Mrs. Round, the wife of the member for Maldon, Mr. Raggett, sen. the proprietor, Miss Raggett, and a nurse in the service of the Earl of Huntingdon, were either suffocated in their rooms or killed by throwing themselves from the house. Much valuable property in jewellery and furniture was destroyed.

28.—At the evening sederunt of the Free Assembly, Dr. Chalmers introduces MM. D'Aubigné of Geneva, Monod of Paris, and Kuntze of Berlin, as a deputation from foreign Churches.

—The old part of the city of Quebec almost entirely destroyed by fire. Between 1,500 and 2,000 dwellings were consumed, and from 10,000 to 12,000 people rendered homeless. One of the most painful incidents was the destruction of the hospital, to which, as being considered entirely out of the reach of the conflagration, numbers of sick persons of all classes were carried. The building became ignited by the flakes of fire carried by the wind, and many of the unfortunate inmates, unable to help themselves, perished in the burning pile. On the 1st of July following the remaining portion of the city suffered severely from a similar visitation: 1,300 houses were then destroyed, and 13 blown down to arrest the progress of the flames.

30.—Mr. O'Connell and the other traversers hold a levee in the Rotunda, when numerous addresses from corporations and societies are presented. At the conclusion the Liberator and his fellow-martyrs were drawn in a triumphal car through the streets.

June 2.—During the discussion on the second reading of the Maynooth Bill in the House of Lords, the Earl of Roden says, "The Protestants of Ireland consider they have been betrayed, and they are now thinking how they may best secure the safety of their families, their children, their altars, and their homes. He would tell her Majesty's Government that their best and warmest friends, the Protestants of Ireland, who had stood by them in many a difficulty, were disgusted with their conduct."

4.—Thomas Steele, O'Connell's Head Pacifcator, and Head Repeal Warden for Ireland, issues a proclamation denouncing the Molly Maguires of Leitrim and Cavan for rejecting "the gentle and balmy counsel of your country's almost sanctified benefactor and father, and the solemn abjuration of the clergy from their altars. You outcast traitors," he concludes, "who give strength to Ireland's enemies, your country disclaims you, I abhor you!"

6.—Fancy Dress Ball at Buckingham Palace, illustrating the period of 1740-50.

8.—O'Connell, after a series of ovations commencing at Dublin, enters Cork in state in his triumphal car. The next most prominent object in the procession was a venerable minstrel sitting under the shade of an ivied and branching oak, playing the harp which had been used before the Liberator at Tara, on the memorable 15th of August, 1843. On the same car were an Irish chieftain, two Irish knights, with pages, and four members of the Repeal Committee.

10.—Mr. Villiers' annual motion on the Corn-laws defeated by a majority of 254 to 122.

16.—The Maynooth Endowment Bill passes the House of Lords, the majority for the third reading being 131.

17.—Mr. Charles Buller's series of resolutions concerning the policy pursued towards New Zealand negatived by a majority of 223 to 172.

18.—After an interval of some weeks, the Anti-Corn Law Leaguers resume their weekly meetings. It was reported that the sum raised during the past year, including the return from the Bazaar, amounted to 116,687*l*.

19.—Horrible outrage in Algeria on a body of Arabs by French troops. The Ouled Riahs, finding themselves closely pursued by the troops under Colonels Pélissier, St.-Arnaud, and De l'Admirault took refuge in one of the caverns with which their country abounds. After surrounding the caverns, some fagots were lighted and thrown by the French troops before the entrance. This demonstration was made to convince the Arabs that the French had the power, if they pleased, of suffocating them in their hiding-place. The Colonel then threw in letters offering to them life and liberty if they would surrender their arms and their horses. At first they refused, but subsequently they replied that they would consent if the French troops would withdraw. This condition was considered inadmissible, and more burning fagots were thrown in. A great tumult now began, and it was known afterwards that it arose from a discussion as to whether there should be a surrender or not. The party opposed to a surrender carried their point, and a few of the minority made their escape. Col. Pélissier, wishing to spare the lives of those who remained in the cavern, sent some Arabs to them to exhort them to surrender. They refused, and some women, who did not partake of the savage fanaticism of the majority, attempted to fly, but their husbands and relations fired upon them, to prevent their escape from the martyrdom which they had themselves resolved to suffer. Colonel Pélissier then suspended the throwing of the burning fagots, and sent a French officer to hold a parley with the Ouled Riahs, but his messenger was received with a discharge of fire-arms, and could not perform his mission. This state of things continued till the night of the 19th, when losing all patience, and no longer having a hope of otherwise subduing these fanatics, who formed a perpetual nucleus of revolt in the country, the fire was rendered intense. During this time the cries of the unhappy wretches who were being suffocated were dreadful; gradually nothing was heard but the crackling of the fagots. The troops entered and found 500 dead bodies. About 150, who still breathed, were brought into the fresh air, but a number of them died afterwards.

20.—In the Court of Exchequer Mr. Wakley, M.P. obtains a verdict of 150*l*. damages against the proprietor of the Medical Times for a libel charging him with ruining various medical associations, by taking them under his protection.

23.—Grand naval review at Spithead, in presence of the Queen, Prince Albert, the Lords of the Admiralty, and other distinguished visitors. Her Majesty arrived at the fleet on the 21st, and was received on board the flag-ship, St. Vincent, by Rear-Admiral Hyde Parker and Captain Rowley. The royal party afterwards visited the Trafalgar and Albion. To-day, on the royal yacht reaching Spithead the yards were manned, and a general salute fired from all the ships of the fleet. It was remarked that at no time since the peace of 1815 had the roadstead exhibited so great an amount of actual naval strength. A variety of evolutions having been gone through by each of the divisions, the day's display was concluded by the passage of her Majesty through the squadron on her return to Cowes.

— In the Court of Queen's Bench, Henry Gompertz and W. R. Witham were found guilty of conspiring to defraud George Pitt Rose, late a captain in the 9th Lancers, of bills or acceptances to the amount of about 17,000*l.*

28.—Died in Cumberland-terrace, Regent's Park, aged 47, Sir William Follett, Attorney-General to her Majesty. This eminent pleader was buried with much solemnity in the Temple church, the procession being composed of Benchers of the Inner and Middle Temple, of Lincoln's Inn, and Gray's Inn, with many of the judges and other dignitaries.

30.—In the Arches Court, Sir Herbert Jenner Fust gives judgment in the suit promoted by the Bishop of London against the Rev. F. Oakeley, of Margaret-street Chapel. The judge elaborately analysed Mr. Oakeley's letter to the Bishop, in which he claimed to hold the same principles as Mr. Ward, and challenged him to institute proceedings. The promoters of the suit, said Sir Herbert, have sufficiently proved their case that Mr. Oakeley had rendered himself liable to ecclesiastical censure. If the proceeding had been under the statute of Elizabeth he must, in the first instance, have been called upon to retract his error, and if he refused, be deprived of his preferment; but, as the proceeding was under the general law, the punishment was left to the discretion of the Court. The Court now revoked Mr. Oakeley's licence, prohibited him from preaching within the province of Canterbury till he retracted his errors, and condemned him in the costs of the proceeding.

— The police on attempting to put down a faction fight at Ballinhassig Fair, near Cork, are set upon by both parties, and used so severely that they fire in self-defence from a temporary police-station in which they had taken refuge. Six of the fighting party were killed on the spot and twenty-five wounded.

July 1.—A detachment of troops from Auckland, under Colonel Despard, defeated by New Zealand natives while attempting to carry the fortified camp of the chief Heke. One-third of the men engaged fell in the attack, and during the eight days that operations were continued, the fourth of the whole number engaged—about 500—were either killed or wounded. The camp was ultimately taken, and Heke retired into the interior.

2.—Great gathering of Scottish Dissenters in the Music Hall, Edinburgh, for the purpose of enabling the friends of the voluntary principle to adopt such measures as may appear best calculated to avert the evils arising from the continued and aggravated violation of the civil and religious rights of Dissenters.

— The undress uniform coat and vest which Lord Nelson wore at the battle of Trafalgar having been discovered in private hands by Sir Harris Nicolas, Prince Albert causes them to be purchased in his name for 150*l.* with a view to presenting the precious relics to Greenwich Hospital.

3.—Conflagration at Smyrna, destroying a great part of the city. In the Frank quarter thirty houses and shops, the hospital of St. Anthony, three-fourths of the establishment of the Sisters of Charity, and the Armenian church and school, fell a prey to the flames.

9.—The Bill of Lord Advocate Rutherford for regulating the admission to the secular chairs of the Universities thrown out on the second reading, by a majority of 116 to 108. Mr. Macaulay took charge of the bill on this occasion, and commented in strong terms on the inconsistency of the Government in dispensing with tests in Ireland one day, and insisting on them in Scotland in the next, to support an ecclesiastical faction bent on persecution without even the miserable excuse of fanaticism.

10.—Discussion in the House of Lords concerning a petition presented by the Marquis of Breadalbane from the General Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland. It detailed at some length the grievances to which the Church was subjected by the refusal of proprietors in different parts of Scotland to grant sites for erecting places of worship, and prayed the House to afford relief.

17.—Died at Howick Hall, Northumberland, aged 80, Charles, Earl Grey, the chief of the Cabinet which passed the Reform Bill and secured the abolition of slavery.

24.—Came on at Taunton, before Mr. Baron Platt, the trial of James Majaval, Francisco Serva, and eight other of the Spanish pirates charged with the murders on board the Felicidade. (See March 2.) The main facts of the case having been brought out as mentioned above, Mr. Serjeant Manning submitted there was no case to go to a jury. In the first place the Court had no jurisdiction, as the transaction took place in a foreign ship, and the parties were not within the peace of our Lady the Queen. Next, the Felicidade was not legally taken, and the men were not in legal custody, as they were not carrying on the slave-trade. The Felicidade had no slaves on board, and therefore the prisoners had a right to endeavour to escape, and they were justified in any act they might have committed with a view to accomplish that end. These men were not bound by the laws of any country of which they were not cognizant. In summing up, Baron Platt pointed out that the sea was the highway of nations, and all rovers and thieves and pirates who infested that highway were liable to punishment as much as highway robbers on land. They were the enemies of all nations, and might be hunted down by any one whose flag had power to overcome and take them, for the highway of the seas received concurrent dominion from every country on the earth. He also thought that not only was the Felicidade legally taken, but the prisoners were in the legal custody of the Queen's officers when they commenced to slay and drown. The jury returned a verdict of Guilty against seven of the prisoners, who were sentenced to death. [The technical objections taken at the trial were argued before the judges in the Court of Exchequer on the 15th November. The conviction was then declared to be invalid on two grounds: first, that it was not piracy for Brazilians to carry on the slave-trade until they made it to be so by Brazilian municipal law; and second, because the Felicidade was wrongfully taken, not having any slaves on board; and, therefore, that she did not become a British ship, and was not justified in capturing the Echo. The prisoners were therefore liberated and despatched to Brazil at the expense of the British Government.]

August 2.—Explosion of fire-damp in Crombach mine, near Merthyr Tydvil. There were 150 men and boys at work in the colliery at the time, 122 of whom were got out alive. The rest, 28 in number, were suffocated. The mine was generally reputed to be badly ventilated, but this did not prevent the men using naked lights in preference to the protected "Davy." At the inquest on the bodies the jury expressed an opinion that sufficient precaution had not been taken for ventilating the mine.

— Such is the desperate eagerness for gambling in shares in Leeds that the police have to be employed to keep the street clear leading to the Stock Exchange. The chairman at a meeting of stockbrokers called for the purpose, referred to the alarming spirit of reckless speculation going on, and warned them of the disastrous consequences. It was said to be not an uncommon thing for 100,000 railway shares to be sold in one day in Leeds.

4.—Wreck of the emigrant ship, Cataragui, and loss of 423 of her passengers and crew. During a heavy gale she struck on a reef on the west coast of King's Island, Bass's Straits, and being ground to pieces almost instantly by the fury of the waves, there were only nine out of all her company who could manage to keep on pieces of the wreck till the following morning, when they contrived with difficulty to reach the shore.

9.—Parliament prorogued by the Queen in person. In the afternoon her Majesty left Buckingham Palace for Woolwich, where she embarked with Prince Albert on board the royal yacht for Antwerp en route to Germany.

11.—Early indications of the potato-disease. R. Parker, potato-dealer, writes to Sir James Graham: "On Tuesday last I went down by the Dover 8 o'clock train. On my arrival there I immediately drove all round the neighbourhood, and found the whole of the crops, early and late, not excepting the cottagers' gardens, were being entirely destroyed. On my return I could trace it by the side of the whole line at Tonbridge; I have since looked over the tops that come as covering on that article to the different markets, and find they are all affected. . . . Being apprehensive it might be general, I thought it my duty to inform you, as it is probable you might desire to make further inquiry." This was amongst the first communications made to Government regarding the appearance of the potato disease in the country.

13.—Riot at Dunfermline, and attempt by the mob to set fire to the house of Mr. Alexander, a manufacturer who was alleged to have made himself obnoxious by reducing wages.

14.—Mr. G. Hudson returned for Sunderland by a majority of 128 votes over his opponent, Colonel Thompson. The contest excited unusual interest, and both Mr. Cobden and Mr. Bright gave active service in aid of their brother of the League. The express employed by the Times to carry the news, accomplished the distance, 305 miles, in eight hours, although a part of the journey had to be performed by post-horses. Copies of the Times, with the result of the poll, were delivered over the North of England next forenoon.

15.—Came on at Croydon Assizes, before Lord Chief Justice Tindal, the case of Cooke v. Wetherall, a prosecution raised against the reverend defendant for criminal conversation with Mrs. Cooke, his own daughter. He was fifty-five years of age, and discharged the duties of rector of Byfield, Northamptonshire. In support of the charge Mr. Serjeant Shee detailed the early quarrels of Mr. and Mrs. Cooke, her return to her father's house, and the general deception which was practised towards his client. The criminal intimacy was chiefly spoken to by the domestic servants. Verdict for the plaintiff.

16.—The last-received portion of the Sycee silver sent by the Chinese exposed to public competition; 400,000 ounces were sold for 60½*d.* per ounce, and the remainder for 60*d.* These prices were considered high, being exclusive (according to the terms of the contract) of all the gold above five grains in the pound troy which might be found in the silver, and which was to be paid for separately at another fixed rate.

18.—Fire in a Manchester warehouse, Aldermanbury, City, destroying stock and premises estimated at 250,000*l.* Although no life was lost on the occasion, the coroner exercised his ancient prerogative of summoning a jury to inquire into the cause of the fire. They returned a verdict to the effect that its origin was accidental.

19.—Whirlwind at Rouen, destroying in a few seconds three factories, and burying most of the workmen in the ruins. Upwards of 200 people were reported killed or wounded, and the whole valley of Daville, through which the whirlwind took its course, presented one scene of desolation.

— Centennial commemoration of the gathering of the clans at Glenfinnan in 1745. Arrangements on a suitable scale, and in a very liberal spirit, were made by Macdonald of Glenalladale at the inn of Glenfinnan, for the accommodation of those whom the celebration might draw to the spot. The memory of those who were “out” in the perilous ‘45 was proposed as a toast by Macdonald of Marr, who presided on the occasion. The visitors, with the neighbouring peasantry, who mustered strongly on the occasion, afterwards walked to the head of Lochshiel, and marched round the monument erected there to Prince Charles. The day’s proceedings were brought to a close by an exhibition of national games.

21.—Explosion of fire-damp in Jarrow colliery, near South Shields, being the sixth calamity of the same kind in this pit during the last twenty-eight years. On seeing the dreaded cloud of smoke ascending from the shaft, a viewer and over-man went down to render assistance. In the first workings a few of the men were found alive, and sent up the shaft; but as the whole of the ventilating apparatus had been destroyed by the explosion, two days elapsed before the pit could be completely searched. In the lower seam one man was found alive, but much exhausted, and ten corpses lying around him. During the 23d and following day, fifteen bodies were brought up. Thirty-nine in all perished, including the over-man Defty, who in his anxiety to render assistance penetrated too far into the workings and was suffocated by the choke-damp.

26.—The anniversary of the birth of Prince Albert celebrated by the royal visitors at Coburg in a style of simplicity charmingly characteristic of German manners. The chief event of the day was the rustic festival at the Palace of Rosenau, where the illustrious visitors engaged in the holiday rejoicings of the homely villagers, who came swarming in from the surrounding district.

30.—A correspondent of the Dublin Evening Post, who had traversed the greater part of the counties of Dublin, Meath, Cavan, and Fermanagh, reports the prospects of the harvest to be in general most favourable. The potato crop, however, is far from satisfactory. These appear everywhere in great abundance, but in several districts a rot has set in and two-thirds of the tubers are found to be rotten within, though large and well-looking without.

September 6.—The Gardeners’ Chronicle records:—“All that we see, or hear, or read of the potato crop, convinces us that the extent of the injury which has befallen it is in no degree exaggerated, but the contrary, and there is no present help for it. We see no prospect of stopping the murrain by human agency, and we believe that the best thing to do under the circumstances is to let the crops alone, unless means can be found of consuming them immediately, and in that case they should be taken up and dried.”

9.—Fight for the championship and 200*l.* between Caunt and Bendigo of Nottingham. It was decided in favour of Bendigo, after a contest which lasted two hours and thirty-eight minutes, during which time ninety-three rounds were fought. The fight commenced at Newport-Pagnell; then they were compelled to move to Stoney Stratford, back to Wheddon Green, and ultimately to Lutfield Green. The spectators had thus to follow the pugilists between thirty and forty miles.

— Died in consequence of injuries received through a fall from her horse, which she was exercising in a stubble-field at Hanworth, Mrs. Theobald, well known in the sporting world and to those who followed the Queen’s hounds.

10.—The inquiry into the state of the Andover Union Workhouse, which had been going on for a fortnight, was concluded this day, by the Poor-law Commissioners directing that an indictment be preferred against the master and mistress. It was shown in evidence that the miserable inmates, through want of food, were in the habit of gnawing at the decayed bones which they were sent to break for manure.

13.—Fire at Martinhampstead, near Exeter, destroying about fifty small dwelling-houses, and throwing hundreds of people destitute.

16.—Destroyed by fire the premises at Blackfriars occupied by Sir Charles Price & Co. oil and colour merchants. About three o’clock an alarming explosion occurred in the burning building, through one of the turpentine vats becoming ignited. To escape from this new disaster most of the firemen leapt into the Thames, and were rescued by small boats. The blazing liquid rushed into the river, and set fire to barges and other small craft moored in the vicinity. At one period there were blazing fifty puncheons of turpentine and eight tons of cod oil.

— Died of gastric fever, at the early age of thirty, Thomas Davis, editor of the Nation, one of the most active and accomplished of the Repeal party in Ireland.

17.—Explosion at the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich, caused by the ignition of the inflammable matter extracted from old fuses. Five of the workmen employed in the operation were killed, and the building blown to pieces.

— The Roman Catholic prelates issue a manifesto against the new Colleges as dangerous to the faith and morals of the people.

25.—Monster Repeal demonstration at Cashel. O'Connell made a long address in his usual style, and collected 500*l.* in name of rent.

October 2.—Died at Wiseton Hall, Nottinghamshire, aged 64, Earl Spencer, formerly Viscount Althorpe.

3.—The League activity in the registrations was directed with such consummate ability that at the close of the revision for the West Riding they were found to have added 2,143 adherents in that single division.

8.—Rev. J. H. Newman writes to a friend :—"I am this night expecting Father Dominic, the Passionist, who, from his youth, has been led to have distinct and direct thoughts, first of the countries of the North, then of England. After thirty years' waiting, he was, without his own act, sent here. But he has had little to do with conversions. I saw him here for a few minutes on St. John Baptist's day last year. He does not know of my intention ; but I mean to ask of him admission into the one Fold of Christ. . . . P.S. This will not go till all is over. Of course it requires no answer."

13.—Sir R. Peel to Sir J. Graham :—"The accounts of the state of the potato crop in Ireland are becoming very alarming . . . I foresee the necessity that may be impressed upon us at an early period of considering whether there is not that well-grounded apprehension of actual scarcity that justifies and compels the adoption of every means of relief which the exercise of the prerogative or legislation might afford. I have no confidence in such remedies as the prohibition of exports or the stoppage of distilleries. The removal of impediments to import is the only effectual remedy."

16.—Mr. Basevi, architect, killed by a fall in the belfry of Ely Cathedral, which he was engaged in restoring.

20.—During a fog on the Midland Railway, near Masborough, a special engine runs into the mail train, which had broken down, and injures many of the passengers. Two died after surgical operations had been performed, one of them being Mr. Boteler, Commissioner of Bankruptcy, Leeds.

25.—During the past week there were announced in three newspapers eighty-nine new schemes, with a capital of 84,055,000*l.* ; during the month there were 357 new schemes announced, with an aggregate capital of 332,000,000*l.*

— A meeting at Kilkenny, presided over by the High Sheriff, to take into consideration what remedial measures could be adopted with reference to the present alarming state of the potato crop. On the same day the report from Galway is : "The distemper is spreading with frightful rapidity. Several fields which last week were tried and found safe are now more or less affected." From Drogheda it is also reported that the plague is extending its ravages ; and, "what is yet more alarming, we learn from various places that potatoes which had been pitted from three to fourteen days apparently sound are now diseased." Yesterday the Government Commissioners presented their first report to the Lord Lieutenant on the best means to be used for checking the spread of the disease.

26.—Dr. Lyon Playfair writes from Dublin to Sir R. Peel :—"I sent you a draft-copy of a report which I intend to offer to my colleagues to-morrow morning for their signature ; and, with verbal alterations, I am sure it will be adopted. You will see the account is melancholy, and it cannot be looked upon in other than a most serious light. We are confident that the accounts are underrated rather than exaggerated. . . . I am sorry to give you so desponding a letter, but we cannot conceal from ourselves that the case is much worse than the public suppose."

30.—The New Hall at Lincoln's Inn opened by the Queen. At the grand banquet covers were laid for 500 guests. All the barristers were attired in their wigs and gowns. Prince Albert was admitted a Bencher on the occasion, and appeared in legal costume.

31.—Capt. Waghorn reaches London with the express portion of the Indian mail, having made the journey from Trieste in fifteen minutes less than one hundred hours. His route was the German one, by way of Niederrdorf, Innspruck, Kempten, Meningen, Stuttgart, Cologne, Ostend, and Dover.

— A Cabinet Council, held at the private residence of Sir Robert Peel, sits two hours and a half deliberating on the alarming prospects of the country through the failure of the potato crop.

— Resolution of a meeting in Dublin, presided over by the Duke of Leinster :—"That the Committee do respectfully represent to his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant that it has now been ascertained beyond a doubt that famine and consequent pestilence are immediately imminent, unless the Government shall, without hesitation or delay, take the most prompt measures to provide for the people, and to organize means for the distribution of such food in each locality throughout the land. That we respectfully call upon his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant forthwith to order the ports of Ireland to be opened for the importation of Indian corn, rice, and other articles suited for human food."

November 1.—Cabinet memorandum:—"The calling of Parliament," writes the Prime Minister, "at an unusual period, on any matter connected with a scarcity of food, is a most important step. It compels an immediate decision on three questions: Shall we maintain unaltered?—shall we modify?—shall we suspend, the operation of the Corn-laws? The first vote we propose—a vote of credit, for instance, for 100,000*l.*, to be placed at the disposal of the Lord Lieutenant for the supply of food—opens the whole question. Can we vote public money for the sustenance of any considerable portion of the people on account of actual or apprehended scarcity, and maintain in full operation the existing restrictions on the free import of grain? I am bound to say my impression is that we cannot."

— Mr. Newman, Mr. Oakeley, Mr. St. John, and Mr. Walker, all converts to Rome, receive the sacrament of confirmation in the chapel of Oscott College, at the hands of Dr. Wiseman.

2.—Lord Stanley to Sir Robert Peel:—"I find it difficult to express to you the regret with which I see how widely I differ in opinion with Graham and yourself as to the necessity for proposing to Parliament a repeal of the Corn-laws. Since the Cabinet on Saturday, I have reflected much and anxiously upon it; but I cannot bring my mind to any other conclusion than that at which I had then arrived. . . . I foresee that this question, if you persevere in your present opinion, must break up the Government one way or the other; but I shall greatly regret, indeed, if it should be broken up, not in consequence of our feeling that we have prepared measures which it properly belonged to others to carry, but in consequence of difference of opinion among ourselves."

3.—Lord John Russell presented with the freedom of the city of Edinburgh.

5.—Elopement from Brighton of Lady Adela Villiers, daughter of the Earl and Countess of Jersey, with Capt. Ibbotson, of the 11th Hussars. They managed to elude pursuit till they reached Gretna Green, where an irregular marriage was performed. They were afterwards married at St. Pancras Church.

— At a meeting of the Council of the Royal Institution, Mr. Faraday announces a discovery tending to show that light, heat, and electricity are merely modifications of one great universal principle. The discovery was that a beam of polarized light is deflected by the electric current, so that it may be made to rotate between the poles of a magnet. Thus the problem which had long disturbed science as to the power of magnetizing iron by the sun's rays received satisfactory elucidation from the experiment of Mr. Faraday.

6.—Elizabeth Mundell, an old woman living in Westminster, murdered by Martha Brown- ing to secure possession of two notes, which turned out to be of the Bank of Elegance. The coroner's jury in the first instance returned a verdict that the deceased had strangled herself while in a fit of temporary insanity; but suspicion afterwards attaching to the young woman living with her, she was apprehended and convicted, making a full confession of the crime before her execution.

— Cabinet memorandum:—"To issue forth- with an Order in Council remitting the duty on grain in bond to 1*s.* and opening the ports for the admission of all species of grain at a smaller rate of duty until a day named in the order." "The Cabinet," writes Sir Robert Peel, "by a very considerable majority, declined giving its assent to the proposals which I thus made to them. They were supported by only three members of the Cabinet—the Earl of Aber- deen, Sir James Graham, and Mr. Sidney Her- bert. The other members of the Cabinet, some on the ground of objection to the principle of the measures recommended, others upon the ground that there was not yet sufficient evi- dence of the necessity for them, withheld their sanction."

10.—Sir Robert Peel writes to Lord Clon- curry, Chairman of the Dublin Relief Com- mittee, with reference to his lordship's proposal for opening the Irish ports for the importation of food free of duty, and closing them against exportation: "Although considerations of public policy and public duty prevent me from entering into a discussion of the particular measures recommended for immediate adop- tion; yet I beg to assure your lordship that the whole subject is occupying the unremitting at- tention of her Majesty's confidential advisers."

12.—The first sod of the Trent Valley rail- way raised by Sir Robert Peel on a piece of ground near Tamworth.

17.—The Times publishes a table of all the railway companies registered up to the 31st of October, numbering 1,423, and involving an outlay of 701,243,208*l.* "Take away (it was remarked) 140,000,000*l.* for railways completed or in progress, exclude all the most extravagant schemes, and divide the remainder by ten, can we add from our present resources even a tenth of the vast remainder? Can we add 50,000,000*l.* to the railway speculations we are already ir- retrievably embarked in? We cannot, without the most ruinous, universal, and desperate con- fusion."

— Inquiry at the Thames Police Court regarding the sickening and unheard-of cruelties perpetrated by Capt. George Johnstone upon the crew of the ship Tory. The first charge investigated was that of the murder of Mars, the second mate. The captain had obtained some wine and brandy from a French ship, and commenced afterwards a course of outrageous intoxication, which led the crew to talk of securing him as a madman. "This," says a witness (Yelverton), "coming to the captain's ears, he had Mars put in irons, and went down every half-hour to cut an inch off him. I saw one piece cut off about the size of my hand. It was cut off his head, and all the hair was upon it. Afterwards the captain took Mars to the inner cabin, which was his bedroom, taking with him a strand and a hawser. I don't know what was done there, but we heard Mars sing out as if he was choking. He brought him out again, and set him against the cabin-door, whilst he himself sat on the locker-head. Capt. Johnstone then commenced pitching the cutlass at him, sometimes sticking it in his head and sometimes in his breast." The second charge was for the murder of Thomas Reason by stabbing him with a bayonet in different parts of the body; and the third concerned Rambert, the chief mate, who, to escape the captain's cruelty, leaped overboard and was drowned. Many of the witnesses were cut and mangled in the most dreadful manner, either by cutlass strokes or having had powder fired into different parts of their body. Johnstone was tried for these enormous cruelties at the Central Criminal Court on the 5th of February following, but the jury returned a verdict of Not Guilty, on the ground of insanity.

19.—The Dublin Mansion House Relief Committee issue a series of resolutions relating to the approaching famine:—"We feel it an imperative duty to discharge our consciences of all responsibility regarding the undoubtedly approaching calamitous famine and pestilence throughout Ireland, an approach which is imminent and almost immediate, and can be obviated only by the most prompt, universal, and efficacious measures of procuring food and employment for the people. We have ascertained beyond the shadow of a doubt, that considerably more than one-third of the entire of the potato crop in Ireland has been already destroyed by the potato disease, and that such disease has not by any means ceased its ravages, but, on the contrary, that it is daily expanding more and more, and that no reasonable conjecture can be formed with respect to the limit of its effects short of the destruction of the entire remaining potato crop." The document concludes by impeaching the conduct of the Ministry for refusing to open the ports or call Parliament together earlier than usual.

22.—The Broad and Narrow Gauge Commission examine Mr. Hudson:—"We have been enabled to do everything on the narrow gauge which the Great Western has accomplished on the broad. Economy was the great inducement for adopting the narrow gauge, and it would be impolitic to enlarge it, as you would gain nothing with regard to either speed or power. A truck weighing from seven to nine tons could easily be moved by one horse, but those on the Great Western weighing thirteen tons could not, and it was sometimes difficult to attach a leader. Unless some great advantage could be derived from the broad gauge,—which had not been shown—he thought the narrow gauge had been wisely chosen."

22.—Lord John Russell writes from Edinburgh to the electors of the City of London. "The present state of the country in regard to its supply of food cannot be viewed without apprehension. Forethought and bold precaution may avert any serious evils, indecision and procrastination may produce a state of suffering which it is frightful to contemplate. . . . It is no longer worth while to contend for a fixed duty. In 1841 the Free-trade party would have agreed to a duty of 8s. per quarter on wheat, and after a lapse of years this duty might have been further reduced, and ultimately abolished. But the imposition of any duty at present, without a provision for its extinction within a short period, would but prolong a contest already sufficiently fruitful of animosity and discontent. . . . Let us then unite to put an end to a system which has been proved to be the blight of commerce, the bane of agriculture, the source of bitter division among classes, the cause of penury, fever, mortality, and crime among the people. But if this end is to be achieved, it must be gained by the unequivocal expression of the public voice. It is not to be denied that many elections for cities and towns in 1841, and some in 1845, appear to favour the assertion that Free-trade is not popular with the great mass of the community. The Government appear to be waiting for some excuse to give up the present Corn-laws. Let the people, by petition, by address, by remonstrance, afford them the excuse they seek. Let the Ministry prepare such a revision of the taxes as in their opinion may render the public burdens more just and more equal; let them add any other provision which courteous and even scrupulous forbearance may suggest, but let the removal of restrictions on the admission of the main articles of food and clothing used by the mass of the people be required in plain terms as useful to all great interests and indispensable to the progress of the nation."

24.—Lord Morpeth, in forwarding 5/6 to the League Fund, writes to Mr. Baines:—"I wish to record, in the most emphatic way I can, my conviction that the time is come for a final repeal of the Corn-laws, and my protest against the continued inaction of the State in the present emergency." On the letter being read at the Leeds meeting, "it was impossible," writes a spectator, "to convey even the remotest idea of the enthusiasm with which the important announcement was received. For fully ten minutes after the reading of the letter from the platform a looker-on might.

have supposed that two thousand of the most respectable inhabitants of Leeds had become irrecoverably frantic with joy. Bursts of the most vehement cheering followed each other in quick and deafening succession. Every one felt that the cause of the League had received a new impetus—an impetus which would infallibly carry it onwards to speedy success." In London the excitement was equally great.

25.—At a Cabinet Council Sir Robert Peel states that the instructions proposed to be issued to the Irish Famine Commissioners are inconsistent with a determination to maintain the present Corn-laws, and he could not consent to their issue without reserving on his own part the power to propose to Parliament some measure of immediate relief. A majority was opposed to this step.

30.—Memorandum by the Duke of Wellington:—"I am one of those who think the continuance of the Corn-laws essential to the agriculture of the country in its existing state, and particularly to that of Ireland, and a benefit to the whole community. . . . In respect to my own course, my only object in public life is to support Sir Robert Peel's administration of the government for the Queen. A good Government for the country is more important than Corn-laws or any other consideration; and as long as Sir Robert Peel possesses the confidence of the Queen and of the public, and he has strength to perform the duties, his administration of the government must be supported. My own judgment would lead me to maintain the Corn-laws. Sir Robert Peel may think that his position in Parliament and in the public view requires that the course should be taken which I recommend; and if that should be the case, I earnestly recommend that the Cabinet should support him, and I for one declare that I will do so."

—(Sunday). After one of the most hurried and desperate weeks known in the annals of railway history, plans were this (the last) day, lodged at the Board of Trade, which brought up the total number of railway schemes to 788. A large establishment of clerks was in attendance to register the deposits; but towards midnight the deliveries became so rapid that they were unable to keep pace with the work. The entrance hall became inconveniently crowded, and a general fear prevailed that the necessary formalities would not be got through before 12 o'clock; this, however, was allayed by an assurance that admission into the hall before that hour would be sufficient to warrant the reception of the documents. Arrivals in hot haste from various parts of the country took place till the last moment, and even after the door was shut two or three parties sought to project their plans into the building, but had them thrown back into the street.

December 2.—President Polk delivers his Message to Congress. Referring to the annexation of Texas, he said:—"We may rejoice that the tranquil and pervading influence of the American principle of self-government was sufficient to defeat the purposes of British and French interference, and that the almost unanimous voice of the people of Texas has given to that interference a powerful and effective rebuke. From this example European governments may learn how vain diplomatic arts and intrigues must ever prove upon this continent against that system of self-government which seems natural to our soil, and which will ever reject foreign interference." Again, "Oregon is part of the North American continent, to which it is confidently affirmed the title of the United States is the best now in existence. The British proposition of compromise, which would make the Columbia line south of the forty-nine degrees, with a trifling addition of detached territory to the United States, north of that river, and would leave on the British side two-thirds of the whole Oregon territory, including the free navigation of the Columbia, and all the valuable harbours of the Pacific, can never for a moment be entertained by the United States, without an abandonment of their just and clear territorial rights, their own self-respect, and the national honour. . . . It is well known to the American people, and to all nations, that this government has never interfered with the relations subsisting between other governments. We have never made ourselves parties to their wars or their alliances; we have not sought their territories by conquest; we have not mingled with parties in their domestic struggles; and, believing our own form of government to be the best, we have never attempted to propagate it by intrigues, by diplomacy, or by force. We may claim on this continent a like exemption from European interference. The notions of America are equally sovereign and independent with those of Europe. We must ever remember the principle that the people of this continent alone have the right to decide their own destiny. . . . Near a quarter of a century ago the principle was distinctly announced to the world in the annual message of one of my predecessors, that the American continents, by the free and independent condition which they have assumed and maintained, are henceforth not to be considered as subjects for future colonization by any European power. In the existing circumstances of the world the present is deemed a proper occasion to reiterate and to affirm the principle avowed by Mr. Monroe, and to state my cordial concurrence in its wisdom and sound policy. . . . It must be distinctly announced to the world as our settled policy, that no future European colony or dominion shall, with our consent, be planted or established on any part of the North American continent."

— Great meeting in Edinburgh, for the purpose of praying her Majesty that the ports might be immediately and permanently opened for the free importation of corn and other food.

In conformity with the suggestions contained in Lord John Russell's letter to the citizens of London, meetings with the same object were held about this time in all the principal towns in the kingdom. A "deliberate and solemn" declaration was also issued by forty of the most eminent bankers and merchants in London, urging the Government to take immediate steps for meeting the present serious and alarming condition of the country.

4.—The Times contains this startling announcement :—"The decision of the Cabinet is no longer a secret. Parliament, it is confidently reported, is to be summoned for the first week in January; and the Royal Speech will recommend an immediate consideration of the Corn-laws, preparatory to their total repeal." The Standard, under the heading of "Atrocious Fabrication by the Times," declared it was in a position to give the rumour the most positive and direct contradiction. Referring to the doubts cast upon the announcement by the Standard and Herald, the Times writes :—"It has been the monomania of these two melancholy prints to imagine that they possessed the confidence of the Treasury, and they have been hobbling about the Corn-laws to the very last, under the erroneous impression that they would be the first to be apprised of any important resolution of the Cabinet. . . . Humbly and obsequiously have they been grinding their organs under the windows of Downing-street, ready to play any tune that might be most pleasing to the Premier, but he has turned a deaf ear to their strains, and not even allowed his underlings an opportunity of throwing out an occasional morsel by way of encouragement. . . . The reason is obvious. The repeal of the Corn-laws is a thing for statesmen to do, and not for old women to maunder about."

5.—In the case of St. Paul's church, Edinburgh, one of those selected to try the question at issue between the Established Church and the Free Church, as to the right of property in the quoad sacra Churches, the Lord Ordinary (Robertson) issued an interlocutor in favour of the Establishment.

—"Lord Stanley and the Duke of Buccleuch having signified their inability to support a measure involving the ultimate repeal of the Corn-laws, I thought it very doubtful," writes Sir Robert Peel, "whether I could conduct the proposal to a successful issue. I thought that the public interest would be very injuriously affected by the failure of an attempt made by a government to adjust that question. The other members of the Cabinet, without exception I believe, concurred in this opinion; and under these circumstances I considered it to be my duty to tender my resignation to her Majesty. On the 5th of December I repaired to Osborne, Isle of Wight, and humbly solicited her Majesty to relieve me from duties which I felt I could no longer discharge with advantage to her Majesty's service."

6.—Sir Henry Hardinge to the Secret Committee at the India House :—"I had moved with my camp from Umballah towards Loodianah, peaceably making my progress by the route I had announced, with the intention of visiting the Sikh protected states, according to the usual custom of my predecessors. In common with the most experienced officers of the Indian Government, I was not of opinion that the Sikh army would cross the Sutlej with its infantry and artillery." On the 9th, at night, Captain Nicolson, the assistant political agent at Ferozepore, reported that a portion of the Sikh army had approached within three miles of the river. On the 13th he received precise information that the Sikh army had crossed the Sutlej, and was concentrating in great force on the left bank of the river. On the same day the Governor-General issued a proclamation :—"Since the death of the late Maharajah Shere Singh, the disorganized state of the Lahore Government has made it incumbent to adopt precautionary measures for the protection of the British frontier. The nature of these measures, and the cause of their adoption, were at the time fully explained to the Lahore Durbar. . . . The Sikh army has now, without the shadow of provocation, invaded the British territories. The Governor-General must therefore take measures for effectually protecting the British provinces, for vindicating the authority of the British Government, and for punishing the violators of treaties and the disturbers of public peace. The Governor-General hereby declares the possessions of Maharajah Dhuleep Singh, on the left or British banks of the Sutlej, confiscated and annexed to the British Government."

8.—Sir Robert Peel to the Queen :—"Your Majesty has been good enough to inform Sir Robert Peel that it is your intention to propose to Lord John Russell to undertake the formation of a government. The principle on which Sir Robert Peel was prepared to recommend the reconsideration of the laws affecting the import of the main articles of food was in general accordance with that referred to in the concluding paragraph of Lord John Russell's Letter to the Electors of the City of London. Sir Robert Peel wished to accompany the removal of restrictions on the admission of these articles with relief to the land from such charges as are unduly onerous, and with such other provisions as, in the terms of Lord John Russell's letter, caution and even scrupulous forbearance may suggest. Sir Robert Peel will support measures founded on that general principle, and will exercise any influence he may possess to promote their success."

9.—At a meeting of the Agricultural Protection Society, the Duke of Richmond, referring to Lord John Russell and Lord Morpeth, said, "Were one or two noblemen to frighten the yeomanry of England that they were not to express their opinion in favour of themselves and in favour of their labourers, because certain persons deserted their ranks? With respect to the cry of 'Famine,' he believed that it was perfectly illusory; and no man of respectability could have put it in good faith if he had been acquainted with the facts within the knowledge of their society. With respect to the report that ministers were to move the repeal of the Corn-laws, he could not believe that such perfidy existed."

17.—The Dublin Evening Mail, an Orange organ, writes of Peel:—"He obtained power as a traitor, he abandoned it as a coward; for, after all, the dastard had died of fear. At the head of the greatest party that England ever formed, with a majority in both Houses of Parliament, such as no minister ever yet commanded—what is he now? A degraded creature at the feet of Lord John Russell, humbly praying that he may be a participator with him in power, or, this being refused, that he may be elevated to a peerage."

— Sir Robert Peel to the Queen:—"Lord John Russell requires assurances which amount substantially to a pledge, that Sir Robert will support the immediate and total repeal of the Corn-laws. He humbly expresses his regret that he does not feel it to be consistent with his duty to enter upon the consideration of this important question in Parliament, fettered by a previous engagement of the nature of that required by him."

18.—Battle of Moodkee. On the march from Umballah to form a junction with the troops which had left Ferozepore under Sir John Littler, the Commander-in-Chief, Sir Hugh Gough, encounters the Sikh force near the village of Moodkee. The troops were engaged in cooking their meals when Major Broadfoot received information that the Sikh army was in full march, with the intention of surprising the camp. The troops immediately stood to arms, and advanced. "The opposition of the enemy," writes the Commander-in-Chief, "was such as might have been expected from troops who had everything at stake, and who had long boasted of being irresistible. Their ample and extended line, from their great superiority of numbers, far outflanked ours, but this was counteracted by the flank movement of our cavalry. The attack of the infantry now commenced, and the roll of fire from this powerful arm soon convinced the Sikh army that they had met with a foe they little expected. Their whole force was driven from position after position with great slaughter, and the loss of seventeen pieces of artillery, some of them of heavy calibre; our infantry using that never-failing weapon the bayonet whenever the enemy stood. Night only saved them from worse disaster, for this stout conflict was maintained during an hour and a half of dim starlight, amidst a cloud of dust from the sandy plain, which yet more obscured every object." The victory, though great, was dearly purchased by the death of Major-General Sir Robert Sale, who received a fatal grape-shot wound in the left thigh, and Sir John M'Caskill, who was shot through the chest. The total number of killed and wounded on the British side amounted to 872.

20.—"Lord John Russell presents his humble duty to your Majesty, and has the honour to state that he has found it impossible to form an administration. . . Lord John Russell is deeply sensible of the embarrassment caused by the present state of public affairs. He will be ready therefore to do all in his power, as a member of Parliament, to promote the settlement of that question which, in present circumstances, is the source of so much danger, especially to the welfare and peace of Ireland."

—"I repaired," writes Sir Robert Peel, to Windsor Castle at the time appointed. On entering the room her Majesty said to me very graciously, 'So far from taking leave of you, Sir Robert, I must require you to withdraw your resignation, and to remain in my service.' Her Majesty was pleased to observe that I might naturally require time for reflection, and for a communication with my colleagues, before I gave a decisive answer. . . I humbly advised her Majesty to permit me to decide at once upon the resumption of office, and to enable me to announce to my late colleagues on my return to London that I had not hesitated to re-accept the appointment of First Minister. I thought I should speak with much greater authority if I was to invite them to support me in an effort in which I was determined, and which I had positively undertaken to make, than if I were to return to London apparently undecided, for the purpose of asking their opinions as to the propriety of making that effort. . . The Queen was pleased cordially to approve of the suggestion I had ventured to offer, and I returned from Windsor Castle to London on the evening of the 20th, having resumed all the functions of First Minister of the Crown. Immediately on my arrival in London I summoned a meeting of all those of my late colleagues who were within reach. It took place at Downing-street at a late hour of the evening."

21.—Battle of Ferozeshah. The Commander-in-Chief having determined to attack the Sikh camp, the now united force marched towards Ferozeshah. "A very heavy cannonade was opened by the enemy, who had dispersed over their position upwards of one hundred guns, more than forty of which were of battering calibre; these kept up a heavy and well-directed fire, which the practice of our far less numerous artillery of much lighter metal checked in some degree, but could not silence; finally, in the face of a storm of shot and shell, our infantry advanced, and carried the formidable entrenchments; they threw themselves upon their guns, and with matchless gallantry wrested them from the enemy; but when the batteries were partially within our grasp our soldiers had to face such a fire of musketry from the Sikh infantry arrayed behind their guns, that in spite of the most heroic efforts a portion only of the entrenchments could be carried. Night fell while the conflict was everywhere raging. All through the night the Sikhs made attempts to dislodge our troops, but," continues the Commander-in-Chief, "with daylight of the 22d came retribution. Our infantry formed line, supported on both flanks by horse-artillery, whilst a fire was opened from our centre by such of our heavy guns as remained effective, aided by a flight of rockets. A masked battery played with great effect upon this point, dismounting our pieces, and blowing up our tumbrils. At this moment Lieut.-General Sir Henry Hardinge (the Governor-General, who volunteered to take second in command) placed himself at the head of the left, whilst I rode at the head of the right wing. Our line advanced, and, unchecked by the enemy's fire, drove them rapidly out of the village of Ferozeshah, and their encampment; then changing front to its left on its centre, our force continued to sweep the enemy, bearing down all opposition, and dislodged the enemy from the whole position. The line then halted as if on a day of manoeuvre, receiving its two leaders as they rode along in front, with a gratifying cheer, and displaying the captured standards of the Khalsa army. We had taken upwards of seventy-three pieces of cannon, and were masters of the whole field." An attempt made by the Sirdar Tej Sing, about two hours later, to regain his position, was checked by a movement to attack both flanks at once. The number returned as killed in this engagement was 694; wounded, 1,721. Prince Waldemar of Prussia took part in the first day's action, and distinguished himself for his coolness and intrepidity. The number of British troops engaged was set down at 20,000.

22.—Mr. Macaulay to the Secretary of the Edinburgh Chamber of Commerce:—"You will have heard of our attempt to form a Government. All our plans were frustrated by Lord Grey, who objected to Lord Palmerston being Foreign Secretary. I hope that the public interests will not suffer. Sir Robert Peel must now undertake the settlement of the question. It is certain that he can settle it. It is by no means certain that we could have done so. For we shall to a man support him; and a large proportion of those who are now in office would have refused to support us. On my own share in these transactions I reflect with unmoved satisfaction. From the first I told Lord John Russell that I stipulated for one thing only—total and immediate repeal of the Corn-laws; that my objections to gradual abolition were insurmountable; but that, if he declared for total and immediate repeal, I would be as to all other matters absolutely in his hands; that I would take any office, or no office, just as suited him best; and that he should never be disturbed by any personal pretensions or jealousies on my part. If everybody else had acted thus, there would now have been a liberal ministry. However, as I said, perhaps it is best as it is."

22.—The Astronomer-Royal writes to the Times:—"I have this day received from Professor Encke, of Berlin, a letter of which I subjoin a translation. There appears to be no reasonable doubt that the object to which it relates is a new planet. As it is highly important that observation should be made without the least possible delay, I request that you will have the goodness immediately to publish this in your paper." Next day Schumacher writes from Altona:—"Professor Encke has got an observation on the 20th inst., which enabled him to calculate the orbit of the new planet—of course only a first sketch; but, however, sure enough there can be no material difference. The planet belongs to the family of the four small planets, and has in its revolution the most likeness to Juno. The discoverer, Mr. Hencke, of Driessen, had left the name to be determined by Mr. Encke, and he calls it 'Astræa.'"

—The Duke of Buccleuch to Sir Robert Peel:—"I see clearly the position in which her Majesty is placed, and the only alternative left to her in the event of your failure. I perceive the disastrous consequences that must ensue, and also the present critical state of the country. Under these circumstances I feel it to be my imperative duty to my Sovereign and my country to make every personal sacrifice. I am ready, therefore, at the risk of any imputation that may be cast upon me, to give my decided support, not only to your administration generally, but to the passing through Parliament of a measure for the final settlement of the Corn-laws."

23.—An important meeting of the League was held to-day in Manchester, when it was resolved to raise a fund of a quarter of a million sterling, for the purpose of promoting their principles in the present national emergency. 60,000*l.* was intimated as subscribed before the meeting broke up. There was one subscription of 1,500*l.*, twenty-two of 1,000*l.*, one of 700*l.*, and eighteen of 500*l.*

25.—Bursting of a tank, containing 250,000 gallons of water, at the Liverpool and Harrington Water-works, Sussex-street, Liverpool. The tank was a new one, and in process of being filled, when two sides of it gave way, bringing down a dwelling-house adjoining. Five lives were lost, eight injured, and much property in the neighbourhood destroyed.

26.—Sir Robert Peel to Madame de Lieven:—"I resume power with greater means of rendering public service than I should have had if I had not relinquished it. But it is a strange dream. I feel like a man restored to life after his funeral service had been preached, highly gratified by such condolence on his death, as I received from the King and our valued friend M. Guizot."

H

27.—Colonel Gurwood, editor of the "Wellington Despatches," commits suicide in his lodgings at Brighton, by cutting his throat with a razor. He was found dead by the landlady of the house. At the inquest the jury returned a verdict that the deceased had destroyed himself while in a temporary state of insanity, caused by mental relaxation.

29.—The two Misses Cushman appear at the Haymarket Theatre as Romeo and Juliet.

— An express, in anticipation of the Indian Mail, reached London in twenty-seven days from Bombay. This unprecedented feat was accomplished by the Morning Herald in co-operation with the French Government, the object of the exertion being to demonstrate the superiority of the route by Marseilles over that of Trieste, recommended by Lieut. Waghorn. In copying the news the Times remarked:—"For the first time since Oct. 1840, we have been anticipated in the publication of intelligence from India. We are more proud, however, of our defeat than of our most remarkable success. We have spared no expense, and no exertion, but we would not barter English interests for intelligence—we would not purchase M. Guizot's favour by slavish adulation; and if success can only be won at such a price, we are well content to copy, as we now do, our Indian intelligence from the Morning Herald."

31.—At a meeting of the Royal Bucks Agricultural Association, the Duke of Buckingham said he did not wish to conceal from his hearers his opinion that the agricultural body in this country had the power, if they pleased, to defeat any attempt that might be made to repeal the Corn-laws. He looked on this question truly in a national point of view, and he could not view but with dismay the privations and the troubles likely to be inflicted on the country should the Corn-laws be repealed. At Warwick, on the same day, Mr. Newdegate carried a resolution, testifying against the fallacy and mischievous reports of a deficient harvest, and affirming that there was no reasonable ground for apprehending a scarcity of food, or that corn, under the protection of the existing law, will maintain a price more than sufficiently remunerative to the producer, or beyond what the industrious classes can afford. At the different agricultural meetings held about this time, the conduct of Sir Robert Peel was severely censured.

January 2.—In the official lists of the restored Peel cabinet, Mr. Gladstone takes the place of Lord Stanley as Secretary of State for the Colonies.

3.—The Lord Mayors of London and Dublin present addresses from their respective (98) corporations to the Queen at Windsor Castle. In reply her Majesty said: "I have directed Parliament to assemble on an early day, and I shall gladly sanction any measures which the wisdom of the Legislature may suggest as conducive to the alleviation of this temporary distress, and to the permanent welfare of all classes of my people."

5.—New regulations issued by the War Office, designed to improve the condition of non-commissioned officers and privates who merited distinction for good conduct.

7.—Died at Malta, in his seventy-seventh year, John Hookham Frere, author of the Whistlecraft jeu d'esprit, and a contributor to the Anti-Jacobin.

10.—A parliamentary paper of 540 folio pages issued, consisting of an alphabetical and numerical list of the names of all persons in Great Britain who subscribed towards the railways of last session, for sums less than 2,000*l*.

12.—On receiving the freedom of the City of Glasgow, Lord John Russell took the opportunity of observing that "the question of the Corn-laws was now in the hands of Sir Robert Peel. I know no more than yourselves what his proposition may be, or how he has agreed with the remaining colleagues with whom he differed, and who have again consented to serve under him; but of this I am fully convinced that if Sir Robert Peel wishes his measure to be safe—safe to propose and safe to carry—it must be formed on broad and extensive principles."

14.—Explosion of fire-damp in the Black Vein workings of Risca Colliery, and loss of thirty-five lives.

— The authorities of the parish of Windsor having claimed to rate Flemish Farm occupied by Prince Albert, he resisted the demand on the ground that it was royal property in royal occupation. The case was submitted to eminent legal authorities, whose opinion entirely supported Prince Albert's view. Upon this the parochial authorities presented an address, admitting the non-liability of the farm, apologizing for the observations which had appeared in the public prints, and soliciting his Royal Highness's consideration to the hardship inflicted upon the parish in consequence of the exemption of so considerable a property. The Prince informed them that he now felt himself at liberty to take the course which was most satisfactory to his own feelings, and to pay as a voluntary contribution a sum equal to the rate which would have been annually due, had his legal liability been established.

15.—Monster meeting in the Free-trade Hall, Manchester. Mr. Cobden, in the course of one of his most able arguments for immediate and total abolition, said:—"Whatever course is proposed by Sir Robert Peel, we, as Free-traders, have but one course to pursue.

If he proposes a total and unconditional repeal we shall throw up our caps for Sir Robert Peel. If he proposes anything else, Mr. Villiers will be ready, as on former occasions. I am anxious to hear now, at the last meeting before we go to Parliament, that we occupy as much an isolated position as we did at the first moment of the formation of the League. We have nothing to do with Whigs or Tories. We are stronger than either of them; and if we stick to our principles, we can beat them both."

15.—The Overland Mail arrives with intelligence from Calcutta to the 7th December. The Sikhs, it was reported, were making hostile demonstrations on the banks of the Sutlej; but it was not thought they had any serious intention of encountering the British forces in the field.

20.—The Irish Commission of Inquiry report that "It appears from undoubted authority, that of thirty-two counties in Ireland not one has escaped failure in the potato crop, and of 130 Poor Law Unions not one is exempt. . . That which is necessary on all such occasions is peculiarly necessary now. The extreme variety in the extent of the potato failure, and the minute and insulated subdivisions of land in which it prevails, lead us to entertain the greatest doubt whether any adjustment of public works can be made to meet the need wherever it may occur; and it must be met, or death from famine may be the result. Sir John M'Neill, a highly competent authority, in a document transmitted to us, estimates the distance to which the benefit of employment in public works extends, at five miles only."

—Departure of Rev. J. H. Newman from Oxford. "On the Saturday and Sunday before," he writes, "I was in my house at Littlemore, simply by myself, as I had been for the first day or two when I had originally taken possession of it. Various friends came to see the last of me—Mr. Copeland, Mr. Church, Mr. Buckle, Mr. Pattison, and Mr. Lewis. Dr. Pusey, too, came up to take leave of me; and I called on Dr. Ogle, one of my very oldest friends, for he was my private tutor when I was an undergraduate. In him I took leave of my first college, Trinity, which was so dear to me both when I was a boy and all through my Oxford life. Trinity had never been unkind to me. There used to be much snap-dragon growing on the walls opposite my freshman's room there, and I had for years taken it as the emblem of my own perpetual residence, even unto death, in my University. On the morning of the 23d I left the University. I have never seen Oxford since, (he writes in 1864,) excepting its spires, as they are seen from the railway."

21.—The Daily News, a new Liberal organ, commenced under the editorial care of Mr. Charles Dickens.

22.—Parliament opened by the Queen in (99)

person. The Royal Speech contained these sentences: "I have had great satisfaction in giving my assent to the measures which you have presented to me from time to time, calculated to extend commerce, and to stimulate domestic skill and industry by the repeal of prohibitive, and the relaxation of protective duties. I recommend you to take into your early consideration whether the principle on which you have acted may not with advantage be yet more extensively applied." The failure of the potato crop in Ireland, and the crimes against life and property in that country, were also touched upon in the Royal Speech. In the course of the personal explanations which occurred during the debate on the Address, Sir Robert Peel said: "The immediate cause of resignation was the great and mysterious calamity which has befallen Europe—the failure of the potato crop. But it would be unfair to the House if I were to say that I attached exclusive importance to that particular cause. I will not withhold the homage which is due to the progress of reason and to truth, by denying that my opinions on the subject of Protection have undergone a change. Whether holding a private station, or in a public one, I will assert the privilege of yielding to the force of argument and conviction, and acting upon the results of enlarged experience. It may be supposed that there is something humiliating in making such admissions. Sir, I feel no such humiliation; I should feel humiliation, if, having modified or changed my opinions, I declined to acknowledge the change for fear of incurring the imputation of inconstancy. The question is whether the facts are sufficient to account for the change, and the motives for it are pure and disinterested. Nothing could be more base on the part of a public man than to protect himself from danger by pretending a change; on the other hand, nothing could be more inconsistent with the duty he owes to his sovereign and country than if, seeing reason to alter his course, he is precluded from that alteration by the fear of being taunted with it. . . I may, without irreverence, be permitted to say that, like our physical frame, our ancient constitution is 'fearfully and wonderfully made'—that it is no easy task to insure the harmonious and united action of an ancient monarchy, a proud aristocracy, and a reformed House of Commons. These are the objects which we have attempted to accomplish, and I cannot think they are inconsistent with a pure Conservatism. Power for such objects is really valuable; but for my own part I can say, with perfect truth, that even for these objects I do not covet it. It is a burden far above my physical, infinitely beyond my intellectual strength. The relief from it with honour would be a favour, and not a punishment. But while honour and a sense of public duty require it, I do not shrink from office. I am ready to incur its responsibilities, to bear its sacrifices, to confront its honourable perils;

but I will not retain it with mutilated power and shackled authority. I will not stand at the helm during the tempestuous night if that helm is not allowed freely to traverse. I will not undertake to direct the course of the vessel by observations taken in the year 1842. I will reserve to myself the unfettered power of judging what will be for the public interest. I do not desire to be the Minister of England, but while I am Minister of England I will hold office by no servile tenure. I will hold office unshackled by any other obligation than that of consulting the public interest, and providing for the public safety." Sir Robert was frequently cheered throughout his speech, especially by the Opposition, and when he sat down the applause was long and almost universal.

23.—Bryan Seery tried at Mullingar, before the Lord Chief Baron, for discharging a loaded gun at Sir Francis Hopkins, on the night of the 18th of November, 1845. Sir Francis, in the course of his examination, distinctly identified the prisoner as the person who fired the gun, and whom he afterwards caught by the throat with the view of securing him. He was sentenced to be executed. On the scaffold, Seery raised a crucifix, and in a calm, loud, and steady tone, declared that he had neither act, part, hand, or knowledge of the crime for which he was about to suffer. His funeral was attended by an immense mob, who considered him the victim of oppression, and even spoke of him as a martyr.

26.—Price of bread in the metropolis, 9d. to 10d. per four-pound loaf. Wheat, average, 55s. 7d. per quarter.

27.—Sir Robert Peel explains the commercial policy of the Government. On the great question of the Corn-laws he proposed a total repeal at the end of three years. From the passing of the Act, and until the 1st of February, 1849, the maximum duty to be 10s., exigible when the price is under 48s., and to fall a shilling with every shilling of rise in the price till the price reaches 53s., when the duty was to fall to the minimum of 4s. The duties on barley and oats to undergo an alteration proportionally the same; all grain from British colonies to be admitted free of duty, and maize or Indian corn to be admitted, immediately after the passing of the Act, at a nominal duty. Other articles in the tariff under the heads of articles of food, agriculture, manufacture, and miscellaneous, were dealt with, to the amount of several hundred, in the way of duties repealed or reduced. In the matter of compensation to the landed interest, the Premier proposed a consolidation of parish-road trusts, an alteration in the law of settlement, transferring the burden from the parish of the pauper's birth to that in which he had an industrial residence of five years last preceding his application for relief; the payment from the Treasury of one-half the cost of medical attendance on paupers; and the removal from the local rates of the expenses of criminal prosecutions, which were to be defrayed in future by an annual parliamentary vote. "Because," concluded Sir Robert, "this is a time of peace, because you are not subject to any coercion whatever, I entreat you to bear in mind that the aspect of affairs may change; that we may have to contend with worse harvests than that of this year; and that it may be wise to avail ourselves of the present moment to effect an adjustment which, I believe, must be ultimately made, and which could not be long delayed without engendering feelings of animosity among different classes of her Majesty's subjects. From a sincere conviction that the settlement is not to be delayed; that, accompanied with the precautionary measures to which I have referred, it will not inflict injury on the agricultural interest—from these feelings I should deeply lament, exclusively on public grounds, the failure of the attempt which, at the instance of her Majesty's Government, I have made on this occasion, to recommend to your calm and dispassionate consideration these proposals, with no other feeling or interest in the ultimate issue than that they may, to use the words of her Majesty's speech, conduce to the promotion of 'friendly feeling between different classes—to provide additional security for the continuance of peace—and to maintain contentment and happiness at home by increasing the comforts and bettering the condition of the great body of the people.'"

23.—Battle of Aliwal. In consequence of the movements of Sirdar Runjoor Singh, Major-General Sir Harry Smith was ordered to advance with his brigade from Dhurrumbote towards Loodiana, which he effected with some difficulty and loss. He was here reinforced by Brigadier Godby, and afterwards by Brigadier Wheeler, the British troops on making the last junction taking up the abandoned position of Budhowal. Sir Harry Smith now determined to attack the enemy, who was distant about six miles, drawn up along a ridge close to the village of Aliwal. "After deployment," writes Sir Harry, "I observed the enemy's left to outflank me: I therefore broke into open columns, and took ground to my right; when I had gained sufficient, the troops wheeled into line; there was no dust, the sun shone brightly. These manœuvres were performed with the celerity and precision of the most correct field-day. The glistening of the bayonets and swords of this order of battle was most imposing, and the line advanced. Scarcely had it moved forward 150 yards, when at ten o'clock the enemy opened a fierce cannonade from his whole line. At first his balls fell short, but quickly reached us. Thus upon him, and capable of better ascertaining his position, I was compelled to halt the line, though under fire, for a few moments, until I ascertained that by bringing up my right, and carrying the village of Aliwal, I could with great effect precipitate myself upon his left and centre. . . . The enemy, completely hemmed in, were flying from our fire, and precipitating themselves in disordered masses into the fords and boats in the utmost confusion and consternation. Our eight-inch howitzers soon began to play upon the boats when the débris of the Sikh army appeared upon the opposite and high bank of the river, flying in every direction, although a sort of line was attempted to countenance their retreat, until all our guns commenced a furious cannonade, when they quickly receded. Nine guns were on the edge of the river by the ford. It appears as if they had been unlimbered to cover the ford. These being loaded were fired once upon our advance. Two others were sticking in the river; one of them we got out; two were seen to sink in the quicksands, and two were dragged to the opposite bank and abandoned."

29.—At a large meeting of the working-classes in Edinburgh to petition against the Corn-laws, a small body of Chartists attempted to change its character by proposing resolutions expressive of their hatred of the Anti-Corn-law Leaguers as "a set of deep, designing, money-mongering rogues." It was (said one speaker) "a fiendish caper" of the League to interfere with the decrees of Providence in having permitted the potato crop to be visited by disease. What the working-classes wanted was bread free to all who were starving, and at prime-cost to those who were only partially employed. The most offensive of the party were expelled from the room, and the original resolutions carried with enthusiasm.

30.—Mr. Cobden addresses a letter to the farming tenantry of the United Kingdom, urging upon them, that as the present was, beyond all comparison, the most favourable moment ever known for abolishing the Corn-laws, it would be for their interest to press for that repeal at once instead of having it deferred for three years.

31.—Protectionist meeting at Tamworth. A resolution was carried, declaring that Sir Robert Peel had forfeited all claim to public confidence, and that he ought to be called upon to resign back into the hands of the electors the trust which he had so greatly abused. A subscription was also proposed "to promote the return of a sound and confidential man to represent the borough in Parliament in place of the right honourable baronet."

February 4.—Riots at Inverness occasioned by the shipments of potatoes for the south.

5.—The Select Committee of the House of Commons report that for the purpose of facilitating the despatch of railway business it is expedient that a portion of the bills should commence in the House of Lords; and that among those to be taken there, Irish railway bills should have preference, as they might afford early and increased employment to the people of that country.

5.—The Times publishes brief accounts of the victories of Moodkee and Ferozeshah, received in anticipation of the India Mail by way of Trieste. The news reached Bombay on the 3d of January, about noon, when the mail-steamer, Victoria, had left the harbour. She was signalled to return, and took the important despatches on board. The journey afterwards was thus described by the Times: "The mails arrived at Suez on the 19th of January. They were then conveyed by the ordinary means across the Desert, and reached Alexandria on the morning of the 22d. The Austrian steamer, Impératrice, was there in waiting, and departed at noon on that day with our despatch for Trieste. She arrived at Dwino near Trieste, where her mails were landed on Thursday the 29th; and late that evening the courier, who carried our despatches, and to whom we are indebted for most strenuous exertions on our behalf, left Dwino en route for Ostend. His first point was Carlsruhe, whence he hoped to obtain a steamer down the Rhine to Bonn or Cologne; but so extensive was the inundation that no captain could be prevailed upon to undertake the voyage, and he was compelled to post onwards, encountering all the difficulties which flood, snow, and rain could interpose, until he reached the Belgium railroads. By this means he reached Ostend, and thence coming to London, succeeded with rare intelligence, although not speaking a word of English, in reaching our office without a moment's delay. He arrived at 6 o'clock, and had thus performed the journey from Dwino, under every imaginable difficulty, in some hours less than six days."

6.—The Bencoolen wrecked on Taylor's Bank, Holyhead, and thirteen of the crew, including a pilot who had newly boarded her, drowned. The remaining eight reached Liverpool in a small boat.

7.—At the dinner of the Buckinghamshire Agricultural Society, the Duke of Buckingham said he hoped they would be able to alter the measure of Sir Robert Peel or so cripple or defeat it, that it would not become the law of the land. "You may rely," he continued, "that I shall be at my post with the Duke of Richmond to defeat, if possible, this measure, or do it all the harm we can."

9.—Died at his residence, Lower Grosvenor-street, aged 60, Henry Gally Knight, M.P. author of several works on mediæval architecture.

10.—Battle of Sobraon, and final defeat of the Sikhs. Beaten on the Upper Sutlej, the enemy continued to occupy his position on the right bank. "Our observations," writes the Commander-in-Chief, "coupled with the report of spies, convinced us that there had devolved on us the arduous task of attacking in a position covered with formidable entrenchments, not fewer than 30,000 men, the best of the Khalsa troops, with seventy pieces of cannon, united by a good bridge to a reserve on the opposite bank, on which the enemy had a considerable camp, and some artillery commanding and flanking his field-works on our side. . . . It had been intended that the cannonade should have commenced at daybreak, but so heavy a mist hung over the plain and river that it became necessary to wait until the rays of the sun had penetrated it and cleared the atmosphere. . . .

As the attack of the centre and right commenced, the fire of our heavy guns had first to be directed to the right, and then gradually to cease, but at one time the thunder of full 120 pieces of ordnance reverberated in this mighty combat through the valley of the Sutlej, and it was soon seen that the weight of the whole force within the Sikh camp was likely to be thrown upon the two brigades that had passed its trenches; it became necessary to convert into close and serious attacks the demonstration with skirmishers and artillery of the centre and right. The Sikhs, even when at particular points their entrenchments were mastered with the bayonet, strove to regain them by the fiercest conflict, sword in hand. Nor was it until the cavalry of the left, under Major-Gen. Sir Joseph Thackwell, had moved forward and ridden through the openings of the entrenchments made by our Sappers, in single file, and re-formed as they passed them; and the 3d Dragoons, whom no obstacles usually held formidable by horse appear to check, had, on this day, as at Ferozeshah, galloped over and cut down the obstinate defenders of batteries and field-works; and until the full weight of three divisions of infantry, with every field artillery gun which could be sent to their aid, had been cast into the scale, that victory finally declared for the British. The fire of the Sikhs first slackened, and then nearly ceased, and the victors pressing them on every side, precipitated them in masses over their bridge, and into the Sutlej, which a sudden rise of seven inches had rendered hardly fordable. In their efforts to reach the right bank through the deepened water they suffered from our horse artillery a terrible carnage. Hundreds fell under this cannonade; hundreds upon hundreds were drowned in attempting the perilous passage. Their awful slaughter, confusion, and dismay were such as would have excited compassion in the hearts of their generous conquerors, if the Khalsa troops had not, in the early part of the action, sullied their gallantry by slaughtering and barbarously mangling every wounded soldier whom in the vicissitudes of attack the fortune of war left at their mercy." Total British killed, 320; wounded, 2,063.

14.—Came on for trial in the Court of Queen's Bench the action of breach of promise of marriage raised against Earl Ferrers by Mary Elizabeth Smith, daughter of a private gentleman in Warwickshire. A number of letters breathing the warmest affection were produced in support of the case; but it turned out on further inquiry that they had been written by the fair plaintiff herself, and did not even pretend to be in imitation of his lordship's handwriting. She appeared to have commenced with addressing anonymous letters to Earl Ferrers when living with his tutor at Austrey, and having once involved herself and her friends in a scheme of deception she sought to complete it by getting the young nobleman to appear as if he had definitively fixed the happy day. Four of these anonymous letters were produced in court, and explained all which up to that moment was in doubt and confusion. The plaintiff's mother spoke to the letters having been received from Earl Ferrers, but they were always shown to her by her daughter; nor had she on any one occasion ever seen the parties together. The letters were of this description:—"My lord, strange it may seem to you, no doubt, to receive a note from a stranger, and a lady too, but it signifies little to me, as I know well you never knew the writer of this, nor never saw her. Now, for what I have to tell you. It is this: there is a public ball at Tamworth every Christmas, generally about the 6th or 8th of January. Go—I advise you to go. There will, to my knowledge, be a young lady at the ball whom I wish you to see and dance with. She is very beautiful, has dark hair and eyes—in short, she is haughty and graceful as a Spaniard, tall and majestic as a Circassian, beautiful as an Italian. I can say no more. You have only to see her to love her. That you must do. She is fit for the bride of a prince. Go, look well round the room. You will find her of this description. She may wear one white rose in her dark hair. If you see her not there, you will never see her, as she is like a violet hid amid many bowers, only to be found when sought for. I know that she is young, and it is my wish that she should have some one to protect her." It was established in evidence that the plaintiff, when dressing for the Tamworth Christmas ball, was particular about having a white rose in her hair. Four other letters purporting to come from the defendant's brother, Devereux Shirley, were proved to be not in his handwriting, and were full, besides, of the most flagrant inventions as to persons whom he did not know, and places he had never seen. These letters were also the work of the plaintiff. At this stage of the proceedings, being the fourth day of the trial, the Solicitor-General stated that he felt it was due to himself and all concerned to abandon the case, because he could not, after such disclosures, continue to conduct it. A nonsuit was accordingly entered, and four of the letters impounded preparatory to an indictment for conspiracy being preferred against the plaintiff and others concerned with her in concocting the case.

14. The Governor-General of India issues a proclamation from Kussoor : "The Sikh army has been expelled from the left bank of the river Sutlej, having been defeated in every action, with the loss of more than 220 pieces of field artillery. The British army has crossed the Sutlej and entered the Punjaub. The Governor-General announces by this proclamation that this measure has been adopted by the Government of India in accordance with the intentions expressed in the proclamation of the 13th Dec." On the 19th his Excellency received the Rajah Gholab Singh in durbar, as the representative of an offending government, when the following conditions were demanded on behalf of the British Government and conceded :—The surrender in full sovereignty of the territory, hill and plain, lying between the Sutlej and Beas rivers, and the payment of one crore and a half of rupees as indemnity for expenses of the war ; the disbandment of the existing Sikh army, and its reorganization on the system and regulation with regard to pay which obtained in the time of the late Maharajah Runjeet Singh ; the surrender of all the guns that have been pointed against the British army. "As on the occasion of the Rajah's visit, I omitted the usual salute to the Maharajah, and curtailed the other customary ceremonies on his arrival at my tent, causing it to be explained that, until submission had been distinctly tendered by the Maharajah in person, he could not be recognised and received as a friendly prince." In another proclamation, dated from Lahore, Feb. 22, the Governor-General intimates : "The army of the Sutlej has now brought its operations in the field to a close, by the dispersion of the Sikh army, and the military occupation of Lahore, preceded by a series of the most triumphant successes ever recorded in the military history of India. . . . The soldiers of the army of the Sutlej have not only proved their superior prowess in battle, but have, on every occasion, with subordination and patience, endured the fatigues and privations inseparable from a state of active operations in the field. The native troops of this army have also proved that a faithful attachment to their colours and to the Company's service is an honourable feature in the character of the British Sepoy."

16.—James Bostock, a brass and gun-metal founder, shot by his apprentice, Wicks, in Pitt's-place, Drury-lane. The lad was executed on the 30th March.

— Philarète Horeau, a Frenchman living at Camberwell, murders his three children, and then commits suicide by cutting his throat. At the coroner's inquest Mrs. Horeau, who had escaped from the house and alarmed the neighbours, said her husband must have committed these crimes under great excitement caused by extreme want, being often unable to supply the children with food. He acted as a teacher of languages in the country, but latterly had not been able to procure a situation. They had pawned and sold everything they had to procure food, the last article they had left being pawned on Saturday.

16.—The Duke of Richmond informs the House of Lords that the Anti-Corn-law League will never be dissolved until it has destroyed the Church and every other institution in the country.

18.—Westminster election carried in favour of the ministry, and, on the 25th, South Notts against them, Lord Lincoln being defeated by a majority of 687. With reference to this contest the Duke of Newcastle writes : "I deeply lament that any member of my family should be the cause of this most unnecessary agitation. Lord Lincoln has been the deluded victim of bad counsel, and in no instance more conspicuously than in the course which he has pursued upon the present occasion. Under this influence he has been induced to accept an inferior office, that his seat may be vacated, and a desperate experiment attempted. I suggest to Lord Lincoln the propriety of withdrawing from a ceaseless and, to all, most painful struggle against a long-tried and approved principle and policy, and at once to restore tranquillity to the country, and the undisturbed possession of its unquestionable avocations."

23.—In introducing the Irish Coercion Bill, Lord St. Germans stated that during the years 1844-45 there had been 242 cases of firing at the person ; 1,048 cases of aggravated assault ; 710 robberies of arms ; 79 bands of men appearing in arms ; 282 of administering unlawful oaths ; 2,306 of sending threatening letters ; 737 cases of attacking houses ; and 205 cases of firing into houses. The chief seat of these outrages was the centre of the island, in the district extending from Cavan on the north to Tipperary on the south. He proposed to give the Lord Lieutenant power to proclaim any district where crime abounded ; inns and taverns therein to be subject to search ; all persons found out of their houses between sunset and sunrise to be liable to apprehension ; and authorizing his Excellency to assign a sum of money out of the rates to the relations of a murdered man.

24.—Wrecked off Corunna the Peninsular and Oriental steam mail-ship, the Great Liverpool. The passengers were all landed, except those lost in the surf on the beach by the swamping of a launch. The mail was also saved, but considerably damaged.

27.—Payment of the railway deposits of 10 per cent. on capital commenced at the office of the Accountant-General. In consequence of the formalities required to be gone through, the amount, the first day, was not so large as was expected. At 4 o'clock on the afternoon of the 29th, when the statutory period expired, the amount paid reached the enormous total of 11,492,000*l.*

27.—After a debate extending over twelve nights, the first reading of Sir Robert Peel's Free-trade resolutions was carried by a majority of 337 to 240. Mr. Cobden spoke this evening. Lord George Bentinck closed the debate, having spoken for nearly three hours and a half beyond midnight, amid great interruption. There was also a personal altercation between Mr. Ferrand and Mr. Roebuck, in the course of which Mr. Disraeli said of the member for Bath: "We know that the tree must bring forth its fruit, that a crab-tree will produce crab-apples, and that a meagre and acid mind, if it produce a pamphlet or make a speech, will give evidence of its meagre and acid intelligence. When the honourable and learned gentleman (Mr. Roebuck) says no one can impute to him conduct not permitted by the rules of the House, I say it is totally incorrect. I am stating what many know to be true; but perhaps the honourable and learned gentleman has become the instructor-general as well as the inquisitor-general of the House. I say that this melodramatic malignity, and Sadlers Wells' sarcasm, which are so easy to put on—this wagging the finger and bating the breath—this speaking daggers, but using none, is all very fine; and if it came from one justified in employing such language and using such gestures, I should say they were simply ridiculous; but coming from the quarter they do, they are not only ridiculous but offensive."

March 2.—The thanks of both Houses voted to the Indian army for its triumphs at Moodkee and Ferozeshah. "Sir Robert Sale," said the Premier, "whom all admired for his heroic achievements at Jellalabad, has closed in these victories a long career of military glory by a death which he foresaw and which he even wished for. 'Felix etiam in opportunitate mortis.'"

3.—Mr. Villiers's motion for an immediate repeal of the Corn-laws negatived by a majority of 78 to 265.

6.—At Durham assizes, Margaret Stoker, a young woman, was found guilty of murdering her child. The case gave rise to considerable discussion in connexion with the administration of the new Poor-law. The unfortunate woman gave this account of the occurrence before the coroner:—"I was coming home from my place, and was going to my father's. When I was going over a beck I was very much in trouble, and I did not know what I was to do with the child; I had no place to take it to. I put it into the beck, and went to my father. He asked me where the child was, and I could not tell him. He said I must go back and seek it; so I came away at seven o'clock in the morning to seek it. I came along by the burn-side, and I saw my child lying in the burn, and I could not take it out myself, so I went to this person and asked her to take it out for me, and she took it out of the beck, and I fetched it into the stable. I went before magistrates, and all things, wanting to go into the poorhouse; they would not let me go, and I could get nothing to keep it on. I was fairly banished to do this. I only wish to say this further: I was in a great deal of trouble when I did this; I had no place to put my head in; I had been knocked about from dog to devil, and nothing to pay for a night's lodging. I was paying 2s. a week for the bairn, and had only 2s. 4d. a week for myself."

22.—Died at his residence, Knightsbridge, aged 70, John Liston, comedian.

24.—The Times writes:—"The anxiety and excitement among the holders of railway shares are such as to make it difficult to convey a just idea of them to the public at large. To sell any shares connected with new lines has become almost impossible at any sacrifice, and the only relief that the greater part of holders now hope for is the throwing out of the bills before Parliament, and the rendering an account of the funds that remain unappropriated. This feeling exists even with respect to those lines which a few months back were regarded as the most promising; and the men of property who happen to have embarked in such undertakings find themselves considerably worse off than adventurers without capital, since they foresee that in the event of bills being obtained the weight of the whole concern must be thrown upon them. Probably there is not a single new company at this moment in which the majority of shareholders would not vote for abandonment."

— President Polk, in view of the warlike preparations being made by Britain, and in the still unsettled state of the Oregon question, sends a special message to Congress, recommending a large increase of the naval and military forces of the Union.

27.—The second reading of the Corn Importation Bill carried by a majority of 88 in a house of 516.

April 1.—A salute of fifty guns fired from the Tower of London in honour of Sir Harry Smith's newly-announced victory of Aliwal. At the Wellington Barracks the troops were formed into square, and the adjutant read from the Gazette the despatch of the Governor-General describing the battle.

2.—The thanks of both Houses voted to the army of India for the victories of Aliwal and Soobraon.

9.—The Archbishop of Canterbury issues a form of prayer and thanksgiving for the Indian victories.

13.—Commenced a curious series of bigamy trials in the Dublin Commission Court. In 1813 Mary Jane Scott married one Carter; in 1821 she married Galway, Carter being alive; and in 1833 she married Scott, both Carter and Galway being alive. Shortly after the last marriage she was indicted for marrying Scott, Galway being alive, and escaped by producing Carter, and proving him and not Galway to be her real husband. She was now indicted for marrying Galway, Carter being alive, and escaped by proving the marriage with Carter invalid; and lastly, for marrying Scott, Carter being alive, from which she escaped on the same ground.

14.—Famine riots in many towns in Ireland. A person writing from Clonmel records:—"You can have no idea of the state this town is in since six o'clock this morning. We have cannon at either end of the town, and the streets are full of soldiers and police. This morning the mob broke into every baker's shop in the place, and took out all the food they could lay their hands on. The banks and shops are all shut, and the town in a state of siege." Report from Carrick-on-Suir:—"This town is in a horrible state. The populace rose and broke into all the meal and provision stores, and afterwards into the shops generally. Unfortunately our resident magistrate was absent from town, and there was no one could bring the military out. The mob had it all their own way, and the town looks as if it had been sacked by an army." From Mayo the news is that the gaunt and long-dreaded scourge of famine had at length broke out. At Castlebar market potatoes were from $2\frac{1}{2}d.$ to $5d.$ per stone, and oatmeal from $13s.$ to $16s.$ per cwt. A boat proceeding from Limerick to Clare was attacked by a body of starving peasants, and plundered of her cargo of corn and Indian flour.

16.—Lecomte attempts to assassinate the King of the French, by firing at his Majesty when driving through the forest of Fontainebleau in a char-à-banc.

19.—The House of Representatives pass a bill providing for the occupation of the Oregon territory.

28.—Mr. Smith O'Brien committed to the custody of the Serjeant-at-Arms for contempt of the House, in so far as he had refused to attend a committee named for sitting on certain railway bills.

—Royal message laid on the table of both Houses, recommending provision to be made for Lord Hardinge and Lord Gough, whose public services her Majesty was desirous of rewarding. On the 4th of May Sir Robert Peel's proposal for granting an annual sum of 3,000*l.* to the first named, and 2,000*l.* to the second, was accepted by the House of Commons.

May 1.—Lord Lincoln returned for the Falkirk District of Burghs by a majority of 11 over Mr. Wilson, Dundyvan.

—The first reading of the Irish Coercion Bill carried in the House of Commons by a majority of 274 to 125.

2.—Mr. Hudson's railway work. Under his direction the shareholders in the Midland Company gave their approval to twenty-six bills which they had presently in Parliament. On the following Monday, at ten o'clock, the York and North Midland sanctioned six bills and affirmed various deeds and agreements affecting the Manchester and Leeds and Hull and Selby Companies. Fifteen minutes later he induced the Newcastle and Darlington Company to approve of seven bills and accompanying agreements; and at half-past ten took his seat as controlling power at the board of the Newcastle and Berwick. During a portion of two days he obtained the consent of shareholders to forty bills, involving an expenditure of about 10,000,000*l.*

2.—Eliza Clark, aged 24, wife of a porter living in Chelsea, throws three of her children over Battersea Bridge, and is seized at the moment she was attempting to throw herself into the river. One of the children was got out alive, but the other two were drowned. The poor woman had been subjected to a course of brutal treatment by a profligate husband, and was besides in a state of extreme destitution. The coroner's jury returned a verdict of wilful murder, but on her trial at the Central Criminal Court, on the 15th, she was acquitted on the ground of insanity.

8.—General Taylor defeats the Mexicans at Palo Alto.

13.—War declared against Mexico by the United States. Congress voted ten millions of dollars to carry it on, and authorized an addition of 7,000 to the regular army. The services of volunteers to the number of 50,000 would also be accepted.

15.—The Corn Importation Bill carried through the House of Commons by a majority of 98 in a house of 556. At the close of a long speech crammed with statistics, Mr. Disraeli made another attack on the Premier. "The right hon. baronet had been a trader on other people's intelligence. His life was, in fact, one great principle of appropriation—the political burglar of other men's ideas—and after deserting his friends acting as if they had deserted him. The occupants of the Treasury benches were political pedlars, who had bought their party in the cheapest market and sold it in the dearest. This betrayal of their friends would lead to the loss of all confidence in public men. The first day after the right hon. gentleman made his exposition to this House a gentleman well known and learned in all the political secrets behind the scenes met me, and said, 'What do you think of your chief's plan?' I said I did not exactly know what to say about it, but, to use the phrase of the hour, I supposed it was a great and comprehensive plan. 'Oh,' he replied, 'we know all about it: it is not his plan at all; it is Popkin's plan.' And, Sir, is England to be governed and convulsed for Popkin's plan? Will he appeal to the people on such a plan? Will (105)

he appeal to that ancient and famous England, which was once governed by statesmen such as Burleigh and Walsingham, Bolingbroke and Walpole, Chatham and Canning? Will he appeal to England on a fantastic scheme of some pedant? I will not believe it."—In addressing the House towards the close of the debate, Sir Robert Peel said:—"I foresaw that the course which I had taken from a sense of public duty would expose me to serious sacrifices. I foresaw, as its inevitable result, that I must forfeit friendships which I highly valued, that I must interrupt political relations in which I took a sincere pride; but the smallest penalty which I contemplated was the continued venomous attacks of the member for Shrewsbury. Sir, I will only say of that hon. gentleman that if he, after reviewing the whole of my political life—a life of thirty years before my accession to office in 1841—if he then entertained the opinion of me which he now professes, it is surprising that in 1841, after that long experience of my public career, he should have been prepared to give me his confidence. It is still more surprising that he should have been ready, as I think he was, to unite his fortunes with mine in office, thus implying the strongest proof which any public man can give of confidence in the honour and integrity of a minister of the Crown." Mr. Disraeli denied that he had ever been directly an applicant for place in 1841, or at any other time.

16.—Fatal affray at Bird Hill, Tipperary, between the police, acting under the orders of the sub-sheriff of the county, and the servants of one Munsell, a sub-tenant, who was made the subject of an action of ejection. The house was barricaded and an entrance refused. After some delay the police fired, and killed four of those inside. A detachment of forty soldiers was also present, but their services were not required, as the besieged party capitulated almost immediately after the police fired.

21.—At a meeting of Protectionists, held in Willis's Rooms, the Duke of Richmond announced that Lord Stanley was to be the leader of their party in the House of Lords.

25.—At five minutes before three o'clock this afternoon the Queen was safely delivered of a princess.

— Prince Louis Napoleon escapes from the fortress of Ham in the disguise of a workman, and proceeds to Belgium.

— Collision in the Mersey between the Sea Nymph, of Newry, and the Rambler, of Sligo, the latter having on board about 250 emigrants for America. Many of them were crushed to death in the collision, and several others were drowned out of a small boat which they had taken possession of when the vessel was run ashore.

26.—Debate in the House of Lords on the second reading of the Corn Importation Bill.

The Duke of Richmond denied that the great body of the operatives in the country were in favour of such a measure. "The Anti-Corn-law League had never dared to have an open meeting in Manchester. In the very hot-bed of their own sedition they would not trust their own operatives to have a public meeting without being admitted by tickets. The measure was only the first of a series of attacks that would shake the foundations of the throne, cripple the Church, endanger the institutions of the country, and plunge a happy and contented people into misery, confusion, and anarchy."—Lord Stanley said it was for their lordships to check hasty and ill-considered legislation, and to "protect the people against the teaching of those whom they had chosen to represent their opinions, and the best reward you can have will be the approval of your own consciences in having done your duty; but there will be another reward in the approbation and the thanks of a grateful and admiring people, who will then justly exclaim, 'Thank God, we have a House of Lords.'" The most prominent speaker in favour of the bill was Lord Brougham, who described Sir Robert Peel as one of the greatest ministers who ever ruled over the destinies of a country.

28.—The second reading of the Corn Importation Bill carried through the House of Lords by a majority of 47. In supporting the bill, the Duke of Wellington said, "I shall ever lament any breaking up of the habits of confidence in public life with which your lordships have honoured me, but I will not allow this occasion to pass, even if this night should possibly be the last upon which I shall give you my advice, without giving my counsels as to the vote which I think your lordships should give on this occasion."

29.—Public meeting in Edinburgh, called to consider the gift of certain sums of money to the Free Church by slave-holding congregations in America. Mr. G. Thomson made a vehement appeal to the Church to send back the money.

June 1.—Died at Rome, aged 80, his Holiness Pope Gregory XVI. (Mauro Capellari). He was elected on the 2d February, 1831.

4.—About ten o'clock this evening, as a company of nine persons were crossing Ulverstone Sands to Flookburg, on their return from the fair, they missed their way after fording the channel, and fell into a hole known as the "Black Scar." Horse, cart, and passengers went down and never rose again.

5.—Ibrahim Pacha arrives at Portsmouth on a visit to England. On landing he was presented with an address by the Corporation, making special allusion to the facilities afforded to England by his father, for keeping up a constant and uninterrupted communication with India. His Highness remained in Portsmouth till the 8th, visiting in the interim the dockyard, bakery, and Nelson's ship the Victory. On arriving in London with his suite he took up his residence in Mivart's Hotel, and visited most of the places of interest in and around the metropolis. He dined with her Majesty on the 11th, and afterwards with the Oriental Steam Navigation Company, and the East India Company.

6.—Meeting of Lord John Russell's supporters, at his residence, Chesham-place. It was unanimously resolved to oppose the Irish Coercion Bill in its future stages; and support was also promised to his lordship's motion for the admission of slave-grown sugar into this country at the same amount of duty as was levied on free-trade sugar.

8.—Lecomte guillotined at the Barrier St. Jacques, for attempting to assassinate King Louis Philippe. Although the time of the execution was understood to have been kept secret, about 4,000 people were present.

— On the motion that the Irish Coercion Bill be read a second time, Sir W. Somerville proposed as an amendment that it be read a second time that day six months.—Lord George Bentinck said he and his friends had declared before the Easter holidays that they would support the measure if the Government pressed it forward with sincerity and earnestness, but he also said that if, on the contrary, they allowed other measures of less importance to take precedence of it, he could not think them sincere in their support of so unconstitutional a measure, which nothing but the most urgent necessity could justify. They had allowed six weeks to elapse before they took any steps to advance its progress, and when it stood for the second reading they did not care to make a House on a Government night. From this it must be admitted that they had shown no great desire or earnestness to carry the bill. On these grounds his party were now determined to oppose the measure. "We have been told by the right hon. gentleman at the head of the Government that he would not consent to be a minister on sufferance. Why, Sir, the right hon. gentleman must be deaf to all that is passing around him if he does not find out very soon that he is in that position. Do we not find him appealing from one side of the House to the other? Is he not supported sometimes by the hon. gentlemen opposite, and sometimes by the hon. gentlemen around him? His main supporters are his paid janissaries, and some seventy other auxiliaries, who, while they support him, express disgust at his conduct. When we remember Sir Robert Peel's conduct in 1825, in 1827, and 1829, though by long sitting on the stool of repentance we might forgive him, the country will not twice forgive such crimes in the same man. It is time that atonement should be made to the insulted country, to an insulted parliament, and to the betrayed constituency of the empire."

9.—Fire at St. John's, Newfoundland, laying waste a large part of the city, and consuming property valued at 1,000,000*l.* Several lives were also lost.

12.—In the course of the adjourned debate on the Coercion Bill, Sir Robert Peel replied to the personal charge of having hunted Mr. Canning to death. The whole of the charge, he said, directed against him of having stated in 1829 that he told Lord Liverpool in 1828 he had changed his opinion on Catholic Emancipation, was wholly without foundation. On the 15th the charge was renewed by Mr. Disraeli, who contrasted the speech of Sir Robert as reported in the "Mirror of Parliament," and as reported in "Hansard." In the latter, which was stated to have been revised by Mr. Secretary Peel, the words referring to the statement made to Lord Liverpool were omitted. He was not surprised that his noble friend, Lord George Bentinck, felt so deeply as he did with reference to Mr. Canning. "When would they see another Mr. Canning,—a man who ruled that House as a high-bred steed? The temper of the House was not now as spirited as it was then, and he was not therefore surprised that the vulture ruled where once the eagle reigned. The right hon. gentleman had said that Ireland was his greatest difficulty. He must be reminded of that by his present position. He must feel that it was Nemesis who regulated that division, and who was about to stamp with the seal of parliamentary reprobation the catastrophe of a sinister career."

— Decided in the Court of Exchequer the case of Walstob v. Spottiswoode, establishing the liability of provisional committees not only to pay all the expenses incurred in connexion with bubble-schemes, but to return the deposits.

— With a view to the speedy and satisfactory settlement of the Oregon boundary question, President Polk, acting on the advice of the Senate, accepts the convention submitted by Mr. Pakenham on behalf of the British Government; the United States to possess up to 49° N. latitude, leaving to England the navigation of the Columbia.

13.—On her voyage to America, the Great Britain screw steamer runs this day 330 knots, being an average of nearly sixteen statute miles per hour.

14.—Re-election of Mr. Macaulay for Edinburgh, on the occasion of his accepting the office of Paymaster-General in the new Cabinet. At four o'clock the poll stood: Macaulay, 1,735; Sir C. E. Smith, 832.

15.—Private White, of the 7th Hussars, flogged at Hounslow Barracks. He had been sentenced to 150 lashes for striking his sergeant across the chest with a poker, and the whole number was administered by two farriers, in presence of the men, and under the inspection of Dr. Warren, the surgeon of the regiment. At the conclusion White was able to walk to the hospital with a little assistance, but he got worse there, and expired on the 11th July. A regimental post-mortem examination was made, and a certificate signed that death resulted from inflammation of the pleura, and was in no way connected with the corporal punishment to which he had been subjected. The coroner (Mr. Wakley) and Mr. Erasmus Wilson took a different view of the matter; the latter giving it as his opinion that, so far as appearances went, White might still have been alive but for the severe corporal punishment he had endured. The coroner's jury returned a verdict to this effect, and urged upon the people the necessity of petitioning Parliament to put a stop to the cruel practice. White's comrades erected a stone in Helston churchyard as "a testimonial of their deep commiseration of his fate, and out of respect to his memory."

16.—Sir Robert Peel writes to the artist Haydon:—"I am sorry to hear of your continued embarrassments. From a limited fund which I have at my disposal, I send, as a contribution for your relief from these embarrassments, the sum of 50*l*." It was on this day Haydon recorded in his journal:—"Sat from two to five o'clock staring at my picture like an idiot, my brain pressed down by anxiety, and the anxious looks of my family, whom I have been compelled to inform of my condition. I have written to Sir Robert Peel, to —, &c. &c. Who answered first? Tormented by Disraeli; harassed by public business; up came a letter from Sir Robert Peel."

17.—Rowland Hill entertained at Blackwall, and presented with 13,000*l*. as a national testimonial for his services in suggesting and carrying into execution the system of uniform penny postage.

18.—Formal opening of the North British Railway from Edinburgh to Berwick.

19.—Cardinal Jean Marie Mastai elected Pope, by the conclave of the Sacred College, and occupies the chair of St. Peter under the title of Pius IX.

— Sir Robert Peel enters into a long personal explanation with reference to the charges brought against him by Lord George Bentinck and Mr. Disraeli. Regarding the first count in the indictment, that, though he had vigorously opposed Catholic Emancipation in 1827, he had yet written a letter to Lord Liverpool in 1825, stating that he had changed his opinion on the Catholic question, and that the time was come for a settlement, Sir Robert denied that he had ever made any such intimation by letter or otherwise, and produced letters from Lord Liverpool of the date in question, utterly irreconcilable with the idea that such communication had been made. As regarded the discrepancy in the reports of his speech, he showed that the "Mirror of Parliament," founded on by Mr. Disraeli, was not an independent authority, but a transcript of the Times, which on the point in question differed from all the other morning papers. "If the honourable gentleman, twenty years after the death of Mr. Canning, is parading those feelings of affection for his memory, for the purpose of wounding a political opponent, he is desecrating feelings which are in themselves entitled to esteem and respect; and so far from succeeding in his purpose of inflicting a blow on me, my firm belief is that he is rallying round me a degree of public sympathy, and bringing upon himself nothing but indignation at the time, and the circumstances and the motives which have led to this charge being made."

22.—B. R. Haydon commits suicide by firing a pistol into his head, and then cutting his throat. Repeated disappointment to his ambition as an artist, a continued course of what appeared to him obstinate misconception and prejudice on the part of the public, and the irritating pressure of pecuniary embarrassments, all combined to embitter his later years, and tended to produce that disorder of the intellect which some unsuspected and slight disappointment seemed to urge beyond the limits of self-restraint. A diary which he had kept for many years was written up to the last minute of his life, the closing entry being "June 22.—God forgive me. Amen. Finis. B. R. Haydon. Stretch me no longer on this rough world!" Letters to his wife, family, and friends were also left in his studio, where the fatal deed was committed. The coroner's jury returned a verdict that the unfortunate artist had died from wounds inflicted by himself, but that he was in an unsound state of mind at the time. They found the body lying before the painter's colossal picture, "Alfred the Great and the First British Jury," on which he appeared to have been engaged during the forenoon.

25.—The third reading of the Corn Importation Bill carried in the House of Lords without a division. The Customs Duties Bill, a companion measure, was also passed without a division. The royal assent was given next day.

— Ministers defeated in the House of Commons on the Irish Coercion Bill, by a majority of 73—292 against 219.

27.—General rejoicing throughout the commercial districts at the passing of the Corn Bill.

29.—Police-constable George Clarke murdered on his beat at Dagenham, by some person or persons unknown, who had also mangled the body in the most shocking and bloodthirsty manner.

— Sir Robert Peel informs the House of Commons of the resignation of his Ministry in consequence of the adverse vote on the Coercion Bill. He also intimates that her Majesty had been pleased to entrust Lord John Russell with the formation of a new Cabinet. In the course of his address, Sir Robert said: "I admit that the withdrawal of the confidence of many of our friends was the natural result of the measures we proposed; and I do think, when proposals of such a nature are made, apparently at variance with the course which Ministers heretofore have pursued, and subjecting them to the charge or taunt of inconsistency, upon the whole it is advantageous for the country and for the genuine character of public men, that the proposal of measures of that kind, under such circumstances, should entail that which is supposed to be a fitting punishment; namely, expulsion from office. I therefore do not complain of it: anything is preferable to attempting to maintain ourselves in office without a full measure of the confidence of this House. (Cheers.) As I said before, Sir, in reference to our proposing these measures, I have no wish to rob any person of the credit which is justly due to him for them. But I may say, that neither the gentlemen sitting on the benches opposite, nor myself, nor the gentlemen sitting around me—I say that neither of us are the parties who are strictly entitled to the merit. There has been a combination of parties, and that combination of parties, together with the influence of the Government, has led to the ultimate success of the measures. But, Sir, there is a name which ought to be associated with their success. It is not the name of the noble lord the member for the City of London, neither is it my name. Sir, the name which ought to be, and which will be, associated with the success of these measures, is the name of a man who, acting, I believe, from pure and disinterested motives, has advocated their cause with untiring energy, and by appeals to reason enforced by an eloquence the more to be desired because it was unaffected and unadorned—the name which ought to be, and will be, associated with the success of these measures, is the name of Richard Cobden. (Loud cheers.) Without scruple, Sir, I attribute the success of these measures to him.” In concluding his address, the right honourable baronet said: “I shall leave office, I fear, with a name severely censured by many honourable gentlemen, who, on public principle, deeply regret the severance of party-ties, not from any interested or personal motives, but because they believe fidelity to party-engagements—the existence and maintenance of a great party—to constitute a powerful instrument of government; I shall surrender power severely censured, I fear, by many hon. gentlemen, who, from no interested motives, have adhered to the principle of Protection as important to the welfare and interest of the country. I shall leave a name execrated by every monopolist, who, from less honourable motives, maintains Protection for his own individual benefit; but it may be that I shall leave a name sometimes remembered with expressions of goodwill in those places which are the abode of men whose lot it is to labour and to earn their daily bread by the sweat of their brow—a name remembered with expressions of goodwill when they shall recreate their exhausted strength with abundant and untaxed food, the sweeter because it is no longer leavened with a sense of injustice.”

29.—Meetings of the Liberal party, held at the residence of Lord John Russell, and at Brookes's Club.

July 1.—Publication of the Report of the Select Committee of the House of Lords, appointed to take into consideration the best means of enforcing one uniform system of management on railroads, and to secure the due fulfilment of the provisions of the Acts of Parliament under which the companies had obtained their power. After describing the deficiencies of the present system, the Committee recommended the creation of a department in the Executive for considering and controlling the entire railway system of the country.

2.—The Anti-Corn-law League formally dissolved, with the exception of a Committee, nominated to call the members together in the event of any sudden and unforeseen emergency demanding exertion. 10,000*l.* voted to Mr. Wilson for his services as chairman.

3.—Lord John Russell issues his address to the electors of the City of London. He trusted that “the measures of commercial freedom which still remain to be accomplished will not occasion the renewal of angry conflict. The Government of this country ought to behold with an impartial eye the various portions of the community engaged in agriculture, in manufacture, and in commerce. The feeling that any of them is treated with injustice provokes ill-will, disturbs legislation, and directs attention from many useful and necessary reforms. Great social improvements are required: public education is lamentably imperfect; the treatment of criminals is a problem yet undecided; the sanitary condition of our towns and villages has been grossly neglected. The administration of our colonies demands the most earnest and deliberate attention. Our recent discussions have laid bare the misery, the discontent, and outrages in Ireland. They are too clearly authenticated to be denied—too extensive to be treated by any but the most comprehensive measures.”

4.—Sir Robert Peel to Lord Hardinge in India:—“You will see that we are out-defeated by a combination of Whigs and Protectionists. A much less emphatic hint would have sufficed for me. I would not have held office by sufferance for a week. Were I to write a quire of paper, I could not recount to you what has passed with half so much detail and accuracy as the public papers will recount it. There are no secrets. We have fallen in the face of day, and with our front to the enemy. There is nothing I would not have done to insure the carrying of the measures I had proposed this session. I pique myself on never having proposed anything which I have not carried. But the moment their success was insured, and I had the satisfaction of seeing two drowsy Masters in Chancery mumble out at the table of the House of Commons that the Lords had passed the Corn and Customs Bills, I was satisfied."

6.—Died, Chief Justice Sir N. C. Tindal, aged 69.

9.—During a severe thunderstorm, the East Wheel Rose silver and lead mine, near Truro, was flooded, and thirty-nine of the workmen drowned, being the whole of those in the lower levels. The water gathered from the surrounding hills in huge masses, and poured down the shaft till the workings were flooded to above the 50-fathom level.

13.—The most of the new ministers took the oaths and their seat after re-election. Among those present, were Lord John Russell, First Lord of the Treasury; Sir George Grey, Home Secretary; Lord Palmerston, Foreign Secretary; and Mr. C. Wood, Chancellor of the Exchequer. A new writ was issued for the election of a member for the borough of St. Ives, in room of Mr. M. Praed, deceased.

16.—Lieut. Hawkey, the surviving principal in the Gosport duel, having surrendered to take his trial, was arraigned before Mr. Baron Platt for the wilful murder of Capt. Seaton. The learned judge summed up adversely to the accused on the law of the case, but favourably with regard to the evidence showing provocation. The jury returned a verdict of Not guilty. Lieut. Hawkey was afterwards restored to his commission.

20.—Lord John Russell introduces the new Sugar Duties Bill. Instead of the old prohibiting duty of 63s., and a protecting duty of 23s. 4d., he proposed that there should be upon all foreign Muscovado sugar a duty of 21s. per cwt., and that that duty should gradually diminish from 21s. in 1847, to 15s. 6d. in 1851, and that from July of the latter year the smaller duty of 14s. should apply to all Muscovado sugar.

27.—Split in the Repeal Association—the Young Ireland party attaching themselves to Smith O'Brien, and the old to O'Connell. In one of the many scenes of confusion which took place during the proceedings, Mr. Meagher indignantly repudiated the notion that the sword should not be resorted to in extreme cases. Smith O'Brien's party left the hall. The Liberator himself appeared at the next weekly meeting, and besought true Repealers not to be led away by physical-force enthusiasts, and also to give the present Government a fair trial, for he knew they had many good measures in preparation.

—Discussion in the House of Commons on Lord George Bentinck's amendment to the Government resolutions on the Sugar Duties—"That in the present state of the sugar cultivation in the British East and West Indian possessions, the proposed reduction of duty upon foreign slave-grown sugar is alike unjust and impolitic, as tending to check the advance of production by British free-labour, and to give a great additional stimulus to slave-labour." On a division the amendment was rejected by 265 to 135 votes.

29.—Another attempt made to assassinate the King of the French by Joseph Henri, who fired while his Majesty was bowing on the balcony of the Tuileries to the multitude who assembled to commemorate the anniversary of the Revolution of 1830. Henri was arrested instantly and conveyed to prison. He was sentenced to hard labour for life.

30.—Prince Albert visits Liverpool, and opens the dock bearing his Royal Highness's name. Next day he fulfilled the main purpose of his journey, by laying the foundation stone of the Sailors' Home.

August 1.—Serious storm of hail, rain, and thunder in the metropolis. At Buckingham Palace the glass in the picture gallery was totally destroyed, and the apartment flooded with water. 7,000 panes of glass were broken in the New Houses of Parliament; 300 at the Police-Office, Scotland Yard, and no fewer than 10,000 at Burford's Panorama. The Surrey Theatre was so flooded that the evening performance could not be gone on with. The storm spread from London over a considerable breadth of country, but the damage done was trifling compared with that sustained by the metropolis.

6.—The Prussian town of Elbing having congratulated Sir Robert Peel on the successful issue of the Free-trade struggle, the right hon. baronet wrote in reply: "The social condition of that country which maintains with the greatest rigour the protective system will be opposed to the state of another which has adopted liberal principles, and the conviction of the value of such principles will not obtain unless by the encouragement of the freedom of exchange amongst all the nations of the world; the well-being of each individual will be increased, the will of Providence will be fulfilled—that Providence which has given to every country a sun, a climate, and a soil, each differing one from the other, not for the purpose of rendering them severally independent of each other, but, on the contrary, in order that they may feel their reciprocal dependence by the exchange of their respective products, thus causing them to enjoy the common blessings of Providence. It is thus that we find in commerce the means of advancing civilization, of appeasing jealousy and national prejudice, and of bringing about a universal peace, either from national interest or from Christian duty."

7.—Dr. Bowring's motion to abolish flogging in the army rejected by 90 votes to 37. Previous to the commencement of the discussion, Lord John Russell intimated that the Commander-in-Chief was about to issue an order prohibiting courts-martial from causing a greater number of lashes than fifty to be inflicted.

7.—Mr. Labouchere announces the intention of Government to introduce an Irish Arms Bill, to continue in effect till the 1st May. The measure excited considerable hostility, and was withdrawn on the 17th.

— From a return issued by order of the House of Commons, it appears that the total amount of subscriptions by persons who have subscribed 2,000*l.* and upwards to any railway subscription contract deposited in the Bill-Office during the present session is 121,255,374*l.* or. 8*d.* Mr. Hudson is represented as subscribing 818,540*l.* for twenty-three lines in which he was concerned.

10.—The Times publishes a list of the new railways authorized to be constructed in the present session, and showing that they involved an expenditure of 129,229,767*l.*

15.—Inauguration of the Scott Monument, Edinburgh. The spectacle was designed on a scale of unusual splendour, but the unpropitious state of the weather curtailed the ceremonial part of the proceedings. The procession, consisting of about 600 Freemasons, the Lord Provost and magistrates of Edinburgh, with deputations from numerous other incorporated bodies, passed from Lothian-road to the monument in Princes-street. Lord Glenlyon, the Grand Master, at the close of a short address, said his final duty was to hand over this monument, duly finished, to the care of the committee, and to the Lord Provost and magistrates of Edinburgh, as a testimony to the memory of the great novelist and minstrel, in whom Scotland has been so highly honoured. There was a banquet in the evening, presided over by Lord Provost Black.

— The Lord Chancellor causes intimation to be sent to Mr. O'Connell that if he wished to resume the office of a magistrate he was prepared to give the necessary instructions for replacing him on the Commission. The offer was accepted "with respectful gratitude." Fourteen other magistrates, who had been removed for attending or countenancing Repeal meetings, were restored at the same time.

16.—John Smith, cook, excited, as he admitted, by jealousy, murders Susan Tolliday, servant, in the kitchen of the Guildhall Coffee House, by stabbing her with a knife. He was tried at the Central Criminal Court on the 22nd, and sentenced to death, but afterwards had his sentence commuted.

17.—Lord John Russell introduces a ministerial measure relating to the relief and employment of the Irish poor. It gave power to the Lord Lieutenant to summon a meeting of the magistrates of any county or barony in which scarcity of employment was represented to exist, and empowered and required that meeting to order the execution of public works of the kind most needed in the locality, and of an extent proportionate to the deficiency of employment. The expense of the works so determined on was to be defrayed, in the first place, by a loan from the Treasury, to bear interest at three and a half per cent. and to be repaid in ten years. After the magistrates had determined on the nature and extent of the works to be erected, the operations were to be carried on under the superintendence of officers of the Government Board of Works. In cases where the locality in need of assistance was so poor as to be unable to bear the interest and repayment of a loan, grants might be given, and the sum of 50,000*l.* was proposed to be voted during the present year to meet such cases.

17.—Died, Sir Charles Wetherell, aged 76.

19.—The Evangelical Alliance commences its labours in Freemasons Hall, Great Queen-street, London. The condition of membership was agreement in what were understood to be "Evangelical" views in regard to questions of Christian doctrine.

21.—The Berwick branch of the North of England Joint-Stock Bank robbed of 1,000*l.* in Bank of England notes, 1,443*l.* in Scotch notes, 361*l.* 10*s.* in gold, and 1*l.* in silver. The greater part of the money was discovered secreted in and about the manager's house adjoining the bank, and his wife, Mrs. Thompson, was apprehended on suspicion of being concerned in the robbery. She was tried before the Recorder on October 26th, when the jury returned a verdict of Not guilty.

26.—Mendelssohn's "Elijah" performed for the first time at the Birmingham Festival. "Never," says the Times, "was there a more complete triumph—never a more thorough and speedy recognition of a great work of art. 'Elijah' is not only the chef-d'œuvre of Mendelssohn, but altogether one of the most extraordinary achievements of human intelligence."

27.—Capt. William Richardson, Chairman of the Tenbury, Worcester, and Ludlow Railway Company, brought up at the Mansion-house, charged with forging a cheque for 5,000*l.* on Coutts and Co. A cheque for a small amount, signed by the prisoner as chairman, and two other directors, had been altered to the larger, and the amount paid over in five notes. These were alleged to have been cashed by or for the prisoner at the Bank of England. He was committed for trial, but at the ensuing sessions of the Central Criminal Court the grand jury ignored the bill.

28.—Parliament prorogued by Commission. The Lord Chancellor read the Royal Speech.

— The Queen of Spain announces her intention of marrying her cousin, François d'Assis, Duke of Cadiz.

29.—Colonel Thornton, late of the East India Company's service, commits suicide by suspending himself to the grating of a police-cell, to which he had been conveyed on the charge of passing forged 5*l.* notes among the jewellers of Oxford-street. At a trial which took place at Guildhall next month, it turned out that Mr. Job, paper manufacturer, had supplied the deceased with as much paper as would make ten thousand notes. The most of it was seized at Alexandria, on its way to Cairo, where Thornton had an establishment.

September 9.—At a Protectionist dinner to Mr. Newdegate, in North Warwickshire, Lord George Bentinck says he thinks it possible that the potato failure is an act of just vengeance on the part of Almighty Providence for the impious ingratitude with which we had spoken of the last year's harvest.

11.—About two hundred men armed with scythes, pitchforks, and fire-arms, proceeded to a farm held under the Court of Chancery, near Clonoslee, Queen's County. Having driven back the keepers in charge of the crops, they placed the grain on drays and cars, and drove the whole off, firing several shots in satisfaction at their success.

12.—Death of Lord Metcalfe, aged 61.

14.—King Louis Philippe writes to his daughter, the Queen of the Belgians, explaining the position of France and England with reference to the Spanish double marriage: "The Queen has just received a letter, or rather a reply from Queen Victoria to the one you know she had written to her, and that reply greatly grieves me. I am inclined to believe that our good little Queen was as sorry to write such a letter as I was to read it. But she now only sees things through the spectacles of Lord Palmerston, and those spectacles distort and disfigure things too often. The great difference between the spectacles of the excellent Aberdeen and those of Lord Palmerston proceeds from the difference of their dispositions. Lord Aberdeen wished to be well with his friends; Lord Palmerston, I fear, wishes to quarrel with them. This is, my dear Louise, what caused my alarm respecting the maintenance of our cordial understanding, when Lord Palmerston resumed the direction of the Foreign Office." The original draft of the letter, which covers many pages, was found in the Tuileries, when it was sacked by the mob in 1848.

—The Duke of Leeds writes from Mar Lodge to the Hon. G. F. Berkeley regarding the "malicious and false statements" made concerning the closing of Glen Lui Beg against the public—statements which he looked on with the most perfect contempt, as "the productions of a pack of curs that yelp at a distance. I rent the Mar Forest of Lord Fife, and have done so for many years. The stock of deer has always been large, and I am bound in honour to the proprietor to take every care that the forest is not spoiled by the diminution of their number. The interests of the forest depend on quiet, and total absence from all disturbance. One incautious intruder might be the means of sending several hundred head of the best deer out of the forest to return no more. There are three roads through the Mar Forest, enough for all the purposes of sight-seeing, &c. If indiscriminate trespass was permitted, any person under pretence of sight-seeing might purposely drive the deer out of bounds, where they might be killed by other people."

22.—Stranding of the Great Britain steamship in Dundrum Bay. She left the Mersey about mid-day on the 21st, having on board 181 passengers, and a crew of 90 hands. Captain Hoskin took the north-about passage. Through some inadvertence, never very well explained, but most likely either in reckoning or mistaking a light, she got out of her course and drifted in the gale on to the soft sandy beach of Dundrum. The passengers in alarm rushed upon deck, but after some delay they were nearly all induced to return to their cabin and wait till daylight, when they were taken off in safety, the great steamship then lying in a foot or two of water. The mails and cargo were also got out and sent back to Liverpool.

23.—Fire at the Croydon Railway terminus, destroying most of the buildings, and thirteen railway carriages.

24.—Lord Normanby delivers to M. Guizot a formal protest by Great Britain against the contemplated marriage of the Duke de Montpensier with the Infanta Louisa of Spain. The protest was founded—first, upon the Treaty of Utrecht, by which the French branch of the Bourbons renounced all claim to the throne of Spain; and, secondly, upon the agreement come to between the French and English ministers at the Château d'Eu, an agreement the more emphatic, because, though not reduced to writing, it was concluded between the ministers of the two states, and sanctioned besides by the presence and consent of their respective sovereigns. A similar protest was presented by Mr. Bulwer at Madrid.

25.—The Times Commissioner writing from Ross-shire, records: "Whatever we may conclude to be the reason of perpetual distress occurring in the Highlands as in Ireland, whether we attribute it to a similarity of causes or not, that is wholly apart from the fact of the existence of distress. Should it really exist, England will not watch it unfeelingly, but will be ready in all reasonableness to share the fruits of her industry with those who, if they would copy her example, would not need to beg of her bounty."

26.—Died at his residence, Playford Hall, Suffolk, aged 80 years, Thomas Clarkson, the venerable champion of the freedom of the black race.

28.—Three arches give way in the works of the Aberdeen Railway, and bury a company of workmen engaged below. Seven were taken out dead, and four much bruised.

29.—Wyatt's colossal equestrian statue of the Duke of Wellington drawn in triumph from the artist's premises in Harrow-road to the site over the arch at Hyde-park-corner. The car, drawn by twenty-nine strong horses, was surrounded along the route by Life-guardsmen, and an incessant cheering kept up during its progress. The statue was elevated to the top of the arch next day.

October 1.—In consequence of the recent tumultuous assemblages in Dungarvon, Youghall, and other places, the Lord Lieutenant issues a proclamation declaring his determination to afford to provision dealers that complete security which is essential for the public safety, and also that he will cause public works to be discontinued where any system of combination is indulged in against the officers of the Board of Works.

2.—Died suddenly at his residence, St. John's Wood, the Baron de Bode, whose claims for compensation as a British subject on account of losses sustained during the French Revolution had been often made the subject of parliamentary discussion.

5.—A correspondent of the Freeman's Journal, living in Tuam, writes: "I am sorry to inform you that this town is, I may say, in open rebellion. Cattle are taken away in the open day, in spite of the police and townspeople. The people cannot help the outbreak, for if they had money they cannot get bread, as the Galway dealers are not letting any of it in to us. The people are watching the batches of bread coming out of the ovens, and almost killing each other for it. One of the mills was kept going all day yesterday (Sunday), dressing and grinding whole flour, and people were engaged dividing it up to 2 o'clock this morning." The repeal rent this week amounted to 47*l.* 13*s.* 3*d.*, being the lowest amount yet received.

8.—Professor Schönbein performs a series of experiments with his gun-cotton before the Chairman of the East India Company and a number of scientific persons. A rifle, charged with 54½ grains of gunpowder, sent a ball through seven boards each half an inch in thickness, at a distance of forty yards; the same gun, charged with forty grains of the cotton, sent the ball into the eighth board; and with a fresh rifle the ball was sent through the eighth board at ninety yards.

10.—The marriage of the Duke of Montpensier and the Infanta Louisa Maria takes place immediately after the espousals of the Queen of Spain with Francesco d'Assis, Duke of Cadiz, in the palace at Madrid.

11.—Destructive hurricane at Havannah. The French frigate Andromeda, of 60 guns, the Blonde, of 24 guns, and the Tonnère steamer, 10 guns, were wrecked in the harbour, along with sixty-three foreign merchantmen, and fourteen Spanish men-of-war. The town suffered great damage, upwards of one hundred people being killed by the falling of houses.

17.—Lord John Russell, writing to the Duke of Leinster on the duties of Government and landlords in the present Irish crisis, says: "Unless all classes co-operate, and meet the infliction of Providence with fortitude and energy, the loss of the potato will only aggravate the woes and sufferings of Ireland. They should be taught to take advantage of the favourable condition of their soil and surrounding sea; to work patiently for themselves in their own country, as they work in London and Liverpool for their employers; to study economy, cleanliness, and the value of time; and to aim at improving the condition of themselves and their children."

26.—The Linlithgow Town Council, by a majority of 12 to 2, vote resolutions expressive of regret at the conduct of the new directors of the Edinburgh and Glasgow Railway in stopping the running of a Sunday train between those two cities.

November 3.—A meeting of "Independent Electors" of West Gloucestershire held at Bristol to consult on the state of the representation in reference to the scandalous family quarrel between Earl Fitzhardinge and Mr. Grantley Berkeley, the member for this division. The latter sought to gain admittance to the meeting, but was turned back on the ground that the meeting was confined to electors. A letter was read from Earl Fitzhardinge, giving his version of the squabble. After some discussion the meeting unanimously adopted a resolution expressing dissatisfaction with Mr. Berkeley's conduct on the Corn and Game Laws.

— In answer to a London deputation who waited upon Lord John Russell, to press upon him the necessity of opening the ports, his lordship said that he would only consent to such a step in the event of prices rising considerably; 3,000,000 quarts of grain had already been imported under the Act of last session.

4.—The New Philosophical Institution, Edinburgh, opened with an entertainment, in which Mr. Macaulay, M.P., Professor Wilson, and the Archbishop of Dublin took part.

— The Garrick Theatre, Goodman's-fields, London, destroyed by fire; supposed to have originated through a piece of wadding lodging in the flies during the performance of "The Battle of Waterloo" the previous evening.

6.—Thomas Massa Alsager, the writer of the "City article" in the Times, commits suicide, by wounding himself in the throat and other parts of the body, while in a state of mental depression.

11.—An imperial ordinance published at Vienna announces the annexation of Cracow and its territories to Austria. An experience of sixteen years, it was alleged, had proved that Cracow did not fulfil the conditions of its independent existence, but had been the incessant cradle of hostile intrigues against the three protecting powers.

21.—Fire at Gravesend, destroying most of the houses in West-street, and from High-street to King-street. Among the more important buildings consumed were the Bank, the Pier Hotel, Pope's Head Inn, and the Bee-hive Tavern. The damage was estimated at 100,000*l*.

26.—To check the political troubles prevailing in Portugal, a British squadron, under Admiral Parker, takes up a position in the Tagus, at the request of the Queen of Portugal.

28.—Failure of Captain Warner's long range. The Master-General of the Ordnance gave the inventor a spot in the Island of Anglesey, where he might try his experiment in the presence of officers appointed by Government. The place was a valley eight miles in length, at the extreme end of which there was a single tree. This, of course, could not be seen at the distance, but the exact bearings were furnished to Mr. Warner, and he was requested to fire in that direction. The first shell fell far short of the object; and none of them reached three miles. The Committee decided that the experiment was a failure, and that it did not appear to them that the invention could be made available for the general purposes of war.

29.—John Ware writes from Boston, U.S. regarding the discovery made by Dr. Jackson and Dr. Martin of the beneficial use of ether in surgical operations: "I found on my arrival here a new thing in the medical world, or rather the application of an old thing, of which I think, you will like to hear. It is a mode of rendering patients insensible to the pain of surgical operation by the inhalation of the vapour of the strongest sulphuric ether. They are thrown into a state nearly resembling that of complete intoxication from ardent spirits, or of narcotism from opium. This state continues but a few minutes—five to ten—but during it the patient is insensible to pain. A thigh has been amputated, a breast extirpated, and teeth drawn without the slightest suffering. The number of operations of various kinds especially those in dentistry, has been very considerable, and I believe but few persons resist the influence of the agent."

December 2.—At a meeting in the Rotunda, the Young Ireland party resolve that Mr. O'Connell brought forward the New Resolutions out of which the secession arose, not from any apprehension of physical force, but directly to produce a split, his object being to drive out of the Repeal Association men certain to resist any compact with the English Government.

4.—Inquiry at Cambridge into the circumstances connected with the death of Elizabeth

Howe, a woman of ill-fame, who had been apprehended by the Proctor of the University and lodged in the Spinning House. The coroner's jury found that she had died of rheumatic fever, caused by a violent cold caught in her confinement, and they could not separate without "expressing their abhorrence at a system which sanctions the apprehension of females when not offending against the general law of the land, and confining them in a gaol unfit for the worst of felons." The coroner, as instructed by the jury, forwarded a report of the proceedings to the Home Secretary, who promised that further inquiry would be made.

5.—From Skibbereen the news are: "Hunger, nakedness, sickness, and mortality, almost equal to the ravages of an epidemic disease, are the prevailing features of the dwellings of the poor. Fever afflicts hundreds of them, and dysentery produced by cold and want of nutritious food is equally common. The work-house contains 900 paupers; the fever hospital, built to accommodate 40 patients, contains 161. The number of deaths which took place in the infirmary during the month of November was 87." In the midst of this horrible starvation a universal mania seized the people for the purchase of fire-arms.

— The Shannon steamer burnt at her moorings off Plymouth.

13.—Flixton Hall, near Bungay, the seat of Sir Shafto Adair, destroyed by fire.

18.—Public meeting in Edinburgh to consider the present destitute state of the Highlands and Islands of Scotland, and to adopt such measures as might appear best calculated to give immediate relief.

22.—The Dublin Evening Post records: "We do not know that a more disastrous summary of local events has ever appeared in this journal than that spread over our columns to-day. We cannot find room for half the details, and feel but too well how very inadequate our reports are to convey the real state of the facts. We shall not point to particular districts, not even to Tipperary, where a murder has been committed in the vicinity of Cahir, within seven or eight miles of the county town, and where the whole population would seem to have turned out, partially armed, to prevent the departure of corn to Limerick. But look everywhere. It is as if we were on the brink of a wild convulsion. People seem absolutely beside themselves. They are either reduced to utter helplessness, or seem ready to band themselves in a mad warfare with the authorities, who we know are labouring night and day to avert or to mitigate the manifold evils of the country."

28.—Court Martial at Portsmouth, to try Commander Patten for the loss of H.M. sloop Osprey, at False Hokianga, New Zealand, in March last. At the close of the inquiry Capt.

Patten received back his sword, and was at the same time complimented for the exertions he made to save the ship's property after the vessel went ashore.

January 2.—A letter from Skibbereen describes the poor-house as “unable to meet the exigencies of one-fourth of those who sought admittance. I passed through it on Wednesday, and saw three or four in the same narrow bed. In November the deaths in the infirmary were 83; in December, up to the 28th, 135. In the entire two preceding years there were only 86. The mortality is very great among the poor, and the aspect of the burying grounds is assuming a new form. In many cases the dead are buried without coffins, and instances are known where they are not even brought to a burial ground, but interred in the fields. This day, in a glen in a wild part of the parish, I was told in passing, that a family was in fever. I went into the cabin and found thirteen persons—five lying ill on some dirty straw in a corner, five in another place in a kind of bed, two girls recovering, and one little girl able only to hand the other a drink of water.” A voluntary subscription was now set on foot for the relief of the famishing Irish, the Queen heading the list with 2,000*l.* and the London bankers adding 1,000*l.* At the weekly repeal meeting O’Connell proposed to borrow 40,000,000*l.* from the English Exchequer.

5.—The vessels fitting out in British ports for the Ecuador buccaneering expedition seized by Government, and the whole scheme exposed through information given by Captain Harvey Tuckett, one of the parties engaged to raise a legion in Ireland.

13.—Ronald Gordon, secretary and accountant to the Exchange Bank of Scotland, sentenced to fifteen years’ transportation for stealing various sums of money, amounting in all to 2,353*l.*, the property of the bank.

19.—Parliament opened by the Queen in person. The first paragraph in the Royal Speech referred to the famine in Ireland and parts of Scotland. “In Ireland especially the loss of the usual food of the people has been the cause of severe suffering, of disease, and greatly increased mortality among the poorer classes. Outrages have become more frequent, chiefly directed against property, and the transit of provisions has been rendered unsafe in some parts of the country. With a view to mitigate those evils, very large numbers of men have been employed, and have received wages, in pursuance of an Act passed in the last session of Parliament. Some deviations from that Act, which have been authorized by the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, in order to promote more useful employment, will, I trust, receive your sanction.” In the course of the debate which followed, Lord John Russell stated that the number of men employed under the Act of last session was 470,000, and the weekly payment on some occasions 158,000*l.*

21.—Lord John Russell proposes the suspension of the Corn and Navigation Laws. Bills founded upon his resolutions were immediately brought in and passed through both Houses with great expedition.

— At an inquest held at the Galway Work-house, on the body of a travelling vagrant, the jury found “That the deceased died from the effects of starvation and destitution caused by a want of the common necessities of life; and if Lord John Russell, the head of her Majesty’s Government, has combined with Sir Randolph Routh to starve the Irish people, by not, as was their duty, taking measures to prevent the present truly awful condition of the country, we find that the said Lord John Russell and that the said Sir Randolph Routh are guilty of the wilful murder of said Mary Commins.” The Coroner refused to receive their finding, and the jury afterwards agreed to a more rational verdict.

25.—Lord John Russell introduces the Government scheme for alleviating the present and improving the future condition of Ireland. The Labour Rate Act of last session was to be withdrawn, as the landlords had grossly mismanaged the working of it; the people were immediately to be taken off the roads, &c. and enabled to work on their own holdings, by being supplied with food through local relief committees acting in connexion with the Poor-law guardians, the funds for this purpose to be supplied partly by additional subscriptions raised in England, partly by a Government grant, and partly by a temporary poor-rate; so far as the payment of past expenses was concerned, the landlords were to receive a reversion of one-half of all that had been expended under the Labour Rate Act; 50,000*l.* to be lent to buy seed for tenants on the security of the ensuing harvest; 1,000,000*l.* to be devoted to the reclamation of waste lands, Government to have the power of purchasing the same; and the Poor-law to be so extended as to authorize out-door relief in food to such able-bodied applicants as could not be put to useful labour.

27.—Corn and Navigation Laws suspended.

February 4.—Lord George Bentinck introduces his scheme for lending 16,000,000*l.* to Irish railway enterprise, at 3½ per cent., 2*l.* to be advanced for every 1*l.* raised by themselves; and the whole loan, with interest, to be repaid within thirty-seven years after the opening of each line. It was thrown out on the 16th, on the proposal for a second reading, by a majority of 214.

— In the French Chamber of Deputies M. Thiers re-opens the question of the Spanish marriages, and censures the general policy of the Guizot Ministry.

8.—Died at sea, on board the ship Wellesley, off the Cape of Good Hope, on his way home from Madras, Lieut.-Col. Sir Walter Scott, of Abbotsford, the only surviving son of the author of "Waverley."

12.—Wreck of the Tweed, West India Mail Steamer. She left Havannah for Vera Cruz on the 9th, having on board sixty-two passengers, a crew numbering eighty-nine, the mails for England, a quantity of quicksilver valued at 18,000*l.*, and a supply of coal for a Queen's steamer at Cadiz. About half-past three this morning, when off the coast of Yucatan, while the commander was on deck, and the ship under full steam with the sails set, one of the look-out men exclaimed, "Breakers ahead." Capt. Parsons immediately ordered the engines to be stopped and reversed, but it was too late, and the vessel struck at almost full speed on the reef known as the Alcranes. The cylinder of one engine was forced upwards a considerable distance, and the engineer compelled to abandon the engine-room. The ship then struck a second time with great violence, and in a few minutes parted in two, the frantic passengers having hardly had time to realize the nature of the calamity. The total number drowned in their berths, or swept off the wreck, was thirty-one passengers, including the whole of the females, and forty-two of the crew. Ten of the remainder were saved in a small boat, and sixty-nine contrived to keep afloat on a raft for three days till they were rescued by the daring humanity of Bernardius Camp, commander of the Spanish brig Emilio. Besides a munificent sum collected at Havannah, which Capt. Camp wished to hand over to the suffering survivors, Lloyd's Committee voted him an honorary medal in silver, and another in bronze, with a sum of money to the mate of the Emilio, Don Villa Verde. The British Government, in conformity with a proposal made by Lord John Russell, on the 16th of April, voted him a medal and a sum of 500*l.*

— The Bidford and Torrington omnibus upset over the quay, and ten out of the twelve passengers drowned.

13.—Died at Winchmore Hill, aged 79, Sharon Turner, author of a "History of the Anglo-Saxons" and other kindred works.

15.—Died at Madrid, Don Palafox-y-Melzi, the renowned defender of Saragossa against the French in 1808-9.

17.—"Day by day," writes the Dublin Evening Post, "the accounts that reach us are becoming more horrifying. There is scarcely a county in Ireland—unless Kildare may be an exception—in which the people are not dying of starvation. Within one week there have been no less than ninety-five deaths in the union workhouse of Lurgan, being nearly an eighth part of the entire inmates. In Fermanagh destitution is rapidly extending, and, we are sorry to add, crime has greatly increased. In Sligo so rapid has been the mortality, that the Coroners are totally unable to perform their duties; in one place, Margharow, there were forty dead bodies waiting inquests. A correspondent from Drogheda writes that wretched women and children were to be seen on the decks of steamers striving to appease their hunger with the turnips half-eaten by the cattle on board. So far as can be ascertained, the workhouse mortality in Ireland for the first week of January was 1,405 out of 108,500 receiving relief, and in the second week 1,493 out of 110,561.

17.—Died at London, aged 59, William Collins, R.A.

20.—The Peninsular and Oriental Company's steamer Tiber wrecked on the coast of Spain.

21.—The Brechin Castle wrecked off Swansea with an Australian mail, and all on board drowned.

22.—Disturbances at Wick, Thurso, and other places in the Highlands, in consequence of the shipment of grain.

27.—Prince Albert elected Chancellor of Cambridge University, by a majority of 112 over Earl Powis. The number polled was 1,790, being the highest on record. In accepting the honour, his Royal Highness informed the senate:—"I have been influenced by a respectful deference to the wishes of a majority of its members, by a great unwillingness to involve the University in the probable necessity of another contest, but above all by an earnest hope that, through a zealous and impartial discharge of the trust which I undertake, I shall succeed in establishing a claim on the confidence and good will of the whole academical body."

March 1.—At the bidding for the new eight million loan the houses of Baring and Rothschild unite their interests, and offer at the rate of 89½ Three per Cent. Consol Stock, which was accepted by the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

2.—Mr. Bouverie, by a majority of 89 to 61, obtains the appointment of a select committee to inquire "Whether, and in what circumstances, large numbers of her Majesty's subjects had been deprived of the means of religious worship by the refusal of certain proprietors to grant them sites for the erection of churches."

3.—First Exhibition of British Manufactures opened at Society of Arts, Adelphi.

4.—Robert Kerr, commander of the barge Levenside, sentenced at the Criminal Court to seven years' transportation, for stealing a quantity of diamonds entrusted to his charge at Bahir.

— Mr. Hume moves a series of resolutions expressive of the alarm and indignation felt throughout Europe at the annexation of the free city of Cracow by Austria. After a debate of three nights the resolutions were withdrawn.

5.—Explosion of fire-damp in the Oaks Colliery, near Barnsley; out of about a hundred workmen, seventy were suffocated.

— Earl Grey brings forward the new scheme of convict discipline, by which offenders transported for a limited number of years, instead of being conveyed at great expense to distant colonies, would be employed on Portland Island here, and in the event of good behaviour would have a relative proportion of their period remitted, on condition of quitting this country.

— At a meeting of the shareholders of the Edinburgh and Glasgow Railway Company, the amendment of Sir Andrew Agnew approving of the conduct of the directors in stopping the running of Sunday trains on their line, and desiring to leave the question in their hands, was carried by a majority of 6,820 votes to 6,751.

11.—Lola Montes writes from Munich to the Times, with reference to comments made by that journal on the influence she was exercising over the King of Bavaria:—"I left Paris in June last on a professional trip, and, amongst other arrangements, decided upon visiting Munich, where, for the first time, I had the honour of appearing before his Majesty, and receiving from him marks of approbation, which you are aware is not a very unusual thing for a professional person to receive at a foreign court. I had not been here a week before I discovered that there was a plot existing in the town to get me out of it, and that the party was the Jesuit party. . . Since my residence here I can safely say that I have in no way interfered in any affairs not concerning myself; and as I intend making it my future abode, it is particularly annoying to me hearing so many scandalous and unfounded reports which are daily propagated, and in justice to myself and my future prospects in life I trust that you will not hesitate to insert this letter in your widely circulated journal, and show my friends and the public how unjustly and cruelly I have been treated by the Jesuit party in Munich."

20.—A general fast, fixed by proclamation, "on account of the grievous scarcity and dearth of divers articles of sustenance and necessaries of life."

26.—J. P. Kay Shuttleworth submits to the Lords of the Treasury an account of the balance remaining unappropriated from the grant for promoting education in Great Britain, the distribution of which is superintended by the Committee of Council on Education. This balance, including lapsed grants, amounted to 35,000*l.* Much of the expenditure for the ensuing year was reported as contingent and uncertain.

29.—Sa da Bandeira, the Portuguese insurgent leader, sails from Oporto with 1,250 men, collected by him to create a disturbance in Lagos, Algarve.

April 5.—A British force, under General d'Aguilar, destroys the Bogue forts, threatens Canton, and compels Commissioner Keying to accede to the demand made by the Governor for a redress of grievances.

7.—Opening of the new Docks and the new Park at Birkenhead.

— The Young Ireland party make an Easter demonstration in the Music Hall, Dublin. O'Brien denounced the conduct of the Government in bitter terms; but the most outrageous speaker was Meagher, who declaimed at great length: "England, your great difficulty is at an end; your red ensign flies, not from the Rock of Mullaghmast, where you employed the cut-throat; not from Limerick wall, where you played the perjurer; not from the Senate House, where you played the swindler; not from the Custom-house, where you played the robber; but it flies like a red phantom from a thousand graveyards, where the titled niggards of your Cabinet have won the battle which your soldiers could not terminate. America has her eagle. Let England have her vulture. What emblem more fit for the rapacious power whose statesmanship depopulates, and whose commerce is gorged with famine prices?"

12.—Lady Boothby, formerly Mrs. Nisbett, reappears at the Haymarket, in the "Love Chase," and is rapturously received.

14.—Burning of the Liverpool and Drogheda steamer, Gramville, near Lumbay. Sixty-nine of the crew and passengers were taken off by a fishing smack, but twenty-two were reported as lost.

16.—The Free Church Presbytery of Edinburgh adopt a report, prepared "after very mature deliberation," concerning the Government scheme of education. With reference to the general principle on which a national system of education should be based, the document laid down, "first, that it is the duty of states and their rulers as such to take an interest in the education of the people, and by every legitimate means to aim at advancing and promoting it; second, that any general system of education to be adopted ought to be based on religious truth, and pervaded by a religious spirit; and that, therefore, it was an imperative obligation lying on the Church at present to be peculiarly on the watch against any system which may seem to tend towards the giving of public countenance and encouragement to Popery, Socinianism, Infidelity, and other forms of error, as well as to the sound Protestantism of the Evangelical Churches of the country. On the whole, therefore, the Committee recommend that the Presbytery should petition the House of Commons, earnestly praying that delay be granted before the passing of any vote of money for educational purposes in terms of the present Minutes of Privy Council, on the ground of the serious apprehensions that are entertained of unsound principles being involved in the plan, the vast importance of a right adjustment of the whole question, and the great anxiety felt by many parties on the subject."

19.—Lord John Russell submits the details of his plan for the education of the people, based upon the grant of 100,000*l.* to be asked for during the session. Roman Catholics were in the meantime to be excluded from the grant, but their case would be afterwards taken up separately. He thought that the proposal for making the education given by the State purely secular was opposed to the opinion of Parliament. Mr. Duncombe proposed an amendment:—"That previous to any grant of public money being assented to by this House, for the purpose of carrying out the national scheme of education as developed in the Minutes of the Committee of Council on Education, a select committee be appointed to inquire into the justice and expediency of such a scheme, and its probable annual cost; also to inquire whether the regulations attached thereto do not unduly increase the influence of the Crown, invade the constitutional functions of Parliament, and interfere with the religious convictions and civil rights of her Majesty's subjects." After a debate of three nights, the amendment was negatived by a majority of 372 to 47. The other amendment, proposed by Sir W. Clay, "That it is expedient that in any plan for promoting the education of the people by pecuniary assistance from the State provision should be made that in schools receiving such assistance the opportunity of participating in all instruction other than religious should be afforded to children, where parents may object to the religious doctrines taught in such schools," was negatived by 210 to 74.

20.—Return issued relative to the Railways for which Acts were obtained in 1846. The stock amounted to 90,298,430*l.* and the sum actually subscribed to 57,675,690*l.* Borrowing powers existed to 42,318,938*l.* The amounts for the two preceding years were on a greatly inferior scale, though described as not inconsiderable at the time. In 1844 the stock amounted to 11,121,000*l.* and the sum authorized to be borrowed to 3,672,000*l.*; in 1845 the stock was 43,844,907*l.* and the loan 15,768,619*l.* In 1846 the deposits made on Railway Bills, in virtue of the Standing Order of the House of Commons, amounted in England to 11,396,783*l.* 9*s.* 10*d.*, and in Scotland to 2,323,371*l.* 10*s.*

24.—Average of wheat 75*s.* 10*d.* per quarter, duty free.

May 3.—The Ten Hours Factories Bill read a third time in the House of Commons.

4.—Jenny Lind appears for the first time in England at her Majesty's Theatre, as Alice, in "Robert le Diable." "For a moment," writes the Times, "she appeared a little overcome by her immense reception, but it was for a moment only, and as a singer and actress she had perfect possession of all her powers throughout the evening."

12.—Triple murder at Mirfield, Yorkshire. On the return from dinner of one of the boys employed at Knowle House, he was alarmed by seeing the blinds drawn down, and blood flowing beneath the door. He immediately ran for assistance; and as the doors were all locked, an entry was forced through the kitchen window. Here a shocking sight presented itself. The servant, Caroline Ellis, was discovered lying on her back, quite dead, though still warm, with her throat cut and her skull fractured. The body of Mrs. Wraith was found in almost exactly the same state, lying in the passage near the front door; and that of Mr. Wraith, in the same state, lying in the parlour, where the table was spread as for dinner. One of the dinner knives was bloody, having apparently been used as one of the instruments of murder by those concerned in the deed. Mr. Wraith's pockets were partly turned inside out, though a half-sovereign still remained in them. His hat and watch had been carried off, and two drawers left open appeared to have been rifled. The wedding-ring of the old lady had been taken off her finger. From information furnished by a hawker named McCabe, Patrick Reid, tinker, was apprehended, and tried before Mr. Justice Wightman at the York Assizes, on the charge of murdering Mr. Wraith. It was established in evidence that he was seen near the house about the time the murders were committed, a portion of the stolen property was traced to his possession, and his soldering-iron, with which some of the injuries might have been inflicted, was found along with the key of the house in the garden well. From the reasonable suspicion attaching to McCabe's evidence, the jury could not come to a unanimous decision, and a verdict of Not guilty was returned. The prisoner, however, was kept in custody, and tried along with McCabe at the following winter assizes, when a verdict of Guilty was returned against both for the murder of the two women. They were executed.

13.—The United Associate Synod of the Secession Church, under the Moderatorship of Mr. Newlands, and the Relief Synod, under the Moderatorship of Mr. Auld, meet together in Tanfield Hall, Edinburgh, and formally became one body under the designation of the United Presbyterian Church. The first question of public interest taken up by the united body was the Government Education Bill, when a resolution was agreed to, "That it is not within the province of civil government to provide for the religious instruction of the subject; and that this department of the education of the young belongs exclusively to the parent and the Church."

15.—Died at Genoa, on his way to Rome, Daniel O'Connell, in his 72d year. His chaplain, Dr. Miley, writes to a friend in Paris:—"Alas, my dear friend O'Connell is dead. His death was serene and happy, for it was sanctified by the sacraments, and alleviated by the consolations which our divine religion lavishes with so much mercy on its children. . . . He requested that his heart, that heart which always beat for the cause of religion and liberty, should be taken to Rome. We have had that noble heart embalmed and enclosed in a silver urn. The body, which has also been embalmed, will remain here in a chapel until we return from our pilgrimage to Rome with his heart, and then it will be transported to his native mountains, there to remain to the day of resurrection. The heart of O'Connell at Rome, his body in Ireland, and his soul in heaven—is not that what the justice of man and the mercy of God demands?" When the news reached Dublin, the event was made known by the tolling of church bells and by intimation at Conciliation Hall. The Repeal Association issued an address to the people of Ireland, condoling with them upon the national calamity, and stating that the operations of the Association would be carried on under the same rules and in the same spirit as its founder had originally laid down.

16.—Died at the Vice-regal Lodge, Dublin, John William Ponsonby, Fourth Earl of Besborough, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. He was succeeded in office by the Earl of Clarendon.

21.—Conference at London between the representatives of Great Britain, France, Spain, and Portugal, for settling the disorders prevailing throughout the last-mentioned kingdom.

24.—Accident on the Chester and Shrewsbury Railway, at the bridge crossing the Dee. The train which left Chester at a quarter past six consisted of one first-class carriage, two second-class carriages, in which there were about a dozen passengers, and a luggage van. Proceeding at its usual pace along the line, it had crossed two of the arches of the bridge when, without a moment's warning, the iron girders of the third arch gave way, and the whole of the carriages were precipitated into the river, a depth of about thirty feet. The engine and tender having cleared the broken arch were separated from the train, and continued the journey across the bridge, till the tender was thrown across the line, and the engine brought up. The accident was seen by many people, and assistance of all kinds was at once rendered, but the work of extrication was necessarily slow and difficult. Five people were found drowned or bruised to death, and all the rest seriously injured, with the exception of one man who contrived to leap out of the window into the river, and swim ashore. At the lengthened investigation which followed various opinions were given by eminent engineers as to the cause of the accident. Mr. Yarrow thought it arose from repeated conclusion loosening the stonework of the pier, and so displacing the girders; General Pasley, that the engine had broken the girder in passing over it, causing the masonry to give way; and Mr. Stephenson, that the engine and tender had been off the line, struck the girder laterally, and so broke it. To the verdict of Accidental death, in the case of the sufferers, the jury added, "We are unanimously of opinion that the girder did not break from any lateral blow, or from any defect in the masonry, but from its being made of a strength insufficient to bear the pressure of quick trains passing over it." They also called on the Government to institute an inquiry into the safety of all such railway bridges throughout the kingdom.

26.—The Free Church Assembly adopt a series of resolutions relative to the Government Education scheme, in which, without absolutely approving of the scheme, an intimation is given of the Church's willingness to take whatever money can be freely and voluntarily given under it for her own educational institutions.

28.—Lieutenant Gore, of the Franklin Polar Expedition, leaves the following written memorial of its presence at Point Victory:—"H.M. ships Erebus and Terror wintered in the ice in lat. 7° 05' N., long. 98° 23' W., having wintered in 1846-7 [1845-6] at Beechey Island in lat. 74° 43' 28" N., long. 91° 39' 15" W., after having ascended Wellington Channel to lat. 77°, and returned by the west side of Cornwallis Island. Sir John Franklin commanding the expedition. All well. Party consisting of two officers and six men left the ship on Monday, 24th May, 1847. Gm. Gore, Lieut., Chas. F. Des Vieux, Mate." Round the margin of the paper (writes the discoverer, Capt. McClintock) upon which Lieut. Gore in 1847 wrote these words of hope and promise another hand had subsequently written the following words:—"April 25, 1848.—H.M. ships Terror and Erebus were deserted on the 22d April, five leagues N.N.W. of this, having been beset since 12th September, 1846. The officers and crews, consisting of 105 souls, under the command of Capt. F. R. M. Crozier, landed here in lat. 69° 37' 42" N., long. 98° 41' W. Sir John Franklin died on the 11th June, 1847; and the total loss by deaths in this expedition has been to this date nine officers and fifteen men. (Signed) F. R. M. Crozier, Captain and Senior Officer; James FitzJames, Captain H.M.S. Erebus. Start tomorrow, 26th, for Back's Fish River."

29.—Libel upon Eliza Cook. The Daily Advertiser writes:—"Considerable anxiety has been excited on the part of the public who do not read the poetical contributions of the Despatch, to know what really can have induced its proprietor to present their subscribers with the portrait of a woman who has murdered her own child. Such is fame among the masses: (119)

a murderess is a heroine and a poetess unknown." The first proceedings with reference to this calumny took place in the Bail Court, where Miss Cook's affidavit was produced. It concluded: "And this deponent further saith that she never had or gave birth to a child; and that, on the contrary, she is a spinster of strict honour and perfect chastity; and she further saith that she has never murdered, or been concerned, or charged to have been concerned, in the murder or death of any child whatever." A retraction was published in the Advertiser, explaining that the criminal reference was made, not to Eliza Cook the poetess, but to a person of the same name more familiar to many readers of the Despatch, who had just been executed for child murder. In the Court of Queen's Bench on the 11th of June, Mr. Phinn showed cause why a criminal information should not be granted against the proprietors of the Advertiser. Lord Denman concurred, stating that he did not think the paragraph was intended to cast any imputation on Miss Cook.

29.—Wheat average 102s. 5d. per quarter.

30.—Affray off Labuan, between Rajah Brooke and a band of Borneo pirates. Five boats were captured or destroyed, and about a hundred of the pirates killed. The loss on the Rajah's side was trifling.

— Found dead in his bed this morning, Thomas Chalmers, D.D., Edinburgh. Intending to give in the Report of the College Committee to the Assembly to-day, the reverend doctor, on going to bed last night, had placed writing materials beside him, that he might carry on his work during the night if so inclined. He appeared to have been sitting up when overtaken by the stroke of death, as he still in part retained that posture. The arms were peacefully folded on the breast. There was a slight air of heaviness and oppression on the brow, but not a wrinkle nor a trace of sorrow or pain disturbed its smoothness. The features wore an expression of deep repose, and the air of majesty on the countenance was thought even greater than had ever been perceived on the living face.

June 1.—The Earl of Lincoln carries his resolution for an address to her Majesty, praying her to take into consideration the means by which colonization might be made subsidiary to other measures for the improvement of the social condition of Ireland. The House of Lords appointed a Select Committee to inquire into this subject.

— Medals ordered to be struck to commemorate the naval and military engagements between 1793 and 1815.

indicating that all was right for the train to enter the station was hoisted, but, to the astonishment of the officials, the engine turned off into a siding, and dashed through a mineral-train stationed there. The fifth and sixth carriages of the mail-train were smashed to pieces, and the passengers crushed in the most frightful manner. Seven were killed on the spot. The pointsman at the Blue-bridge was apprehended, and sentenced to two years' imprisonment, with hard labour, for neglect of duty.

12.—A Council of Ministers nominated by the Pope to carry out various reforms designed by his Holiness.

15.—The Queen and Prince Albert, with their suite, visit her Majesty's Theatre to hear Jenny Lind in "Norma."

17.—The Irish Relief Commission report that out of the 2,049 electoral divisions of Ireland 1,677 are now under the operation of the Temporary Relief Act, and are distributing 1,923,361 rations per day gratuitously, at an average cost of 2½d. per ration, besides 92,326 rations sold. Of the divisions under the Act, 1,479 have received loans or grants.

29.—Consecration of four newly-appointed colonial bishops in Westminster Abbey, with unusual solemnity, the ceremony lasting over four hours.

— Came on before a jury the case of Evans v. Lawson, involving the genuineness of a relic known as Lord Nelson's sword, presented to Greenwich Hospital by Lord Say and Sele. The plaintiff, a dealer in curiosities, alleged that he bought the sword from the widow of Mr. Alderman Smith, who had received it, with other relics, from Lady Hamilton. He further maintained that it was the genuine sword which Lord Nelson had worn at the Battle of Trafalgar, and which was laid upon his coffin when he lay in state. He sold it to Lord Say and Sele for 100l. Sir Harris Nicolas upon this sent a letter to the Times, charging the plaintiff with palming off a spurious article as genuine. The sword itself (he wrote) proves that it never could have belonged to any British admiral whatever. The statement that Lord Nelson had worn it when he fell was false, because he wore no sword on that occasion, and the evidence that the weapon had ever belonged to him was a forgery. These facts were established in evidence, and the jury at once returned a verdict for the defendant.

30.—In answer to Lord George Bentinck, Lord John Russell said the removal of the statue of the Duke of Wellington could not be considered disrespectful to the noble duke, as it was determined to place it in a more prominent and advantageous position; and he might add, that her Majesty had expressed a wish that the arch at Hyde-park should be decorated with emblems recording the victories of the noble duke.

July 3.—Came on for hearing at the Marlborough-street Police Court the charge made by Prince Louis Napoleon Buonaparte against Charles Pollard, Essex-street, of stealing two bills of exchange of 1,000*l.* each. The prisoner had taken them away after being signed by the Prince as acceptor and himself as drawer, for the purpose of getting them cashed; but he never returned with the money to the Prince, nor would he give up the bills. Counsel for Pollard contended that there was no case against his client. The stamped paper was his property, and it was quite lawful for him to take it away. The prisoner was committed for trial at the Central Criminal Court, but Baron Alderson then explained to the jury that though the transaction was no doubt dishonest on the part of Pollard, the precise charge of larceny could not be maintained. A verdict of acquittal was therefore recorded.

6.—Commencement of the installation of H.R.H. Prince Albert as Chancellor of the University of Cambridge. Her Majesty was present at the investiture, and an Installation Ode, written by Wordsworth, the Poet-Laureate, was performed on the occasion.

7.—Three ruffians attack the deliverer of the registered letters in Mitre-court, Wood-street, but, owing to the cries of their victim, were compelled to fly without securing their booty. A reward of 300*l.* failed in procuring any information regarding the offenders.

14.—Explosion at Hall's gun-cotton manufactory, Faversham. In the forenoon one of the factories was blown up by an explosion of great violence, and the whole of the workmen killed. The burning débris falling upon the roof of an adjoining workshop, an explosion took place there also with fatal results. In all twenty-one persons were killed, and sixteen seriously injured. The calamity was thought to have arisen from the overheating of the building.

17.—Sir Robert Peel issues an address to the electors of Tamworth, in which he seeks to vindicate to their satisfaction the motives by which his policy had been influenced, and the measures to which he had been a party. He concludes:—"It is my earnest hope that you will make your choice of a representative exclusively upon public grounds—that you will not permit the consideration of mere personal regard, or of my long connexion with you, to influence that choice against your deliberate judgment."

20.—The Swiss Diet, after an animated debate, vote that the Sonderbund, or separate League of the seven Roman Catholic cantons, is illegal. The Federal party afterwards carried resolutions to the effect that the question of the Jesuits was within the competency of the High Diet, that the cantons in which they resided should be invited to expel them, and that their admission in future in any of the cantons was interdicted.

21.—The Manchester Bishopric Bill (introduced into the House of Lords by the Marquis of Lansdowne) read a third time in the House of Commons, and passed by a majority of 93 to 14.

23.—The Queen in person prorogues Parliament preparatory to its dissolution.

29.—Among the elections for the new Parliament which took place about this time, the following excited the most marked interest:—

August 5.—The remains of Daniel O'Connell having been conveyed to Ireland were interred this day in the cemetery of Glasnevin, in presence of the relatives of the deceased and an assembly of spectators estimated at 50,000. The coffin bore the inscription:—"Daniel O'Connell, Ireland's Liberator, while on his journey to the seat of the Apostles, slept in the Lord at Genoa, on the 15th of May, in the year 1847. He lived 71 years, 9 months, and 9 days. May he rest in peace."

11.—The Queen and Prince Albert, with the royal children, and a numerous suite, leave the Isle of Wight in the Victoria and Albert yacht for a marine excursion to the Highlands of Scotland. They anchored the first night in Yarmouth Roads, and sailed down the Channel next day to Dartmouth. On the 14th the royal squadron touched at Milford Haven, and afterwards bore up for Holyhead, where it halted for the night. The Queen and Prince Albert passed through the Menai Straits on board the Fairy, and rejoined the fleet in the evening. From Holyhead the course taken by the royal squadron was Loch Ryan on the 15th, and Rothesay Bay on the 16th. Next morning the squadron sailed up the Clyde, and the party visited Dumbarton Castle. Retracing their course for a few miles they first sailed up Loch Long to Arrochar, and then dropt down to Rothesay Bay, where they again cast anchor for the night. On the 18th Inverary was reached, and a brief visit paid to the Duke of Argyll. Passing through the canal the fleet halted in Crinan Bay that night, and in the morning made for Staffa. "It was the first time (writes her Majesty in her Diary) that the British standard, with a Queen of Great Britain, and her husband and children, had ever entered Fingal's Cave; and the men gave three cheers, which sounded very impressive there." Iona was also visited this day, and at Tobermory the fleet anchored for the night. On the 20th the royal party reached Fort William, where they left the squadron and set out for their autumnal residence at Ardverikie. After a stay of four weeks, the squadron was again under weigh, and the return voyage safely accomplished to Fleetwood, where trains were in readiness to convey the royal party to London.

13.—Another new planet discovered. Mr. Hind writes to the Times: "At half-past 9 o'clock this evening I noticed what appeared to be a star of the 8.9 magnitude, in the 19th hour of right ascension, not marked upon Wolfers's map, and which I never saw before, though I have repeatedly examined this part of the heavens during the present summer." It was proposed that the name of this new visitant should be Iris.

18.—Lieutenant Munro having surrendered to take his trial for killing Colonel Fawcett in a duel at Camden Town in 1843, was this day placed at the bar of the Central Criminal Court, before Mr. Justice Erle. Various parties concerned as seconds or witnesses were examined for the prosecution, and for the defence several officers of high standing spoke to the excellent character always borne by the prisoner at the bar. The jury retired for about twenty minutes, and then brought in a verdict of Guilty, accompanied with a strong recommendation to mercy. Judgment of death was recorded, but it was subsequently commuted to a twelvemonth's imprisonment.

— Murder of the Duchesse de Praslin, and suicide of the Duke. The lady, who was the mother of nine children, was the only daughter of Marshal Sébastiani, formerly French Ambassador at the British Court. She left Paris at the beginning of the preceding week to visit her estate of Praslin, and be present at the distribution of the prizes of a school in which two of her children were being educated, and returned to town on Tuesday evening. She intended to pass only one night in her hotel, and was to have left on the 17th with the Duke, her husband, for Dieppe, whither part of their household had preceded. Fatigued with her journey, the Duchess went to bed at an early hour; and, as permission had been given to most of the domestics to absent themselves, she remained in the hotel with her femme-de-chambre—who slept in the storey above—the family governess, and two male domestics. The Duke and Duchess slept in separate chambers, which, however, communicated by means of a passage and antechamber. Between 4 and 5 o'clock, when it was day-light, the femme-de-chambre was awakened by the noise of a bell pulled with violence. She rose in great haste, and ran to the apartment of her mistress, the door of which she in vain tried to open. She listened, and thought she heard a feeble groan. She then called the domestics to her help, and by uniting their efforts they succeeded in breaking the door open. Then they saw their unfortunate mistress lying on the floor, in the midst of a pool of blood, and apparently quite dead. A wound, in which three fingers could have been put, was seen gaping on the left side of the throat; there were two other severe wounds in the breast, and a fourth had almost separated the little finger from the right hand. There were also lesser wounds on other parts of her person. The cries of the servant roused the Duke de Praslin, who hastened to the spot, and threw himself on the bleeding body of his wife. She died two hours afterwards, without having spoken, or apparently recovered the slightest consciousness. The different wounds appeared to have been made with an instrument having a double-edged blade. Everything in the bed-room showed, besides, that though surprised in her slumber, the victim had offered a strong resistance to the murderer: a little table had been overthrown; porcelain and objects of art were spread about; the drapery on the wall bore the traces of a bloody hand, as did also the rope of the bell, the ringing of which had awakened the femme-de-chambre; and finally, between the clasped fingers of the left hand there was some of the murderer's hair, whilst a considerable quantity, pulled out in the struggle, was fixed by the coagulating blood to the floor. The horror which this event excited throughout Europe was still more intensified when it became known, in the course of two or three days, that all the criminating circumstances in the inquiry pointed to the Duke as the murderer of his wife. This in its turn was quickly succeeded by a feeling of intense indignation when the announcement was made in the Paris papers that the Duke had died on the evening of the 24th from the effects of poison taken when he was apprehended. It was currently rumoured that the King and the ministry had connived at the self-destruction of the murderer to avoid the scandal of a public trial. The Patrie writes: "The Duke de Praslin died in consequence of arsenic taken in considerable quantities, according to the official journal. It is not said who prepared or furnished the poison, or at what moment the Duke could have taken it. On the 22d the Duke was able to speak to the Chancellor and the Grand Referendary, and conversed during the whole day with his physician. On the 23d the vomitings returned, and he was in such a state that he could with great difficulty utter a few words in reply to the Chancellor. 'Did you murder your wife?' said the Chancellor. 'In order to reply I need time and strength, and both are wanting,' 'But there is not much time or much strength required,' said the Chancellor; 'it is yes or no.' 'I have no strength to reply.' The two interrogatories which took place in the prison of the Luxembourg may be summed up in these few words: he made no avowal; he replied decidedly to nothing. So far as the poison was concerned, he said he took it at his hotel, but was not prepared to admit who gave it to him." On the 30th a new horror was added to the tragedy, by the suicide of the eldest son of the family, who shot himself with a pistol. Mdle. de Luzy Desportes, the family governess, was apprehended and examined on the charge of complicity in the murder; but though numerous allegations in the diaries and letters written by the Duchess showed undue familiarity on her part with the Duke, no directly criminating circumstance could be established against her.

20.—The American army, under General Scott, defeats the Mexicans, who mustered in great force at Charbuses, near the capital. An armistice was afterwards concluded between the belligerents, but it was of short duration, and in a few weeks Santa Anna was driven from the capital.

21.—Encounter in Glen Tilt between the Duke of Atholl and a party of naturalists, who were compelled to return to Braemar.

27.—Explosion on board the Cricket steamboat at Hungerford Bridge. She was about to start with her cargo of passengers for London Bridge, when a loud report was heard, and, to the horror of numerous eye-witnesses, fragments of the vessel, with human beings, were blown into the air, in all directions. The boilers had burst, and the explosion shook all behind the paddle-boxes to atoms. Of the unfortunate passengers, some were thrown into the river or ashore, and others were blown to pieces. In all, six were killed, and twelve seriously injured. From the evidence taken before the coroner, it appeared that the engineer, Heasman, was in the habit of tying down the safety valves, for the purpose of increasing the speed of the engine. He was apprehended, and tried before Lord Chief Justice Denman, who sentenced him to two months' imprisonment.

— The Great Britain steamship floated from her sandy bed in Dundrum Bay. The works necessary for protecting the ship from the storms of winter had been mostly undertaken by Mr. Brunel, but the floating was accomplished by Mr. Brenner, of Wick. She was raised by means of caissons or camels, suspended over rows of piles driven into the beach from the vessel's bow to a point about midships, and descending by means of chains and blocks as the tide rose. The actual impulse was given by powerful levers acting on fulcrum under the bilges, and worked by capstans and other purchases on deck. She was towed in the first instance to Belfast by the Birkenhead steam-frigate, and, having undergone certain necessary repairs there, was afterwards taken across the Channel to Liverpool.

31.—Disturbance at Lucca, followed first by a proclamation from the Grand Duke promising all reasonable reforms, and then by his flight from the capital. The Duchy was afterwards annexed to Tuscany.

September 4.—The Cabinet of Vienna presents a note to Cardinal Feretti, explanatory of the grounds and motives which induced Austria to throw troops into Ferrara.

8.—Riotous demonstrations against the Austrians in Milan. To cripple the Imperial finances, the Italians resolved to abstain from the use of tobacco.

12.—The Observer announces the departure of the Duke of Buckingham from England, and the seizure of his effects at Stow and elsewhere by creditors. The liabilities were spoken of as close on two millions sterling.

15.—Marshal Soult resigns the Presidency of the Council, and receives from the King, in acknowledgment of his sixty-three years of public service, the honorary dignity of Marshal-General of France.

16.—Shakspeare's house, Stratford-on-Avon, sold for 3,000*l.* to the Shakspeare Committee by the trustees appointed under the will of the late owner.

24.—The 43,000*l.* of banknotes stolen from Messrs. Rogers' Bank in Nov. 1844 (see p. 78), returned to the house through the Parcels Delivery Company in the shape in which they were originally deposited in the strong-room of the bank. The 1,200*l.* in gold taken away at the same time was not returned. The banking-house paid the promised reward of 2,500*l.* to the anonymous person who negotiated the return of the notes.

31.—This month was marked by a series of commercial failures of great magnitude in themselves, and involving various interests. The Bank raised the rate of discount to 6, 7, and 8 per cent. and contracted the terms of advance to 90, 60, and 30 days. The funds fell one and sometimes two per cent. in a single day, Consols being on one occasion as low as 84. Railway shares fell in still greater proportion, and became latterly almost unsaleable. Among the most prominent firms which succumbed were Sanderson & Co. 1,725,000*l.*; Reid, Irving, & Co. 1,500,000*l.*; Cockerell & Co. 600,000*l.*; Gower Nephews, 450,000*l.*; Robinson & Co. 96,000*l.*, the principal in this firm being at the time Governor of the Bank of England.

October 4.—At Clifton a young lady, Miss Martha Welsh, falls from the highest part of the St. Vincent Rocks, and is found crushed to death at the bottom.

9.—The Economist writes: "The most extraordinary pressure has occurred in the money market during the past week which has been experienced since the crisis of 1825. On Tuesday the pressure was so great that the difference between the price of Consols for money and for the account due on the 14th inst. indicated a rate of interest of 50 per cent. per annum for nine days; while Exchequer Bills due in March next were currently sold at 30s. discount, indicating interest for the six months over which they have to run at the rate of 7½ per cent. per annum." The crisis was described as consisting in the gradually increasing liability of a continually increasing number of persons to provide capital they had contracted to find reaching a point, at last, in which a very great number of merchants and manufacturers were simultaneously unable to fulfil their contracts.

11.—Mr. Bellchambers, engineer at the Esher-street marble works, robbed and murdered near his own residence, Wilton-street, Vincent-square. He was found lying insensible on the street, and all but exhausted from loss of blood. (See Dec. 16.)

24.—Denouncing of Irish landlords from the altar. At Strokestown, priest M'Dermott was reported to have said during the Sunday service:—"There is Major Mahon, absent from you all this winter, not looking after your wants or distress, but amusing himself; and he returns and finds his property all safe, his place unmolested; and the return he makes to you is the burning and destroying of your houses, and leaving your poor to starve on the road." On the following Sunday, the 31st, he added:—"Major Mahon is worse than Cromwell, and yet he lives." A respectable person (said Lord Farnham, when referring to the case in the House of Commons, on the 6th December), on coming out of the chapel remarked, "If the Major lives a month after this, he is immortal!" He did not live forty-eight hours.

25.—The First Lord of the Treasury and the Chancellor of the Exchequer authorized the temporary suspension of the Banking Act of 1844. "Her Majesty's Government," they write, "have seen with the deepest regret the pressure which has existed for some weeks upon the commercial interests of the country, and that this pressure has been aggravated by a want of that confidence which is necessary for carrying on the ordinary dealings of trade." On the same day the Court of Directors passed a formal resolution according to the different recommendations contained in the ministerial letter; the minimum rate of discount on bills not having more than 95 days to run to be 8 per cent.

26.—Settlement of the Roman Catholic hierarchy in England. The Times writes: "The title of Vicar Apostolic is to cease, and the bishops are to be in future named after their respective sees. The further division of England into sees preparatory to an increase in the number of bishops is still under the consideration of his Holiness. There will also be one or two archbishoprics created."

28.—William Davison, solicitor, of Bloomsbury-square, commits suicide by throwing himself from the Whispering gallery of St. Paul's Cathedral.

31.—The commercial failures this month were of uncommon frequency and magnitude. Barton, Irlam, and Higginson, 1,000,000*l.*; Barclay, Brothers, & Co. 450,000*l.*; Scott, Bell, & Co. 240,000*l.* The following banks were also forced to suspend payment: The Royal Bank of Liverpool; Knapp, Old Abingdon; Newcastle Union Joint-Stock Bank; Scholes and Co. Manchester; North and South Wales Bank; Brodie, Salisbury, and Shaftesbury. The funds fell to 79½; Exchequer Bills fluctuated from 6s. to 35s. discount. The rate at the Bank was 8 and 9 per cent.; and out of doors accommodation could scarcely be obtained at any price.

November 1.—The question of the protectorate of the Holy Places at Jerusalem opened by the removal from the sanctuary claimed by the Latins of a silver star suspended to mark the site of the Saviour's birth. The Greeks being charged with the offence, M. de Lavalette, the French representative at Constantinople, took up the case with eagerness on behalf of the Western Church, and obtained from the Porte the appointment of a mixed commission to inquire into the respective rights of the Greeks and Latins.

2.—Count Bresson, the French ambassador at Naples, commits suicide.

3.—King Charles Albert of Sardinia leaves Turin for Genoa, where he receives an enthusiastic welcome from the National Party.

4.—The Swiss Diet resolve that the decree of the 20th July against the Sonderbund must be enforced, and charge the General-in-Chief of the Federal troops with its execution.

—Dr. Bowring, M.P. and his brother Charles, Llynvi Iron Works, South Wales, robbed of 1,000*l.* on the highway by two Irish labourers formerly in their employ. They were both captured the same evening, and the most of the money recovered.

12.—Chloroform. — Professor Simpson, Edinburgh, brings before the public his application of a new anæsthetic agent, as a substitute for sulphuric ether in surgery and midwifery. "I have," he writes, "through the great kindness of Professor Miller and Dr. Duncan, had an opportunity of trying the effects of the inhalation of chloroform to-day in three cases of operations in the Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh. A great collection of professional gentlemen and students witnessed the results, and among the number was Professor Dumas, of Paris, the chemist who first ascertained and established the chemical composition of chloroform. Case 1, a boy, four or five years old, with necrosis of one of the bones of the fore-arm. On holding a handkerchief on which some chloroform had been sprinkled to his face, he became frightened, and wrestled to be away. He was held gently, however, and obliged to inhale. After a few inspirations he ceased to cry or move, and fell into a sound snoring sleep. A deep incision was now made down into the diseased bone, and by the use of the forceps nearly the whole of the radius, in the state of sequestrum, was extracted. During this operation, and the subsequent examination of the wound of the finger, not the slightest evidence of the suffering of pain was given. He still slept on soundly, and was carried back to his ward in that state. Half an hour afterwards he was found in bed like a child newly awakened from a refreshing sleep, with a clear merry eye and placid expression of countenance, wholly unlike what is found to obtain after ordinary etherization. He stated that he had never felt any pain, and felt none now. On being shown his wounded arm he looked much surprised, but neither cried nor otherwise expressed the slightest alarm." The other two cases were equally successful.

17.—Came on for hearing in the Court of Queen's Bench the case of John Chadwick, involving the question of the legality of marriage with a deceased wife's sister. The defendant had been indicted at Liverpool assizes for bigamy in marrying a person named Eliza Bostock, his former wife, Ann Fisher, being alive. This Ann Fisher was the sister of Hannah Fisher, the prisoner's first wife, who was dead: so that, if it should be held by the judges that the second marriage was good, notwithstanding the consanguinity, the third marriage to Eliza Bostock would constitute the crime of bigamy; if not, the third marriage would be good. The jury returning a special verdict, the prisoner was discharged, and the record removed into the Court of Queen's Bench, by writ of error. It was now most fully and ably argued by Sir Fitzroy Kelly, Mr. Peacock, and Mr. Campbell Forster for the Crown; and by Mr. Aspland for the defendant in error. The Court delivered judgment, declaring the marriage with the sister of the deceased wife to be null and void.

18.—Lord Robertson issues an interlocutor prohibiting Mr. Macdonald from exercising the function of professor of Hebrew in Edinburgh University, to which he had been appointed by the Town Council, for the reasons that he refused to sign the Confession of Faith, and was not a member of the Established Church of Scotland. The interdict was craved by the Senatus Academicus of the University and a minority of the Town Council.

20.—Came on for hearing in the Arches Court the case of Geils v. Geils, originally a suit for the restitution of conjugal rights, but now mixed into a plea on the part of the defendant for a judicial separation on the ground of cruelty and adultery.

—Circular issued by the Colonial Secretary, commanding colonial governors to address prelates of the Roman Catholic Church by the title to which their rank in their own Church would appear to give them a just claim. "As Parliament by a recent Act (Charitable Bequests) formally recognised the rank of the Irish Roman Catholic prelates, by giving them precedence immediately after the prelates of the Established Church of the same degrees, the Roman Catholic archbishops and bishops taking rank immediately after the prelates of the Established Church respectively, it has now appeared to her Majesty's Government that it is their duty to conform to the rule thus laid down by the Legislature."

22.—The Swiss Federal army defeat the Leaguers of the Sonderbund near Lucerne, and enter the town without resistance. The Catholic cantons were afterwards occupied till they could satisfy the Diet as to the expenses of the war.

23.—The new Parliament opened by the Queen in person. "Her Majesty feels it to be her duty to the peaceable and well-disposed subjects to ask the assistance of Parliament in taking further precautions against the perpetration of crime in certain counties in Ireland. Her Majesty recommends to the consideration of Parliament the laws which regulate the navigation of the United Kingdom, with a view to consider whether any change can be adopted which will, without danger to our maritime strength, promote the commercial and colonial interests of the empire. The prospects of trade were at one period aggravated by so general a feeling of distrust and alarm that her Majesty, for the purpose of restoring confidence, authorized ministers to recommend to the Directors of the Bank of England a course of proceeding suited to such an emergency. This course might have led to an infringement of the law; but her Majesty has great satisfaction in being able to inform you that the law has not been infringed—that the alarm has subsided—and that the pressure on the Bank and the commercial interest has been mitigated." On this occasion the Queen's speech was for the first time transmitted to the chief towns in the kingdom by the electric telegraph. The speed was at the rate of 55 letters per minute, or 430 words an hour.

23.—The First Lord of the Treasury and the Chancellor of the Exchequer write to the Directors of the Bank of England, that in consequence of the gradual revival of confidence among commercial classes it is not necessary to continue any longer in force their letter of 25th Oct.

25.—The murders and outrages recently committed in Ireland were of the most frightful character. Major Mahon was shot dead four miles from Strokestown, when returning from a meeting of the Roscommon Board of Guardians. (See Oct. 24.) A policeman engaged in making inquiries was afterwards shot near the same place. Heazleton, a bailiff, was stabbed near Pomeroy, Tyrone. Farmer Flynn was stabbed returning from the fair of Newtonhamilton, Armagh. Walsh, steward to O'Callaghan, of Ballynahinch, was shot on the highway near Scariff. Devitt was murdered at Nenagh while endeavouring to help a family whose house had been invaded by a band of ruffians. Hassard, treasurer to the grand jury of Fermanagh, was shot entering his own avenue. A woman was shot near Murroe when attempting to shield her husband from assassins. Ralph Hill, sub-agent to David Fitzgerald, was shot on the lands of Rathure, after distraining corn belonging to one of the tenants. O'Donnell, of Kilcass, sub-agent to the Marquis of Ormonde, was shot dead. About the close of the month the Rev. John Lloyd, vicar of Aughrim, was shot, riding home after preaching a sermon in the parish church.

26.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer moves for leave to bring in a bill to extend the time for the purchase of land and the completion of works by railway companies. In considering the monetary and commercial crisis of the time, he said he was impressed with the belief that the pressure had been partly caused by the great demand made on the capital of the country for the completion of railways. The average amounts expended on railways had risen from 1,470,000*l.* in 1841 to 14,000,000 in 1845, and in the following year the sum rose at once up to 9,800,000*l.* in the first half, and 26,175,000*l.* in the second half. During the first half of the present year the sum withdrawn from the ordinary channels of circulation for railways was 25,700,000*l.*

29.—Sir George Grey introduces a bill for the repression of crime in Ireland. In the course of his speech he laid before the House a statement as to the four classes of crimes which during the last four months had so materially increased in certain counties of Ireland. The number of homicides, which in the six months ending Oct. 1846 was 68, had risen for the six months ending Oct. 1847 to 96. For the corresponding period the number of attempts on life by firing at the person had risen from 55 to 126; robberies of arms from 207 to 530, and the firing of dwellings from 51 to 116. During the last month the total number of these four classes of offences amounted to 195 over all Ireland. The counties of Clare, Limerick, and Tipperary furnished 139—the amount of crime in these counties being 71 per cent. of the whole of Ireland, while the population was only 13 per cent. Sir George proposed to give power to the Lord Lieutenant to proclaim districts; increase the police-officers by draughts from Dublin; prohibit the carrying of arms, except in special cases for the protection of the person; and in the districts where murders were committed to have the power of calling out all males between sixteen and sixty to assist in capturing the assassins.

30.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer moves for the appointment of a Select Committee to inquire into the causes of the recent commercial distress, and as to the extent it was affected by the law regulating the issue of banknotes payable on demand. After a debate of three nights the House assented to the proposal.

December 5.—Six British residents attacked and slaughtered at Hwang-chu-Kee, a village four miles above Canton, whither they had gone in a small boat. The bodies were afterwards recovered, and four of the ring-leaders executed.

6.—Mr. Salomons elected Alderman for the ward of Cordwainers, being the first Jew who held this dignity in the City of London.

8.—Lord John Russell writes to the Bishops of London, Winchester, and other protestors against the appointment of Dr. Hampden to the see of Hereford:—"I observe that your lordships do not state any want of confidence on your part in the soundness of Dr. Hampden's doctrine. Your lordships refer me to a decree of the University of Oxford passed eleven years ago, and founded upon lectures delivered fifteen years ago. Since the date of that decree Dr. Hampden has acted as Regius Professor of Divinity. The University of Oxford, and many Bishops, as I am told, have required certificates of attendance on his lectures before they proceeded to ordain candidates who had received their education at Oxford. He has likewise preached sermons for which he has been honoured with the approbation of several prelates of our Church. Several months before I named Dr. Hampden to the Queen for the see of Hereford, I signified my intention to the Archbishop of Canterbury, and did not receive from him any discouragement. In these circumstances it appears to me that, should I withdraw my recommendation of Dr. Hampden, which has been sanctioned by the Queen, I should virtually assent to the doctrine that a decree of the University of Oxford is a perpetual bar of exclusion against a clergyman of eminent learning and irreproachable life, and that, in fact, the supremacy which is now by law vested in the Crown is to be transferred to a majority of the members of one of the Universities; nor should it be forgotten that many of the most prominent of that majority have since joined the communion of the Church of Rome. I deeply regret the feeling which is said to be common among the clergy on this subject. But I cannot sacrifice the reputation of Dr. Hampden, the rights of the Crown, and what I believe to be the true interests of the Church, to a feeling which I believe to be founded on misapprehension and fomented by prejudice."

14.—Mr. Horsman's motion, censuring the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for not carrying out the provisions of the Act of Parliament regarding episcopal incomes, defeated by a majority of 130 to 65.

16.—Thomas Sale and George M'Coy, coopers, tried at the Central Criminal Court for the murder of Mr. Bellchambers on the morning of the 11th October last. They were found guilty, partly on evidence furnished by M'Coy when in prison, and sentenced to be executed. Some doubt, arising as to the participation of M'Coy in the actual murder, although there could be none as to his subsequent guilty knowledge, his sentence was commuted to transportation for life. Sale was executed on the 10th January.

20.—Her Majesty's steam frigate Avenger wrecked on the Sorelle rocks, on the north coast of Africa. She had on board 270 persons, including crew and supernumeraries, all of whom were drowned, with the exception of a lieutenant and four men. The frigate, which was commanded by a step-son of Admiral Napier, appeared to have been carried out of her course by a current.

— Came on for hearing in the Court of Queen's Bench the case of Captain Charretie and Sir William Young, late a director of the East India Company, and others, charged with having fraudulently obtained and sold for money a cadetship in the East India Company's service. In order to procure a cadetship for his son, Mr. Wotherspoon, W.S. Edinburgh, remitted 1,100*l.* to a Mrs. Stewart in London. Through one Trotter, she obtained an introduction to Captain Charretie, and through him she reached Sir William Young, a director. Trotter received 50*l.* for his aid; the balance of Wotherspoon's remittance was paid to Charretie, who gave Mrs. Stewart a note from Sir William, stating that he would have much pleasure in making the appointment in November. The appointment was then made, and the young man went out to Madras. The suspicions of the Court of Directors being excited regarding various recent appointments to cadetships, a strict inquiry took place, and the result was the present trial. Against Captain Charretie the jury returned a general verdict of guilty; but against Sir William Young the verdict was guilty on the second count only, charging a conspiracy to obtain the appointment by sale.

23.—Abd-el-Kader surrenders to General Lamoricière, on condition of being sent to Alexandria or St. Jean d'Acre. In defiance of this stipulation the Emir was sent with his family and attendants to France, and detained a prisoner, first at Toulon, and then in the Château d'Amboise.

25.—Lord John Russell to the Dean of Hereford:—"I have had the honour to receive your letter of the 22d inst., in which you intimate to me your intention of violating the law. I have the honour to be your obedient servant," &c.

27.—The Times publishes another remonstrance from the Dean of Hereford against the elevation of Dr. Hampden to that see:—"Having fully counted the cost, having weighed the sum of bounden duty in the one scale against the consequence in the other, I have come to the deliberate resolve that on Tuesday next no earthly consideration shall induce me to give my vote in the Chapter of Hereford Cathedral for Dr. Hampden's elevation to the see of Hereford." In answer to the Dean's memorial to the Queen Sir George Grey wrote:—"I have had the honour to lay the same before the Queen, and I am to inform you that her Majesty has not been pleased to issue any commands thereupon."

28.—The French Chambers opened by the King, who expressed a hope that "the progress of general civilization will be everywhere accomplished by a good understanding between governments and people, without impairing internal order and the good relations between states." He also intimated that the Duc d'Almale had been appointed to the command in Algeria.

— Election of Dr. Hampden to the see of Hereford. Dean Mereweather protested against the election being proceeded with till due inquiry had been made into the charges preferred against Dr. Hampden by the University of Oxford, or till the Crown presented some more suitable person to the see. He also protested against the proceedings of that day so far as persons voted who were merely honorary prebendaries, and had not complied with the statutes of the Church, and because it was necessary that the dean should be included in the majority. The vote stood: for Dr. Hampden, three canons residentiary, five prebendaries of the old order, and six of the junior order; against, the dean, and one canon residentiary, Dr. Huntingford.

January 1.—The Kaffir War terminated by the surrender of several of the most powerful chiefs to Colonel Somerset and the new Governor-General, Sir Harry Smith.

3.—The property of Tawell, the Salt Hill murderer, confiscated to the Crown by his crime, was this day restored to his widow.

— Affray in the streets of Milan between the Austrian troops and the populace, caused by the troops smoking cigars which the people had bound themselves not to consume in order to injure the revenue of the imperial treasury.

4.—Special Commission opened at Limerick for the trial of persons charged with murder, housebreaking, and robbery. The first tried was one Ryan, alias Puck, reputed to have been concerned in nine murders. He was found guilty of shooting John King, and sentenced to be executed on the 7th of February. Four others received sentence of death, and between twenty and thirty were transported for periods varying from two to fourteen years. Similar results followed the sitting of the Commission at Ennis on the 12th, and Clonmel on the 24th. In the latter place there were upwards of 400 prisoners in gaol.

— The Quarterly Review, published to-day, in an article on "Ministerial Measures" noticed the aggressive tendencies of the Papal See in words frequently referred to afterwards:—"The Pope, it seems, has announced his intention of proving that he has power and authority, both temporal and spiritual, here in England itself, by creating those ecclesiastic officers heretofore tolerated under the modest and sufficient title of Vicar Apostolic into the dignities of Archbishops and Bishops, not merely nominal, not in partibus, but of Pope-created dioceses, in this by law Protestant realm of England; but, having more respect for the special provisions of the Act of 1829 than the English Ministers or his Irish prelates, he calls them Bishops of Westminster and Birmingham."

— The Morning Chronicle publishes the letter on national defences addressed to Sir John Burgoyne by the Duke of Wellington, in Jan. 1847. "Some days have elapsed—indeed a fortnight has—since I received your note, with a copy of your observations on the possible results of a war with France, under our present system of military preparation. You are aware that I have for years been sensible of the alteration produced in maritime warfare and operations by the application of steam to the propelling of ships at sea. . . I have in vain endeavoured to awaken the attention of different administrations to this state of things as well known to our neighbours as it is to ourselves. . . I have examined and reconnoitred over and over again the whole coast from the North Foreland, by Dover, Folkestone, Beachy Head, Brighton, Arundel, to Selsey Bill near Portsmouth, and I say that, excepting immediately under the fire of Dover Castle, there is not a spot on the coast on which infantry might not be thrown on shore at any time of the tide, with any wind and in any weather, and from which such body of infantry, so thrown on shore, would not find, within the distance of five miles, a road into the interior of the country through the cliffs practicable for the march of troops. . . . When did any man hear of allies of a country unable to defend itself? Views of economy of some, and I admit that the high views of national finance of others, induce them to postpone those measures absolutely necessary for mere defence and safety under existing circumstances, forgetting altogether the common practice of successful armies, in modern times, imposing upon the conquered enormous pecuniary contributions, as well as other valuable and ornamental property. Do we suppose that we should be allowed to keep—could we advance a pretension to keep—more than the islands composing the United Kingdom; ceding disgracefully the Channel Islands, on which an invader has never established himself since the period of the Norman Conquest? I am bordering upon seventy-seven years of age passed in honour. I hope that the Almighty may protect me from being witness of the tragedy which I cannot persuade my contemporaries to take measures to avert."

5.—Violent scene in the Spanish Cortes, arising out of a charge of peculation made against Salamanca, the Minister of Finance.

7.—Died at Hanover, in her 98th year, Miss Caroline Lucretia Herschell, sister and assistant of the celebrated astronomer, to whose zeal, diligence, and accuracy he was greatly indebted. She also made many useful astronomical observations of her own, and wrote several scientific treatises.

8.—Execution of Reid for the Mirfield murders, at York. On the scaffold he said, "I alone am the guilty person; McCabe is entirely innocent. No human being in the world had anything to do with it except myself." McCabe's sentence had previously been commuted to transportation for life.

9.—Riotous proceedings in Leghorn, arising out of demonstrations made by the National party.

10.—A box, containing 1,500 sovereigns, stolen from the parcel van on the Great Western Railway, between London and Taunton.

12.—The Sicilians revolt at Palermo against King Ferdinand. A constitution is conceded, but the city continues for many weeks in a discontented and unsettled state.

13.—The Emperor of Austria writes to the Archduke Rainer, Viceroy of the Lombardo-

Venetian kingdom:—"I have duly examined the events which occurred at Milan on the 2nd and 3rd inst. It is evident to me that a faction desirous to destroy public order and tranquillity exists in the Lombardo-Venetian kingdom. All that you deemed necessary to satisfy the wants and wishes of the different provinces I have already done. I am not disposed to grant further concessions. Your Highness will make known my sentiments to the public. The attitude of the majority of the population of the Lombardo-Venetian kingdom, however, induces a hope that similar distressing scenes shall not occur again. At all events, I rely on the loyalty and courage of my troops."

14.—The Swiss Diet refuse to recognise the Pope's protest against the conduct of the Provisional Government to the Catholic cantons.

15.—Marshal Radetzky, commander-in-chief of the Austrian forces in Italy, issues a general order to the troops, commanding them to prepare for an immediate struggle:—"The efforts of fanatics, and a false spirit of innovation, will be shivered against your courage and fidelity like glass striking against a rock. My hand still firmly holds this sword that during sixty-five years I have carried with honour upon so many fields of battle. I still know how to use it, to protect the peace of a country, only lately so happy, and which a furious faction threatens to precipitate into incalculable misery."

16.—Confirmation of Dr. Hampden in the Church of St. Mary-le-Bow, Cheapside. On the calling of objectors, a protest was presented against the proceedings, but the Commissioners declined to receive it on the ground that they were assembled under a Commission, signed by the Archbishop of Canterbury, to proceed with the confirmation, and if they failed to do so they were liable under the statute of Henry VIII. to heavy pains and penalties. The same course was taken in the case of a libel, which the objectors wished to have argued in the Ecclesiastical Courts.

17.—The Mexican Congress reject all negotiations with the United States while their armies and fleet occupy the country.

18.—Died at Bradenham House, Buckinghamshire, aged 82, Isaac D'Israeli, author of the "Curiosities of Literature."

20.—Several persons slain at Pavia in a collision between the students and Austrian soldiers.

22.—The Roman Gazette announces the elevation of Dr. Wiseman to the Archbishopric of Westminster. Referring to a proposal to build an Italian Catholic Church in London, it was intimated that subscriptions would be received by his Eminence the Cardinal Prefect of the Propaganda, and by his Eminence the Most Reverend Monsignor the Vicar Apostolic, now Archbishop of Westminster.

24.—Revolution in Carracas, Venezuela; five members killed in the Chamber of Deputies.

29.—Proclamation of the Constitution of 1812 for Naples and Sicily.

30.—Numerous arrests and great increase of Austrian military force in Milan and Verona. The Duke of Modena quits his capital.

February 1.—The free importation of grain, granted in the last session of Parliament, ceases, as also the temporary suspension of the Navigation laws.

— Sir J. Brooke leaves England as Governor of the new British possession of Labuan.

2.—Debate in the French Chamber of Deputies on affairs in Switzerland, in the course of which M. Thiers severely censured the Guizot Ministry for interfering in the quarrel.

3.—On the House of Commons resuming its sittings to-day, Lord George Bentinck presented petitions from West India planters and merchants in Britain and Jamaica, praying for the removal of burthens, for a full supply of African labour, an alteration of the navigation laws, and an assimilation of the duties on colonial rum to those paid by the British distiller. He also proposed a motion asking for a select committee to inquire into the present condition and prospects of the interests connected with and dependent on sugar and coffee planting in her Majesty's East and West India possessions, and the Mauritius; and to consider whether any and what measures can be adopted by Parliament for their relief. The motion was agreed to without a division.

4.—The foundation-stone of Sunderland Docks laid by Mr. Geo. Hudson, M.P.

— Private Ducker, of the Coldstream Guards, shot in Birdcage Walk by Annette Myers, a young Frenchwoman, excited to the deed through jealousy.

7.—A bronze statue of Mr. Huskisson set up in Lloyd's.

— At a meeting of Protectionists, in his own house, Lord Stanley announced the resignation of Lord George Bentinck, as the leader of the country party in the House of Commons, owing to his differing with many of them on the questions of removing Jewish disabilities, and of making still further concessions to Roman Catholics.

— The second reading of the Government Bill for removing Jewish disabilities carried by a majority of 277 against 204. The third reading was carried by 234 to 173. In the House of Lords the bill was thrown out on the second reading by a majority of 35.

9.—Stormy debates in the French Chambers; Reform dinners declared illegal, and forbidden by the Ministry.

K

9.—Disturbance in Munich, occasioned by Lola Montez interfering to protect a club of Alemanen students which she had taken under her patronage. She was set on by the populace, and made her escape with difficulty in the company of the King.

11.—Died William Howley, Archbishop of Canterbury, aged 72, one of the most moderate and conciliatory of prelates.

12.—The question of Reform rejected in the French Chamber of Deputies. Next day a meeting of 100 Deputies was held in defiance of the Ministry.

— The Duffus family of Erichbank—four sisters and two of their husbands—sentenced to four months' imprisonment at Perth Circuit Court, for destroying a testamentary deed with intent to defraud the interests of minors under the settlement.

15.—The Pope decrees a Constitution for the Roman States.

— Opening of the Caledonian Railway between Carlisle, Edinburgh, and Glasgow.

16.—The Emperor of Russia declares himself discharged from his engagement under the treaty of Vienna to maintain the neutrality of the Swiss Confederation.

— Romeo Coates, thirty years since "the Amateur of Fashion," run over by a handsome cab near the Hummums Hotel, Covent Garden, and injured so severely that death resulted in a few days.

17.—The proffered mediation of Lord Minto between the Sicilians and the King of Naples accepted.

— The Marquis of Lansdowne moves the second reading of a bill enabling her Majesty to open up and carry on diplomatic relations with the Court of Rome. After considerable discussion the second reading was carried without a division. In committee, the Earl of Eglinton carried an amendment against the Government, prohibiting the reception of any ecclesiastic as the accredited minister of the Pope in this country. The bill was afterwards sent down to the Commons, and passed on the 29th of August.

18.—Lord John Russell submits the financial scheme of the Government; and in consideration mainly of the large sum required for our national defences, proposes to continue the income-tax for three years at the increased rate of five per cent. The proposal to increase the income-tax gave rise to so much opposition throughout the country, as well as in the House, that on the 28th the Chancellor of the Exchequer (Wood) announced that Government did not intend at present to press this portion of their scheme.

19.—An express train from London to Glasgow performs the journey (472½ miles) in 10½ hours.

20.—The Reform Banquet in Paris fixed for to-day deferred to the 22nd. French funds (130) —Three per Cents 73f. 35c.; Five per Cents 115f. 90c.

21.—Died, in the 81st year of his age, John Quincy Adams, sixth, President of the United States, 1825-9.

— The Committee of the Paris Reform Banquet issue a programme of their proceedings and the route of the intended procession. On the evening of the same day the Government issued a counter proclamation, prohibiting the banquet. "By the manifesto published this morning, calling the public to a demonstration, convoking the National Guards, assigning them a place in rank with the Legions, and ranging them in line, a Government is raised in opposition to the real Government, which usurps the public power, and openly violates the Charter. These are acts which the Government cannot tolerate. In consequence, the banquet of the twelfth arrondissement will not take place. Parisians, remain deaf to every excitement of disorder. Do not by tumultuous assemblages afford grounds for a repression which the Government would deplore."

22.—Great Reform Demonstration in Paris. Hôtel Guizot attacked; barricades also begin to appear in the streets. In the Chamber the impeachment of the Ministry was proposed, but defeated by a large majority.

— Came on for hearing in the Court of Queen's Bench the action brought by Alfred Bunn against Jenny Lind for breach of her engagement to sing at Drury-lane Theatre. Damages laid at 10,000l. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, and the case was ultimately settled by a payment of 2,000l. by Miss Lind to Mr. Bunn.

23.—Serious disturbances at Milan. The city declared in a state of siege.

— Fluctuation in the English Funds caused by the French Revolution. This day (Wednesday) Consols opened at 89, but on the arrival of the French news fell to 88½; next day they opened at 88½, and on the news of the King's flight fell to 85½; on Monday they opened at 81½ to 81¼, but fell to 79½, being the lowest point reached during the excitement. On the 28th the French Funds fell in London to 80½.

— In Paris great numbers of the National Guards declare in favour of Reform, and join with the people in demanding the dismissal of the Ministers. The Municipal Guards, after firing upon the people, were compelled by the National Guards to surrender their colours. In the evening the troops fired upon the people before Guizot's Hotel, owing, it was thought, to the accidental discharge of a gun being mistaken for an attack. Barricades were now got up with great speed, and throughout the city the troops were seen fraternizing with the people. M. Guizot having resigned in the course of the day, the King sent for M. Thiers to undertake the task of forming a new Ministry. By midnight the city might be said to be entirely in the hands of the people.

24.—Abdication and flight of Louis Philippe. "The King," writes one who was present, "bewildered by conflicting counsels and contradictory reports, which were brought to him from all sides, determined to make a last effort. Followed by his sons and aides-de-camp, some of whom had not even time to put on their uniforms, he mounted his horse and rode along the troops drawn up in the inner court-yard of the palace, and on the Place du Carrousel. . . . Repeated cries of 'Vive le Roi!' for an instant revived their hopes; but soon these shouts were overpowered by those of 'Vive la Reforme!' The King saw clearly the state of things. The coolness with which the National Guard received him showed him at once that his natural supporters, those upon whom he had a right to rely, had deserted him. His countenance betrayed neither fear nor agitation, but wore the calm sadness of a man struck to the heart. He returned to his own room, and whilst sitting there with his head in his hands, trying to collect his thoughts, an officer hurriedly entered and exclaimed, 'Sire, there is not a moment to lose; give orders to the troops or abdicate.' The King, after a moment's silence, replied: 'I have always been a pacific king; I will abdicate.' Then rising from his seat he opened the door of his closet, adjoining the apartment in which the Queen and Princesses were assembled, and repeated with a firm voice, 'I abdicate!' Resisting the entreaties of his family to recall the words he went to his closet and wrote the act of abdication in these words:— 'I abdicate the crown, which I assumed in compliance with the will of the nation, in favour of my grandson the Comte de Paris. May he succeed in the great task which this day devolves upon him.' 'May he resemble his grandfather,' exclaimed the Queen." The Duchess of Orleans implored the King not to impose upon his grandson a burden which he thought himself unable to sustain. The King and Queen, the most of the royal family, and a few staunch friends, quitted the Tuilleries as the mob were entering to take possession, and sack the royal apartments. With some difficulty they managed to avoid any serious encounter with the populace, and proceeded to St. Cloud, where two small carriages were procured. Here the fugitives were divided into two parties: the younger under the charge of the Prefect of Versailles had little difficulty in reaching Eu, and then Boulogne, where they were joined by the Duc de Nemours, and got on board a steamer which landed them at Folkestone, on Sunday the 27th. The King's party proceeded with little interruption to Dreux, where the first night was spent, but between this place and Trouville various inconvenient and unforeseen interruptions occurred; and it was not till the 2nd of March that the royal fugitives, under the names of Mr. and Mrs. Smith, managed to get on board the Express steamer at Havre, which landed them at Newhaven early the following morning. Prince Louis Napoleon left his residence in London on the 26th, and proceeded to Paris by way of Boulogne.

24.—The Duchess of Orleans appears in the Chamber of Deputies with her young children. When the Princes entered the disorder was extreme; deputies besieged the tribune, and a strange crowd blocked up the lobbies, barring the entrance of the royal party. She took her place (writes her biographer) near the tribune, and remained standing there, with her two children at her side; behind her stood the persons of her suite, using all their efforts to keep off the crowd that pressed around her. M. Dupin ascended the tribune to announce that the act of abdication was about to be presented to the Chamber by M. Barrot; meanwhile, he strongly urged that the unanimous acclamations which had hailed the Comte de Paris as King, and the Duchess of Orleans as Regent, should be entered in the procès-verbal. These words were received with violent opposition from a part of the Chamber and the tribunes. The President thought fit to call upon all strangers to quit the Chamber, and requested the Princes to withdraw, in deference to the rules.—"Sir," replied the Duchess, "this is a royal sitting." Some of her friends, alarmed at the increasing tumult, entreated her to leave the Chamber. "If I leave this Assembly, my son will never enter it again," she replied, and remained immovable in her place. But the crowd kept advancing, the noise increased, and the heat became so excessive that the young Princes could hardly breathe. The Duchess was then conducted along the left-hand lobby running at the back of the semicircle, to the upper benches opposite to the tribune, where she seated herself with the Duc de Nemours and her children. At this moment M. Odilon Barrot, who had just returned from the Tuilleries, obtained silence. "The Crown of July rests upon the head of a child," he said. . . . At the acclamations of Vive le Comte de Paris! the Duchess of Orleans rose from her seat, as if to speak. While one side of the Chamber cried out "Parlez, Parlez!" the other tried to drown her voice. She began with the words, "My son and I are come"—but was instantly interrupted. She again attempted to speak, but was unable to make herself heard, and sat down. Several speakers rose one after another, amidst a confusion impossible to describe. Towards the close of M. Lamartine's speech a violent knocking resounded through the hall; the doors of the tribune of the press were burst open by an armed mob, who rushed forward with loud cries; they pointed their loaded muskets towards different parts of the Chamber, till at length they perceived the royal mother and her children, at whom they took deliberate aim. Most of the deputies quitted the Chamber, leaving the Duchess of Orleans and her little sons (with no other protection than that of the few deputies remaining in their places before her), exposed to the musket-balls of the infuriated mob. From the calmness of her face it might have been thought that she alone was in no danger. Leaning over to the bench below her, she gently placed her hand on the shoulder of a deputy, and said, in a voice which betrayed no emotion, "What do you advise me to do?" "Madam, the deputies are no longer here; you must go to the President's house to collect the Chamber." "But how can I get there?" she replied, still without moving from her place, or betraying any alarm at the muskets which glittered above head. "Follow me," said M. Jules de Lasteyrie. Descending from bench to bench, he conducted her to the left corner of the Chamber, where there was an exit reserved for the deputies, and leading into a dimly-lighted corridor; the folding-doors opened only from within: one was shut; the other, which was open, separated the Chamber from this corridor. M. de Lasteyrie made his way to it by pushing aside the crowd, and perceiving a company of National Guards outside the door, he called to them to form lines to protect the Duchess of Orleans, who was following him, which they immediately did. In the conference the Duchess was for a short time separated from her sons, but they were carefully protected and restored to her. She left Paris that evening, taking refuge first at the Château de Baligny, and then in Prussian territory.

24.—After an exciting discussion at the Hôtel de Ville, in the presence of a tumultuous assembly, a majority of the deputies there assembled resolve that the new form of Government to be proposed to the people shall be Republican. Late in the evening the Provisional Government issued their first proclamation:—"A retrograde Government has been overturned by the heroism of the people of Paris. This Government has fled, leaving behind it traces of blood, which will for ever forbid its return. The blood of the people has flowed, as in July; but happily it has not been shed in vain. It has secured a national and popular Government, in accordance with the rights, the progress, and the will of this great and generous people. A Provisional Government, at the call of the people and some deputies in the sitting of the 24th of February, is for the moment invested with the care of organizing and securing the national victory. It is composed of MM. Dupont (de l'Eure), Lamartine, Crémieux, Arago, Ledru-Rollin, and Garnier-Pagès. The secretaries to this Government are MM. Armand Marrast, Louis Blanc, and Ferdinand Flocon. These citizens have not hesitated for an instant to accept the patriotic mission which has been imposed on them by the urgency of the occasion. Frenchmen, give to the world the example Paris has given to France. Prepare yourselves, by order and confidence in yourselves, for the institutions which are about to be given to you. The Provisional Government desires a Republic, pending the ratification of the French people, who are to be immediately consulted. Neither the people of Paris nor the Provisional Government desire to substitute their opinions for those of the citizens at large, upon the definite form of Government which the national sovereignty shall proclaim. L'unité de la nation, formed henceforth of all classes of the people which compose it; the Government of the nation itself; Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity for its principles; the people to devise and to maintain order: such is the Democratic Government which France owes to herself, and which our efforts will assure to her. Such are the first acts of the Provisional Government. (Signed) Dupont (de L'Eure), Lamartine, Ledru-Rollin, Bèdeau, Michel Goudchaux, Arago, Bethmont, Marie, Carnot, Cavaignac, Garnier-Pagès. The Municipal Guard is disbanded. The protection of the city of Paris is confided to the National Guard, under the orders of M. Courtais."

25.—Addressing an excited assembly of ultra-Republicans, who demanded that the red flag should be substituted for the tricolor, at the Hôtel de Ville, M. Lamartine said:—"Citizens, for my part, I will never adopt the red flag; and I will explain in a word why I will oppose it with all the strength of my patriotism. It is, citizens, because the tricolor flag has made the tour of the world under the Republic and the Empire, with our liberties and our glories, and that the red flag has only made the tour of the Champ de Mars, trailed through torrents of the blood of the people." The effect was described as electric. Loud cheering and clapping of hands followed the address, and the orator was nearly suffocated by the efforts of the multitude to embrace him.

— Revolution in Paris. The Times surprised its readers with the following telegraphic announcement:—"No mail from Paris, the railway stations and barriers being in possession of the people. The rails taken up some distance from Paris to prevent troops from reaching the capital town from the provinces. The loss of life is frightful.—3 A.M. Messengers just returned from Neufchâtel. All communication cut off from Paris. The mail and passengers have returned. Amiens has revolted."

26.—The Republic officially proclaimed at the Hôtel de Ville. M. de Lamartine, attended by the other members of the Provisional Government, descended the steps of the great staircase, and thus addressed the vast assemblage:—"Citizens, the Provisional Government of the Republic has called upon the people to witness its gratitude for the magnificent national co-operation which has just accepted these new institutions. The Provisional Government of the Republic has only joyful intelligence to announce to the people here assembled. Royalty is abolished. The Republic is proclaimed. The people will exercise their political rights. National workshops are open for those who are without work.

The army is being reorganized. The National Guard indissolubly unites itself with the people, so as to promptly restore order with the same hand that had only the preceding moment conquered our liberty. Finally, citizens, the Provisional Government was anxious to be itself the bearer to you of the last decree it has resolved on and signed in this memorable sitting; that is, the abolition of the penalty of death for political matters. This is the noblest decree, citizens, that has ever issued from the mouths of a people the day after their victory. It is the character of the French nation which escapes in one spontaneous cry from the soul of its Government. We have brought it with us, and I will now read it to you. There is not a more becoming homage to a people than the spectacle of its own magnanimity."

27. Inauguration of the French Republic round the column of July.

28.—Lord John Russell announces that this country will not interfere in any way with the internal affairs of France.

29.—In compliance with a demand made by his subjects, the Grand Duke of Baden consents to liberty of the press, trial by jury, and establishment of a national guard.

March 1.—Lord Palmerston announces, in the House of Commons, that Great Britain had officially recognised the French Provisional Government. His Lordship afterwards spoke five hours in reply to Mr. Anstey's motion impeaching his foreign policy.

2.—The Duchess of Orleans and her two children arrive at Ems, in Prussia.

— The Grand Duke of Baden succumbs to the demands of his people, and dismisses his obnoxious Ministers.

— A correspondent of the Standard, writing from Folkestone, says:—"Prince Louis Napoleon and General Houdetot arrived here by steamer this morning. The Prince told me that on his arrival in the French capital he placed himself in communication with the members of the Provisional Government, and offered his services should they be needed in the then existing crisis; and that he had been requested, in consequence of the disordered state of public affairs, to retire from France for a short time."

3.—The Duke d'Aumale and the Prince de Joinville quit Algiers for Gibraltar.

— Disturbance at Cologne, on the occasion of the people demanding a redress of grievances. The military were called out and the streets cleared with difficulty.

4.—The French Provisional Government fix the convocation of the electoral assemblies for the 9th of April, and the meeting of the Constitutional Assembly for the 20th. The following principles were adopted:—1. The National Assembly shall decree the Constitution. 2. The election shall have population for its basis. 3. The representatives of the people shall amount to 900 in number. 4. The suffrage shall be direct and universal, without any limitation as to property. 5. All Frenchmen of the age of 21 years shall be electors. 6. The ballot shall be secret.—The victims of the Revolution were interred to-day with great pomp in presence of members of the Provisional Government.

4.—The United Irishman, the Dublin organ of the Young Irish party, instructs the people thus:—"Above all let the man amongst you who has no gun sell his garment to buy one. Every street is an excellent shooting gallery for disciplined troops; but it is a better defile in which to take them. In the vocabulary of drilling is no such phrase as 'Infantry prepare for window-pots, brickbats, logs of wood, chimney-pieces, heavy furniture, light pokers, &c.,' and these, thrown vertically on the heads of a column below from the elevation of a parapet or top storey, are irresistible. The propelling forces—viz. ladies, or chambermaids, or men who can do no better—have the additional advantage of security; and the narrower the street, and the higher the houses, the worse the damage and the greater the security." To such missiles as broken glass, for maiming the horses' feet, "revolutionary citizens add always boiling water or grease, or, better, cold vitriol if available. Molten lead is good, but too valuable; it should be always cast in bullets and allowed to cool. The house-tops and spouts furnish in every city abundance; but care should be taken, as they do in Paris, to run the balls solid. You cannot calculate on a hollow ball, and that might be the very one selected to shoot a field-officer." In the same number, the following sentiments were expressed regarding John O'Connell's visit to Paris:—"Let no man in France dream for one instant that this dastard, this born slave and beggar, represents Ireland, or is in any manner authorized to offer Ireland's arm in war to any nation, least of all to England. In the name of our country, we disavow the scandalous negotiator. It was not in Ireland's name that two weeks ago he sent round amongst those Parisians a dead man's hat—a posthumous begging-box—to crave alms for his country. It is not in Ireland's name he now dares to blaspheme the sacrificial blood poured out for freedom and for right. Ireland spurns him, and will yet curse the very name he bears. He is not fit to untie the latchet of the meanest citizen-soldier in Paris."

— Insurrection at Munich, and capture of the arsenal by the people. On the King yielding to their demands, the arms seized were restored, and the people dispersed in quietness.

6.—Disorderly gathering in Trafalgar-square, occasioned by a proposal to hold an open-air meeting there on the subject of the income-tax. A small detachment of the A division of police was sent to break up and disperse the mob, but they met with the utmost resistance, and were ultimately compelled to retire to Scotland-yard. A body of 500 was thereafter sent out, which separated the mob into sections, and took the most mischievous of the leaders into custody. Shortly after six o'clock the police were withdrawn, but groups of noisy people continued to keep possession of the square; about eight o'clock it was found that their numbers were rapidly increasing and their conduct more threatening. The palisades around the Nelson column were taken down and several of the public lamps destroyed. The police were again brought out in great force, and some sharp skirmishing took place, but the mob were ultimately driven back at every point. About nine o'clock a youth in epaulettes, with a disorderly following of over 200, dashed through Pall Mall to St. James's Park; a good many windows, and also one of the large lamps at Buckingham Palace, were broken by this detachment. By midnight the city was in its usual state of order and quiet.

6.—Riot and loss of life in Glasgow. Under the pretence that they were starving and had been refused employment, a large mob collected on the Green early in the day, and afterwards passed through Argyll-street, Buchanan-street, and Jamaica-street, to the south side of the city, breaking into every shop where they thought arms or more valuable plunder could be secured. Watchmakers, jewellers, and goldsmiths were the chief sufferers, shops of that character being in some instances completely wrecked, and their precious contents swept off by the thieves. A few bakers' shops were also broken into, and in Buchanan-street a cart-load of meal was seized and divided among the rioters. The ordinary police force was quite unable to cope with the outbreak, and some delay unfortunately occurred before either infantry or cavalry could be brought to disperse the plundering mob. Emboldened by their success, and with the view of giving a political colour to their organized attack upon the peace and wealth of the city, the thieves attempted next day to stop certain mills at Bridgeton. After due warning they were here fired upon by a company of pensioners belonging to the city, and two or three of them killed. Baffled in their first design and excited with rage, the mob placed one of the bodies on a shutter and bore it through the streets, shouting "Murder" and "Vive la République." Detachments of the 3rd Royal Irish Dragoons, with the 1st Royals and 71st Regiments, were now brought into the town, and their presence alone caused the riotous gathering to melt away. The military bivouacked in the streets for the night, but their active interference was not necessary. Riots of a similar character, but on a smaller scale and unattended with loss of life, took place in Edinburgh, Liverpool, and some other towns

6.—The tubular bridge over the Conway Straits floated to its position between the abutments.

7.—Arrival at Portsmouth of large numbers of English workmen expelled from France.

8.—Commercial crisis at Paris. The Bank of France suspends cash payments, while Laffitte, Blount, and Co., and Gouin and Co., close their doors.

— The Elector of Hesse-Cassel concedes the reforms demanded by the people.

— Second Exhibition of British Manufactures opened at Society of Arts, Adelphi.

10.—Complaint having been made by the French Provisional Government of the extreme kindness and regard shown by Great Britain towards the ex-royal family, Lord Palmerston writes to-day that the attention shown to the King and his Ministers was "mere hospitality."

11.—The French Provisional Government decree the sale of the Crown lands and jewels.

— Confirmation of Dr. R. Bird Sumner as Archbishop of Canterbury, in Bow Church.

12.—A colossal bust of Liberty carried by sculptors through Paris, and blessed by a priest.

13.—Mr. Hume's amendment on the Government proposal limiting the income-tax to one year lost by a majority of 225.

— Monster meeting at Berlin to petition the King that the reform granted to other countries might be conceded to Prussia. The assembly was of a highly tumultuous character, and before it was dissolved several people were shot down by the soldiers.

— M. Ledru-Rollin, Minister of the Interior in the New Provisional Government, issues a circular to the Local Commissioners showing them how to control the ensuing elections. "Cause," he writes, "in all points of your department the meeting of electoral committees, examine closely the qualification of the candidates, and stop only at those who appear to present the strongest guarantee of republican opinion and the greatest chance of success. No compromises; no complaisance. Let the day of election be the triumph of the Revolution." The circular was so unconstitutional in character that it was at once repudiated by his colleagues.

— Disturbance in Vienna, and resignation of Prince Metternich. The fighting continued over part of the day and night. Next morning the Emperor issued a decree abolishing the censorship of the press and establishing a national guard.

14.—The Chinese junk Keying arrives at Jersey from Boston in twenty-one days.

— The Pope issues a proclamation announcing the grant of a new Constitution, giving his people, among other benefits, a representative system, not merely consultative, but deliberative.

16.—Rupture of diplomatic relations with

Spain. Lord Palmerston to Sir Henry Lytton Bulwer, British Minister at Madrid :—"I have to recommend you to advise the Spanish Government to adopt a legal and constitutional system. The recent downfall of the King of the French and of his family, and the expulsion of his Ministers, ought to indicate to the Spanish Court and Government the danger to which they expose themselves in endeavouring to govern a country in a manner opposed to the sentiments and opinions of the nation; and the catastrophe which has just occurred in France is sufficient to show that even a numerous and well-disciplined army offers only an insufficient defence of the Crown, when the system followed by it is not in harmony with the general system of the country. The Queen of Spain would act wisely in the present critical state of affairs, if she were to strengthen her Executive Government by widening the basis on which the Administration reposes, and in calling to her councils some of the men in whom the Liberal party place confidence." Sir Henry not only communicated the terms of this despatch to Queen Christina and the Duc de Sotomayor, but caused publication of it to be made in some of the Opposition journals. The head of the Ministry promptly replied :—"The Cabinet cannot see without the most extreme surprise the extraordinary pretensions of Lord Palmerston to interfere with the internal affairs of Spain, and to support himself on inexact and equivocal data, the qualification and appreciation of which cannot in any case come within his province. . . . Animated by sentiments suitable to Spanish dignity and to every government which respects itself, the Cabinet of her Catholic Majesty cannot avoid protesting in the most energetic manner against the despatches of Lord Palmerston and of your Excellency; and considering that it cannot retain them without being wanting in dignity, it returns them inclosed, and at the same time declares that if your Excellency should, at any other time, in your official communications on points of international rights, go beyond the bounds of your mission, and interfere in the particular and private affairs of the Spanish Government, I shall consider myself under the painful necessity of returning your despatches without further remark." The result of this correspondence was, that on the 19th the British Minister received his passports with a peremptory order to quit the kingdom in forty-eight hours, or sooner if possible, "for circumstances are urgent, and there would be much to lament if this took place too late."

17.—The proposed extension of the income-tax to Ireland negatived in the House of Commons by 218 votes to 138.

— Great demonstration of labourers in Paris; the troops ordered to quit the capital. Discontent general throughout the provinces.

— In Milan the people rise against the Austrian troops, and succeed in overpowering the guard of the Government House. The fighting continued with little interval for nearly a week, when Marshal Radetzky retired from the city, and a Provisional Government was proclaimed. During the struggle small balloons were sent up from the battlements filled with proclamations designed to raise the people of the neighbourhood against the Austrians. They were also advised to destroy the bridges on the roads to Verona and Mantua, to prevent the arrival of reinforcements of artillery, which it was probable Marshal Radetzky would demand.

18.—Bloody struggle at Berlin between the populace and military, on the occasion of assembling in the square before the Palace to hear the King's decree conceding the liberties asked for on the 13th. Above 100 were killed. The fighting had scarcely ceased when the King issued a proclamation stating that his "faithful soldiers had only cleared the court-yard at a walking pace, with their weapons sheathed, and that the guns had gone off of themselves, without, thanks be to God, causing any injury."

— This morning, at eight o'clock, the Queen was safely delivered of a Princess (Louise).

20.—Arming and equipment of the Garde Mobile in Paris; General Cavaignac appointed Minister of War.

— Revolution at Modena; the Duke deposed and imprisoned.

— Mr. Hume's amendment for the reduction of the navy rejected in the House of Commons by a majority of 109.

21.—The King of Bavaria, unable to bear up any longer against the indignation caused by the elevation of Lola Montez into a Countess, abdicates in favour of his son Maximilian.

— King Frederick William issues a proclamation annihilating the kingdom of Prussia, and declaring his intention of once more uniting Germany and taking it under his guidance in these moments of peril and anarchy. The proclamation was received with enthusiasm, and on the following day the King rode through Berlin, wearing the German national colours, escorted by half the population cheering him to the skies—the blood of his slain subjects hardly dried in the streets, and their bodies lying in state in all the churches. His Majesty made a declaration that he did not intend to dethrone any one German Prince, that he did not wish for the Imperial Crown, and only wanted liberty, union, and good order in Germany.

22.—The Emperor of Austria consented to be proclaimed "King of Poland," and promised to grant a free Constitution.

— The Austrians are forced to withdraw from Venice, and a Provisional Government is formed preparatory to the declaration of a Republic.

23.—The Emperor of Russia, who had recently placed his army on a war footing, orders to-day 150,000 soldiers to the frontiers of Poland.

23.—To satisfy the demands of his excited people, the Emperor of Austria causes 150 state prisoners to be released from the fortress of Spielberg.

— Charles-Albert, King of Sardinia, announces his determination to take part in the Italian struggle :—“ For the purpose of more fully showing by exterior signs the sentiments of Italian unity, we wish that our troops should enter the territory of Lombardy and Venice, bearing the arms of Savoy above the Italian tri-colored flag.”

24.—Insurrection at Kiel, and formation of a Provisional Government to accomplish the severance of the duchies of Schleswig and Holstein from Denmark.

— Forgery of documents purporting to be “ The Inedited Works of Lord Byron.” A person describing himself as George Gordon Byron, son of the poet, having caused intimation to be made of the intended publication of a work containing Lord Byron’s Letters, Journals, and other MSS., the solicitors of Lady Leigh, the poet’s sister, to whom reference was made, write :—“ We have authority to say and have evidence to prove that Lord Byron’s family never heard of his Lordship’s having any such son ; that the editor is much better known by that excellent institution called ‘ The Society of Guardians for Protection of Trade ’ than by the family ; that he never had any access whatever to any MS. in the possession of the poet’s sister, and that no documents have been confided to him by any of the family.”

25.—Holstein, incited by Prussia, declares itself independent of Denmark.

— The United Irishman publishes a letter from John Mitchell to “ The Right Honourable the Earl of Clarendon, her Majesty’s Executioner-General and General Butcher of Ireland.” The epistle concludes :—“ I cannot help repeating my congratulations to you on the fact that the Irish nation and the British Government are now finally at issue. Whichever field of battle you prefer, the Queen’s Bench or the streets and fields—whichever weapon, picked juries or whetted sabres—I trust, I believe, you will now be stoutly met. One party or the other must absolutely yield ; you must put us down, or we will put you down. I remain, my Lord, your Lordship’s mortal enemy,” &c. &c. At a meeting of the Irish Confederation in the Music Hall, Dublin, Mitchell said he was sick with talking and writing. The time had come for something more effectual. He conjured them for the love of God to get guns. A decent rifle could be bought for 3*l.* ; but still, as many present could not afford to give that for a weapon, there was a simpler mode of obtaining a very effectual one. Let each man get a stout ash-pole of seven feet in length, and let that be properly mounted. He was accused by the English Viceroy of writing sedition. He must tell them it was he who wrote the article called seditious, and he would write more sedition ; nay, he would go further : it was his intention to commit high treason. He meant to call upon every one of those present to commit high treason ; and unless they made up their minds to be slaves for ever, they must rise at an early day or early night, march through that Castle, and tear down that English flag. The other speeches were of an equally inflammatory description.

26.—The Provisional Government of Venice writes to the Milanese :—“ We are united to you, Lombards, not only by the tie of affection, but also by a community of misfortunes and hopes. When the hallowed soil of the country shall have ceased to be sullied by the foot of the foreign oppressor, we shall join you in discussing the form of Government most conducive to our common glory.”

— The Emperor of Russia issues a manifesto to his subjects, warning them to beware of revolutionary agents on the German frontier.

27.—Came on for hearing at Exeter Assizes the case of the Queen v. Latimer, involving the question of a libel upon the Bishop of Exeter. The defendant, the proprietor of the Western Times newspaper, in commenting upon a dispute between the Bishop and the Duke of Somerset, described the former as a brawler and a consecrated and careless perverter of truth. He pleaded first that he was not guilty, and second, justification. The jury found for the Crown upon the first issue, and for the defendant on the second. The verdict was received with shouts of applause, and in the evening great rejoicings took place in the city.

29.—The Paris mob attack the office of La Presse, but are repulsed by the energy of the editor, M. de Girardin.

30.—The whole country from the Po to the Alps of Tyrol in arms against Austria.

31.—Two trading vessels in the British Channel having hoisted the Irish national flag were chased by a Government tender till the rebellious emblem was lowered.

— In consequence of the incessant marching of deputations through the streets of Paris, the Provisional Government issue a proclamation advising the people to return to their work, and adopt their accustomed mode of life.

April 1.—The attempt of a band of French Republicans to invade Belgium frustrated at Quiévrain, where the most of them were seized in the railway carriages and taken into custody.

3.—Mr. Smith O’Brien and other members of the Irish Confederation deputation wait upon the French Provisional Government. M. Lamartine warned them not to expect the Republic to interfere in Irish grievances, as they wished to be on good terms, not with this or that part of Great Britain, but with Great Britain entire.

3.—In the House of Lords, the Marquis of Lansdowne states that the King of Sardinia had acted towards Austria contrary to the advice of the British Government.

4.—The National Convention of Chartist delegates commence their sittings in London, and organize a demonstration for the 10th.

7.—Lord Brougham applied to M. Crémieux, the French Minister of Justice, to be naturalized as a citizen of that kingdom, but departed from the intention on being informed that he would lose all the privileges and advantages which he enjoyed in England. Lord Brougham had previously made application to the mayor of Cannes to be brought forward as a candidate for the National Assembly.

8.—The army of Charles-Albert forces the Austrian lines on the Mincio, and, crossing the Adige, takes up a position to the north of Verona, where Radetzky had moved his forces after withdrawing from Milan.

10.—Chartist demonstration on Kennington Common. This gathering was designed by the leading Chartists as a huge exhibition of the physical power of the class who had prepared a petition to the House of Commons reported to bear the enormous number of five million signatures. The delegates to the Convention, with their followers, were to proceed, in the first instance, in detachments through the streets of London to Kennington, where they were to be harangued by Feargus O'Connor and others; they were then to form into marching order and return to the door of the House of Commons with their monster petition. In the excited state of the public mind, the Government thought it proper to take every precaution for preserving the peace and protecting the property of the public. The Duke of Wellington undertook all the arrangements for guarding the Bank, Custom House, Exchange, Post Office, and other public buildings, and generally the complete military defence of the metropolis. Troops were introduced in large numbers, and, without any offensive display, placed in quarters where they could be used with effect. Probably the most significant check received by the agitators was furnished by the inhabitants of the metropolis enrolling themselves, to the number of a quarter of a million, as special constables, Louis Napoleon being among the number. A proclamation was also issued warning people against collecting for disorderly purposes. The thoroughfare along Downing-street from Parliament-street to the Park was barricaded. The gates of the Admiralty, the Horse Guards, and the Board of Control were closed, and barriers erected inside to give additional support. A body of 2,600 Household Troops were sent over to Kennington Common early in the morning, and at a later hour 1,700 belonging to different regiments of the line. At a meeting on Sunday evening, the 9th, a split took place among the Chartist leaders; one section of the Convention, represented by Bronterre O'Brien, wishing every man to proceed armed to the demonstration, while another, represented by O'Connor, refused to permit the original peaceable designs of the gathering to be thus interfered with. O'Brien and his party withdrew. O'Connor and his brother delegates passed through the streets on a high car decorated for the occasion, and followed by a smaller one bearing the petition arranged in a series of monster rolls. The proceedings on the Common turned out to be tame and spiritless. There was at no time more than 20,000 or 25,000 persons present, not one half of whom were Chartists. The orators quarrelled among themselves as to the order of their proceedings, one Cuffey declaring the whole Convention to be composed of cowardly humbugs. The second procession to the House of Commons was finally abandoned, and O'Connor undertook to present the petition in the usual way, which he did that evening. In the House of Lords the Duke of Wellington said that no great society had ever suffered such a grievance as that endured by London during the past few days. If such scenes were to be repeated, he trusted that effectual measures would be taken by the Legislature for securing the peace and trade of this great metropolis against similar interruptions. Next day the Home Secretary was able to telegraph to all the chief magistrates of the country the welcome news that London was perfectly quiet, and that not the slightest disturbance had taken place anywhere.

12.—A resolution proposed in the Chartist Convention recommending the working classes not to deal with any of the shopkeepers who had acted as special constables on Monday. The president deprecated such a resolution; but Cuffey, one of the delegates for London, said he did not see why they should be so delicate in the matter. Having been out of work lately, he had allowed Mrs. Cuffey to go out working, and at one of the houses where she had been in the habit of charing she was asked whether she was the wife of Cuffey of the Convention. She said she was, and intimation was then made to her that her services would not be required again.

— Silesia and Posen in a disturbed state; armed associations forbidden in the latter place.

13.—The Venetian Republic accept the offer of a female battalion to attend the wounded in battle.

— The Dublin correspondent of the Daily News writes:—"Curiosity led me to visit Hyland's pike manufactory in Charles-street, within half a pistol shot of the Four Courts. Outside is a sign-board with a pike painted thereon. Inside the picture is realized, for I saw half-a-dozen pikes spread forth on the dingy counter, and two purchasers comparing the size, strength, and polish of the various blades. There is no secret or mystery about the sale.

Hyland vends his wares openly and boasts of the extent of his trade, which keeps up five furnaces and twice the number of anvils, all busy with pikes. The night sales, I understand, are considerable."

14.—The Prussian Government despatch troops and artillery to assist the Duchies against Denmark.

— In the House of Commons, the Chairman of Petitions, Mr. Thornby, brings up the report of the Committee on the monster petition presented on the 10th. Instead of bearing 5,705,000 signatures, there were only 1,975,472; and not only were there numerous portions in the same handwriting, but the same name was frequently repeated, particular prominence being given to the Queen, Prince Albert, the Duke of Wellington, Sir Robert Peel, Col. Sibthorp, and other names of an absurd and imaginary character. O'Connor said he was not satisfied with the report. He believed the petition was signed by five millions of people; but whether this were so or not, he intended soon to present one signed by four millions.

15.—The Marquis of Northampton gives his last conversation as President of the Royal Society. He was succeeded by Earl Rosse.

— In the Court of Queen's Bench, Dublin, the grand jury find true bills against O'Brien, Meagher, and Mitchell, for seditious practices tending to the disturbance of the public peace.

17.—The election writ for Derby suspended by a resolution of the House of Commons.

19.—The distress in Paris was so great at this time that the Provisional Government were distributing in alms no less than 5,000*l.* daily.

20.—Prince Metternich arrives in London, having been compelled to fly from Vienna.

— The Indian steamship Benares burnt at Rajmahal; thirty passengers drowned.

— The insurgent army of Hecker and Struve defeated on the heights of Schlechtenau, near Raudern, by the troops of the Germanic Diet.

— Great national fête in Paris, on occasion of the Provisional Government presenting colours to the National Guard and troops of the line. It was calculated that 400,000 armed men defiled in front of the Arc de Triomphe, where the amphitheatre was erected.

21.—Special prayer for the maintenance of peace and tranquillity read in all the churches.

— Mr. Vans Agnew and Lieutenant Anderson of the Bombay Fusiliers murdered at Mooltan, while engaged in a mission to substitute Sirdar Khan-Singh for Moolraj in the governorship.

22.—The Royal Assent given to the Crown and Government Security Bill (Ireland), making all written incitement to insurrection and resistance to the Government felony, punishable with transportation. The treason newspapers were on this, their last occasion of speaking with impunity, unusually audacious. The Nation writes:—"Animated by that spirit, warned by its experience, and stimulated by its heroic instances, we swear before God, before the whole Irish race, and the congregation of the free states of Europe, never to rest or relax in our labours until these conquerors of ours shall sue for peace and forgiveness, like sinners before a shrine, at the feet of emancipated Ireland. The time of the sword has come; the cant of the Constitution is obsolete as Ogham stones." Mitchell discoursed thus in the United Irishman:—"The first thing to be done is to stop the thoroughfares, to cut off communication, to entrench liberty in the heart of the capital, to split up, divide, draw into fastnesses, make powerless, and slaughter the opposing troops. . . . Give up for ever the notion of surprises. Surprise involves secrecy, dissimulation, places you at the mercy of spies and traitors, and runs the gauntlet through ten thousand chances. It is the muffle of bravery and screen of cowards. We will none of your secrecies and surprises. Gird up your loins, oil your guns, and meet your enemies openly, in daylight, muzzle to muzzle. Then you shall conquer—otherwise not. The notion of a man pilfering liberty—of a nation of eight millions, in its own land, sneaking through darkness, skulking through back ways to freedom—is disgusting."

23.—The Prussians under General Von Wrangel attack the Danes near Schleswig, and force them from the mainland to the islands of Alsen and Fünen on the east coast.

— A new star of the fifth magnitude discovered in the constellation Ophiucus.

29.—Sir John Richardson arrived at Lake Superior, on his overland journey to the Arctic Regions, in search of Sir John Franklin.

— Free Exhibition of select British manufactures at the Society of Arts closed, having been visited by many thousand persons.

— The Pope, in conclave, disavows the act of the Papal troops in crossing the frontier to assist the Sardinian army against Austria. Two days afterwards, yielding to the threatening demands of his subjects, he consented to declare war against Austria. A new Liberal Ministry was also appointed.

— The Paris papers publish the official announcement of the result of the elections for the capital. Lamartine headed the list with 259,800 votes. The extreme Republican party, represented by Ledru-Rollin, were all low on the list.

— Affray in Limerick between the Old and Young Irishers. O'Brien, Mitchell, and Meagher having arrived there to attend a soiree given by the Sarsfield Club in their honour, were set upon by a party of O'Connellites. O'Brien was so severely handled that he could not attend the entertainment, while the others were subjected to the mortification of seeing the place of meeting battered in and almost burnt about their ears. The police interfering successfully between the combatants, the broken windows and doors were covered with boards, and the soiree was closed amid comparative quiet. Meagher spoke with his usual severity on the "Gagging Act" which had acted so mischievously on their plans:—"These sentiments are no doubt seditious, and the expression of them may bring me within the provisions of the new Felony Bill—the Bill, mind you, that is to strike this nation dumb. Yes! from this day out you must lie down and eat your words. Yes!—you—you starved wretch, lying naked in that ditch, with clenched teeth and starting eye, gazing on the clouds that redden with the flames in which your hovel is destroyed. What matters it that the claw of hunger is fastening in your heart? what matters it that the hot poison of the fever is shooting through your brain? what matters it that the tooth of the lean dog is cutting through the bone of that dead child, of which you were once the guardian? what matters it that the lips of that spectre there, once the pride and beauty of the village, when you wooed and won her as your bride, are blackened with the blood of the youngest to whom she has given birth? what matters it that the golden grain which has sprung from the sweat you squandered on the soil be torn from your grasp, and Heaven's first decree to man contravened by human law? what matters it that you are thus pained and stung, thus lashed and maddened? Bite the tongue that burns to complain, beat back the passion that rushes from your heart, check the curse that gurgles to your throat. Die! die without a groan—die without a shriek—die without a struggle, for the Government that starves you desires you to live in peace. Shall it be so? Shall the conquest of Ireland be this year completed? Why should I put this question, after all? Have I not been answered by that flash of arms which purifies the air where the pestilence has been. The mind of Ireland no longer wavers. It has acquired the faith, the constancy, the heroism of a predestined martyr. It foresees the worst, prepares for the worst. The Cross, as in Milan, already glitters in the haze of battle, and points to eternity. We shall no longer seek for liberty in the byeways."

30.—Five persons suffocated in a fire at the Siennes, Edinburgh.

May 1.—The Chester and Holyhead Railway opened to Bangor.

—The proposed assemblage of a council of 300, and enrolment of a national guard in Dublin, prohibited by proclamation.

—Chevalier Bunsen elected Deputy for Schleswig to the German Diet at Frankfort.

—Frightful butchery of Polish insurgents in Posen by Prussian troops; the whole of the Grand Duchy in revolt.

2.—General Cavaignac recalled from Algeria to Paris.

4.—Opening of the French National Assembly, the members of the Provisional Government marching to the place of meeting on foot. The oath of fidelity to the Republic dispensed with. Next day M. Buchez was elected President.

5.—The Prior-Forster controversy relating to the copyright of certain facts in the life of Goldsmith. Prior writes from Richmond:—"As a matter of courtesy, I accept your volume, but I cannot consent to do so without stating distinctly that its contents thus given out under your name—as far as they relate to Goldsmith—are, and have been for eleven years past, that is, since the publication of my Life of him, exclusively mine; they are mine in substance as in detail—in dates, facts, and innumerable personal matters, in the discovery of many of his writings previously unknown—in the ascertainment of several doubtful points—in all the data, in short, which go to form authentic biography as distinct from what then only existed of him in the form of an imperfect and scanty biographical preface. These were gleaned with great care and assiduity. I hunted for them in England, Ireland, and Scotland, and several parts of the Continent. London, its libraries, collections, and localities, were traversed in their length and breadth for some years in the pursuit. They, therefore, cost me much time, much labour, and were acquired at considerable expense. Several were supplied to me as matter of personal favour, and would not have been given to any one else. Yet all these you have appropriated to your own purposes, without permission, and with the smallest degree of acknowledgment in a few places; while, in many more, the source is studiously obscured, so as to appear to give the credit of the research or discovery to others. Acknowledgment, however, is not the question; I complain of unscrupulous pillage, of pillage from my first page to my last. And I would inquire with great deference, by what authority in law or in letters you seize upon a publication to which you have no possible claim in any way; but two volumes of a writer who has not the honour of your acquaintance, and transplant the whole, with some dexterity in form, in order to evade the law of copyright, into a book of your own?" At the close of a detailed defence of his independent sources of information, Mr. Forster replied:—"As to the claim which you put forth to an absolute property and possession in such dates, facts, and innumerable personal matters of Goldsmith's life as you may yourself have discovered, I have only to say that it is based on an assumption which, if admitted or sanctioned to the smallest extent, would be the most serious invasion of the rights of literature that has been practised or attempted in any country." Commenting upon this dispute, the Athenæum writes:—"There is a curious confusion in Mr. Prior's mind between the right to works of imagination and the right to works of fact. The first are the product of a man's own mind, the last a mere conversion to his use of what all the world may use as well as he. No labour bestowed on a series of facts can make them any man's private property. An author cannot by seizure acquire a right of monopoly in the events of another man's life, though he may have employed great industry in discovering them, and therefore seem to suffer a hardship. He who by long seeking should find ores in land belonging to the public would not thereby acquire the right to appropriate the ores. In a word, Mr. Prior's materials, with whatever amount of trouble collected, when once collected are public materials, and he cannot plead a law of treasure-trove against all the world, even for facts which first turned up to himself."

6.—Engagement between the Austrians and Piedmontese before the walls of Verona. The conflict lasted from nine in the morning until five in the afternoon, and was gallantly sustained on both sides. The result was slightly against the Piedmontese, who were compelled to retire to their original position overlooking the plain of Verona.

7.—The Polish insurgents under Mierowlawski, after repeated engagements and great slaughter, surrender to the Prussian troops.

— Insurrectionary outbreak at Madrid. Several insurgents taken prisoners and shot.

9.—The Queen and Prince Albert visit the ex-royal family of France at Claremont, the seat placed at their disposal by the British Government.

10.—A portion of the Buckingham and Chandos estates, situate in the counties of Buckingham, Oxford, and Northampton, sold by public auction at Garraway's. Finmore, Oxfordshire, with a rental of 1,226*l.* per annum, was knocked down at 31,000*l.*; and Hellesden, Buckinghamshire, with a rental of 4,763*l.*, brought 130,500*l.* The total amount realized was 262,990*l.*

— Accident on the Great Western Railway at Shrivensham Station, caused by a cattle-truck allowed to remain on the line used by the mid-day express train from Exeter. Seven persons were killed.

11.—Sir James Ross in the Enterprise, and Captain Bird in the Investigator, leave England for the Arctic Regions, in search of Sir John Franklin.

13.—Mr. Redhead Yorke, M.P. for York, commits suicide in the Regent's Park by swallowing a dose of prussic acid.

15.—Another insurrectionary movement in Paris. About 50,000 extreme Democrats marched from the Bastille to the Chamber of Deputies, where they forced the gate and swarmed into the building. Great uproar ensued, and all authority was for a time at an end. The delegates of Communistic clubs spoke from the tribune, and proposed motions (140) which were carried by acclamation. The Chamber was declared dissolved, and a new Government appointed, consisting of Ledru-Rollin, Barbès, Louis Blanc, and others. The troops of the line being instantly called out, and the National Guard placed under arms, the mob retreated from the Chamber to the Hôtel de Ville, where various new schemes of Government were brought up for discussion. There they were followed by the National Guard, which remained true to the Chamber, expelling the mob and arresting the most prominent leaders.

15.—Mr. Labouchere introduces the Government scheme for throwing open the navigation of the country of every sort and description with the exception of the coasting trade. A resolution, moved by Mr. Harris, to maintain the fundamental principles of the existing Navigation law, was lost by a majority of 294 to 177.

— Tried in the Court of Queen's Bench, Dublin, before Lord Chief Justice Blackburn and a special jury, William Smith O'Brien, charged with uttering a seditious speech at a meeting of the Irish Confederation, on the 15th March last. The jury being unable to agree upon a verdict were discharged with consent of the Attorney-General. A similar result took place in the case of Meagher, tried in the same Court next day. In this case the jury were all agreed except one—a Roman Catholic.

16.—The Chartist National Convention breaks up.

— The King of Naples issues a proclamation justifying the slaughter of the Palermites on the ground of necessity.

17.—Sanguinary insurrection at Naples; the city given up to pillage by the Government; 400 troops killed; the National Guard disbanded, and a new Ministry formed.

— The Emperor of Austria, with the Empress and other members of the Imperial family, quit the capital in consequence of its disturbed state, and take up their residence at Innsbruck, in the Tyrol. From this retreat the Emperor issued a proclamation announcing that he would not grant anything to the forcible exactions of unauthorized and armed individuals.

— In the House of Commons, Mr. Bouverie moved the second reading of a bill for securing sites for churches in Scotland. It was based upon the report of a Select Committee, presented last session, wherein it was stated that "Congregations are in the habit of meeting for public worship in places and under circumstances which are unfit for the administration of the sacred ordinances of the Christian religion, and which expose both the minister and the people to weather injurious to their health, and to inconveniences which ought not to attend the free exercise of religious privileges." The bill was thrown out on the third reading by a majority of 93 to 59.

18.—The Piedmontese troops undertake the siege of the city and fortress of Peschiera. The place held out for twelve days, when the provisions being nearly exhausted, and the cannonade unusually destructive, a submission was made, and Charles-Albert entered the city.

18.—The German National Assembly commences its sittings at Frankfort. The Diet despatched a message desiring to act in friendly unison and co-operation with the newly created representatives of the great German family.

21.—Grand Fête de la Concorde at Paris. As many as 1,200,000 people were said to have been present at the striking and costly allegorical procession.

22.—Intimation given that several paintings of great value had been stolen from the Exhibition of the Royal Academy.

23.—In the course of the discussion on the postponement of Mr. Hume's motion on Reform, Lord John Russell denied that the middle or working classes were favourable to household or universal suffrage.

— Freedom of the negro proclaimed at St. Pierre, Martinique. A riot followed, in which thirty-two persons were burnt.

24.—Letters from the Orleans family at Claremont read in the National Assembly, protesting against their banishment from France.

— Wreck of the emigrant ship Commerce, of Limerick, on the coast of Nova Scotia, and loss of about 100 lives. The vessel ran ashore; and although a communication was made in a short time with the land, the sea swept the decks with such violence that not more than eighty of the passengers and crew could be saved.

— Came on for trial in the Commission Court, Dublin, before Baron Leffroy and Mr. Justice Moore, the case of the Queen v. John Mitchell, who was charged with felony under the new Act for the better security of the Crown and Government. Initiatory proceedings had been commenced on the 26th April, but the prisoner pressing various dilatory pleas, it was not till this day he could be called upon to plead to the charge. Even now his counsel, Sir Coleman O'Loughlin, handed in a challenge to the jury on the ground that it had been arranged favourable to the Queen and adverse to the prisoner. The Crown joined issue, and criers were appointed who found against the traverser. The Attorney-General explained at some length the circumstances under which the prosecution had been instituted against the prisoner, and produced evidence of his crime in the shape of speeches made by him at public meetings, and articles written by him in his newspaper called the United Irishman. The case was brought to a conclusion on the 26th, when the jury, after an absence of nearly three hours, returned a verdict of Guilty. Next day Mitchell was sentenced to be transported beyond the seas for the term of fourteen years. He was sent the same evening to Spike Island, Cork, preparatory to being placed on board a convict vessel for Bermuda. Mitchell's conviction gave rise to considerable commotion among the physical-force repealers and Chartists throughout the country; in London the gatherings in Clerkenwell Green and Bethnal Green were for several nights of a most menacing nature, but were put a stop to without bloodshed.

25.—Second reading of the Jewish Disabilities Bill thrown out in the House of Lords by 163 to 128.

— The new steam-basin at Portsmouth opened in presence of the Queen, Prince Albert, the Duke of Wellington, and a brilliant company.

27.—Died, at Kensington Palace, in her 71st year, the Princess Sophia, youngest daughter of George III.

— The National Assembly of France resolve on the election of a single President and a single Chamber, both by universal suffrage.

28.—Ministers defeated in the House of Lords, on the Irish Poor Law Bill, by a majority of 6, and in the Commons by 1, on Dr. Bowring's motion on the Public Accounts and Revenue.

29.—Insurrection at Prague. Taking advantage of the Emperor's decree of equality between the Slavonic and German races in Bohemia, Count Leo Thun and other leaders of the Czechs determined to establish a Provisional Government at Prague independent of the Government at Vienna. Three hundred deputies were sent from the different Slavonic states, and the Congress was formally opened for business on the 2nd of June. The Viennese Ministry refusing to recognise the Prague Assembly, Prince Windischgrätz, the Austrian governor of the city, used military force to put down and dissolve the new revolutionary Government. The fighting continued for three days; the first being mainly noticeable from the death of the Princess Windischgrätz, who was killed in her apartment by a rifle-ball. Latterly the General withdrew his troops to the adjoining heights and commenced to bombard the city. The infuriated Czechs refused to yield, and it was not until the evening of the 17th, when a great part of the city was destroyed, that the soldiers regained possession of Prague and put down the insurrection.

30.—Sir G. Sugden's appointment of his son to the Assistant-Registrarship for the Court of Chancery set aside in the Dublin Court of Queen's Bench in favour of Mr. Kelly.

31.—The wooden bridge crossing the Usk, in connexion with the South Wales Railway, totally destroyed by fire.

June 1.—Gold excitement at California. A letter from San Francisco says:—"The whole of this part of California is in the highest state of excitement relative to the Placera or gold regions recently discovered on the branches of the Sacramento river. Three-fourths of the houses in San Francisco are actually vacated. Even lawyers have closed their books and taken passage with spade and wooden dish to make fortunes by washing out gold from the sands of the Sacramento."

2.—The Peninsular and Oriental steamship Ariel wrecked off Leghorn; crew and passengers saved.

3.—The proposed prosecution of M. Louis Blanc rejected by the French Assembly.

4.—Annexation of Lombardy to Piedmont proclaimed at Milan.

5.—In opposition to the Emperor's prohibition, Baron Jellachich, Ban of Croatia, holds a Slavonic Diet at Agram. War was thereafter declared against the Croats.

— Lord Palmerston enters into a lengthened defence of his Spanish policy, which had ended in the expulsion of Sir Henry Bulwer from Madrid.

6.—Fire at the Earl of Harrowby's residence, Sandon Hall, near Stafford. The furniture, pictures, books, and statues were mostly got out on the lawn, but the building itself suffered severely.

— The Chartists Jones, Williams, Fussell, and Sharp arrested for sedition and committed to Newgate.

7.—Twenty persons poisoned at Northampton, in consequence of partaking of coloured blanc-mange at a public dinner held to celebrate the ordination of a new clergyman. One of the party, Mr. Caufield, an accountant, died next day, and six others continued for some time in a precarious state. The cook was taken into custody.

9.—The Government proposal for a committee on the Navigation laws carried by a majority of 177.

10.—George John Hansom, a prisoner in Coldbath Fields, murders William Henry Woodhouse, one of the keepers, by stabbing him with a knife used in the oakum room. He was tried for the offence on the 7th July following, and being found guilty was executed on the 24th. At the time of the murder Hansom was under conviction for aiding to conceal the birth of a child, the result of an incestuous intercourse with his own daughter. He had altogether by her a family of four children, two of whom he was said to have murdered.

11.—Precautions against Chartist risings in the metropolis. The whole of the superintendents of the metropolitan police force met in the chief office, Great Scotland Yard, to receive their final instructions as to the proceedings to be adopted next day for suppressing the intended demonstration. A number of steamboats were filled with soldiers, who were to move off to any part at a moment's notice, if their services were needed. The Bank of England, although not outwardly fortified as on the 10th of April, had a double guard inside, and the soldiers were so arranged within the building that every part of it would be amply protected. Similar precautions were adopted at the Mint, Custom House, and other Government offices. At the Houses of Parliament, not only was every part well protected, but a large supply of provisions laid in.

12.—Failure of the Chartist demonstration. "It ended," says the Times, "not in smoke, but in ruin. There is absolutely nothing to record—nothing except the blankest expectation, the most miserable gaping, gossiping, and grumbling of disappointed listeners; the standing about, the roaming to and fro, the dispersing and the sneaking home of poor simpletons who had wandered forth in the hope of some miraculous crisis in their affairs. There was nothing, absolutely nothing, anywhere that could be called an assemblage, except by the merest courtesy."

— Disturbance at Drury-lane Theatre on the occasion of M. Jullien attempting to introduce the Théâtre Historique. The piece selected was "Monte Cristo," but not one word could be heard for the yelling and groaning of the audience. A few of the more prominent leaders in the disturbance were taken into custody.

13.—In opposition to M. Lamartine, the French National Assembly resolve, by a large majority, to permit Louis Napoleon to take his seat as a member. Availing himself of a disturbance on the Place de la Concorde, M. Lamartine said civil war had now begun on behalf of Louis Napoleon, and he proposed that the Exclusion Bill of 1816 should still be considered as in force against the whole family. The proposal appeared to be received with favour at first, but was negated next day, by the Assembly agreeing, as stated above, to let him take his seat.

14.—Disturbances at Guéret, Nîmes, and Perpignan, with much loss of life. There was also a renewal of the street conflicts at Berlin to-day.

— Louis Napoleon writes from London to the President of the National Assembly:—"I was about to set off in order to appear at my post, when I learnt that my election had been made the pretext for disorders and disastrous errors. I repudiate all the suspicions of which I have been the object, for I seek not for power. If the people impose duties on me, I shall know how to fulfil them, but I disavow all those who have made use of my name to excite disturbance. The name which I bear is, above all, a symbol of order, of nationality, of glory; and rather than be the subject of disorder and anarchy, I should prefer remaining in exile." The reading of this letter caused great excitement in the Assembly, and next day the writer addressed to the President another communication deprecating the injurious suspicions to which his election had given rise, and formally tendering the resignation of his seat.

15.—Suicide of T. Steele, O'Connell's "Head Pacificator."

16.—Lord John Russell introduces his scheme for relieving the West India distress by reducing the sugar duty from 13s. to 10s. ; muscovado to remain as it was, but new and distinctive duties to be fixed for foreign brown clayed. On the 18th Sir John Pakington proposed an amendment, censuring the Government scheme as unlikely either to relieve the existing distress or check the stimulus to the slave trade, which the diminution of the cultivation of sugar in those colonies inevitably occasioned. An acrimonious discussion ensued, having reference principally to a charge made by Lord George Bentinck against the Colonial Office, of suppressing important information for the purpose of keeping the House in the dark. Lord John Russell said that such tricks were not the fault or the characteristic of men high in office. They were rather the characteristic of men engaged in such pursuits as the noble lord long followed. Some time ago the noble lord very greatly distinguished himself by detecting a fraud with respect to the name and age of a horse—a transaction in which he showed very great quickness of apprehension. Mr. Disraeli replied, that Lord George Bentinck was not to be bullied either in the ring or on the Treasury bench. So far as the matter of the horse was concerned, he had been thanked for his conduct at Newmarket by a meeting presided over by the Duke of Bedford. On a division, Lord John Russell's proposal was carried by a majority of 260 to 245. A bill founded on the resolutions was subsequently passed through both Houses of Parliament.

18.—The Austrians defeated by the Piedmontese near Rivoli.

—Lieutenant Edwardes defeats the Sikh forces at Noonaree, capturing also six of their guns and the whole of their field baggage and stores.

19.—Draft of the Constitution of the French Republic read to the National Assembly.

20.—The Select Committee appointed to inquire into the character of the commercial distress last year and the operation of the Bank Charter Act report that it is not expedient to make any alteration in the Bank Act.

21.—Eleven lives lost in the Victoria Iron Stone Pit, near Monmouth, by the upsetting of a bucket in which the workmen were descending the shaft.

23.—Uprising of the Red Republican party in Paris, leading to the resignation of the Executive Committee. The city was declared in a state of siege, and unlimited military power delegated to General Cavaignac. The barricades were of an unusually massive description, and set up in positions which enabled the insurgents to baffle for a time the best directed attacks of the National Guard. The fighting continued over three days, at which time the party behind the barricade in the Faubourg St. Antoine alone held out. General Lamoricière threatening to bombard the place, a flag of truce was sent out, and a capitulation followed immediately. The 25th was signalized by the death of the Archbishop of Paris. Under the impression that the insurgents might be induced to listen to him as a mediator, he proceeded, clad in his sacred vestments and attended by two grand-vicars, towards the Faubourg St. Antoine. He halted first at the foot of the column of the Bastille, where a strong barricade was erected and firing actively going on. This ceased as soon as the Archbishop was recognised, and he bravely mounted the barricade to address the insurgents on the other side. His words seemed to produce some effect, when suddenly a drum-roll was heard and a shot fired. The conflict was immediately renewed, and the venerable Archbishop, struck by a ball in the loins, fell on the barricade. The insurgents rushed forward, and lifting him gently, carried him to a house within the barrier, where he lingered till the 27th. General Négrier, an officer of distinguished merit in the Algerine campaign, was killed during the day, and, with attendant circumstances of great atrocity, Generals Brea and Desure. In consideration of his services during this outbreak, General Cavaignac was named President of the Council. In a formal report presented to the Assembly on the subject of this insurrection Louis Blanc, Ledru-Kollin, Barbès, Blanqui, and Causidière were named as mixed up with the outbreak. The national workshops, in which it had its origin, were afterwards remodelled and partly suppressed. The most savage atrocities were committed by some of the insurgents on the prisoners who were so unfortunate as to fall within their power. The loss on the side of the insurgents was trifling with that sustained by the regular troops, more of whom it was said were slain during the three days the insurrection lasted than had been slain in all the disturbances in Paris since 1789. As many as 4,000 were arrested for being concerned in this sanguinary outbreak.

29.—The Germanic Diet elect John, archduke of Austria, to be Lieutenant-General, or Regent, of the German empire.

July 1.—The Moultanees again defeated by Major Edwardes, under the walls of their capital.

—Died at Paris, aged 78, M. de Chateaubriand, author of the "Genius of Christianity," and other works.

4.—Opening of St. George's, Roman Catholic church, London. There were present the Archbishop of Treves, the Bishops of Liège, Tournay, Châlons, and Chersonesus, with their canons and chaplains. The body of the church was filled with Roman Catholic laity. Dr. Wiseman celebrated high mass, assisted by Dr. Doyle, the pastor of the chapel; offertory sung by Tamburini. The building was erected at a cost of 40,000*l.*, and designed to accommodate 4,000 people.

7.—Trial of the Chartist seditious at the Central Criminal Court, London, before Lord Chief Justice Wilde. Fussel, Williams, Sharpe, Vernon, Looney, and Ernest Jones were each sentenced to two years' imprisonment, and bound over in various sums to keep the peace afterwards, for periods varying from three to five years.

11.—The differences of Hungary with Vienna, on the one hand, and Croatia on the other, compel Kossuth to address the Diet in these words:—"Do not deceive yourselves, citizens; the Magyars stand alone in the world against the conspiracy of the sovereigns and nations which surround them. The Emperor of Russia besets us through the Principalities, and everywhere, even in Servia, we detect his hand and his gold. In the north the armed band of Slaves are endeavouring to join the rebels of Croatia, and are preparing to march against us. In Vienna, the courtiers and statesmen are calculating the advent of the day when they shall be able again to rivet the chains on their old slaves the Magyars, an undisciplined and rebellious race. O, my fellow citizens, it is thus that tyrants have ever designated freemen. You are alone, I repeat. Are you ready and willing to fight?"

15.—Re-interment in the Chapel Royal, Holyrood, of the remains of Mary of Gueldres, Queen of James II., discovered in the sacristy when removing Trinity College Church.

17.—Conflagration at Pera (Constantinople), destroying 3,000 houses.

18.—In consequence of the violent language of the Repeal political clubs in Ireland, the Lord Lieutenant issues a proclamation having special reference to treasonable proceedings in Dublin, Waterford, Cork, and Drogheda. "Matters," writes the Times correspondent, "are now evidently approaching a crisis, and either in Dublin or the country there will soon be civil war, if the Confederation is not now at once and for ever suppressed. On the publication of the Lord Lieutenant's proclamation the council of the Confederates met, and decided, by a majority of one, that only a passive resistance should be offered to the step taken for disarming the clubs. It is ascertained that considerable quantities of arms have been carried out of Dublin to evade the search which the authorities will make, and that the weapons which remain in the city have been carefully concealed."

22.—The rebel Nation writes:—"It is a death struggle now between the murderer and his victim. Strike! Rise, men of Ireland, since Providence so wills it. Rise in your cities and in your fields, on your hills, in your valleys, by your dark mountain-passes, by your rivers and lakes, and ocean-washed shores. Rise as a nation!" On the same day the Irish Felon writes:—"In the case of Ireland now there is but one fact to deal with, and one question to be considered. The fact is this, that there are at present in occupation of our country some 40,000 armed men in the livery and service of England; and the question is, how best and soonest to kill and capture these 40,000 men."

—General Ospre forces the Sardinian lines at Rivoli, and two days afterwards attacks them at different points in the country between the Adige and Mincio. The conflict was kept up with varying success for four days, when the Austrians were largely reinforced by troops withdrawn from the Venetian garrisons, and Charles-Albert commenced a retreat across the Mincio. They were intercepted at Volta, but bravely fought their way through, and found refuge in Milan on the 3rd of August.

—Lord John Russell introduces a bill empowering the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland to apprehend and detain, until the 1st day of March next, such persons as he shall suspect of conspiring against her Majesty's person and Government. It was with the greatest reluctance, he said, that he asked Parliament to give authority to the Government to suspend for a limited period the constitutional privileges of Ireland. The state of that country, however, rendered such a measure absolutely necessary. Seditious language of the most violent description was daily used, and, if not prevented, must lead to an outbreak and loss of life. During Lord John Russell's address the greatest silence reigned throughout a crowded house, and at its conclusion the cheers from members on both sides were loud and long-continued. Sir Robert Peel said he would give the measure proposed by Government a decisive and unqualified support—a support not qualified by previous party contentions, a support not qualified by any political feeling, but a support unequivocal, because it was a support to strengthen the hands of the Government against conspirators. The bill passed through the House of Commons the same day. The Act was put in force in Dublin on the 26th.

25.—Smith O'Brien, accompanied by Dillon, Donoghoe, Cantwell, and a few others, enter Mullinahone for the purpose of inciting the people there to rise against the Government. After haranguing an assembly gathered together by the ringing of the chapel bell, they visited the police barracks, but got such a reception as caused them to leave the place with the least possible delay. The party then proceeded to Slieverdagh and Ballingarry, where their attempts to create an insurrection were equally fruitless.

26.—The London evening papers publish a report, fabricated in Liverpool, of an alarming outbreak in Ireland:—"Dublin, Wednesday. The whole of the south of Ireland is in rebellion. A special engine has just arrived in Dublin, from four miles this side of Thurles. The station at Thurles is on fire; the rail for several miles torn up; and, as the engines arrive, the mob intend detaining them. At Clonmel the fighting is dreadful; the people arrived in masses; the Dublin club-leaders are there; the troops were speedily overpowered. The military at Carrick have been driven back and their quarters fired. At Kilkenny the contest is proceeding, and there the mob are also said to be successful. The Queen's messenger is just started with despatches for London." On the arrival of the Dublin mail at Liverpool on the following evening, the mayor and magistrates issued an announcement informing the public that the alarming intelligence was entirely untrue. In the House of Commons, the same evening, the Home Secretary showed the utter baselessness of the report.

27.—The Health of Towns Bill passed by the House of Lords.

28.—In Dublin a detachment of police take possession of the offices of the Irish Fidon and Nation newspapers, and remove the type, papers, and plant to the Castle. On the same day a Hue and Cry appeared in an extra Gazette, calling on all magistrates, constables, and others in authority to detain thirteen of the more prominent rebel leaders therein described. On the 31st a reward of 500*l.* was offered for the arrest of Smith O'Brien, and 300*l.* for Meagher, Dillon, or Doherty, the imputed offence in each case being "taking up arms against her Majesty."

— Thomas Carlyle addresses a letter to the Secretary of the Lancashire Public School Association, wishing the enterprise speedy and perfect success. "Speedy or not, I believe success in such an enterprise, if wisely prosecuted, is certain, for the object is great, simple, and legitimate, at once feasible and of prime necessity, and will gradually vindicate that character for itself to every just mind, however prepossessed."

29.—Encounter of Smith O'Brien's rebel followers with the police force at Widow Cormack's house, Bog of Boulagh, Ballingarry. The first brunt of the engagement was borne by a party of 50 men under Sub-inspector Trant, relieved in a short time by a body of 19 constables from Callan, and 90 from Killenaule. Mrs. Cormack's account of the skirmish was to this effect:—"Knowing that disturbances were likely to take place, she had gathered within her house, as a sanctuary, five of her children. When the police took possession of it the rebels shook their pikes at her, which alarmed her so much that she sought out Mr. Smith O'Brien, whom she found with the '82 Club cap on his head, seated in her cabbage garden to avoid the fire of the little garrison within the house. The widow besought the ex-king of Munster to go and speak to the police, but he declined to do so, and asked her to go back and tell them that all he wanted was their arms. The police refusing to accede to this proposal, Widow Cormack returned again to the rebel leader and seized him by the collar, with the view of dragging him into the presence of Sub-inspector Trant. At the moment when O'Brien entered the house the police were busy barricading the windows up stairs. As the cross-fire from the rebels in adjoining out-houses made communication somewhat dangerous, O'Brien retreated from the building, and was seen by the police creeping on all fours out of the enclosure. When she had brought O'Brien within her house, Mrs. Cormack instantly set off to the priest, and returned just in time to see the insurgents carrying off their dead and wounded. The Metropolitan Commissioners of Police at once issued an order with reference to the above encounter:—"The Commissioners of Police are happy to be able to inform the force that a small party of constabulary, unassisted by military, near Killenaule, in the county of Tipperary, attacked one thousand men, mostly armed with fire-arms and pikes, under the immediate command of Smith O'Brien. Not a man of the police has been injured, but seven of the rebels were killed, and a great many wounded. O'Brien's party ran away in the greatest confusion, and were completely dispersed. About an hour afterwards a large military force was on the ground, but too late to be of service. The Commissioners congratulate the men of the Dublin police on the gallant conduct of their comrades of the constabulary, knowing that the metropolitan force was always ready to do their duty and set the disaffected at defiance." On the evening of the 5th of August O'Brien was captured at the Thurles railway station, when on the point of leaving for Limerick. He made no resistance, and carried no arms beyond a small fancy pistol in his waistcoat pocket.

31.—Messrs. Sotheby, auctioneers, commence the dispersion of the celebrated Pembroke collection of coins. The sale extended over twelve days, and realized 5,905*l.*

— The Commons amendment on the Encumbered Estates (Ireland) Bill accepted by the House of Lords, and passed.

August 2.—At Rome a Papal edict describing new changes in the Ministry is torn down by the people.

3.—Exposure of fraudulent evidence in the Tracy Peerage case. When the claim was before the House of Lords last year an important link in the evidence was supplied by the production of the fragment of a tombstone which was said to have been originally erected over the grave "To the memory of William Tracy, third son of — Tracy, a Judge of the Common Pleas in England." A witness, Holton, now stated that, some time in the year 1845, he had been employed by a man of the name of M'Ginnis to assist in engraving this identical tombstone; that they were to engrave it in the old style of letters; that they did so during certain nights in M'Ginnis's bedroom; that afterwards they held the stone over the fire for the purpose of darkening it, so as to make it look like old; that they then broke the stone in pieces with a sledge-hammer; that M'Ginnis told him the stone was engraved for the purpose of being sent to London as evidence in a court of law, and that if the party for whom it was done was successful in his suit they would both make a very good thing of the business. On the application of Sir Fitzroy Kelly, time was allowed to bring M'Ginnis from America for the purpose of disproving Holton's statement.

5.—Milan capitulates to the Austrian army under Marshal Radetzky. During the night the Piedmontese troops retired on the road to Turin. On the following morning (Sunday) the Austrians, in great strength and in the finest order, entered the city and took possession. The utmost silence prevailed during the passage of the troops through the Corso and principal streets. On the morning of the 7th a proclamation was issued declaring Lombardy in a state of siege, and announcing that all offences against good order would be punished by martial law.

8.—Mr. Berkeley's motion in favour of the ballot carried against the Government by 86 to 81.

— Bombardment of Bologna by General Welden. The act was afterwards disavowed by the Austrian Government, and the General recalled.

— Special Commission opened at Dublin for the trial of the treason rioters and rebels. Doherty was acquitted on two occasions, from the inability of the jury to agree upon a verdict.

12.—Meagher, Leyne, and O'Donoghue, three of the Irish rebel leaders, arrested between Holycross and Rathcannon. They were unarmed and made no resistance.

— Died, at Tapton House, near Chesterfield, in the 68th year of his age, George Stephenson, engineer.

— The Emperor of Austria returns to Vienna.

14.—Chartist rising at Ashton-under-Lyne. They assembled in large numbers in the streets about midnight, armed with pistols and pikes, and having formed themselves into marching order, proceeded in the direction of the Town Hall with the view, as the leaders alleged, of taking forcible possession of the building. On their march thither they murdered a policeman named Bright, by first shooting and then stabbing him. Before reaching their proposed destination they encountered a small force of armed police and special constables, when the Chartists turned and fled in different directions. A few random shots were fired on the Chartist side without causing any serious injury. Several of those most prominently concerned in the outbreak were apprehended before morning, and lodged in prison.

14.—Festival at Cologne, in celebration of the sixth centenary of laying the foundation-stone of the Cathedral.

15.—Fourteen Chartist agitators arrested at Manchester, on the ground of inciting certain classes in that and neighbouring towns to rise in arms and create disorder.

16.—Arrest of armed Chartists in London at the Orange Tree public-house, Orange Street. The landlord of the house was also arrested, and, along with the whole of the occupants, eighteen in number, conveyed to the police station at Bow-street. Another armed division was arrested in a house, in Moor-street. Here some resistance was attempted, but on the police drawing their cutlasses the Chartists threw down their arms and escaped as they best could from the premises. Four of the more violent were taken into custody. The design was understood to be to unite the different clubs about midnight, and attack the principal buildings in the metropolis. Considerable quantities of ammunition were found at the residences of those apprehended, and gunpowder was discovered carefully hidden in some of the churchyards.

17.—Accounts from the south of Ireland describe everything as tranquil; the Confederate Clubs mostly broken up, and the people returning to their customary pursuits.

18.—At the examination of Cuffey, Ritchie, the leader of the secret band, and other Chartists at Bow-street, a delegate named Powell is put into the witness-box, and describes the entire scheme of the projected rising in the metropolis.

19.—Great storm along the north-east coast of Scotland. For miles the shore was strewn with the wreck of fishing boats and the dead bodies of fishermen. Twenty-three corpses were carried into Peterhead alone.

22.—Disastrous hurricane in the West India Islands. Antigua and St. Kitts suffered most severely; the loss of life in these places being greater than at the fatal earthquake in 1843. In one harbour the Government loss was estimated at 25,000*l.* About 2,000 buildings were unroofed, and 700 totally destroyed.

24.—Burning of the American emigrant ship Ocean Monarch in the Channel, and loss of 178 lives. She left Liverpool in the morning, having on board 396 persons, crew and passengers. The calamity was caused by one of the passengers lighting a fire in a wooden ventilator in the after part of the ship, under the impression that it was a grate, and was noticed about noon when off Orms Head. She was at this time seen by Mr. Littledale, returning in his yacht from Beaumaris regatta, and who at once put out to render assistance. The flames were then bursting with immense fury from the stern and centre of the vessel. So great was the heat there, that the passengers, men, women, and children, crowded to the fore part; and in their wild despair some jumped overboard with their children in their arms. In a few minutes the mizenmast went overboard, and in a second or two the mainmast shared the same fate. Retreating still further forward before the advancing flames, the passengers and crew were clinging in clusters to the jibboom, when the foremast dropped down on the fastenings, and the jibboom fell into the water with its load of human beings. In addition to the aid given by Mr. Littledale, who took off thirty-two in his yacht, most valuable assistance was given by the Brazilian steam-frigate Affonso, then out on a pleasure trip with the Prince and Princess de Joinville and the Duke and Duchess d'Aumale. They not only took off 160 of the survivors, but contributed a handsome sum for their succour, the Prince de Joinville writing:—“Take this for these poor people. It was intended to be expended on a tour of pleasure, which after this it is impossible to enjoy.” Seventeen were also taken off by the Prince of Wales steamer, then on her passage to Bangor, and thirteen by the New World packet ship bound for New York. The Ocean Monarch went down at her anchors at half-past one o'clock the following morning. With the exception of the solid timbers about the bow, on which was the figure-head in an almost perfect state, the fire consumed the whole of the hull to within a few inches of the water edge. As she gradually settled herself into the bosom of the sea, large volumes of flames rushed forward with a hissing and crackling sound, till at length the water completely buried her, and the remains of the vessel disappeared in about fourteen fathoms, causing a heavy swell for the moment. A large subscription was raised for the relief of the sufferers, and supplies of food and clothing furnished with unsparing generosity by the magistrates and inhabitants of Liverpool.

25.—Trial of the London Chartists for sedition, at the Central Criminal Court, before Mr. Baron Platt. They were in most instances found guilty, and sentenced to two years' imprisonment with hard labour. At Liverpool, next day, Mr. Justice Creswell inflicted a similar punishment upon the more prominent leaders in the Lancashire disturbances.

25.—In the National Assembly MM. Ledru-Rollin, Louis Blanc, and Causidière seek to defend themselves from the imputations passed upon them by the committee appointed to investigate the causes of the disturbances in May and June. The Assembly assenting to the demand of the Procureur-Général for a civil prosecution, the suspected deputies suddenly fled from France to England.

—The Chancellor of the Exchequer, after explaining at some length the present financial condition of the country, proposes to borrow 2,000,000*l.* for the purpose of making up the deficiency in the revenue. Mr. Hume and others strongly objected to the proposal, urging upon the Government the necessity of instantly retrenching the expenditure. The motion for rejecting the Government scheme was negatived by a majority of 66 to 45.

26.—Armistice concluded between Prussia and Denmark with reference to the occupation of the Duchies. The form of government in force previous to the events of March to be re-established during the continuance of the armistice. In the event of the four members for Prussia and Denmark disagreeing as to the choice of a President of the collective administration of the Duchies, Great Britain, as mediating Power, to make the appointment.

29.—Sir Harry Smith encounters the rebel Boers at Bolm Plaats, Cape of Good Hope, and after a short contest defeats and drives them back with great loss.

September 2.—The Sicilians having finally thrown off the rule of King Ferdinand, he causes Messina to be bombarded. A simultaneous attack was made upon the city from the fire of the garrison, the Neapolitan fleet in the harbour, and a large force which had landed on the shore. The citizens fought with desperation, but the contest was too unequal, and after a bombardment of four days, during which a large portion of the city was reduced to ruins, they were compelled to surrender. The conflict was marked by circumstances of such great cruelty on both sides, that the English and French admirals on the station interfered to prevent the further effusion of blood.

3.—Insurrection at Leghorn. On the issuing of a proclamation prohibiting the meeting of political clubs the people mustered in great force in the centre of the city, and fired on the troops drawn out for its protection. About sixty were killed during the early part of the day; towards evening several troops of infantry laid down their arms and fraternized with the people. The Governor with most of the cavalry retreated to the citadel.

3.—Act passed authorizing diplomatic intercourse with the See of Rome.

5.—A box of 2,000 sovereigns stolen in the course of its transmission from Praed and Co., bankers, Fleet-street, to Tweedie and Co., bankers, Cornwall.

— Parliament prorogued by the Queen in person, having sat, with brief intervals at Christmas, Whitsuntide, and Easter, for the unexampled period of ten months. In the Royal Speech read on the occasion it was mentioned that in Ireland "organized confederates took advantage of the existing pressure to excite my suffering subjects to rebellion. Hopes of plunder and confiscation were held out to tempt the distressed, while the most visionary prospects were exhibited to the ambitious. In this conjuncture I applied to your loyalty and wisdom for increased power and strength, and by your prompt concurrence my Government were enabled to defeat, in a few days, machinations which had been prepared during many months. The energy and decision shown by the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland in this emergency deserve my utmost approbation. . . . Amidst these [continental] convulsions, I have had the satisfaction of being able to preserve peace in my dominions, and to maintain our domestic tranquillity. The strength of our institutions has not been found wanting. I have studied to preserve the people committed to my care in the enjoyment of that temperate freedom which they so justly value. My people, on their side, feel too sensibly the advantages of order and security to allow the promoters of pillage and confusion any chance of success in their wicked designs."

— The Queen and Prince Albert, with the Prince of Wales and the Princess Royal, embark at Woolwich for Balmoral, by way of Aberdeen.

12.—General Whish invests Mooltan, but in consequence of the defection of Shere Singh, who went over to the enemy with about 5,000 men, the army was withdrawn after the capture of the outer or first intrenchment.

14.—Bands of disaffected rebels in the neighbourhood of Waterford and Carrick-on-Suir, finding themselves unable to cope with either the military or police, commit various acts of wanton destruction on the property of private persons who had rendered themselves obnoxious by assisting the Government.

— At the Stowe sale the Chandos portrait of Shakspeare was sold to Mr. Rodd for 355 guineas. The equally famous Rembrandt, "The Unmerciful Servant," was knocked down to Mr. Manson for 2,200 guineas. The forty days' sale of pictures, china, plate, furniture, &c. produced 75,562*l*.

18.—Disturbances at Frankfort, arising from the dissatisfaction of the people with the proceedings of a majority in the Diet. The Archduke ordered martial law to be proclaimed, and directed the artillery to fire upon the barricaes. This decided the contest, and by midnight the insurgents withdrew from all their points of defence. In the course of the day the people disgraced their cause by maltreating and murdering Major Auerswald, and the young Prince Lichnowski, a distinguished member of the Assembly.

21.—Lord George Bentinck found dead in one of the Welbeck parks. He had set out from his father's house to visit Lord Manvers, but only got a short distance along the path leading in that direction, when he was seized with a spasmodical attack and died unseen by any. "A woodman and some peasants," writes Mr. Disraeli, "passing near the spot observed Lord George, whom, at the distance, they had mistaken for his brother, the Marquis of Titchfield, leaning against the gate. It was then about half-past four o'clock, or it might be a quarter to five; so he could not have left his home much more than half an hour. The woodman and his companion thought 'the gentleman' was reading, as he held his head down. One of them lingered for a minute looking at the gentleman, who then turned round and might have seen these passers-by, but he made no sign to them." •

— Special commission opened at Clonmel for the trial of parties implicated in the recent insurrection in the south of Ireland. William Smith O'Brien was indicted for high treason on the 28th. The trial was continued till the 8th of October, when the jury found him guilty of the charge of levying war against the Queen, but recommended him to the merciful consideration of Government, being unanimously of opinion, for many reasons, that his life should be spared. On being brought into court next day, Mr. Whiteside moved an arrest of judgment, and submitted three questions on which he craved the opinion of the judges. The Attorney-General showed cause against the motion, and the objections were overruled by the Lord Chief Justice. On being asked why sentence of death should not be passed on him, the prisoner said he was prepared to abide the consequences of having done his duty to his native land. The Lord Chief Justice, after a brief address, sentenced the prisoner to be hanged, and afterwards beheaded and quartered. M'Manus was found guilty on the 12th October, O'Donoghue on the 15th, and Meagher on the 21st. On being brought up for sentence, on the 23rd, they each addressed the Court at some length in defence of their conduct. Meagher said, "I am here to regret nothing I have ever done, to retract nothing I have ever said. Far from it. Even here, where the thief, the libertine, and the murderer have left their footprints in the dust—here, on this spot where the shadows of death surround me, and from which I see my early grave in an unconsecrated soil opened to receive me—even here, encircled by these terrors, the hope which beckoned me on to embark on the perilous sea on which I have been wrecked still consoles, animates, and enraptures me. . . . I hope I shall be able with a light heart and a clear conscience to appear before a higher tribunal—a tribunal where a Judge of infinite goodness, as well as of infinite justice, will preside, and where, my lords, many, many of the judgments of this world will be reversed." Sentence of death was then passed upon them in the usual form.

25.—Commencement of the Hungarian War of Independence. The Emperor having given an unsatisfactory answer to a deputation from the Diet appointed to wait on him touching a redress of grievances, and the National Assembly at Vienna absolutely refusing to receive a second, Louis Kossuth was invested with full dictatorial powers. The Archduke Palatine retreated from the kingdom to Moravia.

26.—Louis Napoleon takes his seat in the National Assembly. On the commotion caused by his appearance subsiding, he said :— "After thirty-three years of proscription and exile, I at last recover my country and all my rights as a citizen. The Republic has given me this happiness; let the Republic receive my oath of gratitude; and may my generous countrymen who have brought me into this Assembly be certain that I shall endeavour to justify their votes by labouring with you for the maintenance of tranquillity—that first necessity of the country—and for the development of democratic institutions, which the people have the right to demand. . . . My conduct will prove, with respect to the persons who have endeavoured to blacken my character in order again to proscribe me, that no one here is more resolved than I am, to devote himself to the defence, and freedom of the Republic."

— Came on for trial at the Central Criminal Court, before Mr. Baron Platt and Mr. Justice Williams, the case of Cuffey, Lacy, Fay, and others, charged with inciting to rebellion and fire-raising in the streets of London on the night of the 16th August last. The principal witness was Powell, an informer, who described with great minuteness the different features of the conspiracy. He was subjected to a severe cross-examination by Serjeant Bantlaine, with the view of showing that he was a worthless character, on whose word no reliance could be placed. On the third day of trial the jury returned a verdict of guilty against all the prisoners, and they were sentenced to be transported beyond seas for the period of their natural lives.

27.—The National Assembly carry a vote for one Chamber, as opposed to two, by a majority of 530 against 289.

29.—Murder of Count Lamberg, in Pesth. He had just arrived in the city to undertake the duty of Generalissimo of the Emperor's forces in Hungary, when he was met by a mob armed with spades and scythes; attempting to take refuge in the Diet, he was murdered by the infuriated populace on the bridge.

October 3.—The Ban of Croatia having made up his differences with the Emperor, is appointed by an imperial decree Lieutenant Field-Marshal of all the troops in Hungary, and Commissary Plenipotentiary, "with full and unlimited powers, that he may act as circumstances require the representative of our royal person."

6.—A notice posted at Lloyd's, intimating that, in consequence of several deaths from Asiatic cholera having come to the knowledge of her Majesty's Privy Council as happening on board vessels trading to Hamburg and other northern parts, positive orders were issued to the heads of the Customs at the various ports to place all descriptions of craft coming from these places under quarantine laws. On the 4th two cases were admitted into Bartholomew's Hospital; and on the 8th twenty cases were reported as having occurred within the London bills of mortality.

— Insurrection in Vienna, and murder of the War Minister, Count Latour. The military refusing to march against the Hungarians, part of the National Guard joined in the mutiny, barricades were erected, the tocsin sounded, and the arsenal bombarded and sacked. Having routed the Government troops, the insurgents marched from the suburbs into the town, and planted their guns in the middle of the University square. The gates of the town were guarded by students and National Guards, and a central committee formed for carrying on a war. The War Office was entered in the afternoon, and Count Latour seized. The wretched man was conducted into the street, and there murdered with axes and sledge-hammers. The excited people tore the clothes from the bleeding body and hung the naked corpse on a gibbet, where it remained suspended for a whole day, as a target to the National Guards. The cannon, arms, and papers seized in the office were conveyed to the University. The Emperor fled from the capital next day towards Olmutz.

7.—The French National Assembly decide, by a majority of 602 to 211, that the President of the Republic shall be elected by universal suffrage, and hold office for four years.

— The right of entry into Canton having been fixed to take effect in two years, in terms of the treaty with Commissioner Keying, Mr. Bonham wrote for instructions, and Lord Palmerston now replies :— "It is inexpedient to resort to force to compel the Chinese to execute promises from the performance of which no real advantage to British interest would accrue. It has always appeared to me doubtful whether the right of entering the city of Canton would be productive of any material advantage to British interests."

11.—Papal rescript issued condemning the Government colleges in Ireland as full of grievous and intrinsic danger.

— Prince Albert instructs the Queen's private solicitor to procure an injunction preventing Mr. Strange, publisher, Paternoster-row, from issuing to the public copies of any of the private engravings referred to in "A Descriptive Catalogue of the Royal Victoria and Albert Gallery of Etchings." Injunction granted.—On subsequent inquiry it was found that copies of the engravings had been purloined by one of the workmen employed by a printer at Windsor to take impressions for her Majesty.

— Captain McQuhae, of H.M. ship Dædalus, sends to the Admiralty an official report on the subject of the sea-serpent seen by him and his crew on the 6th of August last, on the passage home from the East Indies:—"On our attention being called to the object, it was discovered to be an enormous serpent, with head and shoulders kept about four feet constantly above the surface of the sea, and, as nearly as we could approximate by comparing it with the length of what our maintop-sail yard would show in the water, there was at the very least sixty feet of the animal à fleur d'eau, no portion of which was, to our perception, used in propelling it through the water, either by vertical or horizontal undulation. It passed rapidly, but so close under our lee quarter that had it been a man of my acquaintance I should easily have recognised his features with the naked eye. The diameter of the serpent was about 15 or 16 inches behind the head, which was, without any doubt, that of a snake; and it was never, during the twenty minutes that it continued in sight of our glasses, once below the surface of the water; its colour a dark brown, with yellowish white about the throat. It had no fins, but something like the mane of a horse, or rather a bunch of sea-weed, twisted about its back." From the account and sketch together Professor Owen came to the conclusion that the creature seen from the Dædalus was not a cold-blooded reptile of the snake or serpent species, but a large seal floated down on an iceberg, and seeking for shelter. The learned professor was further of opinion that no such creature existed in nature as the so-called sea-serpent.

22.—Upwards of 400 of the Parisian National Guard, attired in their uniform, and wearing side-arms, arrive in London by the South-Eastern Railway. From London Bridge a cavalcade of omnibuses and cabs conveyed them to the foreign hotels in the vicinity of Leicester-square. In company with another detachment of 300, which arrived next day, they visited most of the public institutions and places of amusement in London. A large deputation of them was also received by the Lord Mayor.

22.—The Emperor of Austria issues a manifesto, suspending the sittings of the Diet at Vienna, and ordering it to re-assemble at Kremsier, in Moravia, on the 15th November.

23.—The Vernon Gallery of Pictures, valued at 30,000*l.*, made available to the public in the National Gallery, Trafalgar-square.

24.—At a Cabinet Council held to-day it was resolved to commute the extreme sentence of the law passed on the Irish rebels to transportation for life. They refused at first to assent to this modification of their sentence, and insisted that they should either be liberated or suffer the punishment awarded in Court.

28.—Explosion at Whinnyhill Pit, Cleaton Moor, near Whitehaven. Of thirty-one in the works at the time only one escaped.

30.—Fall of a sugar-house, in Glasgow, belonging to Wilson and Sons, Alston-street. The floors, six in number, gave way in rapid succession, and buried in their ruins the whole of the workmen, nineteen in number, employed in the building at the time. Only five were got out alive, and they were severely injured. Ten days elapsed before the last of the sufferers could be reached.

— The Viennese surrender to Prince Windischgrätz, but afterwards resume hostilities on hearing that an Hungarian army was approaching to their relief.

31.—The Cambridge Syndicate present a report to the Congregation for confirmation, recommending various changes, with the view of giving greater encouragement to the pursuit of those studies for the cultivation of which professorships had been founded in the University.

— Viscount Middleton commits suicide by igniting a brazier of charcoal in his bedroom. He was found dead on the floor the following morning by one of the domestics.

— Defeat of the Hungarian army advancing to the relief of the Viennese insurgents. Despairing of future aid, and pressed on every side by the troops under the Ban of Croatia and Prince Windischgrätz, the people of Vienna now surrendered to the imperial authority, after heroically defending the city against numerous combined and well-directed attacks. During the engagement with the Hungarians Messenhausen issued the following proclamation: "From the spire of St. Stephen's.—The battle appears to be drawing towards Oberlin and Ingersdorf. The fog prevents me from having a clear view. Hitherto the Hungarians appear to be advancing victoriously. In case a defeated army shall approach the walls of the city, it will be the duty of all armed bodies to assemble under arms, even without command."

November 3.—Disturbance in Drury Lane Theatre arising out of the excited enthusiasm exhibited for M. Jullien's new arrangement of the National Anthem.

4.—The new Constitution of the Republic finally adopted and carried by the National Assembly. A formal proclamation of the Republic took place eight days afterwards.

7.—Inquiry at the Marylebone Police-court into the charge made by Sir J. Hoare, Bath, against the Baroness of St. Mart, of stealing from him two valuable diamond rings. In the course of a visit to Bath, in April 1847, the rings had been shown by Sir John to the Baroness. After trying them on her finger she said she returned them to their owner, but he denied having received them either then or at any subsequent period. He further denied having at any time made an offer of marriage to her. The Baroness was ultimately acquitted.

9.—Collision in Berlin between the Brandenburg Ministry and the National Assembly. The latter, ejected from their hall, and driven from place to place by the military, took refuge in a café under the Linden, where a resolution was adopted to refuse the grant of any more taxes.

— Robert Blum, of Leipsic, executed at Vienna for the part he had taken in the insurrectionary movement there. A few minutes before his execution Blum wrote to his wife:—"Farewell for the time men call eternity, but which will not be so. Bring up our—now only your—children to be honest men, so that they will never disgrace their father's name. . . . All that I feel and would say at this moment escapes me in tears; only once more, then, farewell. P.S.—I had forgotten the rings. On that of our betrothal I press for you a last kiss; my seal-ring is for Hans, the watch for Richard, the diamond studs for Ida, and the chain for Alfred, as memorials. All the rest divide as you please. They are coming. Farewell."

12.—Berlin declared to be in a state of siege. The King issued a proclamation dissolving the Burgher Guard, and the Assembly adopted a resolution to sit en permanence.

— Inauguration of the French Constitution celebrated in the Place de la Concorde.

14.—Wreck of the Burgundy and Atlantic, German emigrant vessels, on the Goodwin Sands. Nearly the whole of the crew and passengers in both instances were saved.

15.—Count Rossi, Minister of the Interior, assassinated at Rome. On alighting from his carriage at the Chamber of Deputies he was stabbed in the neck, and died almost instantly. The murderer mingled with the crowd, and no attempt was made to arrest him. The Chamber took no notice of the occurrence, but proceeded with the ordinary business of the day. A disturbance took place in the city next forenoon, when the Pope was besieged in his own palace, and only saved from violence by the bravery of a handful of Swiss Guards.

22.—Disastrous attack by British troops on a body of Sikhs, in a nullah at Ramnuggar. The Commander-in-Chief issued an order to Colonel Havelock to attack the Sikh cavalry and follow them to their batteries, when the British troops charged down the bank, and on returning to form again into line were exposed to a fire from the enemy, which carried off three officers and a large portion of the troops under their command.

24.—Died, at Melbourne House, Derbyshire, in his 70th year, William Lamb, Lord Melbourne, first Prime Minister of Queen Victoria.

— Flight of the Pope from Rome. Since the assassination of Count Rossi the Pontiff kept himself shut up in the Quirinal, with the Duc d'Harcourt, the French Ambassador, who resided in the palace for the purpose of affording the protection of the Republican flag to his Holiness. At an hour previously agreed on the Pope retired into a private room and disguised himself as a servant to Count de Spaur of the Bavarian Legation. On leaving the Quirinal he took his seat on the box of the carriage beside the coachman, and proceeded to the residence of the Bavarian Minister, where his costume was changed to that of a private chaplain. In this garb Count Spaur and his reverend charge cleared the gates of Rome, and arrived the following day at Gaeta, where his Holiness received a welcome reception from the King of Naples. The French Consul reported to his Government that the Pope intended to proceed to France, but the welcome he received at Gaeta caused his Holiness to decline the offer of a vessel placed at his disposal by the Republic.

27.—Louis Napoleon Buonaparte, addressing the electors of France on the subject of the Presidential election, writes:—"I am not an ambitious man, who at one time dreams of empire and war, and at another of the application of subversive theories. Educated in free countries in the school of misfortune, I shall ever remain faithful to the duties which your votes and the will of the Assembly may impose upon me. If I were named President, I would not shrink from any danger or from any sacrifice to defend society, now so audaciously attacked. I would devote myself entirely, without any concealed view, to the consolidation of a Republic, wise by its laws, honest by its intention, great and powerful by its acts. I should consider it a point of honour to leave to my successor, at the conclusion of four years, a consolidated government, liberty, interest, and a real progress accomplished."

28.—Dreadful murders at Stanfield Hall, near Norwich, the seat of J. P. Jermy, Esq., Recorder of that city. Mr. Jermy, his son, and Mrs. Jermy, dined together this afternoon, there being then on the premises a butler, a man-servant, and two females. About half-past eight o'clock Mr. Jermy left the dining-room and walked through the hall to the front of the building. On returning, as he entered the porch, a man, wrapped in a cloak and wearing a mask, fired a pistol at him, the ball lodging in the upper part of the left breast, close to the shoulder. He fell and instantly expired, but owing to what followed was not removed for nearly an hour. The assassin then went to the servants' entrance to the right, passed through the passage across the building, met the butler, whom he forced by threats to retire into the pantry, and proceeded onwards to the turn of the passage, where there was a dark recess, with a door opening into another passage leading to the back of the premises. Mr. Jermy's son, alarmed at the report of a pistol, left the dining-room and passed to the door opening into the back passage; here the murderer fired and shot him through the right breast, killing him on the spot. Mrs. Jermy hearing a noise went to the same place, and, while she knelt over the lifeless body of her husband, the assassin fired a pistol at her, the shot shivering one of her arms and wounding her in the breast. Her maid, Eliza Chestney, more courageous than the other servants, went to the same spot to see what was the matter; and, while clasping her mistress, the murderer discharged another pistol at her and seriously wounded her in the thigh. The female servants, now thinking they would all be murdered, hid themselves. The man-servant, who was in the stables, hearing the firing, and supposing that the place was attacked by a number of ruffians, swam across the moat which surrounds the house, and set off to Wymondham, where he gave the alarm, and caused a telegraphic message to be sent to the Norwich police-station. The murderer, therefore, had no difficulty in making his escape. Two female servants who had gone to Wymondham returned with two young men, and while they stood outside of the moat talking they heard the report of a pistol and saw the flash. Suspicion pointed to a man named Rush, a farmer and auctioneer, living in the neighbourhood, with whom Mr. Jermy had frequent disputes, and he was immediately arrested. Mrs. Jermy and the servant retained sufficient recollection to declare that, though disguised, they were certain he was the assassin. The most important evidence at the inquest, and at the examination before the magistrates, was that of Emily James, whose real name was Sandford—a young woman who lived in Rush's family, first as a governess, latterly as his housekeeper or mistress; she described herself as a widow, but afterwards admitted that she was unmarried, and far advanced in pregnancy. Reporters were not allowed to be present at her examination, but the following was the substance of her testimony. At first she said: "Mr. Rush came home to tea at six, and took off his boots for the night; went out of the room at about nine, for ten minutes only; returned then, and did not again leave the house." Subsequently, under a more rigorous examination, her story changed. She deposed that on the night of the murders Rush came home at about six, by appointment, to take her to a concert, given by Madame Dulcken, at Wymondham; but he asked her if she desired to go, as he was unwell, and it was agreed they should not go. They took tea together and remained in the room till eight. He then said, "I want to go out for a short time." She endeavoured to dissuade him on account of his cold; but he went to the back-kitchen, where the boy Savory was, and thence to his own bedroom, and in a few minutes after he came down and went out. As Rush passed out he observed that the door would not fasten; so she rose and shut it, while he held it close from the outside; it was dark, and she did not see how he was dressed. She took a novel to read. Rush returned about nine, and knocked at the door with his hand. She went and unfastened the door-latch, saying "It's undone," and returned without seeing him. He waited outside a minute or so, then entered and passed upstairs. As he went he called from the passage, "You had better go to bed." He took no candle, as he had wax tapers in his bedroom. In a minute or so he came down stairs in his shirt sleeves, and looked in at her. He said, "What a large fire you have got! Put it out and go to bed." There was something in his manner that caused her to look at him more attentively, and she then observed that his face was deadly pale, and he appeared much agitated. She said, "What is the matter with you?" He turned from her, and said "No." After a short pause, he added, "If any one asks you about me, say I was not out more than ten minutes." He then went up stairs to his bedroom and locked the door. In the course of a few minutes the door of Rush's room was opened so as to make as little noise as possible, and she heard the prisoner groping his way down stairs without his shoes. Two or three minutes afterwards she heard him return up stairs in the same manner, and re-enter his bedroom. She then went to sleep and did not awake until the morning, when she was aroused by the information that the police were in the house.

29.—Died, at his residence, Chester-place, Pimlico, aged 42 years, Charles Buller, M.P. for Liskeard.

— The Hon. and Rev. Baptist Noel intimates his secession from the Church of England.

December 1.—A tragedy only paralleled in horror by the Black Hole of Calcutta occurred this evening on board the Londonderry steamboat, trading between Liverpool and Sligo. She left Sligo in the evening with nearly 200 passengers on board, a large number of whom were emigrants, intending to proceed from Liverpool to America. The night setting in dark and stormy, the Captain (Johnstone) considered it necessary for the proper working of the vessel to send the whole of the passengers below. They were for a time unwilling to obey this command, but coercive measures being resorted to, they were all driven, into the steerage cabin, a confined space about 18 feet long, 11 wide, and 7 high. The hatches were then closed, and as some of the poor creatures attempted to free themselves from this den, a tarpaulin was thrown over the entrance and nailed down. The most horrible results now followed. The air was insufficient to maintain existence beyond a few seconds. Sinking from exhaustion or trampled down by others in the madness of despair, a large portion of the wretched passengers were suffocated amid a scene which no survivor could adequately describe. One, more fortunate than the others, succeeded in freeing himself from the hideous charnel-house, and gave the alarm of what had taken place to the captain and mate. The hatches were at once taken off, and a few of the survivors crawled on deck. Within the cabin there lay in heaps the living, dying, and dead—one frightful spectacle of mingled agony and death. Men, women, and children were huddled together, blackened with suffocation, and bruised and bleeding from the desperate struggle for existence which preceded death. The number of victims amounted to 72—23 men, 31 women, and 18 children. The steamer put into Derry, where most of the survivors were landed, and every necessary attention paid to their restoration. The inquest resulted in a verdict that "death was caused by suffocation in consequence of the gross negligence and total want of the usual and necessary caution on the part of Captain Alexander Johnstone, Richard Hughes, first mate, and Ninian Crawford, second mate; and we, therefore, find them guilty of manslaughter: and we further consider it our duty to express, in the strongest terms, our abhorrence of the inhuman conduct of the remainder of the seamen on board on the melancholy occasion." The captain and mates were tried and acquitted at Donegal assizes on the 21st March ensuing.

2.—In the Exchequer and Common Pleas two cases were prosecuted to a successful issue under Lord Campbell's Act (9th and 10th Vict. c. 93), making masters and companies liable for the negligence of servants in their employ. In the one case damages of 600*l.* and in the other of 100*l.* were recovered by the plaintiffs.

— Abdication of the Emperor of Austria in favour of his nephew Francis-Joseph. "The pressure of events and the immediate want of a comprehensive reformation of our forms of state—which we, in the month of March, endeavoured to meet and promote—have convinced us that more careful powers are needed to complete this grand work."

6.—The Fanny Kemble divorce case tried at Philadelphia. The libel was filed by the husband, Pierce Butler, and alleged wilful desertion from her habitation for a period of two years. The respondent denied the charge of desertion, and averred that her husband's treatment of her was so cruel as to make life burdensome. She further alleged that her absence from time to time during the period spoken to was with the knowledge and consent of her husband. The inquiry was protracted over many months, and resulted in judgment being given for a divorce.

7.—Upsetting of a ferry boat crossing from Kingston cotton mills to Hull, and loss of seventeen lives.

12.—Dr. Trower, Episcopal Bishop of Glasgow, intimates to the Duke of Argyll his intention of refusing him the Holy Communion at the ensuing festival, on account of the bitter and contemptuous spirit which his Grace had exhibited towards Scotch Episcopacy in his recent work on Church Government.

15.—Storm in Scotland, felt with greatest severity in the Frith of Clyde. The floating lighthouse at Garmoyle filled and sunk.

— Two Chartists named Ratcliffe and Constantine were tried at Liverpool assizes for the murder of the policeman Bright, during the riot at Ashton, on the night of the 14th August. A number of witnesses testified to the fact of Ratcliffe thrusting a pike into the policeman's thigh, and others swore they saw him fire the shot from which the constable died. The jury acquitted Constantine, but returned a verdict of guilty against Ratcliffe, with a recommendation to mercy. On further inquiry being made, suspicion was found to attach to the evidence of some of the witnesses, and Ratcliffe was revived.

18.—Mr. Denison, the Conservative candidate, carries the West Riding election against Sir Culling Eardley Eardley by a majority of 14,743 against 11,795.

20.—At a public meeting at Liverpool Mr. Cobden submits the details of his scheme of financial reform and economy in the different departments of the public service.

— Louis Napoleon Buonaparte proclaimed President of the French Republic by the National Assembly. The Secretaries of the Election Committee announced the votes to be, for Louis Napoleon 5,534,520, the next highest on the list being General Cavaignac, with 1,448,302. M. Marrast said: "In the name of the French people, whereas citizen Charles Louis Napoleon Buonaparte, born in Paris, possesses all the qualifications of eligibility required by the 44th article of the Constitution; whereas the ballot gave him the absolute majority of suffrages for the Presidency; by virtue of the powers conferred on the Assembly by the 47th and 48th articles of the Constitution I proclaim him President of the French Republic from this day until the second Sunday of May 1852; and I now invite him to ascend the tribune and take the oath required by the Constitution."—"We have," said Louis Napoleon in reply, "a great mission to fulfil: it is to found a Republic in the interest of all, and a government just and firm, which shall be animated by a sincere love of progress without being either reactionary or Utopian. Let us be men of our country, not men of a party, and by the help of God we shall be able at last to do some good, if we are not able to do great things." The Prince was afterwards escorted to the palace Elysée National, which had been assigned as the residence of the President. On the same evening the following names appeared in the Moniteur in the list of the new Ministry:—Odillon Barrot, President of the Council and Minister of Justice; Drouyn de Lhuys, Foreign Affairs; Léon de Maleville, Interior; Hippolyte Passy, Finance; Léon Faucher, Public Works; Bixio, Commerce; General Rulhières, War; and De Tracy, Marine. By a decree of the President Marshal Bugeaud was appointed Commander-in-Chief of the Army of the Alps.

23.—Abd-el-Kader presents a petition to the President of the French Republic, praying that the conditions of his surrender might be fulfilled by sending him to Syria, "near the sacred tomb of the prophets, that I might enlighten myself with new light, and my days be wholly devoted to the happiness of my family, far removed from the hazards of war, the theatre of which I abandoned for ever to the domination of France, in execution of the will of the Almighty, who lowers or raises empires as He pleases."

26.—Prince Windischgrätz issues a proclamation from his head-quarters at Nicola:—"Any inhabitant who is taken with a weapon of any description in his hand will be immediately hanged. If the inhabitants of any place shall, united, dare to attack any imperial military courier, any transports, any or single commanding officers, so as to injure them in any way whatsoever, such place shall be made level with the earth. The authorities of the different places shall answer with their heads for the preservation of the public peace."

27.—The President of the French Republic to M. de Maleville, Minister of the Interior:—"I asked the Prefect of Police if he did not occasionally receive reports on diplomatic affairs. He replied in the affirmative, and he added that he had addressed to you yesterday copies of a despatch from Italy. These despatches, you will understand, ought to be directly forwarded to me, and I must express to you my displeasure at this delay in their communication. I request you likewise to send me the sixteen boxes I had before demanded. I must have them on Thursday. They contain documents relative to the affairs of Strasbourg and Boulogne. I do not intend either that the Minister of the Interior should prepare the articles personal to myself. This was not the case under Louis Philippe, and should not be the practice now. Besides, I have not received for some days my telegraphic despatches. On the whole, I perceive that the Ministers I have named wish to treat me as if the famous Constitution of Siéyes was in vigour, but I will not suffer it."

30.—In the course of the siege operations before Mooltan the British troops explode the principal magazine in the fort, containing, it was rumoured, 16,000 lbs. of powder. Many of the principal houses and temples were blown up at the same moment. Moólráj caused intimation to be made in the British camp next morning that he had still enough powder and shot to hold out for twelve months. The summons to surrender he indignantly ramméd down his largest gun and fired back to General Whish.

January 1.—From Gaeta the Pope threatens the Roman insurgents with excommunication.

—Died at the Grange, Hants, in his 65th year, Lord Auckland, Governor-General of India during the greater part of the disastrous Affghan war, which he initiated with his proclamation from Simla against Dost Mahomed.

—The King of Prussia issues a general order wishing "a happy new year to his glorious war-army—line and Landwehr," and thanking them for their services during the year 1848.

2.—Calamitous outbreak of cholera at DREWET'S Infant Poor Establishment, Tooting. In one week the deaths amounted to 112.

3.—Fire at the Caledonian Railway Station, Edinburgh, and destruction of the set of goods sheds.

5.—Pesth surrenders to the imperial force, under Prince Windischgrätz. An attempt was made by the Chamber to obtain conditions, but the Prince refused to listen to the proposals and took undisputed possession of the capital. Buda was entered at the same time by Baron Jellachich. M. Kossuth and the greater part of the Magyar troops retired to Debreczin, carrying with them the iron crown of Hungary and a machine for printing paper money.

—Revival of old Christmas gambols in the Free-trade Hall, Manchester.

7.—Sanguinary engagement between the Spanish troops and the insurgents, with Cabrera at their head; the latter defeated.

8.—The Roman Assembly formally depose the Pope as Sovereign of the Papal States.

9.—In New Orleans the cholera makes frightful ravages, the deaths per day averaging from fifty to eighty per cent of the population. Latterly the place presented the appearance of a deserted city.

—Opening of the new Cattle Market, Islington, designed to give accommodation to 8,000 cattle, 50,000 sheep, besides horses and pigs.

10.—Fifteen persons swept off the pier at Peterhead and drowned.

10.—At a meeting in Manchester Mr. Cobden proposed a resolution pledging himself to co-operate with the Liverpool Financial Reform Association in its efforts to reduce the expenditure to at least the standard of 1835, and to secure a more equitable and economical system of taxation."

13.—A sanguinary conflict takes place at Chillianwallah between the British and Sikh forces. Lord Gough reported his troops to be victorious, but the triumph—such as it was—was dearly purchased by the loss of 602 men, and about three times that number wounded.

— Fire at Hampstead Water Works; loss estimated at 8,000*l.*

14.—The West India mail-packet Forth wrecked on the Alacranes reef, where the Tweed was lost two years since. The passengers and crew, 126 men in number, were saved mainly by the efforts of the officers of the ship, directed by Captain Sturdee. The people were landed on a small island, and as many as could find room embarked in a brigantine, which landed them at Campeachy on the evening of the 18th.

— Fire at Lincoln's Inn, destroying the whole of the chambers forming No. 2 on the east side of the square.

15.—In the Court of Queen's Bench the Attorney-General moved for a writ to be directed to the Archbishop of Canterbury, calling upon him to inquire into the conduct of the Bishop of Exeter, in refusing to induct the Rev. Mr. Gorham into a living within the diocese of the Bishop. The Bishop alleged that, on examining Mr. Gorham, he found he held unsound doctrines, in so far as he believed that spiritual regeneration was not given or confirmed by the sacrament of baptism, that infants were not thereby regenerate, and that, by reason of the maintenance of these doctrines, Mr. Gorham was unfit to be inducted into the living. The replication affirmed that he was not unfit, and did not hold unsound doctrines. It was, said the Attorney-General, a question to be tried by Lords Spiritual, and it was customary for that Court to direct a writ to the Primate, to examine the clerk, and make the return to the Court. If the clerk accused of unsound doctrines should be dead, the question must be tried by a jury; but if alive, by the Metropolitan himself. Rule granted, on the presumption that the Bishop would not appear to oppose.

16.—The Chief Justice of Ireland gives judgment in the cases of O'Brien, Meagher, M'Manus, and O'Donoghue, against the writs of error brought to reverse the judgment pronounced at Clonmel.

17.—Heroic conduct of an Irish peasant girl at Ballylenahan, near Belfast. Suspicious of an attempt to set fire to the stackyard, Grace M'Veogh with her sister kept watch till past midnight, when she saw one of a party of incendiaries apply the match to a haystack. Taking such aim as she could in the darkness with an old blunderbuss, she discharged the contents at his head, and had the satisfaction of seeing him fall badly wounded in the yard. One of his companions approaching to see what had happened, she attacked him with an old bayonet fastened to the end of a pole, and though armed with a pistol, which he fired in her face, he was compelled to retreat to a car occupied by some others of the party, when they all fled in haste from the farm. An alarm was instantly sent to the police at Newtown-Breda, but before they could arrive to make a search the body of the man first wounded had been removed; his cap and part of his clothing covered with blood were found near the spot where he fell.

19.—Coroner's inquest on the bodies of four children, who had died in the London Free Hospital after removal from Drewet's pauper establishment at Tooting. The jury found that the children had been attacked by virulent cholera at a time when they were suffering from insufficient food, defective clothing, and impure air, and censured the guardians of St. Pancras for not obliging Drewet to perform his duty to the children committed to his care in a more efficient manner than was brought out in evidence. The average number of pauper children in Drewet's establishment was 1,500, clothed, fed, and instructed at 4*s.* 6*d.* per head per week, and the number who died of cholera this season exceeded 150. The Holborn Union obtained from another jury a verdict of manslaughter, and Drewet was placed at the bar of the Central Criminal Court on the 13th April. The jury returned a verdict of Not guilty.

20.—Conclusion of the sale of the first portion of the Stow Library. The total amount realized was 4,581*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.* The vellum "Junius," supposed to be unique, was sold to Mr. Rodd for 9*l.*

21.—About 100,000 tons of chalk fall from Shakspeare's Cliff, Dover. The Tigras, East Indiaman, was wrecked off the cliff the same day.

22.—The lengthened and disastrous siege of Mooltan brought to a close by the unconditional surrender of Moolraj. This was the day fixed by General Whish for blowing up the citadel.

24.—Explosion at Darley Main Colliery, near Barnsley, resulting in the loss of 75 lives. The calamity was supposed to have been caused by an accumulation of gas preventing the usual passage of ventilating draughts through the workings. Twenty-seven of the workmen were recovered in an almost insensible state and brought to the surface.

— H.M.S. Dido arrived at Portsmouth from New Zealand in eighty-one days, being the quickest passage on record up to this date.

25.—Destructive inundation at Inverness, (155) caused mainly by an unprecedented accumulation of water in Loch Ness, and partly by the bank of the Caledonian Canal giving way at Dochgarroch lock. The river Ness came down with alarming force, spreading desolation along its course, and sweeping away the old stone bridge which had withstood the floods of a century and a half. A great many streets of the town on both sides of the river were submerged, and the inhabitants to the number of about 500 escaped with difficulty in open boats. A number of small bridges at Glenmoriston and Glengarry were also carried away.

25.—Fire at the Canongate Gas Works, Edinburgh, and destruction of the gasometer. The immediate cause of this occurrence was the failure of a guide-rod on one side of the gasometer, which caused it to tilt against the frame, driving the standards outward at the same time and deranging the works of the water-lock. The gas then escaped in huge quantities and became ignited by some means never very clearly ascertained, but conjectured to have been from the friction of the masses of iron as they fell from the frame. About 300,000 cubic feet of gas were consumed.

26.—Came on for hearing, in the Court of Chancery, the case of Prince Albert v. Strange, in the form of an appeal motion to discharge the injunction granted by Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, to restrain the defendant, a publisher in Paternoster-row, from publishing a descriptive catalogue of etchings or engravings wrought by her Majesty and the Prince, and which etchings the plaintiff alleged to have been surreptitiously obtained by Strange, or by Judge, another defendant. On the 8th of February the Lord Chancellor gave judgment confirming and continuing the injunction granted by the Vice-Chancellor.

— The Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland urges upon the Home Secretary the necessity of further suspending the Habeas Corpus Act, "to secure for Ireland that continued repose which is so vitally essential to her prosperity, to protect the country from the renewal of an agitation for objects that cannot be attained, and which for many years has disturbed its tranquillity, scaring away capital, destroying confidence, and rendering impossible the steady application of industry."

31.—Final abolition of the Corn-laws. The event was celebrated at Manchester by a banquet protracted beyond midnight, to welcome in with rejoicings the first day of free trade.

February 1.—Parliament opened by the Queen in person. An important paragraph in the Speech commended to the attention of Parliament the restrictions imposed on commerce by the Navigation-laws. "If you find that these laws are, in whole or in part, unnecessary for the maintenance of our maritime power, while they fetter trade and industry, you will no doubt deem it right to repeal or modify their provisions." Amendments on the Address, moved in the House of Lords by Lord Stanley, and in the House of Commons by Mr. Disraeli, were withdrawn after debates in each House.

2.—Fracas in the Court of Exchequer between Sir Frederick Thesiger, on the one side, and Chief Baron Pollock, with his son-in-law, Mr. Martin, Q.C., on the other. After some altercation between counsel as to the relevancy of certain questions put to a witness, Sir Frederick said: "My Lord, I cannot but feel that my learned friend is allowed a discretion in this case, and in this Court generally, which would not be extended to myself or other counsel in this or any other Court." Mr. Martin threatened to give up practising in the Court, but was persuaded by the Attorney-General, next morning, to continue. The Lord Chief Baron then made an explanation to show that his words had been misapprehended by both parties.

5.—On the House moving to vote the sessional orders, Lord John Russell consented to withdraw the 14th and 15th resolutions, which proposed to give precedence to orders of the day over notices of motion after the 1st of May, and to limit the duration of all speeches to one hour except in the case of a member introducing an original motion, or a Minister of the Crown speaking in reply. Lord John Russell, Sir Robert Peel, and Sir H. Inglis spoke in opposition to the motion, and Mr. Hume and Mr. Cobden in its favour. On a division it was lost by a majority of 96 to 62.

6.—Sir George Grey brings forward a bill, afterwards carried through the House, to continue the suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act in Ireland for a further period of six months. It was admitted there were no parties now in arms against the Crown, but the secret organizations, which had stimulated the late insurrection, were still in existence.

7.—Flight of the Grand Duke of Tuscany from Siena, and formation of a Provisional Government.

— In Committee the Chancellor of the Exchequer proposed a grant of 50,000*l.* for the relief of Irish distress in three unions where, owing to the severity of that distress, a sufficient rate could not be collected. After a debate extending over two nights the motion was carried by 220 to 143.

8.—Fire in Lamb-street, Spitalfields, destroying the house No. 34, and five of the occupants.

— At Rome the National Assembly depose the Pope as temporal sovereign, and proclaim the Papal territory a united republic. Full and adequate guarantees were to be provided for the Pontiff's independent exercise of his spiritual authority. The Pope issued a protest from Gaeta against these resolutions.

12.—In the Constituent Assembly of Rome M. Tornaboni moved that Joseph Mazzini be invited to Rome, and that the title of citizen be conferred on him. At the same sitting the following "projects of law" were carried by acclamation:—1. The laws shall be made and justice rendered in the name of God and the people. 2. The flag of the Roman Republic shall be tri-colored, with an eagle in the centre. 3. All public functionaries, civil and military, are relieved from their oaths to the abolished Government.

12.—The bonnets rouges removed from the Parisian trees of liberty by order of the Minister of the Interior. Severe measures, leading to animated discussions in the Assembly, were also taken for the suppression of the Socialistic Clubs.

13.—Sir Walter Gilbert, with a reconnoitring party from Lord Gough's army in Chillian-wallah, discovers that Shere Singh had abandoned Rossool, and that the main body of his army, instead of crossing the Jhelum, was on its march to Lahore. The united movements of Lord Gough and General Whish forced him towards Goojerat.

14.—Mr. Labouchere explains the policy of the Government concerning the Navigation-laws, and obtains leave to introduce a bill on the subject.

16.—In the Court of Queen's Bench the East India Company obtained verdicts against the following parties for illegally trafficking in the sale of commissions:—Kendal, one year's imprisonment and a fine of 1000*l.*; Mrs. Bincks, one year's imprisonment; Mrs. Linley, six months' imprisonment; and Bickley, one year's imprisonment.

17.—Frightful occurrence in Dunlop-street Theatre, Glasgow. About eight o'clock, and when the company had just concluded the first act of the "Surrender of Calais," an alarm of fire was raised from the north-west corner of the upper gallery; a small flame appeared on the front edging, but it was so insignificant that when the workmen behind the scenes were apprised of it, and proceeded to the spot, one of them extinguished the light with his cap. It was believed to have originated from some careless person in the gallery stealthily lighting his pipe, and throwing down the paper at his feet; this, coming in contact with an accidental leakage in the gas-pipe, produced a flame which no doubt would have been attended with disastrous results to the building if not extinguished on the instant. The commotion had in a great measure subsided, when, it was believed mainly through the appearance of a fireman in the gallery, a frantic panic took possession of the occupants, and a general rush was made for the main stairs leading to the street. The terror of the excited crowd would in ordinary cases have spent itself in a few seconds in the open air, but for the unfortunate circumstance that some of the foremost stumbled and fell at the landing place immediately above the short flight of steps leading to the street. The rush was so rapid, and so many joined in it, that one fell over another, and the poor creatures soon formed a compact mass at this spot, unable to extricate themselves or move forward, although the street door was open only a few yards before them. Those behind, unaware of the nature of the obstruction, and hearing the continual shrieking and groaning, pressed onwards more furiously than ever, only, of course, to augment the catastrophe and drive the dense mass of humanity still farther up the stairs. The occupants of other parts of the house were for a time ignorant of the calamity happening so near them, and though they made every endeavour, on learning the state of matters, to render what assistance they could, the success of their efforts was greatly lessened by their ignorance of the means of access to the gallery stairs. In order to reach the bodies a partition which separated a portion of the lower gallery from the staircase to the upper gallery was torn down, and then the frightful extent of the calamity presented itself. After hurrying in to adjoining apartments as many as were only bruised or insensible, it was found that no fewer than sixty-one had perished in the mad struggle for life. Three more died after removal to the Infirmary, and one in Clyde-street Hospital, to which place most of the bodies were taken for identification. No fewer than twenty-four of those who perished were boys from sixteen to seventeen years of age.

18.—The Pope appeals to the great Catholic powers for an armed intervention in his behalf.

21.—In Dublin the trial of Charles Gavin Duffy, on the fifth indictment directed against him, closed, as in the case of the preceding four, with the jury refusing to agree upon a verdict.

— Lord Gough defeats the Sikhs at Goojerat, where they mustered 60,000 strong under Chuttur Singh and Shere Singh, with a reinforcement of 1,500 Afghan horse, led by Akram Khan, son of Dost Mahomed. Lord Gough writes to the Governor-General: "The ranks of the enemy broken, their position carried, their guns, ammunition, camp equipage, and baggage captured; their flying masses driven before the victorious pursuers from mid-day to dark, receiving most severe punishment in their flight; and, my Lord, with gratitude to a merciful Providence, I have the satisfaction of adding that, notwithstanding the obstinate resistance of the enemy, this triumphant success, this brilliant victory, has been achieved with comparatively little loss on our side. . . . At half-past seven o'clock the army advanced with the precision of a parade movement: the enemy opened their fire at a very long distance, which exposed to my artillery both the position and range of their guns. I halted the infantry just on fire, and advanced the whole of my artillery covered by skirmishers. The cannonade now opened upon the enemy was the most magnificent I ever witnessed, and as terrible in its effects. The Sikh guns were served with their customary rapidity, and the enemy well and resolutely maintained his position; but the terrific force of our fire obliged them, after an obstinate resistance, to fall back. I then deployed the infantry, and directed a general advance, covering the movement by my artillery as before."

24.—The Danish Government announce their intention not to renew the armistice of Malmö, which expired on the 26th.

26.—Mr. Cobden brings forward his motion in the House of Commons for reducing the expenditure of the country—particularly in the War Department—from 54,185,000*l.* to 44,422,000*l.*, the sum expended in 1835. The motion was seconded by Mr. Hume, and, after a debate, negatived by 275 to 78.

— Mr. Baillie obtains the appointment of a Committee to inquire into the grievances complained of in the Crown colonies of Ceylon and British-Guiana.

28.—The Floridian, emigrant ship, trading between Antwerp and New York, wrecked in a storm on the English coast, and 200 passengers drowned. The small boats capsized, one after another, as they were launched, and the whole of those who sought refuge in them were lost. The crew took to the rigging, and lashed themselves there, while upwards of 100 emigrants congregated on the quarter-deck. In about an hour the ship broke in two amidship; the mainmast fell over the side, and a tremendous sea carried away the quarter-deck, with the mass of human beings gathered on it. On the morning after the wreck about a dozen remained alive, but several of these were frozen to death during the day; and on the second morning, when relief came, only four were left—three sailors and one passenger, who had lost his senses through terror and suffering.

March 1.—Lord Ashley succeeds in carrying a motion for an address to her Majesty, praying for a Commission to inquire into the practicability of subdividing parishes for ecclesiastical purposes, so that the population for each parish should not exceed 4,000.

— Lord Palmerston enters into an explanation of his foreign policy on the Sicilian question and the occupation by the Russians of two towns on the borders of Wallachia. The debate was renewed in the House of Lords on the 6th on a motion submitted by Lord Stanley.

2.—In a Committee of the whole House Lord John Russell introduces the Government resolution for the relief of Ireland by a rate-in-aid:—"That in each of the next two years there shall be paid by every Union in Ireland a sum equal to the rate of 6*d.* in the pound on each electoral division in such Union, towards a general fund for the relief of the poor in Ireland. That the same shall be paid to a separate account at the Bank of Ireland, in the name of the Paymaster of Civil Service in Ireland, and shall be applied in such manner as Parliament shall direct." A bill founded on this resolution was afterwards passed through both Houses, and an advance of 100,000*l.* voted in anticipation of the rate-in-aid.

4.—The Austrian Emperor promulgates a new Constitution, promising increased liberty to his people. He proclaimed a charter of the Constitution for the one and indivisible empire of Austria, and dissolved the Diet now assembling at Kremsier.

6.—Twelve lives lost in an explosion at the Middle Patricroft Colliery, between Wigan and Hindley.

7.—Mr. Bankes moves for an account of all ordnance stores ordered in the year 1848 "for the purpose of being sent to the Sicilian insurgents in arms against her Majesty's ally, the King of the Two Sicilies, with the consent of her Majesty's Government," which elicited sharp speeches in reply from Lord Palmerston and Lord John Russell in vindication of the policy of the Government. The motion was lost by 134 to 39.

8.—The Rev. Mr. Shore, at the suit of the Bishop of Exeter, arrested for contempt of court, in so far as he persisted in ministering in an unconsecrated building. To avoid further interference by the Bishop, Mr. Shore on the 15th subscribed before a magistrate of Totnes such oaths and declarations as he thought would qualify him for becoming a dissenting minister; but the Bishop, acting upon the legal indelibility of holy orders, obtained decisions against Mr. Shore in various ecclesiastical courts, and ultimately succeeded in throwing him into prison for costs.

12.—The second reading of the Government Navigation-laws Bill carried by a majority of 56, in a House of 476.

— The Sardinian Government denounce the armistice of 8th August, 1848, and resume hostilities against Austria.

13.—Duel, at Paris, between MM. Ledru-Rollin and Denjoy; neither were wounded.

— Mr. Trelawney's resolution for abolishing Church-rates lost by 183 to 20; and an amendment, supported by Sir Robert Peel and Mr. Gladstone, urging the House not to come to a premature decision, by 119 to 84.

14.—The Sikh army, 15,000 strong, submit to General Gilbert, who continued to pursue their Affghan allies in their flight to Cabul.

15.—In the House of Commons Viscount Drumlanrig proposes, but afterwards withdraws, a motion for a return of all the expense incurred in collecting, printing, and publishing the various returns moved for by Mr. Hume, from February 1848 to February 1849.

— Mr. Ewart obtains the appointment of a Select Committee to inquire into the condition and management of the public libraries of the United Kingdom.

— After a debate extending over two nights,

Mr. Disraeli's resolution declaring that the whole taxation of the country presses with undue severity on real property was rejected by 280 to 189. —

16.—Died, aged 79, Cardinal Mezzofanti, a learned ecclesiastic and extraordinary linguist.

17.—Sir Charles J. Napier, sworn in Commander-in-Chief of the East India Company's forces, was entertained at dinner by the Directors at the London Tavern. He left on the 24th, and entered Calcutta on the 6th May.

21.—Mr. Macaulay installed as Lord Rector of Glasgow University, and presented with the freedom of the city the following day.

— The Austrian army, under Field-Marshal Radetzky, crosses the Ticino near Vigevano, and defeats a division of the Sardinian army occupying Mortara.

23.—Sir F. Baring announces in the House of Commons that Government had determined on offering 20,000*l.* to any vessel that would afford efficient assistance in saving Sir John Franklin and those under him.

— In the course of a debate on the Navigation Bill Mr. Labouchere states that the Government did not intend to press that part of the measure which had reference to the coasting trade. The bill as amended passed through Committee on the 26th, and was read a third time on the 23rd April, by a majority of 275 to 214.

24.—The Austrian troops defeat the Piedmontese near Novara, and decide against them the issue of the whole campaign. Charles-Albert thereupon abdicated in favour of his son, the Duke of Savoy.

25.—Hostilities resumed between Denmark and the Duchies, the armistice entered into on the 26th of August last having failed in securing even the basis of a permanent peace between the belligerents.

26.—The Duke of Savoy proclaimed King of Sardinia under the title of Victor Emanuel.

27.—Lord Palmerston to the Marquis of Normanby:—"The British Government is, for many obvious reasons, not desirous of taking an active part in any negotiations which may result from the application which the Pope has addressed to some of the Catholic powers of Europe, whose territories are nearer than Great Britain in geographical proximity to the Italian peninsula. But the British Government will be much gratified if the result of these negotiations should be such a reconciliation between the Pope and his subjects as might enable the former, with the free goodwill and consent of the latter, to return to his capital, and there to resume his spiritual functions and temporal authority. But it is the opinion of her Majesty's Government that such a reconciliation could scarcely be effected, or, if effected for the moment, could never be permanent, unless the basis upon which it was founded were to be that the Pope should engage to maintain the constitutional and representative systems of government which he granted last year to his subjects, and unless the separation between the spiritual authority and the temporal powers and institutions of the State were so clearly and so distinctly established as to put an end to those manifold grievances which the mixture of the spiritual with the temporal power has for so long a period of time produced in the Roman States."

28.—A atrocious series of murders perpetrated in Liverpool by John Gleeson Wilson. About noon, near one of the most crowded thoroughfares, and surrounded by houses on every side, Mrs. Henrichson, a captain's wife far advanced in pregnancy, her two children, and waiting-maid were found with their throats cut and their heads bruised in a shocking manner. Life was not quite extinct in all the cases when an entry was made into the house by neighbours; but none of the victims, with the exception of the servant, were able to give an explanation touching the details or object of the dreadful outrage. Wilson was apprehended the next night, when attempting to pawn a gold watch belonging to the murdered woman.

29.—Commenced in Norwich, before Baron Rolfe, the trial of Rush for the Stanfield Hall murders. It lasted over six days, Rush himself occupying the greater part of two with a speech in defence. After an absence of six minutes, the jury returned a verdict of Guilty, and he was sentenced to be executed. This sentence was carried into effect on the 21st April, on a drop erected on the west side of Norwich Castle. An immense black banner was unfurled from the battlements by the sheriff to mark the extraordinary guilt of the criminal.

— The Olympic Theatre, London, destroyed by fire, the flames being observed by the stage-manager when the actors were beginning to assemble for the evening's performance.

— The Neapolitan forces resume military operations against the Sicilians. Catania taken by General Filangieri, after a bombardment which laid the greater part of the city in ruins. Syracuse surrendered without resistance as soon as the Neapolitan fleet arrived and the troops landed for the attack. On the 22nd April a deputation from Palermo surrendered the keys of the city, and offered unqualified submission to the King's authority. This put an end to all outward signs of insurrection in the island.

— The Governor-General of India issues a proclamation announcing the annexation of the Punjab to the British empire in India:—"The Government of India has no desire for conquest now; but it is bound in its duty to provide fully for its own security, and to guard the interests of those committed to its charge. To that end, and as the only sure mode of protecting the State from the perpetual recurrence of unprovoked and wasting wars, the Governor-General is compelled to resolve upon the entire subjection of a people whom their own Government has long been unable to control, and whom (as events have shown) no punishment can deter from violence, and no acts of friendship conciliate to peace." His Highness the Maharajah Dhuleep Singh to be treated with honour and consideration, but Moolraj, the ex-Dewan of Mooltan, to be put on his trial for aiding and abetting in the murder of Mr. Vans Agnew and Lieutenant Anderson, on the 21st April, 1848.

30.—General Haynau arrives with troops and a battering train before Brescia, which had rebelled against the Austrians. After a six hours' bombardment the city was entered, the barricades carried with great slaughter, and the city almost destroyed.

April 2.—The trial of the Paris insurgents of the 15th May, 1848, concluded before the High Court of Justice at Bourges. General Courtais was acquitted, Barbès and Albert transported for life, Blanqui for ten years, Sobrier for seven, and Raspail for six.

— The city of Genoa seized by an insurgent mob, who, after a murderous struggle, drive out the garrison and proclaim a republic. The city was next day declared to be in a state of siege.

3.—The King of Prussia receives a deputation from the Frankfort Parliament, offering him the crown of Germany. He undertook to consult with the crowned princes and free States on the subject, and declined the honour on the 29th.

— Sarah Thomas tried at the Gloucester assizes for the murder of her mistress, Elizabeth Jeffries, aged 61, by beating her on the head with a stone or other blunt instrument. There had also been a robbery committed on the premises, but it appeared to have been an after-thought, to divert suspicion from the prisoner. The jury now found her guilty, and she was sentenced to be executed. On the morning of the execution she was seized with one of her violent and ungovernable fits of rage. She stamped and wrestled with the prison officials, two of whom forced her up the ladder, and her screams did not cease till the bolt was drawn.

4.—Mr. H. G. Ward appointed Lord High Commissioner of the Ionian Islands.

6.—Sudden death by cholera of Dr. Crolly, Primate of the Irish Roman Catholic Church.

10.—The Genoese, after defending their city with great vigour for nine days, surrendered to the besieging force under General La Marmora. A general amnesty was granted to the whole of the inhabitants, except those officials of the old régime who had accepted office under the Provisional Government.

10.—Engagement between the Danes and the united armies in the Duchies. The former were victorious.

12.—A reaction at Florence in favour of the Grand Duke of Tuscany; most of the revolutionary bodies suddenly quit the city.

13.—The Danes defeated by a combined German army, on the Duppel heights, opposite the isle of Alsen.

14.—Hungary declares itself a free State, with Kossuth for supreme governor.

16.—The French National Assembly, by a majority of 112, decide for armed intervention in the States of the Church.

17.—The new Constitution of Rome submitted to the Assembly. It provided that there should be an Assembly of Representatives elected for three years by universal suffrage; that there should be two Consuls, elected by the same process, charged with the executive power; and twelve Tribunes similarly elected for five years, to whom the Consuls were to give an account of their administration. The Tribunes were also specially intrusted with the mission of guarding against any violation of the Constitution.

18.—Prince Albert lays the foundation-stone of the Great Grimsby Docks.

23.—The third reading of the Navigation Bill carried in the House of Commons by a majority of 275 to 214.

24.—Votes of thanks passed in both Houses of Parliament to the Governor-General of India, the Commander-in-Chief, and the officers and soldiers of the army in India, for their late brilliant and successful exploits.

— Advices from Vienna announce the defeat of the Imperialists before Gran by the Hungarian insurgents, the raising of the siege of Comorn, and the evacuation of Pesth by the Austrians.

25.—Disturbance at Montreal on the occasion of the Governor-General, Lord Elgin, giving his consent to a bill for indemnifying those inhabitants of Lower Canada (mostly French) whose property was injured or destroyed during the rebellion of 1837-38. The Governor-General was personally assaulted, the Parliament dissolved by mob violence, and the Hall of Assembly set on fire. A large portion of the archives of the province and a precious library attached to the building were destroyed. The rebel party, among whom were many Canadians of distinction, were overpowered by the military.

26.—Eleven children drowned at the Black Rocks, Leith, the tide unexpectedly cutting off their retreat to the shore, while engaged in the holiday pursuit of shell-fishing.

— Five thousand lambs lost in a snow-storm in Romney Marsh.

26.—The King of Prussia suddenly dissolves the Second Berlin Chamber for calling on the Government immediately to terminate the state of siege declared on the 12th November. The sittings of the Upper Chamber were adjourned the same day. A new electoral law was issued on the 31st May.

— The French expeditionary army in support of the Pope lands at Civita Vecchia, and takes possession of the town without opposition. At Rome the Triumvirs order a levy of 50,000 men, and, while protesting against the unexpected invasion, declare at the same time their firm purpose of resisting, and of holding France responsible for the consequences. General Oudinot issued the following proclamation: "Inhabitants of the Roman States,—In presence of the events which agitate Italy, the French Republic resolves to send a corps d'armée into your territory, not to defend the present Government, which it has not recognised, but to avert great misfortunes from your country. France does not arrogate to herself the right to regulate interests which are, before all, those of the Roman people, and which extend themselves to the whole of Europe, and to all the Christian world; she has only considered that by her position she was particularly called upon to interfere, to facilitate the establishment of a régime equally removed from the abuses which have for ever been destroyed by the generosity of the illustrious Pius IX. and from the anarchy of these late days. The flag which I have just raised on your shores is that of peace, order, conciliation, and true liberty. Round it will rally all who wish to co-operate in the accomplishment of this patriotic and sacred work." A counter-proclamation designed to turn the Roman people against this violation of the soil of the Republic was instantly issued by the Triumvirs Mazzini, Saffi, and Armellini.

— Additional Irish remedial measures introduced into the House of Lords by the Lord Chancellor, and into the House of Commons by Lord John Russell. The scheme consisted of bills to convert leaseholds perpetually renewable on payment of fines into fee simple, by securing to the landlord a fee-farm rent; to equalize the rates leviable for the relief of the poor, so that in no electoral district could property be burdened to a greater extent than 5s. per pound; and to extend the usefulness of the Encumbered Estates Act passed last year, by simplifying the title under which property could be legally held in Ireland. In reference to this last measure it was stated that claimants for estates, in the shape of tenant-for-life, annuitants, mortgagees, judgment creditors, tenants-in-tail, remaindermen, and reversioners, were contending for the ownership of more than 700 estates then under the control of the Court of Chancery, and that there were probably as many more in such a condition that no effort could long preserve them from the same fate. The measures were favourably received by both sides of the House.

27.—Count Nesselrode issues a manifesto to the Courts of Europe, seeking to justify the interference of Russia between Austria and the Hungarians. "Raised on the basis of anarchy, and imbued with that hostile spirit which the Hungarian chiefs have against Russia, there is nevertheless a great danger for us in a movement in the extension of which we dare not concur. In protecting his Polish and Danubian provinces from the scourge of a propaganda, which means to convulse them,—and by granting the assistance which the Austrian Government claim at his hands,—the Emperor flatters himself that he acts in his own interest, and also in the interest of European peace and tranquillity."

29.—The Hannah, emigrant ship, wrecked on her passage from Newry to Quebec, and sixty people drowned.

— The King of Naples, at the head of a small force, enters the States of the Church at Terracina.

May 1.—A Protectionist gathering in London, presided over by the Duke of Richmond. Resolutions were unanimously adopted to the effect that free-trade had failed to produce the benefit predicted by its promoters, and had been followed by deep injury to many of the great interests in the country. Those present agreed to form a "National Association for the Protection of British Industry and Capital."

— The Russian troops set out on their march through Gallicia, to assist Austria in her war against Hungary.

— The Stow Manuscripts purchased by Lord Ashburton for 8,000*l.*

4.—In anticipation of the threatened dissent of Prussia from their decree, the Deputies of the Frankfort Parliament resolved, that "Should Prussia in particular not be represented in that Parliament, and therefore not have acknowledged the Constitution, either expressly or de facto, then the Sovereign of the State which has the greatest number of inhabitants among them represented shall enter upon the rights and duties of the Emperor, under the title of Regent or Stadtholder of the empire." The Diet split up on the 6th June, when a number of the Deputies withdrew to Stuttgart.

6.—A murderous foray carried out by the British troops under Major Hill and Mr. Norman Macdonald, Governor of the British colony of Bathurst, against a native king, on the banks of the Gambia. The towns of Keeming and Bombacco were burnt, and a great number of natives destroyed with grape and canister, to avenge an alleged affront.

8.—The second reading of the Navigation Bill passes the House of Lords by a majority of 10. The debate continued till half-past four o'clock the following morning.

— The President of the French Republic to General Oudinot:—"The telegraphic news announcing the unforeseen resistance which you have met with under the walls of Rome has greatly grieved me. I had hoped, as you know, that the inhabitants of Rome, opening their eyes to evidence, would receive with eagerness an army which had arrived there to accomplish a friendly and disinterested mission. This has not been the case. Our soldiers have been received as enemies. Our military honour is engaged. I will not suffer it to be assailed. Reinforcements shall not be wanting to you. Tell your soldiers that I appreciate their bravery, and take part in what they endure; and that they may always rely on my support and my gratitude."

9.—General Garibaldi defeats the Neapolitans, 7,000 strong, at Palestrina. He returned to Rome on the 11th, and was received in triumph.

—Macready-Forrest riots in New York. Driven from the stage of the Astor House Theatre on the 7th, Mr. Macready, in compliance with a requisition, now made his appearance a second time, and his friends were found to have mustered in sufficient numbers to turn the disaffected out of the building by force. This led to serious rioting in the streets, at the height of which the military were called out and fired into the mob. Three or four were killed and a much larger number injured by the discharge. Mr. Macready escaped from the theatre to his hotel in disguise, and embarked for England at the earliest opportunity.

11.—In reply to Mr. B. Osborne, Lord Palmerston states that notice had been received from the Cabinet at Vienna of the advance of Russian forces into Hungary, but that the British Government had made no offer of mediation between the contending parties.

—Died, in Paris, from cholera, aged 72, Madame Récamier.

15.—In consequence of the morning newspapers declining to report the frequent lengthy speeches of Mr. John O'Connell, the hon. gentleman attempted to avail himself of an Act long in abeyance, to expel the reporters from the House along with all other strangers. On the 8th June they were kept out of the House during the discussion in committee of the Poor Relief (Ireland) Bill.

16.—Bologna, after a sanguinary struggle of eight days, surrenders to the Austrians.

17.—Fight between a bull and a tiger at Madrid; about 90,000 people said to be present.

—Petition presented to the House of Commons from thirty-one shareholders in the Eastern Counties Railway Company, making grave charges against Mr. Hudson, in his capacity of chairman to the company. Mr. Hudson endeavoured to exonerate himself from the charges of acting in an unauthorized manner and tampering with the share-list.

19.—An Irish bricklayer, named Hamilton, fires a pistol, charged with powder, at the Queen, when proceeding down Constitution-hill towards Buckingham Palace. He was instantly arrested and committed for trial under the Act, passed in 1842, to punish those who attacked her Majesty with intent to alarm. On his trial he pleaded guilty, and was sentenced to seven years' transportation.

21.—Died, at Edgeworthstown, County Longford, in her 83rd year, Maria Edgeworth, the well-known authoress of many stories of Irish life and modern society.

22.—Interview between the Emperor of Russia and Austria, in Warsaw.

—Died, aged 75, Robert Vernon, donor to the nation of the collection of pictures known as the Vernon Gallery.

27.—The French Legislative Assembly of 750 members holds its first sitting.

28.—At Toomavara, Tipperary, 500 of the famine-stricken inhabitants were evicted under circumstances which led to repeated reference being made to the case in Parliament.

June 3. — General Oudinot, apparently anxious to spare the historical part of Rome, where the defence was weakest, moves a column of attack against the Villa Pamphili. He surprised 200 of Mellora's free corps and took them prisoners. Garibaldi's party in the villa were on the alert, and gave the alarm to the defenders of the walls overlooking the battle-ground. A desperate engagement took place, the villa being several times taken and re-taken in the course of the day. At nightfall it remained in the hands of the French. The Church of San Pancrazio, the Corsini and Valentini Villas, were afterwards attacked and carried. The Triumvirs issued a proclamation:—"No one imagined that France would, like a thief in the night, steal into our city; but it did so, and succeeded to a certain point. . . . Whilst Oudinot resorts to this infamous act, France rises up and recalls its troops from this work of invasion. One more effort, Romans, and the country is saved for ever! Rome by its constancy regenerates all Europe!"

—In Paris to-day the deaths from cholera number 119. Marshal Bugeaud died on the 10th, and Madame Catalani, a singer of great reputation in her day, on the 13th.

4.—Died suddenly, at Paris, aged 60, Marguerite, Countess of Blessington, a leader of fashion in English society, and an authoress of various works of fiction and travel.

—Mr. Hume brings forward a motion on the subject of Parliamentary Reform, leave being asked therein to bring in a bill to extend the electoral franchise to all householders, to enact voting by ballot, to shorten the duration of Parliament to three years, and to equalize the proportion of representatives to electors. On a division the motion was negatived by 268 to 82.

11.—Mr. Cobden's motion for an address to the Crown in favour of settling disputes by a scheme of international arbitration defeated by a majority of 176 against 79.

— The Jews Emancipation Bill read a third time in the House of Commons by a majority of 66.

— Violent scene in the French Assembly, arising from the declaration of Ledru-Rollin that the Constitution had been violated by the force sent out in support of the Pope having attacked the Roman people in their own capital. On the 13th the elements of discord were so alarming that Paris was declared in a state of siege. Attempts were even made to erect barricades; but those stationed at them generally fled at the approach of the military without any serious fighting. Several of the more violent Red Republicans were seized and their organs suppressed.

— The General Board of Health issue a notification regarding the visitation of cholera to this country. Since the latter end of March the disease had broken out in twelve different parts of the metropolis, in 27 towns in England and Wales, and 17 towns in Scotland. In the two months from the 29th of March to the 29th of May the total number of cases was 428, but in the twelve days preceding the date of the present notice the number was 673. The total number of deaths up to the time of the renewal of the Order in Council were 6,319 out of 14,332 attacks, whereas the returns now gave 638 deaths out of 1,203 attacks.

— The Irish state-prisoners, whose sentence had been commuted to transportation for life, demand that they should either be set at liberty or executed according to the original sentence.

12.—The third reading of the Navigation Bill carried in the House of Lords without a division. The Bishop of Oxford's amendment on the motion that the bill do pass was rejected by 23 to 9.

14.—In consequence of the difficulty which had arisen in connexion with the commutation of the sentence upon the Irish traitors, a bill is brought in to-day, and carried through both Houses during the session, to remove any doubt which might exist with regard to the Crown's right to exercise the prerogative of mercy in cases of high treason.

19.—Loss of the transport ship, Richard Dart, on the north side of Prince Edward's Island. She struck during a storm of such severity that the waves tore the lifeboats from the quarter-deck, and swept off 47 of the passengers and crew. Of these the mate alone contrived to reach the rocks. The commander and a few others took refuge in the rigging, and were saved by the mainmast falling inshore.

They were exposed to great hardships on the island till they fell in with an exploring party from Capetown, who maintained them for thirty-two days, till a vessel passed for the Cape.

20.—Great gathering at the Menai Straits, to witness the fixing of the first tube of the Britannia Bridge. The operation, at once delicate and stupendous, was accomplished without accident to the tube, but one life was lost, and a short delay occasioned by the bursting of one of the cylinders of a hydraulic press.

21.—The Austro-Russian troops defeat the Hungarians, who retreat across the Waag.

22.—The annual budget introduced by Sir Charles Wood. He calculated the total income at 52,252,000*l.*, and the expenditure at 51,515,064*l.*, and, with the small surplus at his disposal, did not propose to make any reduction in the taxation.

23.—The Pope, in exile, makes a contribution of 20,000 francs for the relief of the starving Irish.

25.—Died, aged 57, Karl Gottlob Zumpt, philologist and grammarian.

26.—The Jewish Disabilities Bill thrown out in the House of Lords, on a second reading, by a majority of 25. Baron Rothschild resigned his seat for London, but was re-elected on the 3rd July, by a large majority, over Lord John Manners.

— Protectionist meeting in Drury Lane Theatre, presided over by the Duke of Richmond. Lord Malmesbury, in moving one of the resolutions, said it was not too late yet to retrace steps so rashly taken in 1846. He hoped the time would never come when the free-trade theory would be consummated; "but should it please God in His anger that it should be effected, then would this great kingdom soon return to its normal and natural state—a weather-beaten island in a northern sea."

27.—Collision between the American mail steamer Europa, making for Liverpool, and the emigrant ship Charles Bartlett, on her outward voyage. The occurrence took place in lat. 50°49' N., long. 29°30' W., during a thick fog. The Europa, steaming at the rate of eleven or twelve knots an hour, struck the Charles Bartlett midway between the main and mizen masts, cutting her completely in two, and almost passing through the sinking halves. The damage sustained by the Europa was of the most trifling description. Her engines were immediately stopped, and the boats lowered to save as many as possible of the people on board the barque. Out of 176 only 42 could be rescued, the ill-fated vessel, cut far below the water-mark, and heavily laden with lead, iron, and chalk, sinking with fearful rapidity. It was thought that not fewer than thirty people were crushed to death during the time the steamer kept pressing on the barque.

July 1.—For the six months closing to-day the large sum of 22,000,000*l.* of foreign capital was invested in the English funds.

— At an early hour this morning the French succeed in obtaining a footing within the walls of Rome. Four hundred of the garrison were bayoneted on the spot, and 230 taken prisoners. Thirteen pieces of artillery found in the bastion were spiked, and a heavy fire opened against other weak places in the walls. At 5 P.M. General Rosselli sent a dispatch to General Oudinot:—"The Assembly ceases a defence which has become impossible, and remains at its post. It charges the Triumvirate with the execution of the present decree." A suspension of hostilities was afterwards agreed upon, and General Oudinot entered the city at the head of his staff on the 3rd.

2.—General Oudinot telegraphs to the French Minister of War:—"The assault made on the night of the 30th produced the result I expected. Overtures of submission were made to me yesterday by a deputation of the Roman Municipality. The bastion No. 9 is occupied by our troops. The gates of San Paolo, Portese, and San Pancrazio have just been opened to us. Measures have been adopted to ensure the occupation of the city with the greatest order. The discipline of our soldiers equals their valour." The key of one of the gates was sent to the Pope at Gaeta, who returned an answer congratulating the French General on his triumph over the enemies of human society.

3.—During the debate on O'Connor's motion relative to the Charter, Lord John Russell disclaimed ever having used to any person or in any debate the word "Finality," with which his name had become somehow associated.

4.—The inhabitants of Capetown resolve in public meeting, "That the British Government had no right to degrade into a penal settlement the Cape of Good Hope, which became a portion of the British empire by capitulation and cession from a friendly power, and that all attempts so to injure and degrade it are unjust and tyrannical, and may be constitutionally resisted by the inhabitants as British subjects." Notwithstanding this strong manifestation of feeling on the part of the colonists, the ship Neptune, loaded with convicts, was dispatched from Bermuda to Simon's Bay; but the opposition becoming too aggravating and significant to be misunderstood, the vessel was withdrawn, and the offensive Order in Council of 4th September, 1848, cancelled.

6.—After a debate, extending over two nights, Mr. Disraeli's motion, that the House should resolve itself into a committee to take into consideration the state of the nation, was negatived by a majority of 296 to 156.

10.—Armistice concluded between Prussia and Denmark, to last for six months.

11.—The Hungarians defeat the Austrians at Comorn.

12.—Affray at Dolly's Brae, near Castlewellan, County Down, between a party of Ribbonmen and an Orange procession proceeding to Tollymore-park on a visit to Lord Roden. Early in the month the Government had been apprised of intended strife at this place, and detachments of military and police were sent forward to preserve the peace, but their presence did not prevent shots being exchanged between the rival factions, with the loss of several lives. The incident led to much official correspondence, and to various discussions in Parliament.

— Died, aged 70, Horace Smith, joint author of the "Rejected Addresses."

14.—Battle of Waitzen between the Russians and Hungarians commenced; it did not terminate till the 17th, on which day the Hungarian cavalry, under Görgey, had broken through the Russian lines and was in full retreat northwards in order to get behind the Theiss.

15.—Re-establishment of the temporal authority of the Pope proclaimed at Rome.

18.—At a meeting held in York, the directors and shareholders of the Newcastle and Berwick Railway resolve to proceed against Mr. Hudson for illegally applying 184,204*l.* of the funds of the company to his own use.

— Riot and loss of life at St. Boswall's Fair, Kelso, caused by the attempted rescue of a railway labourer who had been taken into custody for assault.

19.—The Pope writes to his beloved subjects from Gaeta:—"We hail with satisfaction the day when we are to return among you. Without delay, for the reorganization of public affairs, we are about to name a commission which, furnished with full powers and aided by a Ministry, will regulate the government of the State."

21.—C. Fitzsimon, son-in-law of the late D. O'Connell, writes to Corry Connellan, Private Secretary of the Lord-Lieutenant, the following letter, which gave rise to much animadversion later in the year:—"My dear Connellan, I trust I shall be pardoned for mentioning a suggestion. I make it from my sincere anxiety that no chance accident should in any way damp the enthusiasm with which the people are ready to receive the Queen. . . . Lord Roden is looked upon as the cause of the late lamented affair in the north. His daughter-in-law coming in so immediately after in attendance on her Majesty would be of mauvaise augure. I know the people of Dublin would feel it so. Could not Lady Jocelyn get toothache, or some other malady, to entitle her to sick-leave for the time, and allow some other less dangerous name to appear in the Queen's suite?"

21.—Military spectacle at Chatham. The "operations" consisted of attacks by a besieging army which had beaten a force sent to relieve the fortress besieged, and returned to the siege operations; and of a defence by the besiegers, which was successful up to a certain point, but at last failed against the superior force and offensive matriel of the attacking body.

— The Liberal members meet in one of the committee rooms of the House to resolve upon a united course of action during the next session of Parliament, upon the questions of the Irish Church, the English and Irish franchise, and the tenure of land in Ireland.

— In the course of a debate on the advance of the Russian troops against Hungary, Lord Palmerston defends himself from the charge of stirring up opposition to Austria, which had been made by Lord Brougham in the House of Lords, when moving certain resolutions relating to Italy.

22.—During a visit to the scene of his captivity at Ham, Prince Louis Napoleon said, in reply to a toast by the Mayor:—"Now that I am by the choice of all France become the legitimate chief of this great nation, I cannot glory in a captivity which had for its cause an attack against a regular government. I propose to you a toast in honour of the men who are determined, in spite of their conviction, to respect the institutions of their country."

23.—Public meeting in the London Tavern to express sympathy with "the noble, maligned, and betrayed people of Hungary." Mr. Cobden was the principal speaker, arguing at great length against the impolicy and inhumanity of assisting Austria or Russia by loans raised in this country.

24.—The Austrian Commander-in-Chief, General Haynau, to the inhabitants of Buda and Pesth:—"After several victories which the imperial arms have obtained over those of the traitors, we are again among you. We have again planted the imperial standard on your steeples. But our feelings are far different from what they were when we left you a short time ago. Doomed to death is every person, no matter of what rank or sex—doomed to instant death on the spot of the crime, is every one who dares to assist the cause of the rebels, by words or deeds, or by revolutionary dress; doomed to instant death is every one who dares to insult any of my soldiers or those of our allies; doomed to instant death is every one who enters into traitorous communication with the enemies of the Crown, or who maliciously presumes by rumours to assist the rebellion, or to conceal weapons."

25.—The foundation-stone of the break-water of Portland Harbour sunk by Prince Albert.

28.—Berlin relieved from the state of siege imposed November 12.

— Died, at Oporto, aged 51, Charles-Albert, ex-king of Sardinia.

31.—Great slaughter of Borneo pirates by a small European force at Palo. Of 120 prahus said to have started on the expedition, and all of which were in the bay on the preceding evening, eighty were destroyed, and the loss of life was placed as high as 1,200 men.

August 1.—Parliament prorogued by commission. With reference to the most important act of the session, the Speech recorded that "Her Majesty has given her assent to the important measure you have passed to amend the Navigation-laws, in full confidence that the enterprise, skill, and hardihood of her people will assure to them a full share of the commerce of the world, and maintain upon the seas the ancient renown of this nation."

— Her Majesty and the Royal Family take their departure from the Isle of Wight on their first visit to Ireland. It was intended to cast anchor in Portland roads, but the weather being unusually favourable, the voyage was continued without interruption to the Cove of Cork, which was reached in about thirty hours after the departure from Osborne. Next day the Queen received addresses on board the royal yacht, and stepped ashore for a short time about 3 o'clock. On entering the pavilion prepared for her reception, her Majesty said to Dr. Power, "I have to inform you that I comply with the wishes of the inhabitants to change the name of this town." The old flag with the word "Cove" on it was then hauled down, and another with the new inscription "Queenstown" took its place. On proceeding up the river to Cork numerous addresses were presented, and her Majesty conferred the honour of knighthood on the Mayor, William Lyons, Esq. From Cork the squadron dropped down the river, and made direct for Kingstown harbour, which was reached in the evening about 7 o'clock. The royal visit to Dublin was made on the 6th. "Such a day of jubilee," writes the Times, "such a night of rejoicing, has never been beheld in the ancient capital of Ireland since first it arose on the banks of the Liffey. No ovation of olden Rome enriched with the spoils of conquered nations, and illustrated by the wealth of captured kings, was so glorious as the triumphant entry of Queen Victoria into Dublin." The royal cortege occupied an hour and a half in passing through the streets from the railway station to the Vice-regal Lodge. A decorated archway was erected at Canal Bridge, where the Lord Mayor presented her Majesty with the keys of the city and with the mace and sword. On returning the keys, the Queen said, "I am delighted to be in Dublin. I am gratified at the reception I have met with in this the second city of my empire." Next day the royal party visited the Bank, the National Board of Education, and Trinity College. In the early part of the 8th Prince Albert inspected a troop of Hussars in Phoenix-park, and in the afternoon her Majesty held a levee in the Castle. The address of the Dublin Corporation was replied to in these words:—"It affords me sincere pleasure to receive your address in my ancient and loyal city of Dublin, and I gladly avail myself of this occasion to express my grateful acknowledgment for the ardent affection and loyalty with which my arrival has been hailed. . . . I gladly share with you the hope that the heavy visitation with which Providence has recently visited large numbers of people in this country is passing away. I have felt deeply for their sufferings, and it will be a source of heartfelt satisfaction to me if I am permitted to witness the future and lasting prosperity of this portion of the United Kingdom." A review in Phoenix-park was the main feature of Thursday's rejoicings, and on Friday her Majesty visited the Duke of Leinster, at Carton. Belfast was similarly honoured on Saturday; and on Sunday the royal squadron stood out for the Frith of Clyde, but was compelled to seek shelter for the night in Loch Ryan. On Monday the 13th the royal squadron sailed up Loch Long, and Prince Albert passed across from Arrochar to Loch Lomond, and joined the Queen on board the Fairy, in the Clyde, when the fleet passed up the river to Glasgow. Here her Majesty was received by the Corporation of Glasgow and the gentry of the West of Scotland; accompanied by them, the royal party proceeded through the streets to the Cathedral and University, and afterwards departed by railway on their journey to Balmoral.

2.—In the case of Gorham v. the Bishop of Exeter, the Arches Court gave judgment that the Bishop was justified in his refusal to induct the plaintiff into the living of Bramford-Speke.

—Died, at Alexandria, Mehemet Ali, Pasha of Egypt.

4.—Mr. Berwick, Q. C., Government Commissioner, closes his court of inquiry into the circumstances connected with the collision at Dolly's Brae. A protest against the closing of the inquiry was made by Mr. Rae, who acted as attorney for the Ribbon party.

6.—Lola Montez brought up at Marlborough-street Police Court on a charge of bigamy, in so far as she had intermarried with Lieut. Heald of the 2nd Life Guards, her former husband, Captain James, being still alive. The suit was instituted by the friends of Lieut. Heald, who had only come of age in January last, and was entitled to a fortune of between 6,000*l.* and 7,000*l.* a year. The prisoner admitted her first marriage with Captain James, but said she then passed under a false name, and that to complete its nullity a divorce had been obtained by mutual consent. On inquiry it turned out that the sentence of the Consistorial Court prohibited either from marrying during the lifetime of the other. The case was adjourned from time to time for the production of witnesses, but the non-appearance of the defendant at the later stages led to an estreating of the recognizances.

6.—Examination, in bankruptcy, of E. T. Delafield, lessee of Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden.

10.—Serious defeat of the Hungarians by General Haynau, at Temeswar, which was captured after a siege of 107 days.

11.—Explosion of fire-damp in the Lletty Shenkin Colliery, Aberdare, causing the death of 52 workmen out of 112 employed in the pit.

—The Hungarian dictator, Görgéy, at the head of between 30,000 and 40,000 men, surrenders to the Russians at Arad. He writes to General Rudiger:—"The Provisional Government exist no longer. The height of peril had found it at the weakest. I, the man of action, but not of ineffectual action, saw that all further bloodshed was useless—disastrous for Hungary. I had seen it in the beginning of the Russian intervention. I called to-day upon the Provisional Government to abdicate unconditionally, because its continuance in power could only render the future of our fatherland darker, from day to day, and more deplorable. The Provisional Government admitted this, and voluntarily resigned, laying down the supreme power in my hands. I avail myself of this circumstance, according to my best persuasion, to spare the effusion of blood, and to liberate my peaceful fellow-citizens (whom I am too weak any longer to protect from at least the miseries of war), by laying down arms unconditionally, and thereby giving the impulse to the leaders of the divisions of the Hungarian forces separated from me shortly to do the same, acknowledging with me that this is the best thing that can at present be done for Hungary." Görgéy concluded by describing his intended route, so that the Russians, to whom alone he would surrender, might throw themselves between his forces and the Austrians. On the 16th he writes to General Klapka:—"Since we saw one another, events have taken place which were not indeed unexpected, but have been decisive. The everlasting jealousy of the Government had fortunately brought matters to the point which I foretold as early as April, when I passed the Theiss at Tokay. After many honourable battles with the Russians, the Diet declared its wish that I should be Commander-in-Chief. Kossuth secretly appointed Bem. The country believed that Kossuth had appointed me from the jesuitical answer which he gave to the motion of the Diet. This knavery was the source of all that befell later." On the 14th Kossuth writes to Bem, from Terregova:—"I advise, as a good citizen and honourable man, that you set down a committee of representatives of the people, for only the sovereign power can act over the Government. Send couriers to Comorn and Peterwardein to hold out. Assure yourself of the co-operation of the commandant of the fortress of Arad. This, and not my presence, is before all things necessary; for since you are now reduced to employ force against the people to subsist your army, I neither can nor will sanction such measures by my presence."

11.—Proclamation of the President of the United States against a marauding expedition secretly fitting out in that country against Cuba.

13.—The first aggregate meeting of the Financial and Parliamentary Reform League held in Drury-lane Theatre.

17.—Discovery of the remains of Patrick O'Connor, a Custom-house officer, murdered by Mr. and Mrs. Manning, and buried in the back kitchen of their house, Miniver-place, Bermondsey. Suspicion having been excited by the absence of O'Connor from his lodgings since the 9th inst., a search was made in the house occupied by his acquaintances, the Mannings, and in the place above described the body was found lying on the face, with the legs doubled up and tied to the haunches. A quantity of quick-lime had been thrown into the hole to hasten the decay of the remains. At the time of the discovery the house was unoccupied. Mrs. Manning, presuming upon her intimacy with O'Connor, had gone to his lodgings immediately after the murder, and taken possession of a considerable amount of railway scrip and certain sums of money kept in his drawers. She returned to her house and remained there for three days, during one of which the police made a cursory inspection of the place, under the belief that the missing man was most likely to be found there. On the 12th, under the assumed name of Mrs. Smith, she fled with her plunder to Edinburgh, and was apprehended in a private lodging-house there by Superintendent Moxey on the 20th. Manning was captured at Jersey eight days afterwards. The examination into the charges made against them extended over several days at Southwark Police Office, and resulted in the committal of both for trial. In the course of the inquiry, Manning made a statement to the effect that his wife having induced O'Connor to come to dinner, asked him to go down stairs to wash his hands; as he reached the passage leading to the kitchen she put one arm round his neck and shot him with the other. (See October 25.)

21.—The Hungarian leaders, Kossuth, Bem, and others, escape to the Turkish frontier, and obtain the protection of the Porte.

— Mary Ann Geering executed, in front of Lewis gaol, for the series of crimes known as the Guestling Poisonings, the convict in this case having caused the death of her husband and two sons by poison, for the purpose of obtaining "burial money" from a society of which they were members.

22.—After a lengthened and obstinate siege, Venice capitulates to the Austrians. The terms were a complete surrender of all weapons, pardon to subaltern officers, permission for them to leave the territory who choose to do so, and banishment from the state of forty leaders of the Republican party.

22.—The Peace Congress of Paris, presided over by M. Victor Hugo, commences its sittings in the Salle de St. Cécile.

— John Gleeson Wilson tried at the Northern Circuit, Liverpool, for the murder of Ann Henrichson. True bills had also been found against him for the murder of the two children and servant. At the close of the evidence the jury deliberated only a few minutes before returning a verdict of Guilty. During the judge's address the prisoner repeatedly protested his innocence, but the justice of the verdict commended itself to a crowded court and an immense gathering outside. The sentence of execution was carried into effect in front of Kirkdale gaol on the 15th September.

23.—Rebecca Smith executed at Devizes for the murder of her youngest child, one month old. After conviction, this hardened criminal, who affected a great outward show of piety, confessed to the chaplain of the gaol that she had destroyed seven others of her children by poison.

26.—Hayti proclaimed an empire under the late President Solouque, who takes the title of Faustin I.

27.—Insurrection in-Cephalonia and Corfu.

29.—The Russians capture the Circassian fortress at Achula, the residence of Schamyl, who escaped to the mountains.

31.—The three expelled Wesleyan ministers, Griffith, Eunn, and Everett, appear in Exeter Hall to defend the resistance they had shown to the inquisitorial proceedings of Conference with reference to the authors of the "Fly Sheets."

September 2.—Catherine Thomson murders her husband at Tulla, Leinster, by beating his brains out with a hammer, and then, with the help of her mother, mutilates the body for the purpose of conveying it secretly to a hole in Rossmare bog, where it was found. The murderer left home under the pretence of meeting her husband in Liverpool, and then returned with the story of his desertion. The body was found by this time, and she ultimately confessed her guilt.

5.—Mr. Hume having drawn the attention of Lord John Russell to the refusal of Mr. More O'Ferral, Governor of Malta, to permit the Roman refugees to land on the island, his Lordship writes:—"What has been the hardship inflicted? These persons were in no danger of their lives while they were on board a French vessel. They took their passages to England, or to Greece if they chose. They were prevented from disturbing Malta, and that was all. Lord Grey has, therefore, with my full concurrence, expressed his approbation of the course pursued by the Governor of Malta."

7.—The King of Prussia meets the Emperor of Austria at Töplitz, and next day they together visit the King of Saxony at Pillnitz.

10.—Falling in of a well at M'Cullough's starch manufactory, Belfast. Four men engaged in digging a site for a new cistern were overwhelmed in the rush of earth and stone; but through swift and persevering exertion were all got out alive.

12.—The Pope issues a motu proprio to his subjects from the palace of Portici.

— At a meeting of the Royal Bucks Agricultural Association Mr. Disraeli reproduces his scheme for relieving agricultural distress by the equalization of the land-tax and the creation of a sinking fund, which would raise consols above par, and enable both landlords and tenants to obtain money on easy terms.

13.—The magistrates assembled in Petty Session at Castlewellan refuse to take information against persons alleged to have created the disturbance at Dolly's Brae. The refusal was repeated on the 9th October.

15.—Gold dust and Mexican dollars, to the value of about 6,000,000*l.*, lodged in the Bank of England. The precious load was conveyed from the London Bridge terminus in fifteen vans escorted by police.

— Riots in Bytown, near Montreal, between the Canadian Reformers, who had met to prepare a congratulatory address to Lord Elgin, and the Tory or Orange party. Both sides being armed, several of the rioters were wounded in the fight. The original chairman was ousted from his office, and a resolution passed condemnatory of Lord Elgin's policy.

— In London, during the past week, the excessive number of deaths from cholera raised the mortality from the ordinary average of 1,008 to 3,183. Next day (Sunday), by order of the Queen, prayers were offered up in all the churches for the removal of the scourge.

16.—The Turkish Government refuses to surrender Kossuth, Bem, and other Hungarian and Polish refugees who had taken refuge within its territory after the late untoward events in the War of Independence.

17.—Pursuant to a decree of the President of the Republic, the Synod or Council of Gallican Bishops hold their first sitting at St. Sulpice, in Paris.

18.—Rupture of diplomatic relations between Turkey and Russia and Austria, in consequence of the refusal of the former to give up the Hungarian fugitives.

— Flogging of women by the Austrian soldiers. Madame F. Von Maderspach writes from Ruskby:—"I was torn from the arms of my husband, from the circle of my children, from the hallowed sanctuary of my home, charged with no offence, allowed no hearing, arraigned before no judge. I, a woman, wife, and mother, was in my own native town, before the people accustomed to treat me with respect, dragged into a square of soldiers, and there scourged with rods. Look, I can write this without dropping dead. But my husband killed himself. Robbed of all other weapons he shot himself with a pocket-pistol. The people rose and would have killed those who instigated these horrors, but their lives were saved by the interference of the military."

19.—The foundation stone of the new Grammar School of Magdalen College, Oxford, laid by the venerable President, Dr. Routh, who this day entered upon his 95th year.

20.—Kossuth claims the protection of England for himself and his fellow-refugees, who, he writes to Lord Palmerston, had been offered the alternative of embracing Islamism in order to evade the demands of Russia and Austria for their extradition—an alternative which Bem and some others had accepted.

28.—At Newcastle, on the return south from Scotland, the Queen is received with great enthusiasm, and presented with an address on the High Level Bridge. Corporation addresses were also presented at York and Gloucester.

— The fortress of Comorn, the last of the Hungarian strongholds, surrenders to the Austrians.

October 6.—Count Louis Batthyany executed amid circumstances of great indignity at Pesth. The crime specially laid to his charge was that of instigating the assassination of Count Latour, Minister of War. He was said to have wounded himself in the throat with a nail with the view of avoiding a public execution. As the soldiers fired the count fell repeating "Eljen a haza" (my country for ever).

8.—Meeting at the London Tavern to protest against the practice of raising loans for the purpose of war, and more particularly to deprecate the taking up of any portion of the new Austrian loan of 7,000,000*l.* Mr. Cobden was the chief speaker.

9.—Publication of Lord Clarendon's letter to the Lord Chancellor, recommending the dismissal from the Commission of the Peace of Lord Roden and other Orange magistrates implicated in the affair at Dolly's Brae on the 12th July last. "The step is taken from a due regard for the future preservation of the peace of the district in question, and for the administration of justice therein in a manner which will be entitled to public confidence and respect." The dismissal was carried out.

13.—Cholera disappears from London. The total number of deaths from this cause registered from the 1st October, 1848, to this date was 14,497.

20.—The vote for expenses incurred by the French expedition to Rome passed the Legislative Assembly by a majority of 469 to 180. The debate was very violent, and led to a duel between MM. Thiers and Bixio, the latter having taunted the former with declaring that the election of Louis Napoleon would be a disgrace to France. The principals returned to the Assembly after exchanging shots.

23.—Fire on the premises of Baiss Brothers, druggists, Fish-street-hill. There were twenty-two workmen employed about the premises at the time, and the spread of the flames was so rapid that they had in most instances to save themselves by leaping out of the windows.

25.—Commenced at the Old Bailey the trial of the Mannings for the Bermondsey murder. It continued over two days, during which evidence of the most precise kind was produced connecting both prisoners with the crime. Serjeant Wilkins addressed the Court for the male prisoner, and Mr. Ballantine for Mrs. Manning. After an absence of fifteen minutes the jury returned a verdict of Guilty against both. Mrs. Manning, who spoke in excellent English but with a slight French accent, declared that she had not been justly treated, and that there was no law in this country to execute her. If her counsel had called witnesses, she could have proved that she bought the shares found in her possession with her own money, and that they never belonged to O'Connor. "She had not," she said, "been treated like a Christian, but like a wild beast of the forest." Mr. Justice Creswell sentenced both prisoners to be executed.

— The 1,000th anniversary of the birth of Alfred the Great celebrated by a public banquet at Wantage.

— First petition filed in the Encumbered Estates Court, Ireland.

30.—Opening of the New Coal Exchange by Prince Albert, who, accompanied by the Prince of Wales, the Princess Royal, the Prime Minister, and many visitors of distinction, passed through the building and afterwards partook of luncheon with the Corporation. The Royal party proceeded in great state by water from Whitehall-stairs to the Custom-house quay, and returned the same way.

— Meeting of Ulster Orangemen in Belfast to sympathize with Lord Roden on his dismissal from the magistracy.

November 3.—The Enterprise (Captain Ross) and the Investigator (Captain Bird) arrived off Scarborough, with the disheartening intelligence that nothing had been seen or heard of Sir John Franklin and his party.

7.—With reference to the plea raised in the Exchequer Chamber that Mrs. Manning being an alien had not been fairly convicted by a jury altogether English, the judges to-day gave it as their unanimous opinion that, though alien born, being married to a British subject she also, ipso facto, becomes a British subject, and was not therefore entitled to a new trial.

7.—Inauguration of Queen's College, Cork. Sir Robert Kane delivered the opening address.

10.—John Francis, prisoner in Millbank Penitentiary, in a fit of insanity attacks John Hall, warder, and murders him by repeated blows on the head with an earthen vessel. He was tried at the Central Criminal Court on the 29th, and acquitted on the ground of insanity.

— The Rev. Henry Hart Milman, D.D., succeeds to the Deanery of St. Paul's, vacant by the death of the Bishop of Llandaff.

11.—St. Michael's Church, Cambridge, partly destroyed by fire.

— Fire on board the emigrant ship Calib Grimshaw, having on board 427 passengers, and officers and crew to the number of thirty. When the flames were got under, the vessel was a complete wreck, and every effort was made to get off those on board either into the small boats or rafts hastily prepared for the purpose. In the confusion incident to these attempts a great number perished. Groups of those who left the ship contrived for several days to keep near those on the wreck, till relief appeared in the shape of the British barque Sarah, Captain Cook. Ninety-two were missing when all within sight were taken aboard, and eight died on the passage to Fayal. Of the ninety-two missing thirty went off on the raft the day after the accident, forty perished from want of water and food, twelve were drowned by the swamping of the quarter-deck, and the remainder were presumed to have been smothered in their berths.

12.—Opening of the Shrewsbury and Birmingham Railway.

13.—Execution of the Mannings in front of Horsemonger-lane Gaol. The husband made a confession of a kind imputing the guilt chiefly to his wife, while she, on the other hand, repeatedly declared that he knew she was innocent, and begged him therefore to save her life. In one of his statements he said:—"My wife asked O'Connor to go down stairs, and in about a minute afterwards I heard the report of a pistol. She then came up to me and said, 'Thank God, I have made him all right at last; it will never be found out; as we are on such extraordinary good terms, no one will have the least suspicion of my murdering him.' To which I replied, 'I am quite certain you will be hanged for this act,' and she said, 'It won't be you that is to suffer; it will be me.' After shooting him she said, 'I think no more of what I have done than if I shot the cat on the wall.' Upon her coming to me up stairs she insisted on my going down immediately; and upon my reaching the kitchen, I found him lying there. He moaned; I never liked him well, and I battered his head with a ripping chisel." On being led on to the scaffold it was noticed that Mrs. Manning was attired in the black satin dress which she wore at the trial, and had a long lace veil thrown over her face to conceal her features. When the wretched creatures were placed beneath the drop, they shook hands together with as much apparent cordiality as the pinions round their arms permitted. The bolt was drawn immediately afterwards. In a letter to the Times on their execution, Mr. Dickens writes:—"I believe that a sight so inconceivably awful as the wickedness and levity of the immense crowd collected at the execution this morning could be imagined by no man, and presented by no heathen land under the sun. The horrors of the gibbet and of the crime which brought the wretched murderers to it faded in my mind before the atrocious bearing, looks, and language of the assembled spectators. When I came upon the scene, at midnight, the shrillness of the cries and howls that were raised from time to time, denoting that they came from a concourse of boys and girls already assembled in the best places, made my blood run cold. . . . When the two miserable creatures who attracted all this ghastly sight about them were turned quivering into the air, there was no more emotion, no more pity, no more thought that two immortal souls had gone to judgment, no more restraint in any of the previous obscenities, than if the name of Christ had never been heard in this world, and there were no belief among men but that they perish like the beasts."

14.—Died, in York, his native town, aged 62, William Etty, R.A.

16.—Cliefden House, near Maidenhead, the seat of the Duke of Sutherland, destroyed by fire.

20.—A new centre of agitation organized in Ireland, under the name of "The Irish Alliance."

— Mr. Charles Phillips, barrister, writes to the Times, denying the truth of certain scandals, now revived, regarding his defence of Courvoisier. The criminal's defence, he said, was continued after the confession of guilt at his (Courvoisier's) own request, and with the full approval of Mr. Baron Parke, who sat on the bench. He denied having appealed to Heaven in support of Courvoisier's innocence, or having insinuated that certain other servants in the house were guilty of the murder.

23.—Dr. Webster, professor of chemistry in Harvard University, Boston, murders Dr. George Parkman in one of the rooms of the Medical College. The clothes were burnt in a stove in the laboratory, and the body immediately dismembered; the head, viscera, and some of the limbs thrown into the furnace, where a fire was kept for the purpose of making oxygen gas, and the remainder hid in two water cisterns, one of which was under the lid of the lecture-room table where the murderer met his students. Dr. Parkman was never seen alive after he went to visit Dr. Webster concerning certain pecuniary transactions which had taken place between them. Webster was apprehended on the 30th, and sentenced to death by the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts, at Boston, on the 19th of March, 1850.

24.—Sir F. Thesiger applies to Mr. Justice Patteson, in the Bail Court, for a rule calling upon the Dean and Chapter of the cathedral church of Rochester to show cause why a writ of prohibition should not issue to prevent their proceeding further in the matter of certain charges preferred against the Rev. Robert Whiston, in connexion with his publication, "Cathedral Trusts and their fulfilment." According to the affidavits and documents produced, it appeared that the cathedral church of Rochester was founded and endowed by Henry VIII. in 1542. By that endowment the Dean and Chapter were made a corporation, and estates and possessions were given to them for divers purposes; but one material purpose was the foundation and endowment of a grammar school, which was to consist of a head-master, under-master, 24 scholars, and other boys. Incomes were fixed for all the parties. The Dean was to receive 100*l.* a year, the Canon 20*l.* a year, the free scholars 2*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, and the four students sent to the University 5*l.* a year until they took the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* from then till they took the degree of Master of Arts. Mr. Whiston was appointed head-master of the grammar school—an office which he considered to be held for life, or during good behaviour. Finding that no provision had been made for the accommodation of boarders in the school, he laid out 4,000*l.* in the purchase of a house and land for the purpose, and expended a further sum of 2,700*l.* in fitting up the residence. This he alleged he would not have done except on the understanding that he could not be removed unless he became "slothful and negligent, unfit or unapt to teach." At that time there was not a single free scholar in the school, though the requisite number were there soon afterwards. From an examination of the statutes Mr. Whiston inferred that all the different persons mentioned, and in particular the free scholars and students, should be maintained by the stipends allotted to them under the statutes; and further, that the whole of the possessions of the Dean and Chapter should be exhausted, in certain proportions, in satisfaction of the different stipends. The Dean's stipend was now 1,500*l.* a year, and the Canon's 700*l.*, while the free scholars were still kept at the original 2*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Believing that the Dean and Chapter were evading their just responsibility under the statutes, Mr. Whiston wrote to his patron requesting a more equitable distribution of the funds. A correspondence ensued, which terminated in the Dean and Chapter depriving Mr. Whiston of his office, on the ground of having committed a grave offence in publishing his pamphlet on "Cathedral Trusts." They afterwards restored him to office, but subsequent proceedings on their part led to a protest from Mr. Whiston and his removal from office a second time. The question on its merits was at present before the Lord Chancellor, and, pending the appeal in his court, the present application was made. In deference to the opinion of Mr. Justice Patteson, instead of a rule a mandamus was granted, calling upon the Dean and Chapter to restore Mr. Whiston.

December 1.—Died, at Argilt-hill, near Barnsley, aged 68, Ebenezer Elliott, author of "Corn-law rhymes."

— Dissolution of the Oxford Society for the Protection of Agriculture, on the ground that it was of no use, never had been, nor was ever likely to be, and was besides an anomaly, inasmuch as the farmers had now nothing to protect.

2.—This morning, at seven minutes before two o'clock, Queen Adelaide died at Stanmore Priory, aged 56.

4.—The Providence lifeboat, of South Shields, upset at the mouth of the Tyne when attempting to reach a brig in distress on the Herd Sands. Of the twenty-four experienced pilots on board, only four succeeded in reaching the shore. The others perished in sight of the crew of the little vessel they were attempting to aid.

12.—At Kilrush forty-one of the starving peasantry, who had sought ineffectually to gain admission to the workhouse, are drowned on their return homeward by the upsetting of an old worn-out ferry boat.

— Died, in London, aged 80, Sir Marc Isambart Brunel, engineer of the Thames Tunnel.

— A Commission, de lunatico inquirendo, sitting at Farrance's Hotel, with Mr. Commissioner Barlow, find that Augustus Frederick, Earl of Albemarle, is of unsound mind, and incapable of managing his own affairs.

15.—Sir Charles Napier issues a General Order from head-quarters, Lahore, censuring in severe terms the commanding officers of certain regiments lately reviewed on the plain of Meean Meer. "The Sepoy," he said, "is a brave and an obedient soldier; and whenever he behaves ill, it is in a great measure the fault of his commanding officer. The drill and discipline of all armies rest mainly with the commanders of regiments and of companies. They are in immediate contact with the officers, non-commissioned officers, and private soldiers, and to them general officers must look for that perfect obedience, without which any army is an armed mob, dangerous to its friends and contemptible to its enemies."

20.—Inauguration of Queen's College, Belfast. A declaration was made by each of the professors that they would discharge the duties of their office with truth, diligence, and fidelity.

24.—In the course of a long address to the tenant-farmers on his estate, Sir Robert Peel writes:—"It is my firm persuasion that neither the present nor any future Parliament will consent to re-impose duties upon the main articles of human food, either for the purpose of protection or revenue."

24.—Died, at Malvern, aged 58, Patrick Fraser Tytler, author of the "History of Scotland," and other works.

28.—Narrow escape of Madame Sontag and other musical celebrities from perishing in a snow-storm on the railway near Laurencekirk, Aberdeenshire. The engine got embedded in a snow wreath, and the party took refuge in the house of a hospitable farmer in the neighbourhood.

January 1.—Charlotte Wilson robs Barnet Lea, near St. George's Church, Southwark, by passing a handkerchief saturated with chloroform over his face. She was sentenced to ten years' transportation for the offence.

— At a meeting of the York, Newcastle, and Berwick Railway Company, the shareholders agree to compromise their claims on Mr. Hudson. Besides the 90,000*l.* paid during the year, he bound himself to pay over 100,000*l.* and all the expenses the company had been put to. In the course of an explanation and defence regarding the various schemes with which his name was associated, Mr. Hudson wrote:—"Allow me to ask you to review those transactions with some remembrance of the excited period in which they occurred, of the multiplicity of concerns which I had to superintend and direct, of the brief opportunities I had for reflection, and of the impossibility of giving sufficient attention to the public duties and private matters which then claimed my attention."

3.—The Irish residents in Manchester and Salford present an address to Mr. Bright, thanking him for the manner in which he had advocated the claims of Ireland. Mr. Bright replied at some length, describing the manner in which the land of Ireland was closed against the industry of its people through its legal possession by an alien or insolvent proprietary, and indicating the measures which he would advise for the redemption of Ireland. These included abolition of primogeniture for undevised property, and restriction on its devise to lives not in being; registry of property; reduction of the enormous stamp charges for the sale and purchase of land; security of tenure for the practical cultivators of the soil; abolition of the Established Church in Ireland; and extension of the suffrage. He expected the intelligent and upright men of Ireland to come forth from their isolation and claim the aid of the English people in forcing upon the Government proper measures for their country. Lord John Russell, he said, had now an opportunity of doing more for this country (171) than almost any Minister of our time. He might add the industry and affection of millions to the wealth and strength of the empire. "But if he should fail; if he should prove himself to be the agent of a timid and selfish oligarchy rather than the Prime Minister of the Crown and of the people; if he should not dare to do these things, which in my conscience I believe he knows to be necessary; even then we will not despair, for there is growing up in England, and I hope in Ireland, a party so strong and so numerous, that by and by it will leave out only the pauperism at one end of the scale, and, it may be, the titled and the privileged at the other—it will include almost the whole people."

4.—The Gazette contains the names of the Royal Commission "for the Promotion of the Exhibition of the Works of all Nations, to be holden in the year 1851." The Commissioners order an inquiry as to the best mode of introducing the productions of colonies and foreign countries, the best site, the general conduct of the Exhibition, and the distribution of the prizes. A meeting was held in London on the 25th to raise funds.

7.—Revolt in the workhouse of Barham Union, near Ipswich. A number of young men discharged from farm labour about Christmas became riotously disposed and broke into the master's office, demanding more food. They afterwards destroyed all the furniture they could lay their hands on, and were only overpowered when a strong body of constables made their entry into the house.

8.—Died, at his residence, Pentonville, in the 40th year of his age, Lieutenant Waghorn, R.N., an intrepid traveller, and originator of the overland route to India.

9.—The King of Prussia's Message, relating to certain alterations in the Constitution, presented to the Chambers in Berlin. The most important articles, relating to the formation of a hereditary Chamber and the creation of a special court for the trial of political offenders, were agreed to, with slight alterations, on the 30th.

— The Turin Chambers vote the ratification of the treaty of peace with Austria by 112 to 17.

— A meeting in connexion with the Financial and Parliamentary Reform movement held in Aylesbury, to receive Mr. Cobden, who, in a speech at Leeds, had challenged the Protectionists to meet him in their own stronghold to discuss the question of Protection and Free-trade. Mr. Cobden was proceeding to illustrate his views on the relation between landlord and tenant by reference to the management of his own small estate in Sussex, when he was interrupted by cries of "How did you get it?" "I am indebted for it," he answered, "to the bounty of my countrymen. It was the scene of my birth and my infancy; it was the property of my ancestors; and it is by the munificence of my countrymen that this small estate, which had been alienated from my father by necessity, has again come into my hands, and enabled me to light up afresh the hearth of my father where I spent my childhood. And I say that no warrior duke who owns a vast domain by the vote of the Imperial Parliament holds his property by a more honourable title than I possess mine." When the vehement cheering produced by these words had subsided, Mr. Cobden proceeded to describe the course he adopted when he first visited the place after it came into his possession.

10.—A disorderly Protectionist meeting held at Stafford. The farmers mustered about 400 strong, and the townspeople still more. Lord St. Vincent moved that Lord Talbot take the chair; and in the course of a speech used expressions which raised shouts of disapprobation. Before long, weapons were in use on both sides, and the townsmen were ejected from the hall. Exasperated by this defeat, they attacked the windows and scoured the streets for increased numbers to burst open the hall doors. This was ultimately accomplished, and the fight renewed with increasing asperity in the inside. An address to the Queen, praying for a dissolution of Parliament, was carried in dumb show amid a shower of missiles. Lord Talbot and others were severely hurt, and the farmers were finally compelled to seek refuge in the hotels and railway station. Meetings marked by a similar spirit of disorder took place at Stepney, Lincoln, Northampton, Penenden Heath, and in various counties in Ireland. At Reading the Marquis of Downshire, who appeared among the Protectionists, shouted out, "I am an Irishman, and ask only fair play for all parties. I attended a meeting the other day in the county of Down, where arguments and common sense were put down by a mob, and where, I am sorry to say, we—the respectability—could not get a hearing. I am sorry to say we were entirely beaten; but don't let yourselves be beaten now. I am the last man in the room to appeal to physical force; but I declare to you, if there is any more row, I'll head some eight or ten farmers, and turn them out." The fighting hereupon became general throughout the hall. Several were hurled off the seats with violence, and kicked en passant to the door by the furious Protectionists, who, it was observed, generally wore stout boots, and produced therewith a most unpleasant effect. They latterly succeeded in passing their own set of resolutions.

— The Enterprise and Investigator again leave Woolwich to proceed to the Polar Seas, in search of Sir John Franklin.

11.—Ellen Bright, the Lion Queen, killed at Chatham by a tiger which she was exhibiting in the menagerie of her uncle, Mr. Wombwell. The brute was beaten off by one of the keepers, and the unfortunate girl removed from the stage, bleeding profusely and life all but extinct. The coroner's jury expressed a strong opinion against the practice of entering the dens of wild animals.

12.—In the Central Criminal Court, Lewis Joel, jeweller and bill-discounter, sentenced to ten years' transportation for forging a bill of exchange in the name of Lieut. Clements.

14.—At Killarney a fire broke out in a building known as the College, used by the guardians as a workhouse hospital. Scarcely had the flames in one portion been suppressed before they broke out in another called the Brewery, used as the dormitory of a multitude of children. The doors and windows were fastened, and the only ready access was by a loft through which the flames were pouring with great fierceness. The police and multitudes of assistants made extraordinary efforts to drag forth every one of the children and their nurses; but, when they had nearly performed their perilous task, the rafters of the loft gave way, and twenty-eight were instantly killed and as many more severely injured.

17.—Meeting of tailors in Exeter Hall to petition Parliament with reference to the slop and "middle" system.

— In answer to a deputation of Ulster Catholics, who waited upon the Lord-Lieutenant with a memorial desiring the dismissal of all the Castlewella magistrates, and demanding that the authors of the Dolly's Brae outrage should be brought to justice, his Excellency said that he could not properly recommend to the Lord Chancellor the dismissal of these magistrates. They were not personally implicated in the transactions impugned; they acted on their own judgment and responsibility in rejecting the informations, and they should not be removed merely because they declined to abide by the opinion of the law-officer of the Crown.

18.—Admiral Parker, in command of the British Mediterranean fleet, blockades the harbour of the Piræus, the Greek Government having refused to satisfy the claims made by Mr. Finlay, a British subject, for land appropriated by the Crown in 1836, and by M. Pacifico, a Jew, for damage committed to his house and furniture in a riot, at Athens, on the 4th April, 1847. There were also various claims made on behalf of the English Government, in consideration of the ill-treatment of certain Ionians at Pyrgos and Patras, and for the islands of Cervi and Sapienza, on the ground that they formed part of the Ionian Islands, and therefore belonged to England.

— A meeting, called by Mr. Cobden, held in the London Tavern, to protest against the negotiation in this country of the new Russian loan of 5,500,000*l.* given out to be required for the completion of the railway from St. Petersburg to Moscow. Mr. Cobden moved a resolution, which was carried unanimously, declaring that the real object of the loan was to replenish the Russian treasury, exhausted by the Hungarian war, and that to lend the money for such a purpose would be virtually to sanction the deeds of blood in Hungary, and tempt to future aggression and conquest.

22.—In the Court of Exchequer a majority of the judges confirm the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench, declaring the legality of the church-rate levied at Braintree by a minority of the parishioners. In the month of July, 1841, at a vestry meeting called for voting a rate for the repairs of the parish church of Braintree, a motion was made for a rate of two shillings in the pound, and duly seconded; an amendment was then moved, and carried by an immense majority, denouncing all connexion between Church and State in general, and against church-rates in particular. After this the majority of the parishioners left, and the churchwardens and others of the rate-payers carried the original resolution without opposition. When the inhabitants heard of this result, they resolved to oppose the rate, and on the churchwardens commencing proceedings in the ecclesiastical courts against the plaintiff in error, the latter moved the Court of Queen's Bench for a writ of prohibition. The writ was granted, and on the return to it being argued, the court gave judgment, approving of the proceedings of the churchwardens, thereby affirming the validity of the rate voted by the minority. From that decision the case was brought into the Exchequer Chamber, on a writ in error. The court which now gave judgment was divided in opinion. Baron Platt, Justice Cresswell, Justice Maule, and Baron Alderson, were of opinion that the repair of the church fabric was a duty which the parishioners might be compelled to perform, and that the minority could make a rate if the majority refused to do so. Baron Rolfe, Baron Parke, and Chief Justice Wilde dissented.

26.—Died, at his residence, Murray-place, Edinburgh, in his 77th year, Francis Jeffrey, a senator of the College of Justice, and long known as the most prominent of British critics.

— Died, aged 71, Adam Oehlenschläger, Danish poet and dramatist.

28.—At a Rutland Protectionist meeting Mr. Cheetham said:—"The phantoms of ruined farmers must haunt the sleeping pillow of Sir Robert Peel. Knowing how much he was execrated, he must really move about in fear and dread. Even if Sir Robert Peel should ever have a majority again, he dared not take office. If he was in Sir Robert's position, he should be afraid of the poniard and the dagger; and so he had a right to. (Here the speaker was interrupted by loud cries of "No! no!") He should be sorry to say what he did not feel, but he thought he was justified in saying what he had, seeing what a narrow escape Peel once had when he was not so much execrated as now. He believed that Cobden and Peel were travelling the same road.

Peel, he was informed, had a strong grudge against the aristocracy, because one of them in the House of Lords once called him a weaver's son. Sir Robert Peel's son need not be afraid of being called a weaver's son or a weaver's grandson, but he would be called 'the traitor's son.'" Mr. Stafford, M.P., made the best apology he could for this language: he was sure Mr. Cheetham meant no harm, but his words might be misinterpreted. The usual Protectionist resolutions were passed.

29.—Great tide in the Thames. At Wandsworth the streets were inundated, and the fires in the gas-works extinguished.

30.—The Aborigines Protection and Peace Society holds a meeting at the London Tavern to petition Parliament for the total and immediate abolition of the practice of awarding head-money for the destruction of pirates.

31.—Parliament opened by commission. The Royal Speech referred to the amicable settlement of the dispute between Russia and Austria on the one hand, and Turkey on the other, concerning the Hungarian refugees; to the negotiations with foreign states rendered necessary by the relaxation of our Navigation-laws; the loyal welcome received by her Majesty in Ireland, and to the complaints proceeding from the owners and occupiers of land. With reference to the cholera, "Her Majesty is persuaded that we shall best evince our gratitude by vigilant precautions against the more obvious causes of sickness and an enlightened consideration for those who are most exposed to its attacks." A Protectionist amendment to the address was negatived in the Lords by 152 to 103, and in the Commons by 311 to 192.

— The French Government concede to Brett and Co. the right to establish an electric telegraph line between France and England, by a submarine wire across the Channel.

February 2.—Mutiny of a native regiment at Umritza, Bengal. The mutineers were all seized before they could possess themselves of their arms piled on the playground, and placed in confinement under the guns of the fort.

4.—Disturbance in the St. Martin district of Paris, caused by the Socialists trying to prevent the cutting down of the trees of liberty. The troops were called out, and a few lives lost.

5.—M. Drouyn de Lhuys, on behalf of France, one of the powers guaranteeing the independence of Greece, tenders to Lord Palmerston the good offices of his Government in procuring a satisfactory adjustment of the disputed claims. Lord Palmerston accepted the offer with an acknowledgment that England would prefer owing such satisfaction to the friendly intervention of France rather than to the continued employment of force. This arrangement was ratified by notes exchanged on the 12th. Baron Gros entered on his special mission at Athens on the 5th March. On the 21st of the following month, in a conference on board the Inflexible, he expressed his deep regret that he had been unsuccessful in his negotiations, but still offered to continue his services, in a non-official capacity, between Mr. Wise and the Greek Government. The claim was settled on the 26th on the basis of the payment of 180,000 drachmas, to be distributed by the British Government to the different claimants, and 150,000 drachmas as securities, to be handed over to the British Government, to meet such claims as M. Pacifico might succeed in establishing against the Portuguese Government. The papers relating to this latter claim were alleged by M. Pacifico to have been destroyed by the riot in which he otherwise suffered.

5.—In moving the second reading of the Ecclesiastical Commission Bill, the Marquis of Lansdowne explained that its principal object was to separate the financial from the ecclesiastical duties of the Commission, the former being referred to two paid and responsible commissioners—one appointed by the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the other by the Crown.

— Mr. Horsman moves, but afterwards withdraws, a resolution for the appointment of three paid commissioners to manage ecclesiastical property. Sir George Grey explained that a bill on the subject had been introduced into the Upper House.

— A hurricane of a severe and destructive character sweeps over the greater part of the kingdom. The pressure throughout the afternoon was from 9 to 11 lbs. on the square foot; but at six o'clock it suddenly rose to 17 lbs., being the highest pressure experienced at Lloyd's since the wind-gauge was set up. The shipping on the coast suffered severely.

6.—Mr. Hawes moves the reappointment of a Select Committee to inquire into the grievances complained of in connexion with the administration of the government of Ceylon. Mr. Hume censured Ministers for the cruelties they permitted to take place on the island, and charged them with doing everything in their power to cover the excesses of Lord Torrington. Mr. Disraeli proposed to add an additional clause to the motion, condemnatory of the manner in which the Government had evaded the understanding arrived at last session for the production of witnesses from Ceylon. This was negatived by 140 to 68; and Mr. Bright's motion, that four witnesses be examined by the Committee, by 109 to 100.

7.—In a discussion on Hungarian affairs, in the House of Commons, Lord Dudley Stuart observed that he was not satisfied Turkey was powerful enough to protect the refugees, for Austria was unscrupulous; and attempts had already been made by persons with Austrian passports to destroy Kossuth by poison. Lord Claude Hamilton said, with much warmth, that he believed this charge to be a base calumny against a faithful ally; on which Mr. Grattan, as an Irishman, disclaimed the sentiments of Lord C. Hamilton, whose parasitical adulations of a band of assassins he utterly condemned. He had read an account of the alleged flogging of an Hungarian countess by Austrian soldiers. "What would his lordship say," he exclaimed, "if the Marchioness of Abercorn was to be flogged, in a square, by the Guards, in Bird Cage Walk? What if the Duchess of Devonshire were to be?"—a supposition at the suggestion of which the House roared with laughter; Mr. Grattan declaring that the scoffers ought to be spit upon by the children in the street.

7.—Altercation in the House of Commons between Mr. Horsman and Lord John Russell, arising out of charges made against the Government by the former in a letter to his constituents. On the 11th, by the mediation of Lord Ashley, satisfactory explanations were made.

8.—Mr. Baron Parke gives judgment in the case of Ryder v. Mills, involving the question whether factory owners were liable to a penalty for working women, or young persons under 18, on a "shift or relay system." The learned Baron pronounced the system not to be illegal.

11.—Assassination becomes so prevalent within the city of Rome, that General Baraguay-d'Hilliers is compelled to issue a proclamation prohibiting the carrying of knives or stilettoes. "Whoever shall be found with such arms about his person, shall be instantly shot."

13.—At a meeting held in Willis's Rooms, to condemn the Government scheme of education, and attended by several bishops and noblemen, the Rev. Dr. Biber said:—"It was averred by the Privy Council that the only Gospel taught at Kneller Hall Normal School was that which was comprised in the moral agencies relied upon by the Poor-law Commissioners for the elevation of the poor. Of him who sought to introduce such a Gospel into the education of this country he hesitated not to say, without any personal feeling, 'Let him be accursed;' and he believed that the events which would be witnessed by the next two generations would fully justify the use of such language."

15.—In a Committee of the whole House Lord John Russell entered into a detailed account of the origin of the distress which called for the advances made to Irish Unions. He proposed to consolidate the 4,483,000*l.* still unpaid, and to allow forty years for its gradual repayment. In order to release from their liabilities ten distressed Unions in which the workhouse property had been seized for debts due to contractors and others, he proposed a further loan of 300,000*l.* The resolutions were agreed to.

16.—Concluded in the Court of Exchequer the case of O'Connor v. Bradshaw, being an action for libel raised at the instance of the member for Nottingham against Mr. Bradshaw, proprietor of the Nottingham Journal. The libel was contained in the following announcement:—"The subscribers to the 'National Land Company,' and the admirers of Feargus O'Connor, Esq., M.P. for Nottingham, who has wheeled the people of England out of 100,000*l.* with which he has bought estates and conveyed them to his own use and benefit, and all who are desirous to witness the final overthrow of this great political impostor, should order the Nottingham Journal, in which his excessive honesty, in connexion with the Land Plan, has been, and will continue to be, fearlessly exposed." The defendant justified his libel by calling witnesses, who exposed the illegality and commercial failure of the National Land Company. The plaintiff answered with witnesses from the management of the company, who laid bare its affairs, with the object of showing that at the worst Mr. O'Connor had been an honest though erring philanthropist. The jury found for the defendant, adding that the plaintiff's character stood unimpeached as regarded his personal honesty.

18.—Lord Stanley brings forward his charges against the Lord-Lieutenant and the Lord-Chancellor of Ireland, for their official conduct in regard to the collision at Dolly's Brae. He spoke for three hours, accusing the Government of tyranny and injustice in dismissing any of the Castlewella magistrates for refusing to receive the information, and at the same time omitting to take any steps afterwards to get the information sworn to. He was replied to by Lord Clarendon, who hoped that his attendance in Parliament would not be considered a precedent for a Lord-Lieutenant appearing in the House in person to answer attacks upon his administration. At the close of the debate the papers moved for were ordered to be presented.

19.—Mr. Disraeli moves for a committee to revise and amend the Poor-laws, for the purpose of affording relief to the agricultural classes. He proposed to defray the expenses known as establishment charges out of the general revenue of the State, which would relieve local taxation to the extent of 1,500,000*l.* and to defray from the same source rates levied by the Poor-law machinery, which had nothing to do with the relief of the poor, as also the entire cost of relieving the casual poor. On the second night of the debate Sir Robert Peel characterised Mr. Disraeli's scheme as a plan tending to stop confidence in public credit, and he would consider its adoption a most precipitate and unwise act. He had been charged with acting treacherously towards a certain interest. What reason (he asked amid loud cheers) could he have for such a course? Lord H. Bentinck accused him of having a pecuniary interest in supporting the funds as against the land. Lord H. Bentinck should, if he wished to speak the truth, have exactly reversed his statement. He then defended himself for his course upon the Corn-laws—a course which, he said, he believed to have been his duty to God and his country, and of the wisdom of which he was more convinced than ever. Protection never could be revived; and the landed aristocracy would one day see that the abrogation of protection had established their just influence more firmly than ever. Mr. Gladstone voted for the motion, though he protested against the supposition that it involved a reversion of free-trade policy. The debate extended over two nights, and resulted in a division rejecting Mr. Disraeli's motion by 273 to 252 votes.

21.—The Building Committee of the Great Exhibition Commissioners select a site in Hyde-park for the structure.

23.—Died, at Edinburgh, aged 67, Sir W. Allan, R.A., President of the Royal Scottish Academy.

24.—The Peninsular and Oriental Company's steamship Indus arrives at Southampton, having as passengers the two heroes of the late Indian war, Lord Gough and Major Edwardes. They both received a warm welcome from the citizens.

25.—Discussion on the order of the day for going into Committee on the Irish Parliamentary Franchise. The chief feature was the extension of the franchise to all occupiers of land to the amount of 8*l.* per annum, adopting the rating as the ultimate standard of value. Various amendments were proposed, but mostly rejected by the Commons. The third reading was carried by a majority of 254 to 186. In the House of Lords the qualification was raised to 15*l.*, the Ministry being defeated by a majority of 72 to 50. A 12*l.* qualification was finally accepted, as a compromise, by both Houses, and the bill thereafter passed.

27.—Treaty signed at Munich between Austria, Bavaria, Saxony, and Wurtemberg, to effect a German Union under a federal directory of seven members, a federal representative assembly of 300 members, and a federal tribunal.

28.—Mr. Hume's motion on the subject of Parliamentary Reform negatived, after a short debate, by 296 to 242.

March 5.—Mr. Slaney's motion for a Standing Committee to report on plans "for the social improvement of the working classes" withdrawn after a short discussion.

— The first completed tube of the Britannia Bridge across the Menai Straits opened with triumphant success. The last of 2,000,000 rivets used in making the tube was driven in by Mr. Stephenson. Experimental trains afterwards passed through at a slow speed.

5.—Lord Campbell takes the oath as Lord Chief Justice of England in room of Lord Denman, retired.

6.—In the course of an adjourned discussion on the second reading of the Marriages Bill, Mr. Hope said if this measure passed it would be necessary for the Legislature to recognise old marriages which had been contracted in violation of the present law. No fewer than 280 clergymen in various parts of the country had made up returns showing that they knew of 269 marriages within the prohibited degrees. Of these cases 178 were marriages of the deceased wife's sister; the remaining 91 cases were marriages of persons standing in the relations following:—Marriages with a brother's widow, 41; own aunt, 6; own niece, 19; wife's daughter, 6; own half-sister, 1; father's wife, 1; brother's wife's daughter, 1; son's wife, 2; uncle's wife, 3; wife's niece, 11. The marriages with the wife's sister were "almost without one exception" in the upper and middle ranks of life; and the other marriages were mostly in those ranks. In one of the marriages with an uncle's wife, the parties were a clergyman and a peeress. The cases of marriage with the aunt and the niece were those of tradesmen, yeomen, and farmers, generally men of substance. A lieutenant-general in the army married a lady, and then her aunt; subsequently a third lady, and then the third lady's niece. It was visible from these cases, said Mr. Hope, that the grievance was not one that pressed especially on the poor. The second reading was carried by a majority of 182 to 130.

7.—The Times announces the determination of the Government to abolish the office of Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland. Lord John Russell repeated the statement next night in the House of Commons.

— Meeting in Exeter Hall to welcome Dr. Achilli on his escape to this country from (as was said) the dungeons of the Inquisition. The crowd was so great that several subsidiary meetings had to be held in the adjoining rooms, Dr. Achilli appearing at each in turn.

8.—Mr. Cobden submits a resolution to the House of Commons:—"That the net expenditure of the Government for the year 1835 amounted to 44,422,000*l.*; that the net expenditure for the year ending 5th of January, 1850, amounted to 50,853,000*l.*, the increase of upwards of 6,000,000*l.* having been caused principally by successive augmentations of our warlike establishments, and outlays for defensive armaments; that no foreign danger, or necessary cost of the civil government, or indispensable disbursements for the service in our dependencies abroad, warranted the continuance of this increase of expenditure," and "that it was expedient that the House should take steps to reduce the annual expenditure with all practicable speed, to an amount not exceeding the sum which within the last fifteen years has been proved to be sufficient for the maintenance of the security, the honour, and the dignity of the nation." At the close of the debate the resolution was negated by a majority of 272 to 89.

8.—The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council give judgment in the case of Gorham v. the Bishop of Exeter. It was to the effect that "the doctrine held by Mr. Gorham is not contrary or repugnant to the declared doctrine of the Church of England as by law established, and that Mr. Gorham ought not by reason of the doctrine held by him to have been refused admission to the vicarage of Bramford-Speke; therefore that the sentence of the Arches Court of Canterbury ought to be reversed, and that it ought to be declared that the Lord Bishop of Exeter has not shown sufficient cause why he did not institute Mr. Gorham to the said vicarage; and finally, that the cause be remitted to the Arches Court, to the end that right and justice may there be done." The judgment of the Privy Council (which gave rise to much controversy in the Church) proceeded on the assumption that the court had no jurisdiction or authority to settle matters of faith, or to determine what ought in any particular to be the doctrine of the Church of England. "Its duty extends only to the consideration of that which is by law established to be the doctrines of the Church of England, upon the true and legal construction of her Articles and Formularies." Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce and the Bishop of London dissented. The Bishop of Exeter afterwards addressed a letter to the Primate, protesting that if he obeyed the Queen's monition he (the Archbishop) was a "favourer and supporter of Mr. Gorham's heresies," and adding, "I protest in conclusion, that I cannot without sin,—and by God's grace I will not,—hold communion with him, be he who he may, who shall so abuse the high commission which he bears." The Archbishop, undeterred by the threat, proceeded in due course to execute the law, upon which the Bishop of Exeter, when his clergy assembled at his next visitation, deliberately informed them that the Primate had "become a fautor of heretical tenets," and as such had "forfeited his right to Catholic communion," and that he thereupon "renounced communion with him." He also declared that the judges had committed themselves to "a statement notoriously at variance with the real facts of the case;" their judgment proceeded "on an utter disregard of the canons of the Church; and their sentence, swayed by other motives besides mere justice and truth, was a grievous perversion of justice."

—The Gazette offers rewards for the discovery of Sir John Franklin:—1st. To any party or parties who, in the judgment of the Board of Admiralty, shall discover and effectually relieve the crews of Her Majesty's ships Erebus and Terror, the sum of 20,000*l.*; or, 2nd, shall convey such intelligence, or shall lead to a relief of the crews or any of them, 10,000*l.*; or, 3rd, shall by virtue of his or their efforts first succeed in ascertaining their state, 10,000*l.*

8.—On the third reading of the Party Procession (Ireland) Bill, in the House of Lords, the Duke of Wellington attempted, but unsuccessfully, to get a clause inserted, making it an offence under the Act for parties carrying arms to assemble in a greater number than three.

11.—Explosion at Curtis and Harvey's powder mills, Hounslow. Eight lives were lost, and two other workmen seriously injured. The shocks of the successive explosions were felt at Brentford, Kew, and even Richmond.

—Conviction for murder in the mysterious Görlitz case. On June 13, 1847, the body of the Countess of Görlitz, in Silesia, was found in her sitting-room nearly consumed by fire under circumstances which appeared to indicate that death had resulted from spontaneous combustion. In November suspicion was directed towards her servant, Johann Stauff, by the discovery in his possession of several jewels identified as the property of his late mistress. The body was exhumed in August 1848, and after a prolonged controversy, in which Dr. Sieboldt maintained the spontaneous combustion theory in opposition to the eminent chemists, Liebig and Bischoff, Stauff was brought to trial now, and convicted after an inquiry protracted over the unusual term of thirty-four days. He afterwards confessed that, being detected by the Countess in the act of stealing the articles which led to his apprehension, he had strangled her, and burned the corpse to conceal the evidence of his crime. Stauff was sentenced to imprisonment for life.

13.—Fire at Westhead's Warehouses, Piccadilly-street, Manchester, destroying property to the amount of 100,000*l.* The buildings had five shafts piercing each floor, and covered by a dome skylight. When the glass was destroyed each of the series of openings through the floors under them acted as immense flues, through which a resistless draught of air rushed up, thus becoming centres of heat, roaring and spouting forth like so many volcanoes. Rolls of ribbons, and the remnants of partially consumed light goods drawn within the vortex of these flues, were shot up into the air like rockets.

14.—Lord Ashley obtains leave to bring in a bill to declare the intention of the Legislature in respect of the hours and mode of working under the Factory Act, the object being to interdict the shift and relay system. The measure, with some emendations, passed through both Houses, and received the Royal Assent on the 5th of August.

15.—Wurtemberg denounces the insidious action of the King of Prussia in German politics, and intimates her intention of allying herself, under the sanction of Austria, with Bavaria and Saxony.

N

15.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer introduces his annual Budget, the income for the ensuing year being set down at 52,285,000, and the expenditure at 50,613,582*l.* The surplus he purposed disposing of partly in reducing certain recently contracted debts, and partly in repealing the duty on bricks, and in reducing the stamp duties upon the transfer of landed property.

16.—Explosion of fire-damp in Evan and Turner's Rock Pit, Haydock. Eleven of the workmen engaged in a drift 1,000 yards from the shaft when the explosion took place, were burnt to death.

— Lord Gough entertained by the East India Company on his return home.

17.—Dr. Wilson, a medical practitioner residing at Juniper Green, near Edinburgh, and his aged mother living in the same house, murdered and mangled by a maniac named Pearson. He was found next morning sound asleep in one of the rooms upstairs, stripped of his ordinary apparel, which he appeared to have burnt in one of the grates.

18.—In the House of Commons, Mr. Hutt moves for an address praying her Majesty to direct negotiations to be commenced for the purpose of relieving the country from all treaties which at present engage us to maintain a squadron on the coast of Africa. That squadron, he said, though costing much in money and human life, was utterly unavailing in reducing the amount of the traffic, while, at the same time, it frightfully enhanced its horrors. Every contrivance of governments, from the Emperor Napoleon to our own Chancellor of the Exchequer's, had failed to put down contraband traffic at home; and the attempt was yet more Quixotical upon the vast and distant coast of Africa. The endeavour had already cost us twenty-five millions, was maintained at a cost of 700,000*l.* or 800,000*l.* per annum, and had monopolized the services of fully one-fourth of the whole British navy afloat. But the system was worse than merely expensive—it was fatal, cruel, and anomalous, obliging us to use methods equally violent, inadequate, and involving a perpetual risk of war with other nations, who did not sympathise with our object, while they resented our assumption of a right to interfere with their commerce. The motion was negatived by 232 to 154.

21.—The Lord Mayor of London gives a banquet at the Mansion House to the chief magistrates of the cities, towns, and boroughs of the United Kingdom, with the view of exciting an interest in the projected Exhibition of Industry. Prince Albert's speech created considerable interest. "Whilst formerly," the Prince said, "the greatest mental energies strove at universal knowledge, and that knowledge was confined to the few, now they are directed on specialities, and in these, again, even to the minutest points; but the knowledge acquired becomes at once the property of the community at large. For, whilst formerly discovery was wrapped in secrecy, the publicity of the present day causes, that no sooner is a discovery or invention made than it is improved upon and surpassed by competing efforts. The products of all quarters of the globe are placed at our disposal, and we have only to choose which is the best and the cheapest for our purposes, and the powers of production are entrusted to the stimulus of competition and capital. . . . The Exhibition of 1851 is to give us a true test and a living picture of the point of development at which the whole of mankind has arrived in this great task, and a new starting-point from which all nations will be able to direct their further exertions."

22.—The Bishop of Exeter in a letter to the Archbishop of Canterbury protests against the judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and against the consequences of the judgment; and further, refuses to institute Mr. Gorham into the vicarage of Bramford-Speke.

— The Wurtemberg and Prussian Ambassadors withdraw respectively from Berlin and Stuttgart, a difference having arisen between the Powers, in consequence of remarks made by the King of Wurtemberg on the invidious designs of Prussia, when announcing to his States the formation of a German League.

— Lord Brougham, in referring to the contemplated Exhibition in 1851 of the works of all nations, said he had been designated by Lord Stanley, at the Lord Mayor's dinner on the previous evening, as his "volatile friend." "Volatile," said Lord Brougham, "means flighty; but I, to answer a speech made in my presence in the House of Lords, have never flown to the House of Mayors."—Lord Stanley was sorry he had occasioned disquietude to his noble and learned, and very grave and discreet friend, but he had been "somewhat volatile." "In point of acuteness, activity, rapidity, and pungency, sal-volatile is nothing when compared with my noble and learned friend. You may put a stopper of glass or leather on that ethereal essence, but I defy any human power, even that of my noble and learned friend himself, to put any stopper, either of glass, or leather, or any other material, over the activity, ingenuity, and pungency of his mind. Volatile his wit and readiness of humour are, but acrimonious or offensive never; that I shall at all times be prepared to deny. I hope the long friendship between us will not be disturbed for a single moment by the expression I used. I will form a more correct estimate of his character; I will look on him, not as one of those great, rapid, and energetic men, who take part in any and every question—and come in with such velocity that they seem not many questions, but one continuous question—but as a man of a grave, serious, plodding, and rather slow and heavy nature; not hasty in taking up a subject, nor in laying it down—nor in expressing his opinion upon it—unless he had previously considered it in every light and in every bearing. If my noble and learned friend will put himself under my tuition—and, considering the constancy with which he favours us with his company on this side of the House—I may perhaps venture to give him one hint : it is, that when my noble and learned friend favours us with his sincere opinions, he should not give them so much an air of irony, and that when he wants to promote an object like the Exhibition of 1851, he should not throw out a sarcasm that is calculated to deter people from supporting it—to make them think that they are great fools if they suffer themselves to be deluded by it. He should separate that which is serious from that which is ironical. And if his real desire was, as he says, to promote the objects of this great Exhibition, I very much regret that he did not accept the invitation of the Lord Mayor, that we might have thanked him for the effective aid with which he has, it appears, endeavoured to promote its ultimate success by the speech he delivered the other night in this House.” Lord Brougham, who sat covering his face with his hand, now rose to reply, with much energy. In the course of his speech, he declared that he possessed the kindest and most benevolent feeling that he could possibly entertain for Lord Stanley, but rebuked him for attempting by a dull joke to set people laughing at an absent man. He concluded by saying, that no one could entertain a higher respect “for that illustrious Prince ;” a respect increased by the interest which the Prince has recently shown in the condition of the working classes, “so that it is difficult to know which most to admire, the sound judgment or the benevolent feelings of the Prince.” Their lordships, who had roared with laughter during the encounter, then proceeded to business.

25.—Hostilities resumed between Denmark and the duchies of Schleswig-Holstein.

28.—At the Liverpool Assizes, Dr. Nolan, minister of a congregation of Independents at Manchester, appeared as plaintiff in an action of slander against one Pettigrew, for stating, in the presence of a person named Ford, that Dr. Nolan had seduced certain female members, and had given medicine to one to prevent the consequences. There had been religious strife in Dr. Nolan's congregation ; he had resigned, and been re-elected minister ; afterwards it was found that the re-election was not legal in form, and a heated canvassing and contest arose. It was in the course of this agitation that the defendant made the statement complained of. The defendant was a respectable man, and had made his statement in good faith, privately, to Mr. Ford, as a person holding office in the congregation and having weight in the election. The defence was—that the communication was privileged ; and that it was true. The evidence was contradictory, scandalous facts being sworn to on the one hand, and denied on the other. The judge ruled that the communication was privileged ; and a verdict was given for the defendant.

29.—The church of St. Anne's, Limehouse, destroyed by fire, originating in the chamber between the ceiling and the roof, where a flue-pipe emerged into the air.

30.—The Royal Adelaide steamship, trading between Cork and London, wrecked on the Tongue Sand, North Foreland, and all on board drowned. She had put into Plymouth all right, and was known to have left there with 180 passengers, a crew of 24, and a cargo of general merchandise.

April 4.—Wreck of the Indian on the Cargados reef, near the Mauritius. About eight o'clock at night, when running at six knots an hour, through some mistake, as it appeared, in the reckoning, she suddenly struck with a dreadful crash, and almost immediately went to pieces.

—Destructive incendiary fires at Cottenham, Cambridgeshire, the greater part of the village being consumed, along with a large amount of agricultural produce.

7.—Died, Rev. W. L. Bowles, poet, aged 89.

8.—Prince Albert writes to the Duke of Wellington, declining to agree in a proposed new arrangement by which he was to assume the command of the British army :—“The Queen and myself have thoroughly considered your proposal to join the offices of Adjutant-General and Quartermaster-General into one of a chief of the staff, with a view to facilitate the future assumption of the command of the army by myself. . . . The question whether it will be advisable that I should take the command of the army or not, has been most anxiously weighed by me, and I have come to the conclusion that my decision ought entirely and solely to be guided by the consideration, whether it would interfere with, or assist, my position of Consort of the Sovereign, and the performance of the duties which this position imposes on me. This position is a most peculiar and delicate one. Whilst a female sovereign has a great many disadvantages in comparison with a king, yet, if she is married, and her husband understands and does his duty, her position, on the other hand, has many compensating advantages, and, in the long run, will be found even to be stronger than that of a male sovereign. But this requires that the husband should entirely sink his own individual existence in that of his wife—that he should aim at no power by himself or for himself—should shun all ostentation—assume no separate responsibility before the public, but make his position entirely a part of hers ; fill up every gap which, as a woman, she would naturally leave in the exercise of her regal functions ; continually and anxiously watch every part of the public business, in order to be able to advise and assist her at any moment, in any of the multifarious and difficult questions or duties brought before her, sometimes international, sometimes political, or social, or personal. As the natural head of her family, superintendent of her household, manager of her private affairs, sole confidential adviser in politics, and only assistant in her communications with the officers of Government, he is, besides husband of the Queen, the tutor of the royal children, the private secretary of the Sovereign, and her permanent minister. How far would it be consistent with this position to undertake the management and administration of a most important branch of the public service, and the individual responsibility attaching to it—becoming an executive officer of the Crown, receiving the Queen's commands through her Secretaries of State, &c. &c.? I feel sure that, having undertaken the responsibility, I should not be satisfied to leave the business and real work in the hands of another (the chief of the staff), but should feel it my duty to look to them myself. But whilst I should in this manner perform duties which, I am sure, every able general officer, who has gained experience in the field, would be able to perform better than myself, who have not had the advantage of such experience, most important duties connected with the welfare of the Sovereign would be left unperformed, which nobody could perform but myself. I am afraid, therefore, that I must discard the tempting idea of being placed in command of the British army."

8.—Great meeting at Dublin, to petition against the abolition of the Vice-royalty.

— The Senate of Turin pass a bill previously sanctioned by the Chamber of Deputies, for the abolition of exceptional tribunals for the clergy, and also for the right of asylum.

12.—Lord John Russell's motion for a select committee to inquire into ministerial, judicial, and diplomatic salaries, carried by 250 to 159 votes over Mr. Disraeli's amendment, asking for immediate legislation on the subject.

— The Pope re-enters Rome with great ceremony and splendour. He was received with salvos of artillery, and the acclamations of an immense multitude assembled in the square before the Lateran. His Holiness proceeded in state to the Vatican, and afterwards received the Sacred College and Corps Diplomatique in the palace.

15.—Lord Campbell takes the oath and his seat as Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench, in room of Lord Denman, deceased.

— Died in her 90th year, Madame Tussaud, of the popular wax exhibition in Baker-street, and one of the survivors of the first French Revolution.

16.—The French 11th regiment, on the march to Algiers (whither they were being sent, for taking part in a democratic demonstration), lose 252 men by the breaking down of the wire suspension bridge over the Loire, at Angers.

16.—Mr. M. Gibson's series of resolutions for repealing the taxes on knowledge negotiated by 190 to 189 votes.

18.—Severe hail-storm in Dublin, destroying glass alone to the estimated amount of 27,000*l*.

— The Pope pronounces a public benediction on the French troops assembled in the great Piazza of St. Peter.

19.—Treaty agreed upon at Washington, between Great Britain and the United States, relative to a canal through the State of Nicaragua, to unite the Pacific and Atlantic Oceans.

23.—Died, at Rydal Mount, aged 80, William Wordsworth, Poet Laureate.

25.—In the course of the debate on Mr. Heywood's motion for inquiry into the state of the Universities, Lord John Russell intimates that it is the intention of Ministers to advise her Majesty to issue a Royal Commission to inquire into the two Universities of Oxford and Cambridge. The utility and legality of the projected commission led to frequent discussion in both Houses of Parliament, but the Government succeeded in carrying out their intention.

26.—Invitation issued to the German States by Austria, to meet in congress at Frankfort, preparatory to opening a plenary assembly.

29.—Sir George Grey moves the second reading of the Ecclesiastical Commission Bill. He said the principal feature of the measure was the separation of the ecclesiastical and lay departments by the appointment of a tribunal to be designated the "Church Estates Committee," which was to be invested with the management of the property of the Church, and to report to the Commission thereupon. This Estates Committee was to consist of three persons, two to be appointed by the Crown, and the third by the Archbishop of Canterbury; one of the former and the latter to be paid Commissioners. In the course of the debate which ensued, Mr. Horsman made a smart attack on the Episcopal Bench. The Church, he said, had been plundered often—by the monarchs first, then by the nobles; in the last century by the bishops, in the present day by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. "The bishops are not exempt from human infirmities, and think they are taking care of all when sometimes taking care of themselves alone. In earlier days, the bishop's residence was in the cathedral city; he was at the centre of a religious community, ever at home, ever in the public gaze, ever accessible to his clergy and people; now he is metamorphosed into a rural dignitary, secluded in an aristocratic mansion, which the clergy penetrate with difficulty, the people not at all. In this age of active speculation and cultivated intellect—in this age so unsusceptible of belief—who should be the guides in the arduous and critical warfare? Surely men of a higher spiritual order than those who, though styled 'Fathers in God,' are yet wholly engrossed with worldly affairs, vigilant only of the Church's moneys, tenacious only of her dignities and ranks—more likely to smite and sink her than to save her in the struggle." Mr. Goulburn had once complained of Mr. Horsman's low idea of the Episcopal office; Mr. Horsman had yet to learn that political functions have aught to do with spiritual office, or, indeed, are aught but tumours and excrescences upon that office. That office he deemed divine in its origin, spiritual in its essence—too high to be exalted by worldly pomp, too holy to be profaned by worldly occupation; and if so large an amount of worldly duties be involved in its functions, it is impossible to advance anything more fatal to the establishment of which it is a part.—Mr. Goulburn vindicated the bench of bishops with great warmth, and made a personal attack on Mr. Horsman, who, he said, had assaulted and vilified them with laboriously-prepared eloquence. He described Mr. Horsman as a "disappointed man," who had once been a Lord of the Treasury, and desired higher office—a taunt which Mr. Osborne repaid by describing Mr. Goulburn as a "tin kettle attached to the tail of the member for Tamworth."

May 1.—At twenty-five minutes past eight o'clock this morning the Queen gave birth to a Prince. On the same day, Prince Albert visited the Duke of Wellington to congratulate him on his eighty-first birthday, and stated from the Queen, that as a token of regard she intended to have the royal infant baptized by the name of Arthur.

— M. de Blainville, the successor of Cuvier in the chair of Comparative Anatomy at the Museum of Natural History at Paris, found dead in one of the carriages of the night train on the Rouen Railway, while on his way to England. He was in his seventy-second year.

— Explosion of a fleet of powder-laden boats at Benares, causing the death of 420 human beings on the spot, and injuring over 800 employed on and about the river.

2.—The Ultra-democrats of Paris succeed in returning M. Eugène Sue, the Socialist candidate, for their representative, by a large majority over M. Leclerc, of the Moderate party. The French funds fell 2 per cent.

— The Duke of Richmond presents above one hundred petitions complaining of agricultural distress.

6.—In the House of Lords, the Archbishop of Canterbury makes a formal explanation relative to the appointment of his son to the Registrarship of the Prerogative Court of Chancery.

— The house at Charlecoote Lucy, near Stratford-on-Avon, entered by Robbers, and various relics of the Shakespeare age stolen.

7.—A Protectionist demonstration, attended by eleven peers and forty members of the House of Commons, held in the Crown and Anchor Tavern. Mr. Chowler, a Nottinghamshire farmer, said, the farmers would not mount their horses to stop the labourers from coming forward to claim their just rights. If the landlords would only stick to them, they would stick to the landlords. Mr. E. Ball said it was painful to speak of the landlords in terms of disparagement, but it was too true that the farmers had fallen, not by the League, nor yet by the treachery of Sir Robert Peel, but because their landlords had swerved from their duty. Would they tell him, a broken-hearted man passing into a state of poverty, that he was to fear the threats of a demagogue. The tenant-farmers should be prepared to take those terrible steps which it was frightful to imagine, but which necessity was driving them to contemplate. This dark sentiment was followed by tremendous cheering, at the close of which a person on the platform proposed three groans for "Sir Robert Peel, the arch-enemy of the human species."

8.—Came on for hearing in the Vice-Chancellor's Court the case of Thomas v. Thomas, being a claim made by a former inmate of the Agapemone, to appoint a guardian to her infant, on the ground of the father's moral unfitness for its custody and education. Mr. Price, the husband of one of the plaintiff's sisters, said, "There are fifty or sixty living in the Agapemone. We have horses and carriages and live in good style; but consider all we do to be for the glory of God. Every one does as he pleases on the Sunday. We make no difference between that and any other day. All play at hockey, males as well as females." The defendant denied the charge of irreligion and immorality. On the 23d, after commenting in the severest language on the conduct of Thomas and his associates, his Honour ordered that the child shall remain in the care of his mother and maternal grandmother, and that the father and his agent be restrained from interfering.

9.—Died at Paris, aged 71, Gay-Lussac, a peer of France, and widely known for his researches in chemical science.

10.—Walter Watts, late lessee of the Olympic Theatre, tried at the Central Criminal Court, on the charge of stealing a cheque for 1,400*l.* from his employers the Globe Insurance Company. Watts's nefarious designs were carried out with great ingenuity. A cheque for 55*l.* 10*s.* represented as for annuity No. 6, was drawn and paid by the bankers, and entered by them in the pass-book. When the book came into Watts's hands, he erased the 55, thus making the payment appear 4*l.* 10*s.*; and in order to mystify the matter further, he altered the number of the annuity to 64, by adding the figure 4. But, in point of fact, no such claim existed against the company at the time, as annuity No. 6; and the payments on annuity No. 64 having been previously made, a fictitious claim of 4*l.* 10*s.* appeared in the pass-book as paid, in order to provide facilities for covering the abstraction. But the difference of 550*l.* being still left between the payment, as it appeared by the falsified entry in the pass-book, and the actual amount paid, Watts had to find some means of covering the discrepancy in order to avoid detection. For this purpose he selected a trifling fire loss, say of 7*l.* 10*s.* which had been paid some time before, but which had not yet been passed, and falsified that entry in the pass-book, adding to it the 550*l.*, and making it appear that 557*l.* 10*s.* was the sum which had been paid; and thus, by making the total addition in the book correct, the cover for the fraud was perfected. He was accused of tampering in the same way with the dividend account, falsifying the figures entered in the banker's pass-book, to the extent of 1,500*l.* on one half-year's dividend, which sum he drew and transferred to his own pocket. Mr. Coleman, the accountant, had succeeded in tracing abstractions effected in this way between August 1844 and February 1850, when the first discovery of Watts's delinquencies was made, to the almost incredible extent of 70,000*l.*; and so thoroughly systematic were his arrangements, that the balance of cash at the bankers at the date showed a discrepancy of over 9,000*l.*, which for the most part was covered by false additions in the pass-book, until an opportunity offered of altering individual entries that might suit his purpose, previously to their permanent transference to the general books of the company, when detection was no longer to be apprehended. The jury found Watts guilty of one count in the indictment charging him with stealing "a piece of paper." A point of law as to the sufficiency of the count was reserved, and afterwards decided against the prisoner. On the 12th of July he was sentenced to ten years' transportation, but committed suicide in prison the same night, by hanging himself to the iron grating of his cell.

10.—The German Powers, with the exception of Prussia, meet in congress at Frankfurt.

13.—The Metropolitan undertakers create a disturbance in a meeting at the Whittington Club in support of the Metropolitan Interment Bill, and ultimately succeed in breaking it up.

— Australian Colonies Bill read a third time in the House of Commons, by a majority of 226 to 128. Sir W. Molesworth's motion for a recommitment of the Bill had been previously defeated by a division showing 165 against 42, and Mr. Gladstone's amendment to give the Church of England in the colonies a power of synodical action, by 187 votes against 102. Certain amendments introduced into the Bill during its progress through the House of Lords were afterwards adopted by the Commons.

14.—Henri Joseph Stephan, a horn-player in the orchestra of Her Majesty's Theatre, commits suicide by throwing himself from the top of the Duke of York's column, Carlton Gardens. In compliance with a recommendation from the coroner's jury, a railing was afterwards placed round the top of the column.

15.—The French Ambassador, M. Drouyn de Lhuys suddenly leaves London, causing a fall in the funds from 96½ to 95. Next night the Marquis of Lansdowne and Lord Palmerston explained, in their respective places, that this departure on her Majesty's birthday was purely accidental, and in no way intended to show disrespect to her Majesty or this country. It was thought that the presence of the Ambassador in Paris would be more useful at the moment than in London.

17.—Lord John Russell obtains leave to bring in a bill for abolishing the office of Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. It afterwards passed a second reading, but was thrown aside towards the end of the session.

19.—General Lopez, at the head of a buccaneering expedition, lands at Cardenas, in Cuba, and, after a short struggle, obtains possession of the town. The same evening a Spanish force arrive from Matanzas, when the pirates were driven on board their steamer, with the loss of 30 men.

23.—Robert Lindsay Mauleverer, a magistrate of the county of Londonderry, and agent over extensive estates in the north of Ireland, shot, near Dundalk, while riding home on his car. Two men towards whom suspicion strongly pointed were tried for the offence, but the jury refused to convict.

— Died, aged 74, Miss Jane Porter, novelist.

25.—The Nepaulese Ambassadors arrive at Southampton, on a mission to the Court of Queen Victoria. The young hippopotamus, a gift to the Zoological Gardens from the Viceroy of Egypt, arrived by the same steamer.

27.—Prince Albert to the Vice-Chancellor of the University of Cambridge:—"Although I had hoped that the University would have been allowed to go on in their course of self-improvement without any extraneous interference, now that I find the Government irrevocably pledged to the issue of the Commission, I would recommend the authorities of the University not to meet it with opposition, but rather to take it as the expression on the part of the Crown and Parliament of a natural desire to be accurately informed upon the present state of institutions so closely connected with, and of such vital importance, to the best interests of the nation; and to take a pride in showing to those who have indulged in attacks against them, that they have conscientiously and zealously fulfilled the great task intrusted to them."

— Attack on the Queen by Robert Pate, late lieutenant of the 10th Hussars. Her Majesty, accompanied by a lady-in-waiting and the Royal children, had been to inquire after the health of the Duke of Cambridge, at his residence in Piccadilly. A man was observed loitering about for some time, keeping his eye on the entrance at which the royal carriage would come out. On reaching the end of the road from the house, he deliberately aimed a blow at her Majesty with a stick which he held in his hand, striking her on the cheek, and crushing her bonnet over her forehead. He was instantly seized by some of the bystanders, and the weapon taken from him. Her Majesty quietly proceeded to Buckingham Palace. Pate was tried for the offence on the 11th July, and sentenced to seven years' transportation. He appeared to have been for some years labouring under crazes of various kinds.

27.—Died at Rome, aged 56, Richard J. Wyatt, sculptor.

28.—Lord John Russell announces the intended resignation of Lord Chancellor Cottenham. The great seal to be put in commission.

— Lord Lincoln's Divorce Bill read a second time in the House of Lords. Lord Lincoln, son and heir of the Duke of Newcastle, was married, in 1832, to Lady Susan Hamilton, only daughter of the Duke of Hamilton. They lived together up to August 1848, and had five children. In that month Lady Lincoln went to the Continent without her husband's leave, but ostensibly to consult the German physicians about her health. On the Continent it was soon found that she was constantly accompanied by Lord Walpole, eldest son of the Earl of Orford. While it was believed that her conduct amounted only to indiscretion, Mr. Gladstone, M.P., as the friend of both parties, went in search of her, and discovered that she was living near Como, under the assumed name of Mrs. Lawrence, but found it impossible to obtain access to her. She gave birth to a son at Como, in August 1849, who could not have been her husband's, and was christened by the name of Horatio Walpole. These, and other circumstances, establishing her criminality, were proved by evidence before the House, and it was now stated by her solicitor that she had given instructions not to oppose the bill.

30.—The House of Commons meet for the first time in their new chamber, at a mid-day sitting.

— Lord Ashley's resolution for the presentation of an address to her Majesty, praying that she would be graciously pleased to direct that the collection and delivery of letters on Sundays might in future entirely cease in all parts of the kingdom, carried on a division against the Government, by 93 to 68.

— The Corporation of London conferred the freedom of the City on Lord Gough, and entertained him at a banquet in the evening. He was made a D.C.L. at the Oxford Commemoration, June 12, along with Major Edwardes, Major Rawlinson, and others.

June 1.—Rejoicings at Galway on the occasion of the sailing of the Viceroy, the first of the new line of mail steamers between that port and New York.

3.—The Bishop of London's bill, providing for a new Episcopal Court of Appeal in cases involving questions of heresy, thrown out on a second reading in the House of Lords by a majority of 84 to 51.

5.—Mr. Fox's Secular Education Bill thrown out on the second reading by 287 votes to 53.

6.—Turbulent meeting in St. Martin's Hall, under the auspices of the Society for improving the Condition of the Labouring Classes. On Mr. G. W. M. Reynolds attempting to thrust himself forward on the platform, he was seized by Lord Harrowby and pushed in the direction of his friends at the lower part of the hall. The meeting was afterwards addressed by the Chairman, Lord John Russell, and Lord Ashley.

10.—Her Majesty answers the address of the 93 members of the House of Commons on the subject of Sunday labour in the Post Office:—"I have received your address praying that the transmission and delivery of letters on Sunday may in future entirely cease in all parts of the kingdom; also that inquiry may be made as to how far, without injury to the public service, the transmission of mails on the Lord's Day might be diminished or entirely suspended; and in compliance with your request, I shall give directions accordingly." Lord John Russell announced that no exception would be made in favour of foreign correspondence, it being the intention of Government completely to carry out the vote. Instructions in conformity therewith were afterwards issued from the General Post Office; but the inconvenience suffered by the public led to the question being again brought before Parliament, and the Sunday delivery was thereafter placed on its former footing.

— Died at Catrine, Ayrshire, James Smith, of Deanston, the inventor of the modern system of drainage.

11.—The new church of St. Barnabas, Pimlico, consecrated by the Bishop of London. The ceremony attracted more than ordinary attention from the number of High Church bishops, and other ecclesiastical dignitaries, who attended in full canonicals.

17.—Commencement of the debate on Lord Stanley's motion, censuring Government for undue interference in the affairs of Greece. "Various claims (it affirmed) against the Greek Government, doubtful in point of justice, or exaggerated in amount, had been enforced by coercive measures directed against the commerce and people of Greece, and calculated to endanger the continuance of our friendly relations with other Powers." Previous to the commencement of the discussion, a scene was occasioned by Lord Brougham commanding Black Rod to remove Chevalier Bunsen from a seat which he occupied in the peresses' gallery. The debate lasted over two nights, and terminated in a majority against Ministers of 37.

18.—In the House of Lords the clauses in the Irish Encumbered Estates Amendment Act, prohibiting sales for less than fifteen years' purchase, carried against the Government by 32 to 30.

—Wreck of the Liverpool and Glasgow steamer, Orion, off Portpatrick. About one o'clock in the morning, when the sea was smooth as a mirror, and most of the passengers asleep, the Orion struck on a sunken rock, and in five minutes heeled over in seven-fathom water. Every one crowded on deck in consternation and despair; the boats were launched with difficulty, and the first, greatly overcrowded, upset with all on board. The second got safely to shore, by which time other boats had put off to render what assistance was possible. Before any could reach the ship she filled and sank, leaving such as were on deck struggling to keep themselves afloat with pieces of the wreck. Out of 150 passengers about 50 perished, among them being M'Neil of Colonsay; Captain M'Neil, who made many brave attempts to save others; Professor Burns, Glasgow; and Mr. Splott, with his wife and three daughters, who were about to proceed to Australia. Various circumstances connected with this wreck showed an amount of carelessness which excited great indignation in the public mind, and a warrant was issued for the apprehension of Captain Henderson and the mate Williams. They were tried before the High Court of Justiciary on the 29th of August. It was proved that during the watch of the second mate, the Orion approached closer to the shore than was usual by upwards of a mile, and that this unusual course was taken when the weather was hazy, and against the warning exclamations of the seaman who had the look-out watch. Henderson was sentenced to be imprisoned for eighteen months, and Williams to be transported for seven years.

19.—Lord Dunboyne tried in the Court of Queen's Bench on the charge of making a false statement in the register of his marriage. In August 1842, Lord Dunboyne was privately married, at Paddington church, to Miss Vincent Vaughan, of Bell Hatch, in the county of Oxford. The marriage was private because it was opposed to the wishes of Mrs. Vaughan's mother, to whose wealth she would succeed if she did not alienate her regards. The opposition made to Lady Dunboyne's marriage by her mother wore off, and the parties were married again at St. George's, Hanover-square, in December 1843; and on this occasion, as on the former one, the parties were described as widower and widow, though then man and wife. This false description was the offence. Lord Campbell instructed the jury, that they must be satisfied that the representation had been made falsely, fraudulently, and corruptly; a conclusion which there would be some difficulty in coming to, as the defendant had no motive to injure anybody by his act. Verdict of Not guilty.

20.—In the course of a ministerial statement regarding the adverse vote in the House of Peers, Lord John Russell took occasion to defend the general policy of the Government, and eulogized Lord Palmerston for having acted in foreign affairs "not as the minister of Austria, not as the minister of Russia, not as the minister of France, or any other foreign country, but only as the minister of England." At the close of the explanation, Mr. Roebuck gave notice of his intention to submit the following motion:—"That the principles which have hitherto regulated the foreign policy of her Majesty's Government are such as were required to preserve untarnished the honour and dignity of this country, and at all times best calculated to maintain peace between this country and the various nations of the world."

24.—Mr. Roebuck introduces a debate on the foreign policy of the Government, by proposing the foregoing resolution. On the following night, Lord Palmerston spoke in defence of his policy for five hours—from the dusk of a summer evening to the dawn of a summer morning. He deemed the doctrine advanced on the other side, that British subjects in foreign lands were entitled to no protection but that of the laws and tribunals of the country in which they might happen to be, a doctrine on which no English minister had acted, and which the people of England would never suffer. He did not, however, mean that British subjects abroad were to be above the laws. They were bound, in the first place, to have recourse to the laws of the land in which they were; but there might be governments in which the tribunals were not of a character to inspire confidence. The present administration of government in Greece was full of abuses; the police inflicted revolting tortures upon both sexes, to which British subjects would be equally exposed, unless they had the protection of their own country. Lord Palmerston then detailed the injuries suffered by British subjects in Greece, and showed the reasonableness and moderation of the demands made for reparation. He entered very minutely into the dates and particulars of the recent negotiations connected with the question and with the mediation of France, correcting also an erroneous impression that M. Gros had communicated to Mr. Wyse the convention of London, and that, with a knowledge of this convention, Mr. Wyse had renewed hostilities. He (Lord Palmerston) was sorry that the convention did not arrive at Athens until after the other arrangements had been made there; but this was not his fault, and the negotiations had been put an end to, not by Mr. Wyse, but by M. Gros himself. The negotiations between the English and French Governments were now brought to a satisfactory conclusion, and such portions of the London convention as were still applicable would be adopted in place of the corresponding terms agreed to at Athens. Lord Palmerston then followed Sir James Graham over the wider field which had been taken, reviewing and vindicating the policy he had pursued in relation to Belgium, Holland, Spain, France, Switzerland, and Italy. He concluded by challenging the verdict of the House, whether the principles which had guided the foreign policy of the Government had been proper and fitting, and whether, as a subject of ancient Rome could hold himself free from indignity by saying, "Civis Romanus sum," a British subject in a foreign country should not be protected by the vigilant eye and the strong arm of his Government against injustice and wrong. On the evening of the 27th, Mr. Gladstone, adverting to Lord Palmerston's remark as to the condition of a Roman citizen, asked, "What was a Roman citizen? A Roman citizen was the member of a privileged caste, of a victorious and conquering nation, of a nation that held all others bound down by the strong arm of power—which had one law for him and another for all the rest of the world, which asserted in his favour principles which it denied to all others. Was such the view of the noble lord as to the relation of England towards all the rest of the world? Did he claim for us that we are to stand on a platform, as it were, high above all other nations? It was clear from the whole expression and spirit of the noble Viscount's speech, that such is his impression—that he thinks we are to be the censor of the vice and follies of all the peoples of the world, the teacher of the nations, and that all who do not think proper to admit the assumption must have diplomatic war declared against them. And certainly, if the business of a Foreign Secretary was merely to carry on diplomatic war, all must admit the perfection of the noble lord in the discharge of his functions. But it was not the duty of a Foreign Minister to be like a knight-errant, ever pricking forth, armed at all points, to challenge all comers, and lay as many adversaries as possible sprawling, or the noble lord would be a master of his art; but to maintain that sound code of international principles which is a monument of human wisdom, and a precious inheritance bequeathed by our fathers for the preservation of the future brotherhood of nations." On the 28th the debate was resumed by Mr. Cockburn in a speech of great ability on behalf of the Government. Referring to Mr. Gladstone's statement that Rome only protected its citizens because it exercised universal dominion, he dissented from that proposition altogether. It was not after the Roman empire had been established over the whole world that that position was first assumed; the principle was acted upon from the earliest ages, and therefore was the great orator entitled to feel 'all the pride and triumph of a Roman, when he uttered the memorable exclamation: "Quot bella majores nostri susceperint; quot cives Romani injuriâ affecti sunt, naviculari retenti, mercatores spoliati esse dicerentur." (Cheers.) It was not only when she had established her dominion over nearly the whole civilized world, but while she had yet to fight the battle of empire almost on equal terms, that Rome invariably asserted the first duty of a state was to protect its citizens, and to redress their wrongs. Touching on the disunited agricultural party, the honourable member for Southampton considered they might say:—

"*Sic vos non vobis fertis aratra boves;
Sic vos non vobis vellera fertis oves.*"

(Laughter.) Or if they were disposed to follow like sheep, the honourable and gallant member for Lincoln:—

"Sic vos non vobis mellificatis apes."

On this evening Sir Robert Peel made his last appearance in the House—an appearance generally admitted to be characterised by great kindness of feeling and political foresight. He spoke against the resolution as being too comprehensive:—"It is my firm belief," he said, "that you will not advance the cause of constitutional government by attempting to dictate to other nations. If you do, your intentions will be mistaken, you will rouse feelings upon which you do not calculate, you will invite opposition to Government; and beware that the time does not arrive when, frightened by your own interference, you withdraw your countenance from those whom you have excited, and leave upon their minds the bitter recollection that you have betrayed them. If you succeed, I doubt whether or no the institutions that take root under your patronage will be lasting. Constitutional liberty will be best worked out by those who aspire to freedom by their efforts. You will only overload it by your help. I have so little disposition for entering into any angry or hostile controversy that I shall make no reference whatever to many of the topics which were introduced into that most able and temperate speech (Lord Palmerston's), a speech which made us all proud of the man who delivered it." The debate was continued over four nights and ended in a majority for Ministers of 46 in a house of 574.

29.—Fatal accident to Sir Robert Peel. Riding up Constitution-hill about five o'clock this afternoon, his horse shied at some passing object, and threw him over its head. Sir Robert fell on his face, but keeping hold of the rein, the animal came down upon him with its knees between his shoulders. Being recognised by several gentlemen he was immediately lifted up, placed in a private carriage, and attended home by Dr. Foucart, who had observed the accident, and by Sir James Clarke, the Queen's physician. Other medical men were instantly called in, and an examination showed that the great statesman had sustained a fracture of the collar bone with a severe injury of the shoulder. It was at first thought that he was going on favourably, and the bulletin of the 1st announced that Sir Robert had enjoyed refreshing sleep; but in the course of that day the symptoms became more and more alarming, and in the evening he became slightly delirious. He died about eleven on the night of the 2nd of July. The death of no public man, probably, ever excited more general and unmingled sorrow. The Queen, Prince Albert, and the most distinguished members of every political party were unceasing in their inquiries, while the neighbourhood of his house in Whitehall-gardens was thronged by multitudes eager to catch every gleam of hope. Touching tributes were paid to his memory in both Houses of Parliament, and by members of all shades of opinion. "Every heart," said Mr. Gladstone, on the evening of the 3rd of July, "is much too full to allow us to enter so early upon the consideration of the amount of that calamity with which the country has been visited, in, I will say, the premature death of Sir Robert Peel; for although he has died full of years and full of honours, yet it is a death that in human eyes is premature, because we had fondly hoped that, in whatever position Providence might assign to him, by the weight of his ability, by the splendour of his talents, and by the purity of his virtues, he might still have been spared to render us most essential services.

'Now is the stately column broke,
The beacon light is quenched in smoke;
The trumpet's silvery sound is still,
The warder silent on the hill.'

The tribute of respect which we now offer, will, I am sure, be all the more valuable—all the more readily received—from the silence which has prevailed, and which has arisen, not from a want, but from an excess of feeling." M. Dupin, the President of the French Assembly, also paid an unprecedented tribute to the memory of the great English statesman. In compliance with Sir Robert's own wish, his remains were interred in the parish church of Drayton Bassett, "without ostentation or parade of any kind."

July 2.—Treaty of peace concluded between Denmark and Prussia and the Prussian League, respecting the duchies of Schleswig and Holstein. The duchies prepare to carry on the war themselves.

3.—The Koh-i-noor diamond presented to her Majesty by the Chairman and Deputy-chairman of the East India Company.

4.—Lord Campbell presents a petition against the selection of Hyde Park as the site of the intended Exhibition. It was supported by Lord Brougham, who thought the erection would be a monstrous interference with the rights of the public. In the House of Commons, the same evening, Colonel Sibthorp pronounced the Exhibition by which the park was to be desecrated the greatest trash, the greatest fraud, and the greatest imposition that was ever attempted to be put upon the people of this country.

4.—The integrity of Denmark guaranteed by England, France, Prussia, and Sweden.

— Lord John Russell, with the sanction of the Crown, proposes to inter the remains of Sir Robert Peel with public honours. Mr. Goulburn on the part of the family, and in compliance with the expressed wish of the dead statesman, declined the proposal.

6.—Came on in the Court of Queen's Bench the case of Barry v. Reid, being an action for libel, raised by the architect of the House of Commons against the ventilator. The words complained of were used at a conference regarding the ventilation of the building, when Dr. Reid refused to proceed, remarking:—"I'll transact no business in a meeting in which Mr. Meesom is, because he and Mr. Barry sent in a forged document to the Commissioners of Woods and Forests." The Chief Justice thought the plaintiff had no case because the communication was privileged and suggested a compromise, which was agreed to.

— The Court of Queen's Bench pronounces a decision refusing to restore to his status as an attorney, Mr. Barber, who had been transported in 1844 for alleged complicity in the Fletcher will frauds, but subsequently pardoned.

8.—The Court of Exchequer gives judgment in the Gorham case, being the third decision of a court of law on the question. The Bishop of Exeter first applied to the Court of Queen's Bench for a rule to prohibit the Court of Arches from giving effect to the decision of the Privy Council in Mr. Gorham's favour. On its being refused, the Bishop made a similar application to the Court of Common Pleas, by whom it was also refused, and he then brought the matter in the same form before the Court of Exchequer. After the question had been argued at length, this court now found, as the two other courts had done, that the appeal from the Court of Arches was to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and refused the Bishop's application with costs. On the 20th, the Bishop presented his answer, to the monition of the Arches Court along with a protest. The court received the answer, but rejected the protest. Mr. Gorham was inducted to the living on the 11th of August.

— Death of his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, tenth child and youngest son of George III. Born February 24th, 1774.

9.—General Zachary Taylor, President of the United States, dies at Washington from cholera, after twenty-four hours' illness. He was succeeded by Vice-president Millard Fillmore.

11.—Robert Pate tried at the Old Bailey Sessions for assaulting the Queen (May 27). A defence of insanity was set up, but the jury found him guilty, and Baron Alderson sentenced him to transportation for seven years.

12.—A congress of deputies from the several states included in the Prussian Zollverein opened in Cassel.

15.—The new Lord Chancellor, Baron Truro (Sir T. Wilde), takes the oaths and his seat.

— Meeting in the Egyptian Hall, Mansion House, to take steps for erecting a suitable monument, within the city of London, to the memory of Sir Robert Peel. Meetings were also held in London, and many other cities, with the view of carrying out a national memorial to the great statesman. One in Willis's Rooms, on the 23rd, was presided over by the Earl of Aberdeen, and addressed by the Duke of Wellington.

16.—The Commissioners of the Great Exhibition accept Mr. Paxton's design of a crystal palace for the Exhibition building.

19.—Sir Robert Peel returned for Tamworth in room of his late father.

— In committee, Lord John Russell's resolution to grant 12,000*l.* a year to the Duke of Cambridge, carried against Mr. Hume's amendment for 8,000*l.* by 206 to 53 votes.

— Lord Stanley presents a petition, signed by 16,000 landowners, tenants, and tradesmen of Lancashire, praying for protection to British industry.

20.—The members of the Reform Club give a banquet to Lord Palmerston, to express their confidence in his policy, and in commemoration of his late triumph in the House of Commons.

22.—Explosion of the Red Rover steamer at Bristol. The engines and machinery were torn to pieces and hurled high into the air, six passengers killed, and almost every one on board injured.

23.—Explosion of fire-damp in Commonode Pit, Airdrie. Out of twenty men engaged in the works at the time, only one escaped.

— A gathering, described as an "aggregate meeting of the clergy of the Church of England," held in St. Martin's Hall, Long-acre, to protest against the decision of the law courts in the Gorham case, and to take steps to prevent the order of the Court of Arches to induct Mr. Gorham from being carried into effect. A protest against Mr. Gorham's heresies was carried, as also an address to the Archbishop and a petition to the Queen, praying for the revival of synodical action. A supplemental meeting, presided over by Dr. Pusey, was held simultaneously in Freemasons' Tavern.

24.—In moving the second reading of the Compound Householders Bill, Sir William Clay explained that his object was to remove a grievance affecting a numerous class of householders. At present, if the owner of a house compounded with the parish officers for the payment of the parochial rates, the overseers had no power to return the name of the occupants to the returning officer as entitled to vote in the election of members to serve in Parliament. The tenants of proprietors who, under local acts, compounded for their rates, though they occupied tenements to a higher value than 10*l.*, were allowed to be placed upon the register only after payment of the existing rate; consequently after every rate they were obliged to make a fresh application. The effect of this system was that great numbers of persons in the metropolis and other places who, according to the spirit of the Reform Bill, were entitled to be upon the register, were disfranchised. This bill would obviate the necessity of parties so placed making incessant claims; in short, it would place them, in this respect, upon a par with county voters who, having once substantiated a claim, were not under the necessity of renewing it so long as they remained in the occupation of the same house. They were, however, relieved from none of the conditions of residence or payment of rates which were required by the Reform Act. The measure was approved by Government, and passed through both Houses.

25.—Battle of Idstadt between the armies of Denmark and Schleswig-Holstein. It lasted over two days, and resulted in a loss to the duchies of nearly 3,000 men. This was the first engagement of any moment since the suspension of arms in July 1849.

26.—Baron Rothschild attempts to take his seat in the House of Commons, but withdraws on the refusal of the Speaker to swear him upon the Old Testament only. On the 30th he was sworn on the Old Testament, and continued taking the oath till he came to the words "on the true faith of a Christian," which he refused to take, and withdrew. Sir F. Thesiger then moved that a new writ be issued for the City of London; and Mr. Wood an amendment, that the representation was full. The latter was negatived by 221 to 117, and the former without a division.

— In the House of Lords, Lord Brougham criticises with great severity the Attorney-General's refusal to fiat an application to the Court of Chancery for an injunction to stay proceeding with the proposed Exhibition building in Hyde Park.

— A committee of the Metropolitan Church Union having informed the Archbishop of Canterbury that they intend presenting him with an address requesting him not to proceed with the institution of Mr. Gorham, his Grace writes: "Your address proposes that I should assume to myself the authority of reversing the sentence of this (the legitimate) court—should refuse to do what the law requires of me, and should deny to Mr. Gorham a right to which, after a legal trial and examination, he is declared to be entitled. I submit to your committee with all due deference, that I cannot consistently receive an address of which this is the purport; and I must therefore respectfully decline to name a time for its presentation to me." In reply to a remonstrance from the committee, the Primate again wrote:—"Assuredly there are occasions, as you remind me, when it becomes a duty to obey God rather than man. But I beg to observe that before any one takes upon himself the responsibility of contravening the law of man he ought to be very certain that in doing so he would be obeying God. Now nothing which I find in the law of God gives me reason to believe that I should be acting in conformity with His will if I refused Mr. Gorham admission to the cure of souls, on the ground of his hesitating to affirm the spiritual regeneration of every baptized child; and the will of God in this matter had need be very plainly declared before I could think myself justified in accusing Mr. Gorham of heresy, much more before I could assume the right of individually condemning him after the decision of the legitimate tribunal in his favour."

26.—The Commissioners of the Great Exhibition accept Messrs. Fox and Henderson's tender of 79,800*l.* for the erection of Mr. Paxton's design on the site selected by them in Hyde Park. The contractors obtained possession of the ground four days afterwards.

27.—County Mayo election terminates in favour of the Free-trade candidate, Mr. O'Higgins, who polled 141 votes; his opponent, Mr. Butt, 95. It was said there were not 25 more votes unpolled in the county, which had a population of about 300,000.‡

30.—Fall of the Brinthsway cotton mill, Stockport, causing the death of eleven people, several being women and children.

31.—Scene at Newcastle Assizes between Mr. Justice Wightman and the county justices, who refused to permit his lordship to pass through the room to consult with Justice Cresswell, while they were sitting transacting business. After a sharp altercation, the High Sheriff led Mr. Justice Wightman through the apartment.

August 1.—Railway accident at Glasgow, in connexion with a special train conveying excursionists from Perth to the Highland and Agricultural Society's show. At Cowlairs the train was divided into two sections, one of which was sent down the tunnel, but brought to a stand after entering some little way, in consequence of another train in front. While in this position the second section came down at great speed, and dashed into the first, smashing two of the trucks occupied by the excursionists. Five people were killed on the spot, and many others injured.

—The Attorney-General submits two resolutions which had been framed to meet Baron Rothschild's case,—the first denying his right to vote or sit in the House till he had taken the oath of abjuration in the form appointed by law, and the second pledging the House to a measure of relief for the Jews next session. At the conclusion of an animated debate, on the 5th, the first was carried by 166 to 92, and the second by 142 to 106

2.—Lord Brougham censures the House of Lords for its deference to Royalty in the matter of the Exhibition site. "When I lately brought forward the subject, there was dead silence within your lordships' House, and dead silence also in the House of Commons, showing most painfully that absolute prostration of the understanding which takes place even in the minds of the bravest when the word 'Prince' is mentioned in this country." The learned ex-Chancellor was engaged in another fracas the same evening, in connexion with his proposal for a revision of the Civil List.

4.—Diplomatic relations renewed with Spain, Lord Howden presenting his credentials as Ambassador of her Majesty at the court of Madrid.

5.—Opening of the Great Northern Railway from Maiden-lane to Peterborough.

6.—In a highly characteristic speech in the House of Lords, Lord Brougham defends himself against the "slandrous" and "scurrilous" attacks of the Daily News on his management of the appellate jurisdiction of the House.

11.—Fire at Gravesend, destroying twenty-nine houses, mostly wood, in the High-street, and causing considerable damage to eleven others.

12.—Louis Napoleon sets out on a tour through the provinces of the Republic. At Lyons the President's reception was peculiarly impressive, and the day spent there the most brilliant of the journey.

15.—Parliament prorogued by the Queen in person. The Royal Speech made reference principally to the Acts just passed for the better government of Australia, for discontinuing interments within the Metropolis, and for extending the Elective Franchise in Ireland.

—A bill to admit California as a member of the United States passes the Senate.

16.—The Bishop of Exeter addresses a letter to the churchwardens of Bramford-Speke, warning them against the heretical teaching of Mr. Gorham, the new incumbent.

17.—William Bennisson executed at Edinburgh, for poisoning his wife with arsenic. The criminal was greatly celebrated for his "gift" in prayer; and when his wife had passed for ever from his cruel treatment, he thanked God that she had gone to glory! "I have seen many a death-bed," he said, "but never a pleasanter one than my wife's."

19.—Died, at Brighton, in his 81st year, Sir Martin Archer Shee, President of the Royal Academy.

20.—Heard at Stafford Assizes the case of Bainbrigg v. Bainbrigg, raised to try the validity of a will alleged to have been made by an insane person, under circumstances of fraud. Thomas Bainbrigg, the testator, was a person of ancient family and large estates: originally of polished taste and cultivated manners, an early disappointment in love affected his mind, and drove him into seclusion, a soured and slightly eccentric man. An illicit connexion with his housekeeper brought him a daughter, to whom he became much attached. The child was educated in a costly manner, and as she grew up was introduced to society and well received, as his daughter. At the age of thirteen, he made a will entailing his estates on her and her issue; but at sixteen she went astray with the coachman, to her father's excessive but not unrelenting indignation. A child was born in 1803, in her father's house, received the name of Marianne, and soon secured his eccentric affections. Two years after, his daughter eloped with the son of a tenant on the estate, named Arnold, who was greatly disliked by Bainbrigg. He then made a fresh will, in which he cut off Mrs. Arnold, and re-settled all his estates on her daughter Marianne. A fall from his horse at Derby increased his eccentricity at times to madness. He became careless in his personal habits, and encouraged his grand-daughter in language and conduct of the most depraved character. He tried on one occasion a horse which had offended him, sentenced it to transportation, but afterwards commuted the sentence to confinement in a dark room. Still, at the justices' meetings his brother magistrates were not able to discover anything so far irregular as to preclude him from taking part in the public business of the district. Matters continued in this way till the 15th June, 1818, when an excessive indulgence in brandy-drinking, to which he was addicted, brought him to his death-bed; and Mr. Blair, his solicitor, a man of high professional station and character, was sent for to make his will. This gentleman drew a testament which gave the reversion of the estates—to the prejudice of the testator's nephew and heir-at-law—to persons whom the testator had regarded with the utmost aversion; namely, after the death of his grand-daughter Marianne and her issue, to the sons of his daughter Mrs. Arnold. Marianne, like her mother, had run away at sixteen, and had two children; but she and her children were dead, and the question of succession now arose between the testator's heir-at-law and the family of the Arnolds, in whose favour the will had been made. It was declared by some of the attesting witnesses that the testator was never conscious from the day he took to his bed, on Monday the 15th of June, till his death on the next Saturday, and that Mr. Blair guided his hand to sign the will, when he was in a state of dying stupor. Mr. Blair himself took advantages under the will, and the testator's relations were kept from seeing the deceased during the whole of his last illness. After the death, when the will was read over, the youngest brother of the deceased,—then Captain, now Major-General, Bainbrigg,—saw the original full of blanks and pencil interlineations. When, after years of foreign service, he came home and went to Doctors' Commons, he found the original will so different a document in appearance, that he believed it to be one substituted for that which was read over to the relatives in 1818. On the other hand, respectable clerks who were in Mr. Blair's employment when he drew the will, swore to having written the original document and to the identity of the original with the one now in Doctors' Commons. Lord Campbell's opinion in summing up was favourable to the good faith of Mr. Blair, and the validity of the will; but the verdict of the jury was in favour of the plaintiff, the heir-at-law.

21.—Mdlle. Jenny Lind sails from Liverpool for New York.

22.—Synod of Roman Catholic prelates and clergy at Thurles, “to hold council together for the settling of controversies, the extirpation of heresies, the improvement of morals and discipline, and for devising and establishing whatever means can tend to the greater glory of God, the better education of the people, the peace and harmony of society, and the salvation of souls.” They condemned the Queen's Colleges, and recommended the establishment of a Catholic University.

23.—Prussia informs the Austrian Cabinet of its refusal to join in the restricted Diet at Frankfurt.

24.—Died, at Claremont, in his 77th year, Louis-Philippe, ex-king of the French. He was buried in the Roman Catholic chapel at Weybridge.

25.—The submarine electric telegraph laid down between the English and French coasts. The points chosen were Shakespeare's Cliff, at Dover, and the opposite chalk headland at Cape Grisnez, midway between Calais and Boulogne. In settling down into the bed of the ocean, the wire received injuries which for a time interrupted the communication.

26.—During the sojourn of the Court at Holyrood, Prince Albert lays the foundation stone of the Scottish National Gallery.

September 4.—Attack on General Haynau at Barclay and Co.'s brewery. Presenting himself with some friends to inspect the premises, the labourers and draymen supplied themselves with brooms and mud, with which they belaboured “the Austrian butcher,” and compelled him to retreat along the Bankside to the George public-house. Here the attacking party were reinforced in large numbers, but all attempts made to discover the apartment in which the General was locked up failed. He was conveyed by a party of police across the river to Somerset House, and from thence in a cab to Morley's Hotel, and left England on the 6th for the Continent.

6.—The municipal authorities of Cherbourg entertain the President on his northern tour, and invite a number of distinguished English naval officers to meet him. The President proposed as a toast, "The City of Cherbourg." "I propose this toast in the presence of these distinguished strangers, now our guests. They can convince themselves of the fact, that if we desire peace it is not because we are weak, but from that community of interests and those sentiments of mutual esteem which bind together the two most civilized nations of the globe." These words were followed by repeated shouts of "Vive l'Empereur!" "Vive Napoléon!"

9.—Lieut. Gale, aéronaut, killed in the neighbourhood of Bordeaux. He ascended on horseback from that place, and had reached the ground safely between Merignac and Cestas. He was engaged in exhausting the balloon of the remaining gas, when the peasantry who assisted him succeeded earlier than he seemed to expect in removing his horse. The balloon, disencumbered of the horse's weight, instantly soared aloft, snapping in two a young fir-tree which held the grapnel. Mr. Gale was not in the car, but got entangled in the ropes; he held on while the balloon floated nearly two miles, and dropped either with it or just before it fell. His body was found in a tree, and the collapsed balloon in an adjoining wood.

15.—The Elector of Hesse-Cassel quits his capital in consequence of the refusal of his Diet to vote supplies without a budget. His Prime Minister, the Austrian agent Hassenpflug, secures for the King the support of the Frankfort Diet. Prussia moved her army to assist the Hessians.

16.—Explosion of a fireworks factory in Weaver-street, Spitalfields, destroying the premises, damaging thirty-eight adjoining houses, and injuring a number of operatives employed in the factory.

—Affray between Lord Brougham and a body of watchers, on the river Eamont. Accompanied by the Marquis of Douro, Lady Malet and others, his lordship caused the keepers to cast his nets into the river, when a party of ten watchers in ambush, connected with the Eamont Angling Association, rushed out and began fighting for their possession. A local constable formally seized the nets under the Solway Act, and the society's men afterwards managed to cut off about eighty yards. On the matter being investigated before the magistrate at Penrith, a fine of 5*l.* was inflicted on one of Lord Brougham's men for using an improper net, and the various charges of assault were withdrawn.

—During the fog, on the Eastern Counties Railway, a train passes over and kills nine surfacemen who, in the hurry of the moment, had stepped from the line where they were working on to the up-line, instead of occupying the space between the two till the train had passed. The coroner's jury returned a verdict of "Death by misadventure."

19.—Fire in Mark-lane, the largest and most destructive which had taken place in the City since the destruction of the Royal Exchange. Owing to the immense mass of the ruins, and the great quantity of inflammable merchandise stored in the buildings, the flames broke out anew for days afterwards whenever the wind rose. The damage was estimated at 200,000*l.*

—Inauguration of the Coronation Stone of the Saxon kings at Kingston.

—A portion of Seaford Cliff, Dover, 300 feet broad, nearly 300 feet long towards the sea, and about 100 feet high, dislodged by a charge of gunpowder. At a height of about 50 feet above high-water mark two galleries were driven into the cliff, in each chamber of which was deposited a charge of 12,000 lbs. of powder. Above this, and on the top of the cliff, three shafts or pits were sunk to the depth of 41 feet, and 600 lbs. of powder deposited in each. The charges were fired by three voltaic batteries, when the whole mass fell gently forward into the sea.

24.—Papal bull "given at St. Peter's, Rome, under the Seal of the Fisherman," establishing a Romish hierarchy in England. "In maturing this design, we have not failed to implore the aid of the Almighty and Most Gracious God, and that He would grant us grace in this weighty affair to resolve upon that which should be most suitable to augment the prosperity of the Church. We have further besought the assistance of the Most Blessed Virgin Mary, Mother of God, and of the saints whose virtues have made England illustrious, that they would deign to obtain, by their intercession with God, the happy success of this enterprise. We have since commended the whole business to the grave and serious consideration of our venerable brothers, the Cardinals of the Holy Roman Church forming our Congregation for Propagating the Faith. Their sentiments having been found completely conformable to our own, we have resolved to sanction them, and carry them into execution. It is for this reason, after having weighed the whole matter most scrupulously, that, of our own proper motion, in our certain knowledge, and in the plenitude of our apostolic power, we have resolved, and do hereby decree, the re-establishment in the kingdom of England, and according to the common laws of the Church, of a hierarchy of bishops deriving their titles from their own sees, which we constitute by the present letter in the various apostolic districts."

26.—The first column of the Great Exhibition building set up in Hyde Park.

27.—Farewell meeting of the emigrants of Mrs. Chisholm's Family Colonization Land Society, who sailed for Australia, on the 30th, in the Slains Castle.

27.—Rev. Mr. Hollest, perpetual curate of Frimley Grove, murdered in his own bedroom by a band of ruffians, who broke into the house soon after midnight. At an early hour in the morning Mr. and Mrs. Hollest, who slept on the first floor, were awoke by a noise in the room, and saw two masked figures standing at the foot of the bed with lights. After a severe struggle in bed, they each got to the floor, Mrs. Hollest endeavouring to reach the bell-pull, and Mr. Hollest seeking to arm himself with the poker. In the course of a protracted encounter with his assailant, Mr. Hollest received a wound in the abdomen, which, though unnoticed at the moment, proved fatal in the course of a few hours. Mrs. Hollest succeeded in alarming the inmates with a bell, and the two ruffians made their escape from the house, with such plunder as they had secured before the encounter took place in the bedroom. Four well-known London thieves, Hiram Smith, Levi and Samuel Harwood, and Jones, were apprehended on suspicion of being concerned in the outrage. In the pocket of one of the prisoners there was found a copper coin, which Mrs. Hollest was able to identify as one which she had put into the "clothes fund bag" some days before the attack. Smith made a confession in prison, admitting the guilt of all the parties in custody, so far as the robbery was concerned, but charging Harwood with firing the fatal shot at Mr. Hollest. "When we got up stairs," he said, "Jones, Levi Harwood, and I went into Mr. Hollest's room. Samuel Harwood stood at the door. Mr. and Mrs. Hollest were in bed. Mrs. Hollest awoke. Levi Harwood laid hold of her, and said, 'Lay still, my good woman, or I will blow your brains out.' They were all at the foot of the bed. Mrs. Hollest jumped up, when Jones caught hold of her and thrust her into the corner. Mr. Hollest then jumped out of bed, and was about to lay hold of Levi Harwood, when Harwood fired the shot. While this was taking place, I took a gold watch off the stand on the table at the foot of the bed. We then all four ran down stairs. When we left the house we got as soon as we could into the fields, where we put our shoes on. Levi Harwood then said, 'I hope to God it has not killed the man.'" Mrs. Hollest herself was of opinion that it was this Smith who struggled with her husband, and afterwards fired the fatal shot. At the trial at Kingston, on the 1st of April following, Levi Harwood and Jones were found guilty, and sentenced to be executed. Samuel Harwood was acquitted, but instantly arrested for being concerned in another burglary in Sussex. Smith was ordered to be confined during her Majesty's pleasure.

29.—The Donna Maria, a Portuguese frigate, blown up at Macao, when firing a salute in honour of the Prince Consort. Two hundred men and boys reported to have perished.

October 2.—Died at Woodford, Gloucestershire, aged ninety-three years, James Ingram, landlord of the Fox Inn, the last survivor of the crew of the Royal George, which went down at Spithead in 1782.

3.—A lunacy case, curious for the technical objection which was the subject of preliminary discussion, decided by the Sheriff-substitute of Dumfriesshire. The subject of investigation was the state of mind of Pulteney William Mein, Canonbie. The pleadings or briefs described the party as maximus filius. This description was objected to on the part of the defendant as being misdescriptive. It was contended that maximus filius would have been a good description of the largest son, but to describe the eldest it should have been maximus natus. Sheriff Trotter overruled the objection, and the case proceeded on its merits, when, after an inquiry of three days, the jury found a verdict "cognosing" Mr. Mein—in other words, finding him insane.

4.—The Holsteiners, who had been laying siege to Friederichstadt since the 29th of September, bombard the fortress to-day, and greatly injure the town. They were, however, compelled to retire, leaving the place in the hands of the Danes. The Prussian volunteers being recalled soon afterwards, the Duchies for the time being submitted to the authority of Denmark.

— Commencement of the Papal Aggression agitation. Lord John Russell writes to the Bishop of Durham (whose letter was not made public):—"I agree with you in considering the late aggression of the Pope upon our Protestantism as insolent and invidious, and I therefore feel as indignant as you can do upon the subject. I not only promoted to the utmost of my power the claims of the Roman Catholics to all civil rights, but I thought it right, and even desirable, that the ecclesiastical system of the Roman Catholics should be the means of giving instruction to the numerous Irish immigrants in London or elsewhere, who, without such help, would be left in heathen ignorance. This might have been done, however, without any such innovation as that which we have now seen. It is impossible to confound the recent measures of the Pope with the division of Scotland into dioceses by the Episcopal Church, or the arrangement of districts in England by the Wesleyan Conference. There is an assumption of power in all the documents which have come from Rome, a pretension of supremacy over the realm of England, and a claim to sole and undivided sway, which is inconsistent with the Queen's supremacy, with the rights of our bishops and clergy, and with the spiritual independence of the nation as asserted even in the Roman Catholic times. I confess, however, that my alarm is not equal to my indignation.

Even if it shall appear that the ministers and servants of the Pope in this country have not transgressed the law, I feel persuaded that we are strong enough to repel any outward attacks. The liberty of Protestantism has been enjoyed too long in England to allow of any successful attempt to impose a foreign yoke upon our minds and consciences. No foreign prince or potentate will be permitted to fasten his fetters upon a nation which has so long and so nobly vindicated its right to freedom of opinion, civil, political, and religious. Upon this subject, then, I will only say, that the present state of the law shall be carefully examined, and the propriety of adopting any proceedings with reference to the recent assumption of power deliberately considered. There is a danger, however, which alarms me much more than any aggression of a foreign sovereign. Clergymen of our own Church, who have subscribed the Thirty-nine Articles, and acknowledged in explicit terms the Queen's supremacy, have been the most forward in leading their flocks, 'step by step, to the very verge of the precipice.' The honour paid to saints, the claim of infallibility for the Church, the superstitious use of the sign of the Cross, the muttering of the Liturgy, so as to disguise the language in which it is written, the recommendation of auricular confession, and the administration of penance and absolution—all these things are pointed out by clergymen of the Church of England as worthy of adoption, and are now openly reprehended by the Bishop of London in his charge to the clergy of his diocese. What, then, is the danger to be apprehended from a foreign prince of no great power, compared to the danger within the gates from the unworthy sons of the Church of England herself? I have little hope that the propounders and framers of these innovations will desist from their invidious course. But I rely with confidence on the people of England, and I will not bate a jot of heart or hope, so long as the glorious principles and the immortal martyrs of the Reformation shall be held in reverence by the great mass of a nation which looks with contempt on the mummeries of superstition, and with scorn at the laborious endeavours which are now making to confine the intellect and enslave the soul."

10.—The President of the French Republic reviews the troops on the Plaine de Satory. The infantry make no demonstrations in his favour, but various regiments of cavalry passed by, shouting "Vive le Président!" "Vive l'Empereur!"

12.—The Committee of Permanence of the French Legislative Assembly pass a resolution, censuring General d'Hautpoul, the Minister of War, for not observing the military regulations and the discipline of the army, during the above review at Satory.

13.—The Abdul Medjid, Turkish line-of-battle ship, accidentally blown up in the Bos-phorus, and about 500 of the people on board killed. On the 8th of the following month the French war-ship, Talmy, blew up off Torbay, and twenty of her crew were killed.

16.—Massacre of the Christian population of Aleppo. After nightfall, numerous armed bands of fanatical Moslems forcibly entered the dwellings of the Christians, plundering every house, and, wherever the least resistance was shown, wounding and murdering the inmates. On the 17th the same scenes continued to be perpetrated. The roads leading from the city were thronged with Christians—men, women, and children—all hurrying away in terror from the burning of their churches, the desecration of their houses, and the ruthless slaughter of their relatives. On the morning of the 17th, the Pasha hastily removed to the military barracks, where, surrounded by the troops, he remained an almost passive spectator of what was going on in the town beneath. Honourable mention was made of the conduct of M. Lesseps, the French Consul, who distinguished himself in his unceasing endeavours to provide for the wants of the distressed. He received in his consulate upwards of 200, and daily supplied the personal requirements of about 600 others. A signal chastisement was inflicted on the Moslems by Kerim Pasha on the 7th of December. Their quarter of the city was almost entirely destroyed, and about 1,800 of the rebels shot.

20.—Mr. Cureton, of the British Museum, robbed and assaulted in his lodgings in Aldersgate-street. In the afternoon three men, fashionably dressed, inquired for him in the lower part of the house, and were directed to go upstairs. They remained there about a quarter of an hour, and then left. On Mr. Cureton's attendant entering the room with some milk for his tea she found him insensible on the floor, his face quite black, and blood flowing from a wound in his forehead. Seven hours elapsed before he was restored to consciousness. Mr. Cureton then said that he had been robbed as well as maltreated. The three visitors, under pretence of purchasing an old crown-piece of William and Mary, induced their victim to produce his collection of coins, when one of them forced an instrument round his throat, and at the same time administered a blow on the forehead which deprived him of consciousness. The thieves then ransacked the place, carrying off a watch, a diamond pin, a box of cigars, and old coins worth from 300*l.* to 400*l.* as antiques, but not so many shillings if melted down for silver.

21.—The second line of tubes of the Britannia Bridge opened for public traffic, that great structure being now in all respects complete. A train consisting of two locomotives and twenty-eight waggons, with 280 tons of coal, caused a deflection of only three-fourths of an inch.

25.—Banquet given by the Lord Mayor of York to Prince Albert and the Mayors of the chief cities and towns of the United Kingdom. Lord John Russell attended with several members of the Government, and the Commissioners for the Great Exhibition of 1851. His Royal Highness, in responding to the toast of his health, took occasion to refer to the loss which the Commissioners had sustained by the death of Sir Robert Peel. "The constitution of Sir Robert Peel's mind," he said, "was peculiarly that of a statesman. He was Liberal from feeling, but Conservative upon principle; whilst his impulse drove him to foster progress, his sagacious mind and great experience showed him how easily the whole machinery of a State and of society is deranged, and how important and how difficult also it is to direct its further development in accordance with its fundamental principles, like organic growth in nature. It was peculiar to him, that in great things, as in small, all the difficulties and objections occurred to him first. He would anxiously consider them, pause, and warn against rash resolutions; but, having convinced himself, after a long and careful investigation, that a step was not only right to be taken, but of the practical mode also of safely taking it, it became to him a necessity and a duty to take it. All his caution and apparent timidity changed into courage and power of action, and, at the same time, readiness cheerfully to make any personal sacrifice which its execution might demand."

27.—Cardinal Wiseman issues an appeal to the people of England in justification of the recent measures of the Pope. In an introduction, he treated (1) of the Royal Supremacy, and bishops named by the Crown; (2) of the extent of religious toleration granted to Catholics; (3) how Catholics could obtain their hierarchy; (4) does the appointment of a Catholic hierarchy tread on the prerogative of the Crown? (5) has the mode of establishing the hierarchy been insolent or invidious? (6) the title of Westminster. On the latter point he wrote: "The diocese consists of two very different parts—one comprises the stately Abbey with its adjacent palaces and its royal parks. To this portion the duties and occupation of the Dean and Chapter are mainly confined; and they shall range there undisturbed. To the venerable old church I may repair, as I have been wont to do. But, perhaps the Dean and Chapter are not aware that, were I disposed to claim more than the right to tread the Catholic pavement of that noble building, and breathe its air of ancient consecration, another might step in with a prior claim. For successive generations there has existed ever, in the Benedictine order, an Abbot of Westminster, the representative, in religious dignity, of those who erected, and beautified, and governed that church and cloister. Have they ever been disturbed by this 'titular?' Then let them fear no greater aggression now. Like him, I may visit, as I have said, the old abbey, and say my prayer by the shrine of good Saint Edward; and meditate on the olden times, when the church filled without a coronation, and multitudes hourly worshipped without a service. Yet this splendid monument, its treasures of art, and its fitting endowments, form not the part of Westminster which will concern me. For there is another part which stands in frightful contrast, though in immediate contact, with this magnificence. Close under the Abbey of Westminster there lie concealed labyrinths of lanes and courts, and alleys, and slums, nests of ignorance, vice, depravity, and crime, as well as of squalor, wretchedness, and disease; whose atmosphere is typhus, whose ventilation is cholera; in which swarms a huge and almost countless population, in great measure, nominally at least, Catholic; haunts of filth which no sewage committee can reach—dark corners which no lighting board can brighten. This is the part of Westminster which alone I covet, and which I shall be glad to claim and visit as a blessed pasture in which sheep of Holy Church are to be tended, in which a bishop's godly work has to be done, of consoling, converting, and preserving."

30.—An Educational Conference held in Manchester, for the purpose of converting the Lancashire Public Schools Association into a National Public School Association, with purely secular objects.

November 1.—An Austro-Bavarian force occupies Hanau, and a Prussian force Cassel, both within the duchy.

2.—Rupture between the President of the French Republic and General Changarnier. The latter issued an order of the day, reminding the army under his command that its province is "not to deliberate, and that it must utter no cry whatever when in arms."

— The Frankfort Diet commands the immediate suspension of hostilities in Schleswig-Holstein, under pain of the armed intervention of the German Confederation.

7.—The King of Prussia issues a decree calling out the whole Prussian army.

9.—An Austrian force of 30,000 men advance into Hesse-Cassel on the march to the Duchies.

11.—Explosion of fire-damp in Houghton Pit, near Durham. The occurrence took place while 150 miners were in the workings. A few were choked or blown to atoms, but the largest number reached a spot where, though surrounded by the choke-damp on every side, they yet had breathing space for some hours. A communication was fortunately effected with them, and 124 were brought up the shaft, alive. The remaining twenty-six were found dead in the workings.

12.—The Goldsmiths' Company decide to award 1,000*l.* for prizes to be given to artists of the craft in the United Kingdom, who can duce works of the highest design and merit, in gold or silver plate, for the Exhibition of 1851.

13.—Prince Louis Napoleon, in his address to the Assembly, writes that “the first duty of authorities was to inspire the people with respect for the law, by never deviating from it themselves. His anxiety was not to know who would govern France in 1852, but to employ the time at his disposal, so that the transition, whatever it might be, should be effected without agitation or disturbance. The noblest object, and the most worthy of an exalted mind, is not to seek when in power to perpetuate it, but to labour inseparably to fortify, for the benefit of all, those principles of authority and morality which defy the fashions of mankind and the instability of laws.”

16.—The President of the French Republic calls out to active service 40,000 additional men, in consequence of the threatening state of Germany.

17.—Died in his caravan at Richmond, Yorkshire, aged 73, Jeremiah Wombwell, or “Old Jerry,” as he was familiarly called, the owner of the greatest itinerating menagerie ever collected in this country.

19.—Wreck of the Edmond in a storm on Dungana Rocks, Bay of Kilkee, and loss of 96 lives; 100 of the survivors were rescued by the Coast-guard.

21.—The King of Prussia opens the Chambers with a speech in which he declares the failure of his attempt to frame a constitution that should answer the wants of the German nation.

26.—The Worthing life-boat upset when attempting to render assistance to the Lalla Rookh, East Indiaman. The whole of those on board, eleven in number, were drowned. So much interest was excited by the gallantry of the unfortunate seamen, that 5,000*l.* was collected in a short time for the relief of their wives and orphans, sixty in number.

27.—Resignation by Mr. Bennett of his perpetual curacy of St. Paul's, Knightsbridge, and of his ministrations at St. Barnabas, Pimlico. The Bishop of London wrote:—“Upon the whole, if you are not prepared to comply simpliciter and ex animo with the requisition contained in my letter, I must call upon you to fulfil your offer of retiring from a charge which, I deliberately think, you could not in that case continue to hold without great injury to the Church.”

28.—Conference at Olmutz between Russia and Austria and Prussia, to arrange the Duchy dispute. The Prussian parliament rejected the terms accepted by Baron von Manteuffel.

—The hereditary head of the English Roman Catholics pronounces against the aggressive organization of the hierarchy. The Duke of Norfolk writes to Lord Beaumont: “I so entirely coincide in the opinions in your letter to Lord Zetland, that I must write to you to express my agreement with them. I should think that you must feel as we do, that Ultramontane opinions are totally incompatible with allegiance to our Sovereign and with our Constitution.”

In his private history of the creation of the Roman Catholic hierarchy in England, Sir George Bowyer writes that after Dr. Wiseman's arrival in London, “By the advice of the late Mr. Charles Greville, I went to Lord Lansdowne, then Lord President of the Council, and found him deeply distressed at the state of things in the country. He assured me that Lord John Russell had published the Durham letter without communication with his colleagues, and that he (Lord Lansdowne) deeply regretted it. After listening attentively to my explanations, his lordship told me there was a matter which must be cleared up because it affected the personal loyalty of the cardinal. It had been stated that he had struck out the prayer for the Queen from the Missal, and this accusation having reached her Majesty, had naturally made a very unfavourable impression on her mind.” This fact, Sir George continues, was fully and satisfactorily explained to Lord Lansdowne as arising from the mistake of the publisher of the Missal for the Litany inserting the prayer for the Queen in the Canon of the Mass—which was the exclusive privilege of the kings of Spain. Her Majesty was prayed for in the same way as Catholic sovereigns were prayed for in their own dominions.

December 2.—George Hacket (a notorious thief) escapes from the Model Prison, Pentonville.

—As illustrating the fervour of the aggressive agitation, the Publishers' Circular of this date contains a list of 78 works on the Papal controversy, published between the 14th and 30th November.

5.—The Prussian troops withdraw from Cassel.

7.—Inquiry commenced at the Guildhall Police Court into the charges preferred against George Sloane, a special pleader in the Middle Temple, and his wife, of starving and maltreating their servant, Jane Willbred. The details were of so revolting a description that the people in the court burst frequently into shouts of indignation, and Alderman Humphrey declared that his feelings would hardly allow him to continue the examination. On leaving the court on one of the days of inquiry, Sloane was set upon by a mob and pelted almost through the City to his chambers in the Temple. The Sloanes were tried at the Central Criminal Court before Mr. Justice Coleridge, on the 5th of February ensuing, and sentenced to imprisonment for two years.

10.—The Queen gives audience to deputations from the Corporation of London, and the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, to receive addresses adopted by them with reference to the establishment of a Romish hierarchy in this country. To the University of Oxford her Majesty replied:—"While I cordially concur in the wish that all classes of my subjects should enjoy the free exercise of their religion, you may rely on my determination to uphold alike the rights of my Crown, and the independence of my people, against all aggressions and encroachments of any foreign power." Large and excited meetings were now being held daily throughout the kingdom on the subject of the Papal aggression. As many as 6,700 were reported to have taken place before the 31st instant.

10.—At a fête given in the Hôtel de Ville, to celebrate the anniversary of the election of the President, Louis Napoleon said: "At present I am happy to be able to admit that calm has returned to men's minds; that the dangers which existed two years back have disappeared, and that, notwithstanding the uncertainty of matters, a future peace is reckoned on, because it is felt that if modifications are to take place they will be accomplished without trouble."

— Austria and Prussia mutually decree a reduction of their armed forces.

12.—The Queen resumes the dramatic entertainments at Windsor Castle, under the direction of Mr. Charles Kean.

15.—Sir Charles Napier issues a farewell address to the Indian army, censuring with great severity the habits of extravagance which had taken root among the officers, and especially the ruinous vice of getting deeply into debt. The address concludes in a more touching strain:—"To-day I am Commander-in-chief; a week hence I shall be no more to the armies of India than a private gentleman; but the armies of India must ever be much and dear to me. For nine years my whole energies, such as they are, have been devoted to the honour and glory of the Company's troops. I may say that I have become as much identified with the armies of the three Presidencies as if I had risen from their ranks. I have jealously guarded their honour, and I have fought at their head. I now leave them for ever. But in the retirement of private life, although no longer able to serve them, the destinies of the Indian armies will ever occupy my thoughts. I here take leave of them, hoping that this order will be of use, as the last which I can issue to the armies of India."

16.—The tide breaks into the new sewage works under Northumberland-street, Charing Cross, and drowns two workmen engaged in the drain. The others, fourteen in number, escaped.

23.—A conference opened at Dresden on the 23d of December for the purpose of adjusting the federal relations of the German states.

29.—Outbreak of another Caffre war at the Cape. Sir Harry Smith being shut up with a small force at Fort Cox, Colonel Somerset attempted to push forward a relieving detachment from Fort Hare. The Caffres, well armed with guns and spears, attacked him in immense numbers and with determined courage. After four hours' hard fighting, frequently hand to hand, Colonel Somerset was compelled to retire, leaving in the enemy's hand the only piece of artillery which had been used on the field. On the 21st of the following month the Caffres, then about 6,000 strong, attacked Fort Hare, and were driven back with a loss of about 100. The Fingoes, a native race, formerly held in bondage by the Caffres, assisted the British troops on this occasion with great courage and fortitude.

31.—The Archbishop of Canterbury, in replying to an address of the Irish prelates complaining that in the recent address to her Majesty the phrase had been used "the Archbishop and Bishops of the Church of England" instead of "the United Church of England and Ireland," writes: "The designation did not originate in any desire to represent ourselves as a separate body, but was employed solely because in the present instance 'the movement of the common adversary' was immediately directed against ourselves." The Irish prelates afterwards presented an address of their own, concluding: "Whatever may be the defensive measures determined on for securing the National Church against injury, the two portions of it must not be regarded or treated as having separate interests, but one and the same legislative protection must be extended to both branches of the Church in common."

January 1.—Burglary with great violence on the premises of the Misses Farncombe, Uckfield, near Lewes. The gang retreated with plunder valued at 300*l.*, but quarrelling over its division, they were all secured by the police, and sentenced at Lewes assizes to transportation for life.

5.—Father Gavazzi, an Italian priest, of extreme Republican views, commences a course of anti-Popery lectures in the Princess's Concert Room. He spoke in Italian with extraordinary force and eloquence, and his lectures attracted crowds of exiled Italians and English hearers.

8.—Meeting at Manchester to promote the establishment of a free library and museum.

10.—The Stadtholders of Holstein issue a proclamation, placing the rights of the country under the protection of the Germanic Confederation.

— Formation of a new French Ministry, and removal of General Changarnier from the office of commander-in-chief of the National Guard of the Seine. He was succeeded by General Baraguay d'Hilliers.

11.—Concluded in the Court of Delegates, Dublin, the protracted and important case of Thewles v. Kelly. It arose out of the will of the late Mr. Edward Kelly, a Galway solicitor and land-agent, who had accumulated a fortune, in real and personal property, to the amount of 3,000*l.* a year in landed estates, and 250,000*l.* in the Funds. This was left by the disputed will to the respondent, who, it was alleged, was married to him. On the part of the appellants it was contended that the will was the result of undue influence. The delegates were now unanimous in annulling that instrument. The respondent was also condemned costs amounting to 15,000*l.*

—The brig New Commercial, of Whitby, wrecked off Land's End, and the crew washed one by one off a ledge of rock on which they sought to take refuge from the tempest.

12.—Died at Clumber Park, Nottingham, in his 76th year, the Duke of Newcastle, celebrated for his resistance to the Reform Bill of 1832.

14.—Clerical meeting in Freemasons' Hall, to address the Crown for the revival of Convocation.

15.—Fire in Ben Caunt's public-house, St. Martin's-lane, resulting in the death of one woman and two children, whose retreat was cut off by the flames before assistance could reach them.

18.—The French Legislative Assembly vote a want of confidence in the new Ministry, by 417 against 278.

19.—The Socialists of the Bernese Oberland seize Interlaken, but are expelled next day by the Cantonal troops.

20.—Commencement of strike of seamen in the north-east ports against the Mercantile Marine Act. Between 6,000 and 7,000 sailors threw themselves idle.

21.—The Bishop of Durham addresses the Archdeacon of Lindisfarne on the subject of the Papal aggression:—"I am persuaded that no wish exists generally for any measure but what self-defence requires. An outrageous attack has been made upon us, but I trust adequate means may be devised for our own security, without disturbing the free exercise of religion by others, or infringing their rights of conscience. It surely cannot be necessary to the maintenance of these great ends, that a foreign potentate should be permitted to insult a great nation, trample upon the rights of the Sovereign as secured by law, and disturb the peace and good order of the Established Church. In order to prevent such evils, it may be necessary to provide some restrictions upon the introduction and circulation of Papal bulls in this island, and to prohibit the assumption of episcopal titles conferred by Rome, and deriving their name from any place in this country. It may also be desirable to forbid the existence of monastic institutions, strictly so called; nor can the residence of any Jesuits appear otherwise than injurious among Scotch and English Protestants."

23.—At a great meeting of the friends of the Liberal and Free-trade interests, called to discuss the present aspect of public affairs, Mr. Cobden makes reference to the charge brought against him of being a disappointed demagogue:—"This disappointed demagogue wants no public employment; if I did, I might have had it before now. I want no favour, and, as my friend Bright says, no title. I want nothing that any Government or any party can give me, and if I am in the House of Commons at all, it is to give my feeble aid to the advancement of certain questions on which I have strong convictions. Deprive me of that power; tell me I am not to do this, because it is likely to destroy a Government with which, at the present moment, I can have no sympathy; I say, then, the sooner I return to printing calicoes, or something more profitable than sitting up in the House of Commons night after night, the better both for me and my friends."

25.—A troop of banditti seize the keys of Forlino-Popoli, and entering the theatre, where most of the inhabitants were assembled, rob them of all their valuables.

27.—Died at New York, aged 76, James Audubon, F.R.S., naturalist.

—Earl Grey writes to Lord Elgin, Governor-General of Canada, that her Majesty has been pleased to receive very graciously the address of the Canadian Assembly, praying that the clergy revenues might be placed at the disposal of the colonial legislature. "While her Majesty's servants greatly regret that a subject of so much difficulty should, after an interval of some years, have again been brought under discussion, it has appeared to them, on mature deliberation, that the desire expressed by the Assembly in this address ought to be acceded to. They will accordingly be prepared to recommend to Parliament that an act should be passed, giving to the provincial legislature full authority to make such alterations as they may think fit in the existing arrangements, provided that existing interests are respected."

28.—Died at Bithoor, Bajee Rao, ex-Peishwa of Mahrattas. His adopted heir, Nana Sahib, made an unsuccessful application to the Company for a continuance of the pension of 80,000*l.*

—Fire at New Cross railway station, destroying twenty carriages.

February 1.—Died, at her residence, Ches-ter-square, London, aged 53, Mary Wollstonecraft, daughter of William Godwin, and wife of Shelley.

2.—England protests against the entrance of Austria, with all her states, into the Germanic Confederation. A French protest had been sent to Vienna a few days earlier.

4.—Parliament opened by the Queen in person. The most important paragraph in the Royal Speech referred to the Papal Aggression:—"The recent assumption of certain ecclesiastical titles conferred by a foreign power, has excited strong feelings in this country; and large bodies of my subjects have presented addresses to me, expressing attachment to the Throne, and praying that such assumptions should be resisted. I have assured them of my resolution to maintain the rights of my Crown, and the independence of the nation against all encroachments from whatever quarter they may proceed. I have at the same time expressed my earnest desire and firm determination, under God's blessing, to maintain unimpaired the religious liberty which is so justly prized by the people of this country. It will be for you to consider the measure which will be laid before you on this subject." Another paragraph lamented "the difficulties which are still felt by that important body among my people who are owners and occupiers of land." In the debate on the Address, Mr. Roebuck censured Lord John Russell for needlessly raising an excitement on the subject of the Papal bishops. "This so-called territorial aggression was no new thing; it began years ago, and had been sanctioned by the noble lord himself. Where was the aggression upon her Majesty's prerogative, because Dr. Wiseman chose to call himself a Cardinal, and put on a large hat and red stockings? Was it," he asked, "wise or worthy of the noble lord, so long the advocate of civil and religious liberty, to aid a cry which had its source in some of the vilest passions, and lend the sanction of his great name to the puritanical bigotry of England?" Mr. Disraeli also criticised the letter of Lord John Russell, which he thought had not been provoked solely by the appointment of Dr. Wiseman—an act not insidious, but frank almost to indiscretion, nor insolent, for it was fully expected, and was in daily operation in Ireland. It was connected with the existing state of our relations with Rome. Lord John Russell defended his letter, denied any wish to persecute Roman Catholics, and promised to bring in a bill on the subject. The Address was voted without a division.

— In the course of the debate on the Address, Colonel Sibthorp prayed that some hail-storm or some visitation of lightning might descend to defeat the ill-advised project in Hyde Park. When the foreigners came he warned the people of this metropolis to beware of thieves, pickpockets, and whoremongers: "Take care," he said, "of your wives and daughters—take care of your lives and property."

— Lord Redesdale elected Chairman of Committees in the Lords, in room of Lord Shaftesbury, resigned.

5.—The two Houses of Convocation meet in the Jerusalem Chamber, but on the Lower House attempting to discuss the propriety of a petition to the Archbishop, lamenting the suppression of synodical action, an officer entered the Chamber and prorogued the assembly.

— Explosion of the Flower while getting up steam in Glasgow harbour.

7.—Lord J. Russell moves for leave to bring in a bill to prevent the assumption of certain Ecclesiastical Titles, in respect of places in the United Kingdom. In order, he said, to protect the Catholic laity from aggression, and to guard against the absorption of endowments, the measure he designed to introduce would forbid the assumption by Roman Catholics of titles taken from any territory or place within the United Kingdom, and would contain clauses rendering void all acts done by parties under these titles. Any bequest made to them would at once fall into the power of the Crown to administer. Referring to the alleged complicity of Lord Minto in the aggression, Lord John stated that, certainly at one interview, the Pope, pointing to a table in the room, said, "There is something there that regards you." But Lord Minto did not look at the paper, or make any observation whatever on the subject. Neither the Pope nor any other person said, "Here is a paper that we would wish you to take and peruse, and afterwards submit it to your Government." If anything was said at all, it was only, "That is a project that concerns you." The debate was continued over a week, when leave was given to bring in the bill, by a majority of 395 to 63.

10.—Debate on the President's Dotation Bill commenced in the French Chamber. Rejected by 396 to 294.

11.—Mr. Disraeli moves "That the severe distress which continues to exist in the United Kingdom among that important class of her Majesty's subjects, the owners and occupiers of land, and which is justly lamented in her Majesty's Speech, renders it the duty of her Majesty's Ministers to introduce without delay such measures as may be most effectual for the relief thereof." The object of the motion, he explained, was not to dispute the fact of the general prosperity of the country, or to attack the new commercial system, but to adapt the condition of the owners and occupiers of land to that system. What these classes required was only justice. They did not shrink from competition, but they asked not to be forced into it manacled. On the second night of the debate, Sir James Graham said the day for recalling Protection, or for any attempt to enhance the price of food, was past. "You may convulse the country—you may endanger property—you may shake our institutions to the foundations, but I am satisfied there is no person in England who can permanently enhance by force of law the price of bread. That is my honest and firm conviction. I feel we have arrived at a period when it is necessary to speak the truth, and I have spoken it without reservation." In an impressive peroration, he appealed to the latest declaration of the "champion of our present policy," the late Sir Robert Peel. "Though dead," Sir James observed, "he still speaks; and from the tomb I hear the echo of his voice. I earnestly hope I may never live to see the day when the House of Commons shall retrace its steps." On a division, at the close of the second night's debate, the numbers were—for the motion, 267; against, 281.

14.—J. W. Hodgetts, chemist, killed in an explosion at Springfield-lane Chemical Works, near Salford.

17.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer submits his annual financial statement to the House. The income from all sources he estimated at 52,140,000*l.*, and the expenditure at 50,247,171*l.* He proposed to apply 1,000,000*l.* of the anticipated surplus in reducing a portion of the recently contracted National Debt, and the balance in making up the deficiency that would arise by the transference of the tax on windows to a tax on houses of a certain value. The Budget was unfavourably received, particularly the portion relating to the qualified repeal of the Window-duty.

— A Royal Commission appointed to inquire into the state of Dublin University.

18.—Concluded in the Court of Exchequer after a trial extending over twelve days, the case of the Attorney-General v. the London Dock Company. The Board of Customs charged the Company with systematically encouraging and countenancing, on the part of their servants, fraudulent malpractices for the Company's benefit, and to the injury both of the mercantile community and of the Customs' revenue. The case presented was an information filed by the Attorney-General with reference to 8,000 lbs. of coffee, and 250 cwt. of ginger, landed by the Dock Company without duly reporting them to the Customs' authorities. The first count in the information charged the defendants with having landed these goods without a due report having been made; the second, with landing them without the duty being paid or secured; the third, with delivering them out without the duty being paid or secured; the fourth and fifth, for warehousing them without due entry; sixth, for clandestinely moving the goods from one warehouse to another; seventh, for fraudulently concealing them in a warehouse; eighth for fraudulently moving them from the warehouse. A vast number of witnesses were examined in the course of the trial, the evidence for the Crown seeking to establish against the Dock Company the practice of a system of breach of legal regulations, fraudulent extraction of goods and evasion of duties, to an extent of several thousand pounds sterling a year. Many of the witnesses for the Crown were formerly in the service of the Dock Company; but previously to and during the trial were supported by funds supplied by the Customs. According to their testimony, it was quite a usual practice on the part of the Dock officers to abstract from every cargo of sugar a quantity varying from half a ton to three or four tons, and apply it to the service and benefit of the Company in various ways,—a locality named Davis's corner being especially mentioned, where good sugar was customarily adulterated and prepared so as to make refuse or molasses to sell to refiners and scum-boilers at a profit. Several of these witnesses, however, on cross-examination, proved to be men of indifferent character, and their testimony not to be worthy of much credit. The personal allegations against the Directors were withdrawn in the course of the trial. The jury returned the following verdict: "We find for the Crown on the 7th and 8th counts; as to the two boxes of sugar, and as to all the 57 packages of cocoa, for the defendants; at the same time we couple with the verdict a recommendation that greater strictness should be observed by the Company towards their subordinate servants, in order to prevent irregularities which have occurred."

19.—Destructive fire in Tooley-street, breaking out in the warehouse belonging to Mr. Alderman Humphrey. Damage estimated at 60,000*l.* The following evening another fire of great magnitude occurred in Eastcheap, destroying a large quantity of foreign produce.

20.—Mr. Locke King obtains leave to bring in a bill to reduce the franchise in counties to 10*l.* by a majority of 100 to 52 over Ministers.

21.—Edward Hargreaves, formerly of California, discovers gold at Conobolos, near Bathurst. He obtained a reward from the Colonial Government, and the appointment of Commissioner of Crown-lands.

22.—The Times makes the unexpected announcement that Lord John Russell and his colleagues had resigned office. Consols fell from 96½ to 95½.

— Sailors' strike on the Tyne and Wear terminated by the Board of Trade engaging to suspend the operation of the obnoxious clauses of the Mercantile Marine Act of last session.

23.—Died, at Hampstead, aged 89, Joanna Baillie, poetess.

24.—Announcement of the ministerial crisis. Lord John Russell, adverting to the results of Mr. Disraeli's and Mr. Locke King's motions—the first giving the Government a majority of only fourteen upon a vital question, the second leaving them in a minority—said he had come to the conclusion, that they were not in a position to conduct satisfactorily the business of the country in that House, during the session. He had, therefore, with the concurrence of his colleagues, tendered their resignation to her Majesty, who had accepted it, and informed him of her intention to send for Lord Stanley. He had since been informed by her Majesty, that Lord Stanley was not prepared to form a government, and her Majesty had asked him to undertake the charge of reconstructing one. He was now attempting that task, and asked the House to adjourn till Friday the 28th. Mr. Disraeli expressed his conviction, that in saying Lord Stanley had informed her Majesty that he was not then prepared to form an administration, Lord J. Russell had made a statement to the House, which, on further consideration, he would acknowledge was not founded upon what had really occurred. A statement similar in substance to Lord John Russell's was made in the House of Lords by the Marquis of Lansdowne. On the 28th, Lord Aberdeen explained the reluctance of the Peelites to join Lord John Russell's administration, by their great objection to his Ecclesiastical Titles Bill. On the same day Lord John Russell further explained the various abortive attempts which had been made to form a ministry, and defended himself from the charge brought against him by Mr. Disraeli, by the production of the letters which had passed between Lord Stanley and the Queen and Prince Albert. On the 3rd of March it was intimated in both Houses that in obedience to the Queen's invitation, and in conformity with the advice of the Duke of Wellington, her Majesty's former Ministers had resumed their places.

25.—Meeting of Roman Catholic prelates at Dublin, to protest against the impolicy and injustice of the proposed Ecclesiastical Titles Bill. "We view the proposed measure as retrogressive and penal in its character, an infringement upon religious liberty, an unwarrantable interference with the discipline of our Church, and a departure from the policy recently pursued by the Legislature in facilitating the voluntary endowment of the Roman Catholic hierarchy and clergy in this country. . . . We object to the measure, because it has been conceived and formed in a spirit of hostility to the Roman Catholic religion, and because it is calculated to revive animosities which have been so baneful to our country, and which in later years have been rapidly subsiding." The Romish Archbishop of Tuam wrote to Lord John Russell: "Opposition—stern, persevering opposition—to your hateful measure, in season and out of season, is the paramount duty of every Irish member of Parliament, as well as opposition to every other measure you propose, until you abandon the bill which in an evil hour you proposed, or until once more you abandon the helm."

— The Earl of St. Germans' Bill for Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister thrown out in the House of Lords, by 50 to 16 votes.

26.—Mr. Macready takes leave of the stage in a farewell benefit at Drury Lane, sustaining the character of Macbeth.

27.—The pretender Tien-teh (Celestial Virtue) appears at the head of a body of Chinese insurgents who had risen to expel the Tartars, and drive the young Emperor from the throne. They became afterwards known as Taepings, or "Princes of Peace," and affected some outward regard for the doctrines of Christianity.

March 1.—Dinner given to Mr. Macready in the Hall of Commerce on his retirement from the stage. The chair was occupied by Sir E. Bulwer Lytton. In the course of the evening Mr. Forster read a parting sonnet addressed to their guest by the Poet Laureate.

3.—Eight fires raging in the metropolis at one time this evening.

— The American Senate adopt a resolution to despatch a Government vessel to carry Kossuth and his companions to the United States.

— The fine old Indiaman, Buckinghamshire, destroyed by incendiary Lascars in the Hooghly, a little below Diamond Harbour. The whole of her valuable cargo was lost, and two of her crew.

5.—Meeting in St. Martin's Hall, Long Acre, to promote the repeal of the taxes on knowledge.

6.—Tried at Chelmsford Assizes, Sarah Chesham, a woman of masculine proportions, charged with administering poison to her husband with intent to murder him. This case excited much interest on account of the terrible celebrity gained by the prisoner. She was tried in 1847, at the same assizes, for poisoning the illegitimate child of Lydia Taylor, but acquitted. In 1848 she was again acquitted on a charge of poisoning two of her own children. She was subsequently implicated in another charge of poisoning, but again escaped justice; and in 1849, a woman named May, who was convicted of poisoning her husband, and executed for the crime, confessed that she had been instigated by the prisoner to the commission of the offence for which she suffered. The evidence now adduced fully brought home the charge to the prisoner of having administered arsenic in a rice-pudding to her husband, who, after lingering in pain for some weeks, died in May 1849. She was sentenced to be executed, and heard her doom without the slightest emotion.

7.—Sir George Grey re-introduces the Ecclesiastical Titles Bill, with the omission of the second and third clauses relating to the collation and induction of priests in Ireland, and the succession to bequests; the measure, as he explained, thus bearing an unambiguous declaration of Parliament against the assumption of titles only.

— The Lord Mayor of Dublin, accompanied by several aldermen, appears at the bar of the House of Commons to present a petition against the abolition of the Irish Vice-royalty.

8.—Tried at Chelmsford Assizes, Thomas Drory, farmer, aged 23, charged with murdering Jael Denny, at Doddinghurst, by strangling her with a rope. Drory had previously seduced his victim. He was found guilty, and executed with Sarah Chesham above referred to.

9.—Died at Copenhagen, in his 74th year, Professor Oersted, a Danish natural philosopher of great reputation, discoverer, inter alia, of the connexion between galvanism and electricity.

10.—The Upper Parliament House in Berlin destroyed by fire.

11.—Government defeated by a majority of one on Lord Duncan's motion to bring the revenues of Crown-lands under control of the House of Commons.

13.—Died, Carl Lachmann of Berlin, one of the greatest of modern philologists, aged 57.

14.—Compromise agreed to in the Court of Chancery in the case of Metaire v. Wiseman. The suit was brought by the next of kin of Mathurin Carré, a French refugee who came to this country in the year 1797, and, by the most penurious habits, amassed 10,000*l.* On his death-bed he disposed of 7,000*l.* of his money, by a deed of gift, for the purpose of founding a girls' school in connexion with the Roman Catholic chapel of St. Aloysius, in Somers Town. Cardinal Wiseman was the nominal defendant in consequence of his ecclesiastical status. The allegations of the plaintiffs were that their relative, a weak old man in the last stage of a mortal disease, had fallen under the influence of Holdstock, priest of the above chapel, who, hearing of his condition, and the amount of his property, had forced himself upon Carré, and induced, or rather compelled him, by religious threats, to make the deed of gift in question to the prejudice of his own kindred. After the plaintiffs had been heard at great length, the defendant, instead of entering upon his case, made an offer through counsel to pay the fund in dispute into court. This proposal was agreed to, and the proceedings came to an abrupt conclusion.

15.—Explosion of fire-damp in the Victoria Pit at Nitshill, near Paisley. The shock was so great that the sides and gearing were dislodged and filled up the shaft, making the labour of reaching the workmen unusually hazardous and tedious. Sixty-three men and a boy were in the works at the time of the explosion, and about twenty hours elapsed before communication could be had with any of them. Two were then got out alive, and though greatly exhausted were able to explain that they had been working in a part of the mine where the explosion was not so severe; their belief was that few or none of the others could then be living. This unfortunately turned out to be too true, all, sixty-one in number, being found dead in the pit.

17.—Died in Drummond-place, Edinburgh, Charles Kirkpatrick Sharpe, described by Sir Walter Scott as the Horace Walpole of Scotland.

17.—Boiler explosion at Marsland's cotton factory, Stockport, causing the death of twenty people.

25.—After a debate extending over the greater part of seven nights, the second reading of the Ecclesiastical Titles Bill was carried by a majority of 438 to 95. In the course of the discussion, on the 20th, being the fourth night, considerable excitement was created in the House by Mr. Henry Drummond declaring that nunneries might be considered as either prisons or brothels, accompanying the remark with an offensive allusion to the "Virgin Mary's milk." The Earl of Arundel and Surrey instantly called on the Speaker to interfere; but it was ruled that the member for Surrey was not out of order, inasmuch as he had used no expression which could be considered personally offensive to any member. At the same time the Speaker expressed a hope that members, in discussing a question of so much delicacy, would abstain from all expressions that might cause irritation. Sir James Graham said, "I have seen a gentleman, an accomplished gentleman and a scholar, so much heated by the subject we are now discussing, as entirely to forget what, I must say, is due to the feelings of a large body sitting in this House on terms of perfect equality. Although the orders of the House, according to its letter, may not have been violated by the honourable gentleman, yet, if Catholics are to sit here and take part in our debates, I must say that the rules of the House can hardly be preserved in spirit if scenes like the one we have just witnessed are allowed to be repeated. My noble friend (Lord J. Russell) has referred proudly to the names of Mackintosh, Romilly, Horner, Grey, and Althorp; but, alas! he omitted the great name of Grattan—now lying in the Abbey by the side of Pitt, Fox, Canning, and Wilberforce: does Lord John in his heart and conscience believe they would approve of this measure? Appealing then from the dead to the living, does Plunkett approve of it? does Brougham approve of it? does Denman approve of it?—oh that he were here to speak for himself!—Does Macaulay, the great historian of the Revolution, approve of the principle of this measure? There may have been some movement towards Rome on the surface of what are called the higher ranks; but the deep under-current of the feeling of this country is essentially Protestant. It is written in their very hearts' core; what is more, it is written in those Bibles to which they have access: and while they enjoy those privileges and possess those feelings, we have no occasion for a bill like this. I say there is no danger in England which justifies it—every feeling in Ireland condemns it. It is a brand of discord cast down to inflame the passions of the people; and, with confidence in the wisdom of Parliament, I hope, and confidently predict, the bill will never pass into a law." The bill was discussed in committee with great minuteness and energy for the greater part of three months. Attempts made to exempt Ireland from the operations of the bill were repeatedly negated by large majorities.

25.—Lord Langdale takes his leave of the bar practising in the Rolls Court, and is succeeded by Lord Romilly.

27.—Lord John Russell obtains leave to bring in a bill for the better Administration of the Court of Chancery. The intention (he said) was to retain the present combination of the legal and political functions in the office of Lord Chancellor, but to give him the assistance of the Master of the Rolls and a Common Law judge. It was further intended to transfer to the Crown the ecclesiastical patronage now vested in the Lord Chancellor, the Prime Minister of the day being responsible for its disposal. The bill, as amended in committee, passed through both Houses, and received the Royal Assent on the 7th of August.

29.—Imprisonment of Abd-el-Kader at the Château d'Amboise, on the Loire. Prince Louis Napoleon writes to the Marquis of Londonderry, who had interceded for the release of the captive Emir: "What you tell me of the Emir Abd-el-Kader has greatly interested me, and I find markedly in your solicitude for him the same generous heart that interceded some years since in favour of the prisoner of Ham. . . . No person will be more happy than I when it will be permitted me to render liberty to Abd-el-Kader. I shall be very glad to see the Emir; but I can only see him to announce good news. I am therefore, until that period arrives, deprived of the possibility of granting his request."

— The Marble Arch, formerly at Buckingham Palace, set up at Cumberland-gate, Hyde Park.

31.—Census of the United Kingdom taken. England and Wales, 17,922,768; Scotland, 2,870,784; Ireland, 6,515,794 (against 8,175,124 in 1841); London, 2,361,640.

April 1.—Sir George Grey, by the Queen's command, transmits to the Archbishop of Canterbury an address presented to her Majesty, signed by 230,000 members of the Established Church, with a letter recommending his Grace to take measures for discouraging and preventing innovations in the forms of public worship.

— In the course of a debate on Lord Torrington's administration of Ceylon, Earl Grey eulogized the ex-governor, and appealed to the Duke of Wellington to attest the difficulty of checking abuses during the existence of courts-martial. "My Lords," said the Duke, "I have in a foreign country carried on martial law; that is to say, I governed a large proportion of the country by my own will. What does that mean? Why, it means that the country should be governed by national laws. I governed the country by the laws of the country; and governed it, I must say, with such moderation, that the political servants of the country and of the Government whose forces were driven out, acted under my direction, and the judges sat in the courts of law, to conduct the business of the country under my direction. I never was in such a position as the noble Viscount who made the address to you has been in, and," continued the Duke, raising his voice to the highest pitch, and vehemently striking the table, "I protest against being called into comparison in any way whatever with him."

2.—Mr. Locke King's bill for assimilating the county and borough franchises, defeated on the motion for a second reading, by 299 to 83.

— Sir Alexander Cockburn, the new Attorney-General in room of Sir John Romilly, removed to the Rolls, elected for Southampton, without opposition.

— Silver shield presented to Mr. Brassey, railway contractor, by engineers, superintendents, and others with whom his great undertakings had brought him into contact.

— Lord Stanley entertained at Merchant Taylors' Hall by 280 of his political supporters. In replying to the toast of his health, he entered at great length into the present aspect of public affairs.

3.—Explosion of the powder magazine at Temezvar, Hungary.

4.—At Taunton Assizes, John Willes and John Smith were sentenced to be executed for murdering William Wilkins, at Nempnett, by beating him with a spade. They had commenced by robbing the premises occupied by Wilkins and his wife, an aged couple, and then, to screen themselves from detection, made a murderous attack on them with a spade and an Italian-iron. Wilkins died from the injuries received, but his wife recovered, and was able to identify the prisoners and give evidence in court. Willes and Smith were executed on the 23d.

5.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer introduces an amended budget to the House, showing, among other improvements, an unqualified abolition of the Window-duty.

7.—In a Committee of Ways and Means Mr. Herries submits a resolution:—"That the Income and Property-tax, and the Stamp-duties in Ireland, were granted for limited periods, and to meet temporary exigencies; that it is expedient to adhere to the declared intentions of Parliament; and in order to secure their speedy cessation, to limit the renewal of any portion of these taxes to such an amount as may suffice to provide for the expenditure sanctioned by Parliament and for the maintenance of public credit." After considerable discussion, the resolution was negatived by a majority of 278 to 239.

— The French refugees in London issue an address, disclaiming the principle of assassination and pillage attributed to them by Feargus O'Connor and others.

8.—Lord Ashley obtains leave to bring in a bill for the erection of lodging-houses for the working classes.

11.—The Duke of Saldanha issues a manifesto against the new Portuguese Minister Thomar. He was soon after placed at the head of affairs, and entered Lisbon in state.

14.—The St. Albans' Election Committee report that Mr. Jacob Bell was duly elected, but having been prevented from obtaining necessary evidence as to the improper practices alleged to have been carried on there, they recommend that a Commission be issued for inquiring into the alleged cases of bribery and corruption.

15.—Lord Mahon calls the attention of the House of Commons to the publication of school-books at the national expense; a step considered to be an undue interference with private competition, a grievance to the publishing trade, and an especial grievance to many deserving men, who had produced, by their own means, publications for the use of schools.

— Mr. Adderley moves for the presentation of an address to her Majesty, praying the appointment of a Commission, with instructions to proceed to South Africa, to inquire and report as to the best mode of adjusting the relations between this country and the Caffre tribes. Describing our attempt at the administration of the colony as an entire failure, he entered into an examination of the conduct of Sir Harry Smith, seeking to show that he was as much a prisoner just now as ever, with this important difference, that he was shut up with 5,000 men. The motion was negatived on a division; and an amendment moved by Lord John Russell, extending the inquiry to our relations with all the tribes on the South African boundary, was carried by a majority of 128 to 60.

— Sir E. Bulwer Lytton publishes a Protectionist pamphlet in the form of a "Letter to John Bull, Esq., on Affairs connected with his Landed Property, and those who live thereon."

16.—Mr. Armstrong, of Sorbitrees, Cumberland, shot by the Rev. Joseph Smith, Walton, who in the night-time had fired a pistol at random to scare away persons whom he thought were attempting to break into the house. Mr. Smith was tried for the offence of manslaughter at the Northumberland Assizes. Baron Platt ruled that the mischief which occurred to Mr. Armstrong was the result of his own act. "If he had gone home instead of going to the residence of this clergyman, and disturbing the inmates, he would have avoided the unfortunate consequences which ensued. If a man so conduct himself, by making noises at untimely hours, as to cause the inmates of a house to believe that it is going to be broken into, it is precisely the same as if a burglary was committed; and, no question, a man has a right to go forth and alarm persons so acting, either by shooting over their heads or in the direction in which he fancies they are, to prevent a burglary." The jury acquitted Mr. Smith, who instantly fell down on his knees in the dock to express thankfulness for his deliverance. He appeared to be of an unusually nervous and timid disposition, and much alarmed by the recent outrage at Frimley Grove.

16.—Foundation-stone of Victoria Bridge, Glasgow, laid.

18.—Died at Tunbridge Wells, in his 68th year, the Right Hon. Henry Bickersteth, Baron Langdale, late Master of the Rolls.

— A swindler, describing himself at one time as "Captain" and at others as "Sir Richard Douglas, of Orpington House, Kent," convicted at the Central Criminal Court, with his two sons as accomplices. He conducted his cheating operations upon the most methodical scale, keeping a diary of his transactions, and prefacing it with a list of people to be victimized. The first day of the new year for 1851 opened with a prayer, asking Providence to bless the exertions of the writer and his sons, and make them more prosperous than they were last year. The diary was filled with such entries as:—"Jan. 5. Phaeton and horse seized. Fear exposure at Ascot, and all chance up there. Fear we must cut.—7. All day ill. Row about stable. forcible possession taken of it. Row all day with one person or another. Fearful how things will end. Three boys at home idle, all ordering things.—18. Went to boys, to dinner—champagne—very merry. Providence not quite deserted us." A begging letter, which fell into the hands of a police constable, put an end to the family's operations. "Sir Richard" was sentenced to twelve months' and the sons to three months' imprisonment.

— The Lord Chancellor gives judgment on two petitions presented with reference to Miss Augusta Talbot. Dr. Doyle's petition prayed that Miss Talbot might be allowed, during the absence of the Earl and Countess of Shrewsbury abroad, to remain under the charge of some proper person, to be approved of by the court, during the approaching season of 1851; that an additional allowance of 1,500*l.* might be made for her maintenance; and, if necessary, that it be referred to the Master to approve of a scheme as to her residence. Mr. Berkeley's petition alleged that the Countess of Shrewsbury had exercised an undue influence over Miss Talbot, and had endeavoured to induce her to marry a Frenchman named Rochefoucault; that Miss Talbot had persisted in refusing, and that thereupon the Countess sent back Miss Talbot to a convent, not as a pupil, but as a postulant, with the avowed object of compelling her to take the veil ; and it prayed that Miss Talbot might be removed from under the care and management of the Earl and Countess of Shrewsbury. The Lord Chancellor, in giving judgment, entered minutely into the circumstances of the case. He declared his opinion, that in the first instance, the Countess of Shrewsbury was competent to judge on the propriety of placing Miss Talbot in the convent. But since the young lady had been into the world, and her prospects had otherwise changed, and since it became uncertain how long the Earl and Countess would remain absent from this country, Dr. Doyle ought to have exercised greater diligence in his care over his ward. Dr. Doyle had been remiss in not applying to the court till an intimation was lately made as to the propriety of his so doing ; especially when he became aware that the mind of the young lady was wavering, and that it was becoming uncertain whether she would not become a nun. A very high contempt of the authority of the court would have been committed by allowing a ward of court either to become a postulant or to take any other step calculated to bind her future life to any particular course. He believed that ever since the Statute of Westminster it had been a very high offence to make a ward of court take the veil—an offence liable to indictment, heavy forfeiture, and imprisonment. That statute continued. If a marriage were contracted without the approbation of the court, it was a contempt of the court : à fortiori, much more so was it to make persons devote themselves to a religious life ; marriage was consistent with persons retaining their ordinary position in life, but taking the veil was so serious a charge, that to allow a person not arrived at the age of maturity to bind the future life, not probably by actual vows, but by some influence or other more cogent than physical force, was a much greater offence ; and the Lord Chancellor declared that he should have had no hesitation, and should have felt it his duty, to commit bishops, priests, governesses, clergymen, or any other who had been connected with such a transaction. But no bad motives could be imputed to Dr. Doyle, as he seemed to have been under the impression that the young lady was in the convent as a boarder ; and, therefore, the interests of the ward did not require his removal. In reference to Mr. Craven Berkeley's petition, the Lord Chancellor felt that upon the whole it had been of great advantage to the ward. But the most material statements in that petition were not correct. The Lord Chancellor had ascertained from personal conversation with Miss Talbot, when he visited Alton Towers, that the marriage then on the carpet was not regarded with personal repugnance by Miss Talbot ; and when it was broken off, chiefly from the Lord Chancellor's own disapproval of it, Miss Talbot expressed her resignation in terms not consistent with the notion of the alleged repugnance. The matter thus charged in Mr. Berkeley's petition was of a character deeply reflecting on other parties, and was unfounded in fact. In that point of view solely, the petition might be dismissed with costs ; but the petition had been the means of rendering a great and worthy service to the court and to the ward. The order of the court, therefore, was, that Mr. Berkeley's petition be dismissed, and that the costs be paid out of the estate.

19.—The Bishop of Exeter issues a pastoral letter to his clergy in lieu of his triennial charge. The epistle charges the Archbishop of Canterbury with holding heretical opinions, and concludes with the convocation of a diocesan synod.

23.—The hundredth anniversary of the Society of Antiquaries celebrated at Freemasons' Tavern. On the same day the three hundredth anniversary of Shrewsbury School was celebrated.

26.—Inquiry into the death of James Tomlin, barrister, who was killed by falling from his window in King's Bench Walk, Temple. The jury returned a verdict of "Accidental death."

28.—Died at Eaton-square, aged 81, Admiral Codrington, the hero of Navarino.

30.—The House of Commons agree to a motion offering a reward for the apprehension of persons connected with the St. Albans' election, who had hitherto eluded the service of the Speaker's warrant.

—Triple collision, attended with the loss of six lives, on the Lancashire and Cheshire Junction Railway, caused by the breaking down of a train in the tunnel between Frodsham and Sutton.

May 1.—Opening of the Great Exhibition in Hyde Park. This event drew together a greater assemblage of people than was ever known in London before ; as many as half a million, it was thought, being massed together in Hyde Park about noon, when the Queen drove from Buckingham Palace. The line of carriages of all descriptions reached westwards from the entrance gates of the Park to Kensington towards Hammersmith, and eastwards as far as Long-acre. The day on the whole was beautiful, one passing shower, which fell shortly before the Queen made her appearance, serving but to lay the dust and freshen the air. The Queen left Buckingham Palace a little before twelve o'clock. Nine carriages conveyed her Majesty, Prince Albert, two of the royal children, with a number of visitors and attendants, up Constitution-hill, and along Rotten-row, to the northern entrance of the Palace. As the cortège drew up, the reception of her Majesty was enthusiastic, and she entered the building amidst a burst of genuine good feeling. The doors had been opened at nine o'clock for the holders of season tickets. The crowd kept flowing in for more than an hour in such dense columns, that the temporary barriers placed to protect the space round the throne were in part swept away, and the entire nave seemed to be permanently in possession of the spectators. The Duke of Wellington arrived early, and was particularly noticed, as was also Mr. Paxton, who designed the building, and the Mandarin Hsing, of the Chinese junk. As her Majesty ascended the throne, attended by the Royal Family and the distinguished visitors to her Court, the organ pealed forth the notes of the National Anthem; and the immense choir collected for the occasion accompanied the music. At the close, Prince Albert joined the Royal Commissioners (who then drew near to the throne), and read to her Majesty the Report of their proceedings. After an account of the origin of the Exhibition, and the efforts made to accomplish its object, the Report proceeded: "Within the short period of seven months, owing to the energy of the contractors, and the active industry of the workmen employed by them, a building has been erected entirely novel in its construction, covering a space of more than eighteen acres, measuring 1,851 feet in length, 456 in extreme breadth, capable of containing 40,000 visitors, and affording frontage for the exhibition of goods to the extent of more than ten miles." The Queen read a reply, cordially concurring in the prayer "that by God's blessing, this undertaking may conduce to the welfare of my people, and to the common interests of the human race, by encouraging the arts of peace and industry, strengthening the bonds of union among the nations of the earth, and promoting a friendly and honourable rivalry in the useful exercise of those faculties which have been conferred by a beneficent Providence for the good and the happiness of mankind." The Archbishop of Canterbury approached the throne, and offered up a prayer, invoking a blessing on the undertaking. At the close, the choir joined in singing the Hallelujah Chorus. The Royal procession was next formed, and moved slowly round the interior of the building amid vehement cheers and waving of hats and handkerchiefs, till it returned to the point from whence it started. The Marquis of Breadalbane then announced in a loud voice that the Queen declared "the Exhibition open," a flourish of trumpets giving intimation of the fact to the multitudes outside. The Royal party withdrew, as the choir took up the strains of the National Anthem. The barriers which had hitherto restrained the spectators within narrow limits were now withdrawn, and the pent-up mass spread over every part of the building.

1.—Lord John Russell's bill for admitting Jews into Parliament read a second time, by a majority of 202 to 177. There was no division on the second reading.

2.—Mr. Hume's motion, limiting the Income-tax for one year, that the entire scheme of taxation might be considered by a

Select Committee, carried against ministers by 244 to 230.

3.—San Francisco almost entirely destroyed by fire, being the seventh time the city had been so scourged during the four years of its existence.

4.—M. Schoffer, a Roman Catholic priest, suffers martyrdom at the town of Son Tay, Cochinchina.

9.—Seven thousand pounds' worth of gold-dust stolen from the carriages of the South Western Railway in the course of the transit from Southampton to London. One of the boxes was found near the Winchester railway station, secreted there, apparently, by one Pamplin, a tailor living in Soho. He was found guilty of receiving the same knowing it to have been stolen, and sentenced to transportation for ten years.

10.—The Metropolitan Local Commissioners of the Great Exhibition entertain the Foreign Commissioners at the Castle Hotel, Richmond.

— A court-martial, sitting at Colombo, acquit Captain Albert Watson of the charges of severity and untruthfulness brought against him in connexion with the suppression of the rebellion in Ceylon, 1848.

12.—The Museum of Practical Geology in Jermyn-street opened by Prince Albert. Sir Henry de la Beche read an address to his Royal Highness, embodying in a concise form the origin and progress of the Institution. A tinge of sadness was cast over the ceremony by the death, in the course of the preceding day, of the curator, Mr. Phillips.

— Captain Somerset committed to the House of Correction twelve days for assaulting a policeman.

13.—Great match at York for 1,000 guineas, between Lord Eglinton's Flying Dutchman, the winner of the Derby and St. Leger in 1849, and Lord Zetland's Voltigeur, the winner of the same races in 1850. The former carried 8 st. 8½ lbs., and was ridden by Marlow; the latter 8 st., and was ridden by Flatman. Voltigeur took the lead and held it at a great pace till round the last turn; the Dutchman then drew up, and at the gravel-road got his head level; he was a little first half-way up the distance, and won cleverly, but not easily, by a length.

— In the Court of Exchequer, Lord Campbell gives judgment in the case of Boosey v. Purday, involving an important feature in the law of copyright. The opera "La Sonnambula" was composed by Bellini, while residing as an alien at Milan, in 1831. When the work was complete it was legally assigned to Ricordi, also an alien. Ricordi came to England, and assigned to Boosey, the plaintiff, who was an Englishman born, the copyright of the opera "for and in Great Britain." Boosey published the opera on the 10th of June, 1831; and there had been no prior publication either in this country or abroad. The defendant, Purday, pirated "A Cavatina from the opera of 'La Sonnambula' by Bellini," thus published; and the plaintiff then raised his action. On the authority of a previous case between the same parties, Baron Rolfe, now Lord Cranworth, directed the jury to find a verdict for the defendant; a bill of exceptions was thereupon tendered; and the case brought into this court of error. Lord Campbell delivered the judgment of the court, establishing the right of an alien author to acquire a British copyright, by first publishing his works in this country. The court were of opinion that Baron Rolfe's direction was wrong, and that he ought to have directed the jury to find a verdict for the plaintiff.

16.—Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton's comedy, "Not so Bad as we seem," performed at Devonshire House, in aid of the newly-organized Guild of Literature and Art. The Queen and Prince Albert were present. Among the amateurs were C. Dickens, D. Jerrold, J. Foster, R. H. Horne, Mark Lemon, and Frank Stone.

17.—Fall of an extensive building in course of construction in Gracechurch-street. An iron girder in the top storey was heard to give way with a crack, and the entire centre portion of the structure fell to the earth. Six of the workmen were killed.

18.—Fire in the Rose and Crown Tavern, Lower Thames-street, causing the death of the proprietor and three other of the inmates.

20.—James Young, a gentleman of property, residing in the neighbourhood of Regent's Park, commits suicide by laying his neck across the rails near the Camden railway station when the Liverpool mail train was advancing at great speed.

21.—In a Convocation holden at Oxford, it was resolved, by 249 to 105, to affix the University seal to a petition praying the Queen to revoke the University Commission, or allow the University to be heard against that Commission by counsel.

22.—The Governor of New South Wales issues a proclamation at Sydney claiming the precious metals in the newly-discovered gold districts, and threatening with punishment all who should search, or dig, without a licence of 30s. per month.

— Mr. Fox's motion in favour of secular education lost in the Commons by a majority of 30.

23.—Died at Florence, where he discharged the duties of British Minister, the Right Hon. Richard Lalor Sheil, aged 59 years.

26.—First shilling day at the Great Exhibition: 920*l.* taken.

27.—Debate on Mr. Henry Baillie's resolution relative to the harsh measures taken by Lord Torrington in the suppression of the disturbances in Ceylon, 1848. He sought to affirm, "That the conduct of Earl Grey in signifying her Majesty's unqualified approbation of Lord Torrington's administration of Ceylon, has been precipitate and injurious, tending to establish precedents of rigour and severity in the government of her Majesty's foreign possessions, and injurious to the character of this country for justice and humanity." After a discussion extending over two nights, and engaged in with great animation by both sides of the House, as it was understood the fate of the Ministry was involved in the result, the resolution was negated by 228 to 202.

28.—Riot at Tamworth on the occasion of a meeting of farmers of North Warwickshire in the Town Hall, for the purpose of discussing the grievances they were subjected to by the Free-trade policy. The rioters compelled the Protectionists to leave the building, and subjected them to a great amount of rough handling in the streets. Vehicles of the farmers were seized and cast over the bridge into the river. The rioters showing a disposition to continue the disturbances next day, the military were called out, and cleared the streets. Sir Robert Peel had previously caused circulars to be issued among his tenantry disapproving of the meeting.

31.—Unveiling of Rauch's equestrian statue of Frederick the Great, at Berlin, in presence of the King and his Ministers.

— About this time various American female lecturers deliver addresses on a new costume, known as the "Bloomer," with a view of recommending its adoption in England.

— The Hottentots rise in rebellion against the colonists of Caffraria and, joining the chiefs already in revolt, greatly harass the British troops scattered over the colony.

June 1.—The United Kingdom Alliance for the legislative suppression of the traffic in intoxicating drinks established at Manchester.

4.—Terence Bellew M'Manus, sentenced to penal servitude for his complicity in the Irish Rebellion of 1848, escaped from Launceston, Australia, and lands at San Francisco, where he receives a public welcome.

6.—Lord Naas again defeats the Ministry on their proposal for going into committee on the financial resolutions already agreed to. On the proposal that the Chairman leave the chair, the Chancellor of the Exchequer was outvoted by 140 to 123. Lord Naas's resolutions were afterwards defeated by 194 to 166.

10.—Three sons of the late Earl of Aldborough arrested at Leghorn for conspiracy.

12.—M. Victor Hugo sentenced to a fine of 500 francs and six months' imprisonment for writing an article in the Evénement, condemnatory of capital punishment.

13.—The Plymouth packet wrecked and all on board lost, including 18 emigrants.

13.—Bal-costumé at Buckingham Palace, the period chosen for illustration being the reign of Charles II.

— The Government Bill for improving the Administration of Justice in the Court of Chancery, and the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, read a first time.

14.—Died at Brighton, aged 69, Vice-Admiral Sir Charles Malcolm, K. C. B.

16.—Mr. and Mrs. Graham severely injured in a balloon which had ascended from Batty's Hippodrome, Kensington. In consequence of the silk getting torn by a flag-staff, the aéronauts were tossed about the north-western portion of London, at an altitude not much above the chimney-tops. They were ultimately jammed against the park front of Colonel North's house and thrown out on the roof.

— Third jubilee of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel celebrated in Westminster Abbey. A meeting was held next day in St. Martin's Hall, Prince Albert in the chair.

17.—Mr. Cobden moves an address, praying her Majesty to direct the Foreign Secretary to enter into communication with the French Government, with the view to a mutual reduction of armaments. Considerable discussion followed, after which the motion was withdrawn, Government concurring in its principle and object, but not engaging to enter into negotiations on the subject.

In his charge to the grand jury at Newcastle Assizes, Mr. Baron Platt takes occasion to comment on the conduct of the High Sheriff, Sir Horace St. Paul, for escorting the judges in a plain clarence carriage, instead of with the customary procession of javelin men, outriders, and trumpeters. "I cannot leave you," he said, "without expressing my regret, that in this great country, and in this great county of Northumberland, the gentry are so reduced as not to show the ordinary respect and loyalty to the Crown. It is not merely as judges that we come here: we are ministers under the Royal Commission. We have the honour to attend before you under the commission or sign manual of her Majesty; and in this country, where any disloyalty or any disregard to the administration of justice is considered a slur, I do regret that the usual and ordinary garniture by which that loyalty is displayed should not have been exhibited on the present occasion." The High Sheriff, rising in considerable perturbation, said, "I have been directly charged with disloyalty. I publicly declare that the accusation is unjust and unfounded. I am as loyal a subject as there is in any county in the kingdom." The judge,—"I must certainly say that, as a gentleman of ample means, that loyalty to the Crown and respect for her Majesty's commission has not been exhibited."

— The opening of the new Hospital of St. Mary's celebrated by a public dinner in (206)

the London Tavern, presided over by the Earl of Carlisle.

21.—The recipients of the "War Medal" entertain the Duke of Richmond to dinner, and present him with a piece of plate in acknowledgment of his exertions.

23.—Fire at Montague-close, Southwark, destroying three warehouses, and injuring the church of St. Saviour.

— The Ecclesiastical Titles Bill, and the Jewish Disabilities Bill, pass through committee.

24.—Lady Godiva procession at Coventry celebrated with extraordinary splendour in presence, it was computed, of 60,000 spectators.

25.—The first stone of the City of London Hospital for Consumption, at Brompton, laid by Prince Albert.

— A Diocesan Synod convened by the Bishop of Exeter commences its sittings. The Dean and certain of the Chapter declined to attend, but of the thirty-two rural deaneries only two refused to send delegates. After special prayer the bishop delivered an address in vindication of Diocesan Synods as the legitimate means of restoring and defending the rights of the inferior clergy. Declarations of faith with regard to baptism were agreed to after some discussion, as was also another, that "the appointment to a see of Plymouth by the Pope is schismatical and void, setting up altar against altar in our diocese, and usurping the primacy of England."

— Foundation-stone of the City of London Hospital for Diseases of the Chest, at Victoria Park, laid by Prince Albert.

26.—Excessive heat. Thermometer in Hyde Park 90° in the shade. In the Champ de Mars, Paris, during a review eight soldiers fell victims to coups-de-soleil.

— Electioneering contest at Greenwich, between Alderman Wire and Alderman Salomons, who pledged himself, if elected, to take his seat in the House, and bring to an issue the question of the competency of Jews to sit in Parliament. He was elected by a majority of 887 votes.

27.—On the Committee bringing up the report of the Ecclesiastical Titles Bill, the Irish members retired in a body from the House, enabling Sir F. Thesiger to carry certain resolutions of which he had given notice, against the Government; they were three in number, and sought (1) to amend the first declaratory clause, so that it should apply to all rescripts, and not only to the one rescript establishing the hierarchy; (2) to give the prosecuting power to any individual with the sanction of the law-officers of the Crown; and (3) to make penal the introduction of bulls. The first was carried against Ministers by 135 to 100; the second without a division; and the third by 165 to 109.

30.—Mr. Thackeray concludes his course of lectures on English Humorists, in Willis's Rooms, the closing lecture being on Sterne and Goldsmith.

30.—Discussion upon Mr. Disraeli's resolution, "That in the provisional state of the financial arrangements of the country it appears to this House to be most consistent with a due regard to the maintenance of public credit, and the exigencies of the public service, not to make any material sacrifice of public income in effecting such changes as may be deemed advisable in other branches of taxation." "Mr. Disraeli," said the Chancellor of the Exchequer, "would not jeopardize public credit; but only six days after Mr. Hume's motion was carried, Mr. Cayley moved the House to yield up 5,000,000*l.* for the repeal of the Malt-tax; if it is wrong to jeopardize public credit, surely it was as much endangered on the 8th of May as on the 30th of June; and yet on the division list in favour of that motion I find the name of Benjamin Disraeli. (Laughter.) Can it be that there are two Benjamins in the field—one Benjamin voting for the reduction of 5,000,000*l.* of taxes, and another Benjamin who is afraid that to meddle with a surplus of 1,600,000*l.* would endanger the finances of the country?" Resolution rejected by 242 to 129.

July 1.—The signatures to the petitions presented to the French Assembly, up to this date, for the revision of the constitution, amounted to 741,011; for the revision and prolongation of powers, 370,511; for the prolongation of powers alone, 12,103. On the 19th, when the question had been debated in the Assembly, 446 voted for the revision, and 278 against it. The majority being 97 short of the required three-fourths of the whole vote, the motion for revision was lost.

— The subject of Church Extension brought under notice by the Marquis of Blandford, in terms of the following resolution:—"That an humble address be presented to her Majesty, praying that she would be graciously pleased to take into her consideration the state of spiritual destitution existing throughout England and Wales, with a view that her Majesty might be pleased to direct the adoption of such measures as she might deem expedient, for affording more efficient relief to the spiritual wants of the people, and for an extension of the parochial system, corresponding to the growth of a rapidly increasing population, by the help which might be drawn from the resources of the Established Church itself."

4.—The Ecclesiastical Titles Bill read a third time in the House of Commons by a majority of 263 to 49. Lord John Russell moved the omission of the clauses added by Sir F. Thesiger, making it penal to introduce bulls or publish them, and giving power to private informers to prosecute for penalties. The proposal of the Prime Minister was rejected in the one case by a majority of 79, and in the other by a majority of 51. On the formal question of affixing a title to the bill, Mr. Grattan moved that it be entitled "A Bill to prevent the Free Exercise of the Roman Catholic Religion in the United Kingdom." This was negatived without a division, and the bill was ordered, amid cheers from different parts of the House, to be taken up to the House of Lords. The motion, "That the bill do pass," was carried somewhat unexpectedly, before a final discussion could be entered into upon its merits. In the course of the personal explanations which thereupon took place, Mr. Gladstone protested against the bill "as hostile to the institutions of this country, more especially to its established religion; because it would teach it to rely on other support than that of the spiritual strength and vitality which alone could give it vigour; because its tendency was to undermine and weaken the authority of the law in Ireland; because it was disparaging to the great principle of religious freedom, on which this wise and understanding people had permanently built its legislation of late years; and lastly, because it would tend to relax and destroy those bonds of concord and goodwill, which ought to unite all classes and persuasions of her Majesty's subjects."

4.—Mr. George Peabody entertains the American Minister and Mrs. Lawrence at a banquet in Willis's Rooms.

5.—A charcoal burner in Paris commits suicide by throwing himself from the Column of July.

6.—Died suddenly, at Dumfries, while on a visit to Mr. Aird, D. W. Moir, of Musselburgh, the "Delta" of "Blackwood's Magazine."

7.—The steamer Euxine arrives at Southampton with 130 Hungarian and Polish refugees from Turkey.

9.—Her Majesty, accompanied by Prince Albert, attends an entertainment given by the Corporation of London, in the Guildhall, in honour of the Great Exhibition. The State procession left Buckingham Palace at 9 P.M., and passed through Pall-mall, the Strand, and City, in the midst of a crowd of spectators great beyond all precedent. At the Guildhall, the supper-tables were laid out in the most splendid manner; and among the rare wines produced from the civic cellars was sherry a hundred-and-five years old, which had been bottled for the Emperor Napoleon. Her Majesty returned to Buckingham Palace between one and two o'clock in the morning, through a dense cheering multitude.

10.—William Canty, among the last survivors of the "receivers" or "putters up" of bank and jewel robberies, under the old police system, sentenced to ten years' transportation, for stealing, in company with another, the cash-box of the London and Westminster Bank. The bank officials had been warned of the intended design on their premises, and substituted dead weight for the ordinary precious contents of the box. The two thieves were seized with it in their possession a few minutes after leaving the bank. It was thought that Canty was one of the parties concerned in the robbery of Rogers' bank, and negotiated for the return of the notes.

11.—The revival of Convocation urged by Lord Redesdale, when formally moving for a copy of the petitions presented by the clergy and laity of the province of Canterbury, to both houses of Convocation, on the 6th of February last. The Archbishop of Canterbury declared himself unfavourable to the revival of Convocation, principally because it was liable to engender dissensions and controversy. The Bishop of London and the Bishop of Oxford supported Lord Redesdale, and ultimately the motion for papers was agreed to.

13.—Died at Hornby, near Lancaster, in his 82d year, the Rev. Dr. John Lingard, Roman Catholic historian of England.

16.—Cauldwell, a money-lender at Oxford, tried for shooting at an undergraduate named Alexander Ross. About midnight on the 26th of June, a party of collegians entered Cauldwell's premises, and attempted to throw certain cannon over the battlemented coping of his house. Cauldwell was awakened, crept to his window, and fired a blunderbuss loaded with shot. The charge taking effect in Ross's neck and shoulders, his companions took him home, and then returned to smash Cauldwell's windows. Next day he was arrested by the University authorities, and charged with the crime of shooting to the danger of life. He avowed the act, justifying it as one of defence to his property, and alleging that many similar offences had recently been committed on his premises. The jury now returned a verdict of acquittal, which was received with applause in the court. Next day Cauldwell was tried on a charge of perjury connected with his money-dealing transactions, and sentenced to seven years' transportation.

— At the Marlborough-street Police Court, Ann Hicks was charged with attempting to sell cakes near the Exhibition building. She said she had once been the occupant of a stall in the Park which had descended to her from her grandfather, who assisted in saving George II. from drowning in the Serpentine. In November last, Lord Seymour ordered all stalls to be removed from the Park—a proceeding she said which had driven one woman out of her mind, sent another to Kensington workhouse, a third to St. George's, and a fourth she had met that morning nearly broken-hearted trying to sell medals in the Park. On a reluctant promise being given not to sell cakes again in the Park, Ann Hicks was set at liberty. The case attracted much attention, and a considerable sum of money was raised for the poor woman's benefit, though the connexion of her grandfather with George II. was never clearly established.

17.—The House of Lords reject the Bill for admitting Jews into Parliament, by a majority of 36.

— With reference to the English and French protests against German annexation and incorporation, the Frankfort Diet resolve that, "This is exclusively a German question, and that none of the non-German Governments shall be permitted to influence its decision." Prussia came to a similar resolution.

18.—Scene in the House of Commons on Mr. Salomons attempting to take his seat as member for Greenwich. Declining to repeat the words "on the true faith of a Christian," the Speaker ordered Mr. Salomons to withdraw, but instead of doing so he passed, amid a tempest of cheering and shouting, to the benches of the House and took his seat. In answer to Sir B. Hall, Lord John Russell said the Government had no intention at present to institute proceedings against Mr. Salomons for taking his seat in this informal manner.

19.—The inhabitants of Grahamstown having formed themselves into a Defence Association against the marauding Caffres, write to Sir Harry Smith:—"Within the last six weeks the enemy has swept from the district of Somerset alone upwards of 20,000 sheep, 3,000 herd of cattle, and 300 hares. Since the commencement of the war 200 farm-houses on the north-eastern border have been reduced to ashes, and a large amount of bread, corn, and other property has been wantonly destroyed. While the frontier colonists have become prostrated by the harassing events of seven months' hostilities, the enemy has received within the present week large accessions to his numbers, by the desertion of the Hottentot servants, who up to this time had remained faithful to their employers; and being at the present moment in possession of more cattle than before the war, is not likely to be subdued by famine." The Governor replied, "The course I have pursued in British Caffraria is the correct one. Had I swerved from a perseverance in it, however awfully the marauding parties have recently carried on their depredations, there would then have been a general rush into the colony of the whole of the Caffre tribes. In war, that must be attempted which carries with it a prospect of the greatest general benefit to the whole." He further intimated that he was in daily expectation of reinforcements from England which would enable him to make a more extended dispersion of the force under his command.

— Mr. Hume's motion to inquire into the conduct of Rajah Brooke defeated by a majority of 230 to 19.

Two letters published from Mr. Gladstone to Lord Aberdeen, on the present administration of law in Naples.

20.—As the monks of the Convent of Waldimar, near Moscow, were setting out in procession to visit an image of the Virgin at a neighbouring village, a wooden bridge thrown over the moat gave way, and out of 200 monks 158 were drowned.

21.—Collision in the Straits of Malacca between the steamers Pacha and Erin, both belonging to the Peninsular and Oriental Company. The Pacha sank in a few minutes with a valuable cargo, and sixteen of her passengers and crew.

— In the course of a discussion, in the House of Lords, on the second reading of the Ecclesiastical Titles Bill, the Earl of Minto gave an explanation concerning his knowledge of the Pope's intention to introduce the hierarchy into England. So far as the paragraph in the Roman Gazette was concerned, he was not aware, till he entered the House, that a person described as the "Archbishop of Westminster" was therein mentioned. On a former occasion he had acknowledged that he was aware of the existence of an intention to create Cardinal Wiseman Archbishop of Westminster. Every one knew it. It was spoken of on all hands; and, he might even say, he knew of it before he went to Rome. —The Earl of Winchilsea characterised the measure as a paltry bill, below contempt, which endeavoured to vindicate in pounds, shillings, and pence, the wounded honour of our illustrious Queen. He would vote neither for it nor against it.

— Mr. Alderman Salomons again attempts to take his seat in the House. As he had on the 18th refused to take the customary oath, "Upon the true faith of a Christian," the Speaker now requested him to withdraw. Mr. Osborne moved as an amendment, that Mr. Salomons was entitled to take his seat, and on a division was defeated by a majority of 229 to 81. Mr. Salomons explained to the House the course he now intended to pursue, and also voted in two motions which arose in connexion with his case. The Speaker then directed the Serjeant-at-arms to remove Mr. Salomons, who had previously declared his readiness to leave the House, provided enough was done to make it appear that he acted under coercion. The Serjeant accordingly touched his shoulder, and he immediately rose and retired.

22.—Miss Talbot (see April 18) married to Lord Edward Fitzalan Howard, brother of the Duke of Norfolk.

25.—The Randolph, East India trader, wrecked on a reef off the Mauritius, and between 20 and 30 of her passengers drowned.

— Petition from the electors of London and Greenwich, praying to be heard at the bar of the House in support of the claims of Baron Rothschild and Mr. Salomons to sit as their representatives, ordered to be printed. A motion subsequently made that the petitioners be heard was negatived by 77 to 44.

27.—Superstitious dread of the eclipse at (209)

Vienna. The following "Christian invitation" was posted at the entrance of the Church of the Minorites:—"The 27th of July being the eve of a great phenomenon of nature, processions will be made by the faithful to the shrines of our Lady at Maria Zell and Klein Maria Taferl, to pray for the intercession of the Queen of Heaven that no harm may happen to our beloved city of Vienna. The faithful assemble at the Convent of the Carmelites, at six in the morning, and are requested to bring with them female children clothed in white to attend the Cross."

28.—Total eclipse of the sun, imperfectly seen in London from the cloudy state of the atmosphere.

— Henry Groom sentenced to death at Norwich for shooting John Ayton, in Holkham plantation, on the 4th inst. The victim was an old man who acted as superintendent in a brick-field, and was returning from Lord Leicester's with money to pay the workmen when the shot was fired. The money taken from his person was found in the prisoner's possession, wrapped in a piece of a letter taken from Ayton's pocket-book. Groom was executed on the 6th of August, after a full confession.

— Mr. Salomons informs the Speaker of the House of Commons that two actions have been raised against him for having taken his seat and voted as member for Greenwich.

29.—The Ecclesiastical Titles Bill read a third time in the House of Lords, and passed without a division.

— In the House of Commons Mr. Heywood moved an address praying her Majesty to direct that the Crystal Palace might be preserved until the 1st of May next, with a view to determine if it could be adapted to purposes of public utility and recreation. Her Majesty replied that it would be necessary to consider carefully the engagements of the Royal Commissioners, and that she would direct inquiry into these, and various other matters of detail, which must be ascertained before a decision could be come to.

— The Select Committee appointed to inquire into the state and operation of the laws relating to newspaper stamps make their report. They place in a strong light the evils and inconvenience of the present system, and conclude with the following summary of their views:—"Your Committee consider it their duty to direct attention to the objections and abuses incident to the present system of newspaper stamps, arising from the difficulty of defining and determining the meaning of the term 'news;' to the inequalities which exist in the application of the Newspaper Stamp Act, and the anomalies and invasions that it occasions in postal arrangements; to the unfair competition to which stamped newspapers are exposed with unstamped publications; to the limitation imposed by the stamp upon the circulation of the best newspapers, and to the impediments which it throws in the way of the diffusion of useful knowledge regarding current and recent events among the poorer classes, which species of knowledge, relating to subjects which most obviously interest them, calls out the intelligence by awakening the curiosity of those classes. How far it may be expedient that this tax should be maintained as a source of revenue, either in its present or in any modified form, your Committee do not feel themselves called upon to state; other considerations, not within their province, would enter into that question. But, apart from fiscal considerations, they do not consider that news is of itself a desirable subject of taxation."

August 2.—The municipality of Paris entertain the Royal Commissioners of the Great Exhibition, in the Hôtel de Ville. On the 3d and following days fêtes in honour of the English visitors took place at Versailles and St. Cloud; there was also a reception at the British Embassy and a review on the Champ de Mars.

4.—Cardinal Wiseman preaches to an assembly of poor Irish, in an open court off Orchard-street, Portman-square.

5.—Mr. Paxton, designer of the Crystal Palace, entertained at a public dinner at Derby. The Duke of Devonshire was present, and spoke highly in praise of the guest.

— Extensive inundations in the Tyrol, Bavaria, Wurtemberg, and other places situate on the great rivers flowing west and north from the Alps.

6.—Another of the Isaacs, and Samuel Harewood, who had been concerned in the Frimley outrage, were this day sentenced at Croydon Assizes to transportation for life, for burglary accompanied, as was the habit of the gang, with great violence, at Mrs. Stoner's, Kirdford, on the 3d of June, 1850. The police appeared to have been put on their track mainly through the information of Hamilton, a ruffian who had also "split" in the Uckfield burglary. It appeared that there were no less than six of them in Mrs. Stoner's house at the same time, all in masks, armed with pistols, and driving her from room to room till she produced all the money. Between executions and transportations the gang was now understood to be broken up.

— Victoria Street, Westminster, opened.

— Died, at Victoria, Hong Kong, aged 48 years, the Rev. Charles Gutzlaff, D.D., a Chinese scholar of great ability.

7.—In reply to Sir De Lacy Evans, Lord Palmerston said he thought Mr. Gladstone had done himself very great honour by the course he pursued at Naples, and he had felt it his duty to send copies of that gentleman's pamphlet to our Ministers at the Court of Europe, thereby affording them an opportunity of exerting their influence in this matter.

8.—Parliament prorogued by the Queen in person. The Royal Speech referred as usual to the most prominent acts passed during the session:—"It is satisfactory to observe that, notwithstanding very large reductions of taxes, the revenue for the past year considerably exceeded the public expenditure for the same period. I am rejoiced to find that you have thereby been enabled to relieve my people from an impost which restricted the enjoyment of light and air in their dwellings. . . . It has been very gratifying to me, on an occasion which has brought so many foreigners to this country, to observe the spirit of kindness and goodwill which so generally prevailed."

9.—Six men killed in descending the Malaga Vale Pit, Bedminster; the heavy wire-rope giving way when near the bottom, and falling on them along with the iron shield to which it was attached.

— Gounod's opera of "Sappho" produced at the Royal Italian Opera.

10.—Died, aged 73, Dr. Lorenz Oken, a very eminent Swiss physiologist and anatomist.

— Died, at Petit Brie, near Paris, in his 63d year, M. Daguerre, the inventor of the daguerreotype.

11.—Died, a prisoner on the road to Allahabad, the Dewan Moolraj, late governor of Mooltan.

12.—Adonijah Edward Jordan, aged 29, sentenced to death, at Gloucester Assizes, for setting fire to his mother's dwelling-house, with intent to do her grievous bodily harm.

— Mr. Albert Smith and party ascend Mont Blanc. They reached the summit in safety, at 9.30 the following morning. On returning to Chamounix, they received an enthusiastic welcome. Mr. Vansittart ascended the same day.

— Fire in the church of the Invalides, Paris, occasioned by one of the candles on the altar coming in contact with the catafalque over the coffin of Marshal Sébastiani, whose remains were being interred. A number of battle trophies were destroyed.

— Professor Janse, violinist, dismissed from his post in the Imperial chapel at Vienna for assisting at a concert in London to benefit the Hungarian refugees.

14.—Severe earthquake in Italy, causing much destruction over the Peninsula, from Point Campanella, below the Bay of Naples, along the range of the Apennines, through the upper portion of the Basilicata, and the whole length of the Terra di Bori on the Adriatic coast.

16.—General Lopez having effected a landing on Cuba, at Cubanos, on the 12th, fifty of his followers were this day captured in small boats and taken to Havannah to be shot. They were despatched generally in batches of six. Lopez was afterwards taken in the interior, wandering alone, and nearly exhausted from hunger. He was garotted early on the morning of the 1st of September. Facing the multitude of citizens and troops, he said, "I die for my beloved Cuba." Lopez then took his seat, the machine was adjusted, and at the first twist of the screw his head dropped forward.

17.—The City Bridewell broken into and several articles of plate stolen.

18.—Explosion at Washington Colliery, near Newcastle, attended with the loss of thirty-five lives. From the evidence adduced at the coroner's inquest it appeared that the pit was but indifferently ventilated; and that the underviewer in charge was absent drinking on the evening of the calamity.

19.—Aggregate meeting of Roman Catholics in the Rotunda, Dublin, for the inauguration of the Catholic Defence Association. The attendance of the newly-appointed dignitaries was very large, but the lay element was not so fully represented as was expected. Lord Gormanston moved that "the Most Reverend Dr. Cullen, Archbishop of Armagh, and Primate of all Ireland, be requested to take the chair." The Primate in addressing the meeting held up for imitation the example of the great O'Connell, whose loss he described as an irreparable calamity, and concluded with a prayer to "the most holy Queen of Heaven," for good counsel; and to "our good saints, St. Patrick, St. Malachy, and St. Lawrence O'Toole for direction, and a beneficial sanctifying influence on the undertaking." Resolutions demanding a redress of grievances, and expressive of undying hostility to the recently passed Titles Act, were carried with acclamation. John Reynolds, in seconding one of the resolutions, said: "That little fanatic and insolent creature, Lord John Russell, not satisfied with introducing the bill, rummaged history—all the lying volumes that were compiled by all lying historians that ever defiled their pens in lying against the religion of the people—and delivered them in the shape of a speech in the House of Commons to 500 of his supporters, who swallowed it as political gospel."

20.—Vice-Chancellor Rolfe gives judgment in the case of Egerton v. Brownlow and others, trustees of the late Earl of Bridgewater. The plaintiff filed a bill praying for a declaration that he should be declared equitable tenant in tail male in possession of the estates devised under the will, and that the trustees might be decreed to account with him for the rents and profits received by them since the death of Lord Alford. The question turned on the validity of certain clauses of the will of the late John William, Earl of Bridgewater, which the bill set out at full length. The effect of Sir Robert Rolfe's judgment was to deprive Lord Althorpe's male heirs of their rights to the immense estates in dispute, unless the present Earl Brownlow should be created Duke or Marquis of Bridgewater, with limitation for the title to his heirs male by his late wife Lady Sophia Egerton.

20.—Destruction of the whaling ship Ann Alexander, of New Bedford, Massachusetts, in the South Pacific, by the repeated attacks of a whale which the crew had harpooned. Having destroyed two of the small boats first used in the attack, it rushed with great but well-directed violence against the vessel, and knocked a hole through her bottom about the foremast, and a little above the keel. The crew took to the remaining boats, and were picked up two days afterwards by the Nantucket, of Massachusetts.

22.—The United States clipper yacht America, 170 tons, beats the vessels of the Royal Yacht Club, at Cowes, the nearest on her arrival being eight miles distant. On the 28th, she beat the Tilania, iron yacht, 100 tons, by fifty-two minutes out of six and a half hours' sailing.

24.—Lynch-law at San Francisco. A coroner's jury returned a verdict that "Samuel Whittaker and Robert Mackenzie came to their death by being hanged by the neck, thereby producing strangulation, by the act of a body of citizens, styling themselves the Vigilance Committee of San Francisco, on the afternoon of Sunday, in front of the Vigilant Committee Room, in Battery-street, from the second storey thereof."

26.—The Emperor of Austria issues a decree dissolving all the National Guards of the empire, and substituting Burgher Guards as previous to 1848.

27.—Banquet at Bangor, to Mr. Robert Stephenson, in commemoration of the successful accomplishment of the great works at the Menai and Conway Straits. Tracing the recent advance of England to the abundance and cheapness of iron, he said: "There has been produced from the bowels of the earth, during the last twenty years, more crude stone than, when converted into railway bars and laid end to end, would form an iron girdle round the earth itself. We are daily producing from the bowels of the earth, a raw material in its crude state, apparently of no worth, but which, when converted into a locomotive engine, flies with a speed exceeding that of the bird, and advances wealth and comfort throughout the country."

—W. R. F. Gawthorne, a Romish convert, writing under the signature of W. Francis, practises a fraud on the Archbishop of Canterbury, to draw from him an opinion adverse to that expressed by the Bishop of London, that certain pastors of foreign Protestant Churches were not validly ordained. His Grace wrote to W. Francis, that throughout the Church there were few or none "who would deny the validity of the orders of these pastors, solely on account of their wanting the imposition of episcopal hands." The fraud was afterwards exposed by Mr. Page, of Christ Church, Westminster, to whom Gawthorne offered to submit the "private" letters.

29.—Died of apoplexy, aged 77, Charles König, F.R.S., keeper of the mineralogical collections in the British Museum.

30.—The so-called Baroness von Beck dies in the police-office, Birmingham, shortly before the hour fixed for examining into the truthfulness of her alleged adventures in Hungary. Constant Darra, who had assisted the lady in her schemes since her arrival in Liverpool, was dismissed by the magistrates.

31.—Horne's coach factory, Long-acre, destroyed by fire.

— The Duke and Duchess of Norfolk attend divine service in the parish church of Arundel, thus indicating their secession from Rome.

September 1.—Seven young girls drowned in the Tyne, when attempting to reach a steamer, in a small boat, for the purpose of joining in an excursion to Marsden Rock. The boat put off at Howden, with seventeen passengers on board, but had scarcely got twenty yards from the shore when it was driven by the tide against two vessels lying in the river, and the whole were thrown out. Seven were drowned, and the other ten rescued with difficulty.

2.—The arbitrators appointed in the case award to Mr. Hobbs, an American locksmith, the two hundred guineas offered by Messrs. Bramah, to any one who would pick the famous lock exhibited in their window in Piccadilly.

4.—Fourteen men perish by a colliery accident at Aberdare. When descending the pit, the chain broke, and the carriage fell 180 feet, killing every man on the spot. An accident of a similar character, but less fatal in its results, happened on the same day in the Deep Pit, Kingswood, near Bristol.

6.—Accident at the Bicester station of the Buckinghamshire Railway, caused by the engine getting off the rails, and throwing down three of the nearest carriages. Six of the passengers were killed.—Two days afterwards an Exhibition excursion train ran into another on the Great Northern line near Hornsey. The damage to the carriages and injury to passengers were considerable, but no lives were lost.

— Skefiah Khan arrives in the Euxine at Southampton as ambassador for Persia to the Court of St. James's.

10.—The West India mail-steamer Teviot brings news that advices had been received from Sydney by way of the Isthmus, of the discovery of large quantities of gold in the neighbourhood of Bathurst.

14.—Died, at Cooperstown, New York, aged 62, James Fenimore Cooper, novelist.

15.—On laying the foundation-stone of the Central Market-place of Paris, Prince Louis (212)

Napoleon said, "I deliver myself with confidence to the hope that, with the support of good citizens, and with the protection of Heaven, it will be given to us to lay upon the soil of France some foundations whereupon will be erected a social edifice sufficiently solid to offer a shelter against the violence and mobility of human passions." Addressing M. Léon Faucher, the President said: "I am aware that every instant of your time is devoted to the duties of your office. I cannot but acknowledge such devotedness to the public good, and I accordingly nominate you Commander of the Legion of Honour." A deputation of 300 of the "Dames de la Halle," or market women, waited upon the President next day at the Elysée, to offer him their congratulations. Refreshments were laid out in the dining-room, where the President proposed as a toast, "A la santé des dames de la Halle de Paris," which was responded to by an elderly matron proposing "La santé de Napoléon."

20.—The Emperor of Austria enters Milan, the inhabitants maintaining a dead silence during the march of the Imperial cavalcade along the streets.

22.—The Austrian authorities at Pesth execute the Hungarian refugees in effigy, with all the solemnities which usually accompany the execution of a human being.

— Meeting of emigrants about to proceed to Australia, under the auspices of Mrs. Chisholm's Family Colonization Loan Society. The gathering took place on board the Athenian, in the East India Docks, and was presided over by the Earl of Shaftesbury, who, with Mr. Lowe, Mr. Sidney, and Mr. Foster, gave good advice to the emigrants, and much information concerning the colony.

27.—The French Government refuse permission to Kossuth to pass through France to England.

October 3.—A boa-constrictor in the Zoological Gardens performs the extraordinary feat of swallowing a coarse thick blanket which had been introduced into its case for the purpose of affording a little extra heat. It remained in the creature's stomach till the 8th of November, when the blanket was disgorged shorn of its woolly surface and somewhat reduced in size.

4.—A storm off Prince Edward's Island continuing for two days and causing the death of about 800 people.

5.—Whirlwind at Limerick, destroying a considerable amount of property in the town, and injuring many of the inhabitants.

6.—Commencement of the sale of the Natural History collection at Knowsley, formed by the late Earl of Derby. Amount realized, 7,000*l.*

7.—Largest attendance at the Great Exhibition, the number being 109,915.

9.—The Queen visits Liverpool on her return from Scotland, and is received with great enthusiasm. In the Town Hall the address of the Corporation was presented by the Mayor, Mr. Bent, on whom her Majesty conferred the honour of knighthood. The Royal party afterwards proceeded to Worsley Hall, the seat of the Earl of Ellesmere. Salford and Manchester were visited on the 10th. In reply to the address of the Corporation of the latter town, her Majesty said: "I rejoice to have been enabled to visit your borough, the capital of one of the most important branches of industry carried on in my dominions; and I have derived the highest gratification from the favourable account you are enabled to give me of the condition of my people." Her Majesty conferred the honour of knighthood on the Mayor, Mr. Potter.

11.—Closing of the Great Exhibition. At five o'clock all the organs in the building played the National Anthem, after which the ringing of a bell warned the visitors to depart. They moved out slowly but quietly, and by half-past six every person not connected with the building had retired. On the 13th and 14th the privilege of a separate inspection was granted to each of the exhibitors with two friends. The 15th was the day appointed to receive the reports of the juries relative to medals. About 20,000 persons were assembled in the building at mid-day, when Prince Albert took his seat on the throne presented to the Queen by the Rajah of Travancore. The medals awarded were of two kinds—Prize Medals, "whenever a certain standard of excellence in production or workmanship had been attained;" and Council Medals, in cases of "some important novelty of invention or application either in material or processes of manufacture, or originality combined with great beauty of design." Of the first 2,918 were awarded, and of the second 170. The total number of exhibitors was 17,000, and the task of the juries involved the consideration and judgment of at least one million articles. A report on the award of the juries was read by Viscount Canning, and replied to by Prince Albert, who thanked all the great bodies who had concerned themselves in the success of the Exhibition. A closing prayer was then offered up by the Bishop of London, and the choir completed the ceremony of the day by singing the Hallelujah chorus. The proceedings did not occupy more than thirty minutes. The entire sum drawn from the opening to the close of the Exhibition was 505,107*l.* 5*s.* 7*d.*, including season-tickets, catalogues, and refreshments. Of the money received at the doors 275,000*l.* was in silver, and 81,000*l.* in gold; 90*l.* of bad silver was taken, but it was a noticeable fact that the most of this was received on the half-crown and five-shilling days. The cash was received by eighteen money-takers. From them it was gathered by four money-porters, who carried it to as many collectors charged with the task of counting it. From them it went to two tellers, who verified the sum and handed it to the custody of the chief financial officer. Each day's amount was kept in safes in the building till next morning, when it was taken in boxes of 600*l.* each in a cab to the Bank of England by a bank clerk and porter. On eight of the principal railways the receipts for the twenty-four weeks of the Exhibition was 2,952,802*l.* against 2,201,647*l.* for the corresponding period of 1850. On four of them the number of passengers was 11,505,544, compared with 8,671,300 in the preceding year.

14.—The Ottoman Porte interfering to prevent the construction of the Egyptian Railway, a meeting of merchants and others interested was held at the London Tavern, for the purpose of considering and adopting such means as might be thought most advisable, to avert the danger now threatening important British interests connected with our colonies and possessions in the East. Resolutions were adopted, requesting the prompt and active interference of the Government, and expressive of sympathy with the Viceroy of Egypt.

15.—Meeting of the leading members of the Boards of Guardians for the province of Munster held at Limerick, to oppose repayment of the famine advances. A letter was read from Lord John Russell, mentioning that "any statement showing the heavy pressure of the poor-rate, and the difficulty of supporting the poor, will be attentively considered by the Government; but no Government can give any countenance to the doctrine of repudiation which has been so unfortunately broached in some parts of Ireland." Resolutions were adopted, disclaiming the wish to evade any payment which justice and sound policy might sanction, but earnestly impressing on the Government the strong conviction of the meeting "that the payment of the advances should be for the present suspended; that the calculation erroneously made of the liabilities of each district should be corrected; and that an intention of reconsidering the whole question should be at once announced."

23.—The Hungarian leader, Kossuth, arrives at Southampton, from Turkey. He received a warm welcome—particularly from the Hungarian refugees—and was presented with an address by the Corporation in the Town Hall. On the 25th the Mayor entertained M. Kossuth at his residence near Winchester.

— Burglary with violence at Portway, near Oldbury; the house attacked in this instance being occupied by an elderly maiden lady named Nicklin, her brother, in infirm health, and a niece. Mr. Nicklin was repeatedly shot at and beaten, and left for dead by his assailants. The gang was afterwards apprehended in connexion with another outrage in Cornwall, and sentenced to transportation for life.

24.—Burglary at Great Raveley, Huntingdon. The occupant, Mr. Fairley, was awake during the night by a crash against his back door. Arming himself with a revolving pistol, he went to the top of the stairs, and saw by a light below the face of a man at the foot. The man then blew out the light and retreated, when Mr. Fairley discovered another person in the kitchen, at whom he fired, this shot being returned. He then saw other men, some of them with masks, and fired again, when several shots were given in return. They afterwards set fire to the parlour. Mr. Fairley becoming overpowered by the smoke and wounds he had received, and the burglars threatening to shoot his wife who came to his assistance, was compelled to submit. After this they ransacked the house, and made off with a quantity of valuables, having previously regaled themselves with what meat and drink they could find. At the Huntingdon Assizes, on the 10th of March following, three of the gang were sentenced to transportation for life.

26.—An equestrian statue of William of Normandy erected at Falaise, his native town. M. Guizot addressed the company on the merits of "The Conqueror."

27.—The Royal Commission for inquiring into the alleged corrupt transactions at the St. Albans' election commences its sittings at that place.

—Illegal and absurd behaviour of Mr. Ramshay, a judge in the Liverpool County-court. Mr. Whitty, of the Journal, having made severe comments on his conduct as a judge, Mr. Ramshay took occasion to say in the course of a case before him, "The witnesses, like many persons in this part of the country, appear not to have the slightest regard for the solemnity of an oath, and to be equally destitute of the feelings of humanity." In the report of the Journal, this was described as "Mr. Ramshay's opinion of the people of Liverpool." The judge thereupon resolved to proceed against Mr. Whitty for contempt, and despatched his officers to make immediate apprehension. Mr. Whitty refused to stir unless a proper warrant was exhibited, and on a second attempt being made, gave the two officers into custody. Attending under a summons on the Monday following, Mr. Ramshay fined his enemy in the sum of 5*l.*, with the alternative of seven days' imprisonment in Lancaster Castle. "It was me," he said, "who gave the order to bring him, and by the word 'bring,' I meant force to be used, if necessary. Even if it required ten thousand men, I would get him. I care for no man living who opposes me." The audience in court here burst into laughter, the judge continuing, "If you bailiffs don't take one of these men, I will fine you. Bring him before me this instant, or I will fine you." Two of the parties in court were dragged forward and fined 5*l.* Addressing himself to Whitty, the judge said, "I tell you, sir, that you look like a man in whose eyes and in whose face the worst passions and the worst feelings of our human nature are delineated." Mr. Whitty preferring incarceration to payment, took his departure for Lancaster, amidst an immense and sympathising gathering of his townsmen. The fines in each case were ultimately paid by friends, and a hearty welcome given to the prisoners on their return to Liverpool. The Earl of Carlisle, as Chancellor of the Duchy, instituted an inquiry into the conduct of Mr. Ramshay, and at the close pronounced a judgment removing him from his judicial office.

29.—In consequence of the unsatisfactory state of our relations with Ava, a British force is despatched to Rangoon, and Commodore Lambert instructed to allow the Viceroy thirty-five days to obtain instructions.

—Ignatius Francis Coyle tried at the Central Criminal Court for forging and uttering a promissory note for 1,150*l.* The note purported to be signed by Viscount Cliefden, and was given to Captain Alexander McGeachey Alleyne. Coyle was a bill-discounter and keeper of a betting-house near Leicester-square. Captain Alleyne had betted with him, gone shares in bets, and also lent him money. As a security for the money lent, Coyle gave Alleyne the note in question; he subsequently admitted it was forged, and imploring Alleyne to forgive him, obtained a qualified pardon. The Captain, therefore, refrained for a time from prosecuting the forger. The chief effort made in defence of the prisoner was an attempt to damage the character of Captain Alleyne, and his brother, in cross-examination. The jury found the prisoner guilty of uttering the note knowing it to be forged, and he was sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment in Newgate.

—Died, at Brighton, in his 57th year, William Wyon, the most celebrated of modern medallists and die-sinkers.

30.—Ingle Rudge, a London stockbroker, commits suicide in Mr. Routh's counting-house, by swallowing prussic-acid, while under temporary derangement, from inability to meet the claims made upon him on settling-day. The members of the Stock Exchange subscribed 1,000*l.* for his widow and children.

—The Corporation of London present an address to Kossuth, who was received by immense crowds on his route from Eaton-square to Guildhall. In his reply, he said:—"What I wish, is that the public opinion of England may establish it as a ruling principle of the politics of Europe to acknowledge the right of every nation to dispose of its own internal concerns, and not to give a charter to the Czar to dispose of the fate of nations." Next day he was presented with an address from "Republicans, Revolutionists, and Socialists, men, consequently, not attracted towards you by either the éclat of your title, or the renown of your name." On the 3d of the following month, a great metropolitan demonstration was made in his favour at Copenhagen-fields. It was estimated that about 25,000 people were present on the occasion. Addresses from almost every town of note in the kingdom were forwarded up to the 20th of November, when the popular exile sailed for the United States.

November 4.—Prince Louis Napoleon, in his Message to the Assembly, says: "A vast demagogical conspiracy is now organizing in France and Europe. Secret societies are endeavouring to extend their ramifications even into the smallest communes. All the madness and violence of party is brought forth. While those men are not even agreed on persons or things, they are agreed to meet in 1852, not to construct, but to overthrow. Your patriotism and your courage, with which I shall endeavour to keep pace, will, I am sure, save France from the danger with which she is threatened." With reference to the proposed change in the Electoral Law by restoring universal suffrage, he says: "You will have presented to you the draft of a law which restores that principle in all its fulness, retaining at the same time in the Law of the 31st May everything which winnows universal suffrage from impure elements." On the 13th, a Ministerial bill founded on this proposal was thrown out by a majority of 355 to 348.

5.—Explosion on board a steam-tug, at Conham Ferry, near Bristol Bridge. The deck was blown out and hurled into the air, while the hull, shattered and torn asunder, sank to the bottom of the stream. There were four men on board at the time, three of whom were blown to pieces and the fourth much injured.

9.—When receiving the officers of the regiments newly arrived in Paris, the President of the Republic said: "If ever the day of danger shall arrive, I will not do as the Government which has preceded me did. I will not say to you, 'March and I will follow you;' but I will say to you, 'I march, follow me.'"

10.—The new West India mail-steamer Demerara grounded in the Avon, while being towed from the building-yard at Bristol.

13.—A new wire having been successfully laid across the Channel, telegraphic communication is renewed between France and England. The Stock Exchange markets were known in each of the capitals within business hours.

18.—Died, in his 81st year, Ernest Augustus, King of Hanover and Duke of Cumberland, fifth son of George III.

— A deputation waits upon Lord Palmerston to present addresses from the inhabitants of Finsbury and Islington, congratulating his lordship on the aid he rendered the Sultan of Turkey in effecting the liberation of Kossuth. In reply his lordship said, he was fully aware of the sympathies of the British nation in favour of the cause of Hungary; but, of course, as the organ of her Majesty's Government, in friendly alliance with the great foreign powers which had been referred to, it could not be expected that he should concur in some of the expressions used in the addresses. The moral power of the British Government was immense, more than people generally imagined; but it could be only effective so long as the people and the Government wrought together.

20.—Panic in Ward School, New York, occasioned by a false alarm of fire in the building. The children rushed with such force from the upper floors, that the balustrades of the stairs were thrown down, and about fifty pupils killed.

— Judgment given in the Court of Queen's Bench, in the action of libel raised at the instance of William Henry Clarkson, a Wesleyan superintendent minister, against John Kay, publisher of the Wesleyan Times, who had permitted to appear in his paper a series of articles insinuating that the plaintiff was the father of a bastard child, the mother being Charlotte Irons, a domestic formerly in Clarkson's household. The defendant was sentenced to be imprisoned in the Queen's Bench Prison for four months.

23.—The distribution of the medals awarded by the London Exhibition gives rise to a threatening disturbance in Paris. 3,000 tickets were issued for a room in the Louvre, which could accommodate only 1,200. When the doors opened the rush was tremendous, and the Prince President could, with difficulty, reach the platform. A sort of order having been obtained, the Prince proposed an adjournment to a larger gallery, but this was found impracticable owing to the confusion in the crowd. The tumult was still increasing when he again stepped to the front of the platform and said: "Gentlemen, I am most desirous of seeing you around me, and as near as possible on this interesting occasion. As, however, this cannot be the case, I beg to propose an adjournment of the proceedings to another day." The crowd then began to disperse, and the President departed to the Tuileries.

— A designing political article appears in the Paris Constitutionnel, a paper devoted to the policy of the Prince President, accusing the majority of the Legislative Assembly of conspiring against the head of the Government with the view of making General Changarnier military dictator.

26.—Died, at his chateau of Soult-Berg, aged 82, Nicolas Jean de Dieu Soult, Duke of Dalmatia, and Marshal-General of France.

— Died, at Graefenberg, aged 52, Herr Priessnitz, founder of hydropathy.

December 1.—The St. Albans' Bribery Commission close their sittings.

2.—Louis Napoleon abolishes the Constitution of the Republic. After a reception of (215) unusual brilliancy at the Elysée, the President retired to his cabinet with a band of close friends, among whom were De Morny, St. Arnaud, Maupas, and a few others of less note. Under the instructions of Major Fleury, a battalion of gendarmerie was quietly moved to the neighbourhood of the Elysée, and surrounded the doors of the State printing-office. "From that moment," writes Mr. Kinglake, "until their work was done, the printers were all close captives, for no one of them was suffered to go out. For some time they were kept waiting. At length Colonel Bévillie came from the Elysée with his packet of manuscripts. These papers were the proclamations required for the early morning; and M. St.-Georges, the director, gave orders to put them into type. It is said there was something like resistance; but in the end, if not at first, the printers obeyed. Each compositor stood while he worked between two policemen, and the manuscript being cut into many pieces, no one could make out the sense of what he was printing." One of them when put together was an address to the people. "Persuaded," said the President, "that the instability of the Government and the preponderance of a single Assembly are permanent causes of trouble and disorder, I submit to your suffrages the following fundamental basis of a Constitution, which Assemblies will afterwards develop:—(1) A responsible head, named for ten years; (2) Ministers dependent on the Executive Power alone; (3) a Council of State formed of the most eminent men, preparing the laws, and supporting the discussion of them before the Legislative body; (4) a Legislative body, discussing and voting laws, named by universal suffrage, without scrutin de liste, which falsifies the election; (5) a second Assembly formed of all the illustrious of the country, a preponderating power guardian of the fundamental compact and of public liberties. The system created by the First Consul at the commencement of the century has already given to France repose and prosperity, and it would again guarantee them to it, such is my profound conviction. If you share in it, declare it by your suffrages. If, on the contrary, you prefer a Government with strength, monarchical or republican, borrowed from I know not what past or from some chimerical future, reply negatively. Thus, then, for the first time since 1804, you will vote with a knowledge of what you are doing, in knowing well for whom and for what. If I do not obtain the majority of your suffrages, I will then call for the meeting of a new Assembly, and I will give up the charge which I have received from you. But if you believe that the cause of which my name is the symbol—that is to say, France regenerated by the Revolution of '89, and organized by the Emperor—is still your own, proclaim it by consecrating the powers which I ask from you. Then France and Europe will be preserved from anarchy, obstacles will be removed, rivalries will have disappeared, for in the decision of the people all will respect the decree of Providence." Another proclamation was to the following effect:—"In the name of the French people, the President of the Republic decrees:—Art. 1. The National Assembly is dissolved. 2. Universal suffrage is re-established. 3. The French people is convoked in its elective colleges from the 14th of December to the 21st of December following. 4. The state of siege is decreed throughout the first military division. 5. The Council of State is dissolved. 6. The Minister of the Interior is charged with the execution of the present decree. (Signed) LOUIS NAPOLEON BONAPARTE, DE MORNAY, the Minister of the Interior, Palace of the Elysée, Dec. 2." A third proclamation was addressed to the army. "Vote," the President wrote, "freely as citizens, but do not forget that passive obedience to the orders of the Chief of the Government is the rigorous duty of the army, from the general down to the soldier. It is for me, who am responsible for my actions before the people and posterity, to adopt the measures most conducive to the public welfare." Early on the morning of the 3d, when the proclamations had been put up on the walls, the city was well occupied by troops, and the most distinguished generals and members of the Assembly to whom the friends of law and order might have turned for help, were found to be in prison. The Deputies, availing themselves of a side entrance to the hall of Assembly, attempted to carry on such business as the outrage rendered necessary; but the military handled the body roughly, and the unfortunate members were compelled to retreat to the Mairie of the tenth arrondissement. Here they voted the act of the President high treason, and enjoined the High Court of Justice to proceed immediately to judgment. The decree had hardly been signed, when the military again broke in upon them, and after some little parrying, marched the whole body off to the barracks on the Quai d'Orsay. The judges met at the Palace of Justice, with the view of carrying out the decree of the Assembly, but suddenly broke up without coming to any decision. Some of the members of the Assembly still at large strove to raise the people in the Faubourg St. Antoine, and a barricade on a small scale was erected at the corner of the Rue St. Marguerite. Against this there marched a battalion of the 19th Regiment; "and then," writes Mr. Kinglake, "there occurred a scene which may make one smile for a moment, and may then almost force one to admire the touching pedantry of brave men, who imagined that, without policy or warlike means, they could be strong with the bare strength of the law. Laying aside their fire-arms, and throwing across their shoulders scarves which marked them as representatives of the people, the Deputies ranged themselves in front of the barricade; and one of them, Charles Baudin, held ready in his hand the book of the Constitution. When the head of the column was within a few yards of the barricade, it was halted. For some moments there was silence. Law and Force had met. On the one side was the Code Démocratique, which France had declared to be perpetual; on the other, a battalion of the line. Charles Baudin, pointing to his book, began to show what he held to be the clear duty of the battalion; but the whole basis of his argument was an assumption that the law ought to be obeyed; and it seemed that the officer in command refused to concede what logicians call the 'major premiss,' for, instead of accepting its necessary consequence, he gave an important sign. Suddenly the muskets of the front-rank men came down, came up, came level, and in another instant their fire pelted straight into the group of the scarfed deputies. Baudin fell dead, his head being pierced by more than one ball. The book of the Constitution had fallen to the ground, and the defenders of the law recurred to their fire-arms." On Thursday the 4th, the hostility of the Republican party to the new system of things became more apparent, and barricades to the number of about one hundred were erected throughout the city. These were attacked one after another by the troops, and carried, after great loss on the part of the populace. It was rumoured that shots were fired from Tortoni's coffee-house, and it was immediately attacked by the soldiery. The same plea was urged for attacking M. Sallandrouze's carpet manufactory, which was riddled with cannon, and at least thirty of the workmen killed. Charges of large bodies of lancers were made every five minutes to clear the Boulevards. No quarter was given to the people, and a number taken between two barricades in the Rue Chapon were shot on the spot. Along the Boulevards, volleys were fired in at the windows, and great numbers killed. The large barrier at the Porte St. Martin was not taken till after two hours' hard fighting, and the loss of from fifty to a hundred lives. The total number slain was never truly ascertained, large bodies of prisoners being shot, it was said, secretly at night, in platoons, in the gardens of the Luxembourg, and on the esplanade of the Invalides. The number of soldiers killed was twenty-five. On the 5th there was no general renewal of the fighting, though numerous unprovoked outrages were committed by the soldiers.

2.—By mid-day the astounding news was received in London:—"Paris in a state of siege. The President re-establishes universal suffrage, and appeals to the people." Consols fell from 98½ to 96½, but as the telegrams during the day were of a reassuring description, so far as the prospect of peace was concerned, the price rose again to 97½.

—Concluded in the Court of Queen's Bench the case of the Queen v. Holder Alleyne, M'Geachy Alleyne, (see Oct. 29) and T. D'Arcy, being a prosecution for conspiracy to defraud Robert Blair Kennedy of the sum of 7,300*l.* By skilful management Kennedy had been induced to bet against a mare in the hands of the Alleynes 100*l.* that she could not trot twelve miles within the hour, and so on for various sums, up to 3,200*l.*, that she could not trot seventeen miles. A day was fixed for the match, but through the pressure of one or two of the parties on trial, Kennedy paid the sum total of his bets, on condition of obtaining half ownership in the mare. He subsequently ascertained that the mare, instead of being Pigeon, as represented, was no other than the American fast-trotter Fanny Jenks, which had accomplished 100 miles in ten hours, and could cover nineteen miles in one hour. At the time fixed for the match she was lame, and could not be trotted for any distance. The chief witness, beside Kennedy, was Coyle, then undergoing sentence in Newgate for passing a forged bill to Holder Alleyne. The jury found all the defendants guilty, and Lord Campbell sentenced them to be imprisoned for terms varying from two years to six months.

2.—President Fillmore in his annual Message to Congress, writes:—"In every regularly documented merchant vessel the crew who navigate it, and those on board of it, will find their protection in the flag which is over them. No American ship can be allowed to be visited or searched for the purpose of ascertaining the character of individuals on board, nor can there be allowed any watch by the vessels of any foreign nation over American vessels on the coasts of the United States or the seas adjacent thereto." The President also referred to his correspondence with Turkey relative to the release of Kossuth and his companions.

—Explosion of a rocket factory at Dartford, Kent, and loss of seven lives.

3.—Reform Conference held at Manchester, to consider what course ought to be taken by the friends of Parliamentary Reform, in consequence of the intimation made by Lord John Russell that it was the intention of the Government to bring forward a measure of Parliamentary Reform in the next session of Parliament. Mr. Bright moved a series of resolutions for extending the franchise to all occupying rate-payers, changing the distribution of seats, so that no constituency should consist of more than 5,000 electors; for adopting the ballot; shortening the duration of Parliament, and abolishing the property qualification of members. These resolutions, after some discussion, were adopted almost unanimously.

—The merchants of London, with deputations from other cities in the kingdom, meet at the London Tavern, to take steps for obtaining a thorough reform in the Customs Department of the public business. Besides agreeing to a formal report on the subject, it was resolved to wait on Lord John Russell, with the view of securing the re-appointment next session of the Select Committee on the Customs.

4.—Murder of Mr. Thos. Bateson, brother of Sir Robert, and manager of the estates of Lord Templeton in the county of Monaghan. When returning from the model-farm of Castleblaney, he was attacked by three men, who lay in wait for him in a hollow of the road near some plantations which afforded a cover. A shot was first fired, and then the three men rushed on their victim and beat him down with pistols or bludgeons. Mr. Bateson rose against his assailants three times, but at last fell as if dead, when a boy herding cows in the neighbourhood saw the men make their escape through the plantation. The unfortunate man lingered till the following evening, unable to give any account of the attack. His skull was fractured in several places, and a part of the brain shot away. Several persons were at once placed on trial for the outrage, but the jury refused to convict. (See April 10, 1854.)

6.—Concluded in the Court of Queen's Bench, Dublin, the action raised by James Birch, proprietor of the World newspaper, against Sir William Somerville, Chief Secretary for Ireland, to recover 7,000*l.* for political services rendered to the Irish Government by devoting his paper to the cause of "law and order." The Earl of Clarendon was examined, and stated that he first knew of Birch by receiving communications from him, offering his paper in support of the Government, and, at the critical period of 1848, he felt it his duty as the head of the Government to accept the services of every man who offered himself in support of law and order. He had paid him from time to time as much as 3,700*l.*, the sum being in the first instance partly taken out of the public money, but afterwards repaid out of his own pocket. In cross-examining Birch, it appeared that one of his editors for whose services he claimed remuneration was at the same time sub-editor of the United Irishman. The jury gave a verdict for the defendant with sixpence costs.

8.—In the Court of Exchequer, in the case of Alderman Salomons, M.P., Baron Martin undertakes to prepare a special case, on which the opinion of the court could be taken to determine whether a Jew may or may not legally sit in the House of Commons.

14.—The result of the voting for Louis Napoleon as President of the French Republic was 7,439,219 against 640,737. The voting in Algeria was against the election. He, thereupon, issued decrees regulating the constitution of the Senate, the Legislative Corps, the Council of State, and the High Court of Justice.

17.—Lord John Russell advises the dismissal of Lord Palmerston from the office of Foreign Secretary on the ground that he had, first, in a conversation with the French Ambassador, and next, in a despatch to Lord Normanby, expressed officially his approval of the recent proceedings of Louis Napoleon. The Cabinet having instructed Lord Normanby not to meddle in any way in the internal affairs of France, this interference on the part of our Foreign Minister was held to transgress the following instructions, laid down by her Majesty in 1850, for the guidance of her Secretary:—"The Queen requires, first, that Lord Palmerston will distinctly state what he proposes, in a given case, in order that the Queen may know as distinctly to what she is giving her royal sanction. Secondly, having once given her sanction to a measure, that it be not arbitrarily altered or modified by the minister. Such an act she must consider as failing in sincerity towards the Crown, and justly to be visited by the exercise of her constitutional right of dismissing that minister. She expects to be kept informed of what passes between him and the foreign ministers before important decisions are taken based upon that intercourse; to receive the foreign despatches in good time, and to have the drafts for her approval sent to her in sufficient time to make herself acquainted with their contents before they must be sent off." Lord Palmerston was succeeded at the Foreign Office by Earl Granville.

19.—Died at Chelsea, aged 76, J. M. W. Turner, R.A., English landscape painter.

— Fire at Messrs. Collard and Collard's pianoforte manufactory, Camden-town, destroying many instruments of great value—200 in one floor alone.

20.—Explosion in Rawmarsh Colliery, near Rotherham, Yorkshire. Fifty workmen were blown to pieces in the pit, and of the twenty-three survivors two died from injuries received, seven were grievously hurt, and fourteen escaped with slight bruises. The coroner's jury found a verdict, that the deceased were accidentally killed, but added severe remarks upon the general lax manner in which this unusually fiery coal-seam had been managed.

— "An Englishman" commences a series of letters in the Times, noticeable from their brilliant invective and scornful castigation of Louis Napoleon and his Imperial designs.

24.—Another agrarian outrage in Ireland was perpetrated this day, Mr. Eastwood, a deputy-lieutenant and magistrate of Dundalk, being beaten till he was insensible, then robbed, and afterwards thrown into a quarry hole.

— Fire at the Capitol, Washington, and destruction of the greater part of the valuable library collected there.

— Instructions issued by prefects of departments throughout France to the effect, that every political inscription, without exception, and in particular the words "liberty," "equality," and "fraternity" shall be immediately removed from the front of public edifices and private dwellings. The trees of liberty to be cut down or rooted up.

Opposition of the Constitutional party in France to the Imperial schemes of the President. M. Léon Faucher writes: "It is with painful astonishment I have learned that my name figures amongst those of the members of a Consultative Commission which you have just instituted. I did not think I had given you the right to do me so much injury. The services which I have rendered you, believing that I rendered them to my country, authorized me, I think, to expect another kind of gratitude from you. In any case, my character deserved more respect. You know that, during an already long career, I have no more belied my liberal principles than my devotion to order. I have never participated, directly or indirectly, in the violation of the laws; and, in order to decline the post which you, without my consent, confer on me, I have only to recall that which I received from the people, and which I retain."

26.—The Gazette of this evening states that the amount of gold and silver in the cellars of the Bank of England is 17,413,564*l.*, being the largest amount ever deposited there.

27.—At Belper, Anthony Turner murders Mrs. Barnes, a widow lady of eccentric habits, by rushing into the room where she was sitting and cutting her throat with a carving knife which he had borrowed from a neighbouring provision dealer. Turner was tipsy at the time, but declared before the coroner that he was excited to the crime by the refusal of Mrs. Barnes to advance money for the support of her deceased husband's illegitimate child. He was tried at Derby Spring Assizes, found guilty, and executed.

28.—Erskine Mather, a young Englishman, belonging to South Shields, struck down in the streets of Florence by an Austrian officer at the head of his troops. He had stepped a foot or two within the line of march, but disclaimed any intention of passing between the band and the troops, as was alleged by the officer in defence. The negotiations connected with this outrage on a British subject were long and complicated. Reference was made to it at various meetings throughout the country, and the affair on several occasions engaged the attention of both Houses of Parliament. It ended in an apology from the officer, and the payment of 240*l.* by the Tuscan Government as compensation for the injury.

29.—Mutiny of convicts at Woolwich. On the return of one of the gangs on board the Warrior to dinner, they rushed down and took possession of two of the decks, defying the guards or any of the military to come near them. After a brief delay a party of marines with drawn cutlasses went below, and heavily ironed thirty-eight of the most outrageous, depriving the others of such trifling arms as they had procured. Seven were flogged as an example.

January 1.—Grand religious ceremony at Notre-Dame, to inaugurate Louis Napoleon's acceptance of the ten years' Presidency. The Moniteur of the same day publishes the following decree:—"The President, considering that the French Republic in its new form, sanctioned by the suffrage of the people, may adopt without umbrage the souvenirs of the Empire, and the symbols which recall the glory of that period; and considering that the national flag should no longer be deprived of the renowned emblem which conducted our soldiers to victory in a hundred battles, decrees, (1) that the French eagle shall be re-established on the colours of the army; and (2) that it is also re-established on the Cross of the Legion of Honour."

— The Statutes of the Roman Catholic Synod of Thurles, as approved by the Apostolic See, regulating the administration of the sacraments in Ireland, and prohibiting the Catholic clergy from holding office in the Queen's colleges, read in all the Catholic churches and chapels in Ireland.

3.—John Mitchell, one of the Irish political convicts at large in Australia on a ticket of leave, succeeds in escaping to a vessel on the coast, which conveys him to America.

4.—Destruction of the West India steam-ship Amazon by fire. She sailed on her first voyage from Southampton on the 2d. At a quarter before 10 o'clock this (Sunday) morning, when the ship was about 110 miles W.S.W. of Scilly, a fire suddenly broke out forward on the starboard side, between the steam-chest and the under part of the galley, and shortly after the flames rushed up the gangway, in front of the fore funnel. The alarm bell was rung, and Captain Symons rushed on deck in his shirt and trousers. Wet sacks and other loose things were placed on the gratings of the spar-deck hatch, and a hose was brought to play on the main deck, but quickly abandoned in consequence of the heat. The deck pump was also kept at work until the men were forced to retire. The wind was then blowing half a gale from S.W. and the vessel going 8½ knots, her average rate from the time of departure. Captain Symons ordered some hay between the engine-room crank gratings to be thrown overboard, and two trusses were hove over; but the fire soon igniting the main body, the hencoops on each side, and the paddle-boxes, the men were obliged to abandon the deck. Many were burnt in their berths, others suffocated, and a great number drowned in lowering the boats. Every possible exertion was made to put out the fire, but with no effect. The mail-boat, lowered with twenty or twenty-five persons in it, was immediately swamped and went astern, the people clinging to one another, and all sinking together. The pinnacle was next lowered, but she hung by the fore tackle, and was swamped. In lowering the second cutter, the sea raised her and unhooked the fore-tackle, so that she fell down perpendicularly, and all but two of the people in her were washed out. Captain Symons was all this time using his utmost exertions to save his passengers and crew. "Sixteen men," writes a survivor, "including two passengers, succeeded in lowering the life-boat; and about the same time I, with two men, the steward and a passenger, got into and lowered the dingy. In about half-an-hour the life-boat took the dingy's people into her, and bore down for the ship, with the dingy in tow; but the sea increasing, and being nearly swamped, they were obliged to cast the dingy off, and bring the boat's head to sea. The masts then went—first the foremast, and then the mizen. About this time a bark passed astern of the life-boat: we hailed her with our united twenty-one voices, and thought she answered us, but she wore and stood under the stern of the burning vessel, and immediately hauled her wind and stood away again. The gig, with five hands, was at this time some little way from us, but the sea was running so high we could render her no assistance, and shortly afterwards we lost sight of her. About 4 P.M. (Sunday) it was raining heavily, and the wind shifted to the northward; sea confused, but decreasing; put the boat before the sea. At five o'clock the ship's magazine exploded, and about half-an-hour afterwards the funnels went over the sides, and she sank. At noon we were picked up by the Marsden, of London." Over one hundred perished by fire or drowning. Mr. Eliot Warburton was among the number.

9.—Without being subjected to a trial of any kind, 468 prisoners of state were secretly conveyed from Ivry to Brest, there to be shipped for Cayenne. Next day the Moniteur publishes decrees of proscription against numerous distinguished soldiers, politicians, and men of letters, whose presence in France, it was alleged, might impede the re-establishment of tranquillity.

10.—Sir Harry Smith superseded in his command at the Cape of Good Hope, and General Cathcart appointed.

—The Executive Council of the Amalgamated Society of Engineers recommend that 10,000*l.* be set apart to start a co-operative engineering establishment. Lord Cranworth having been asked to arbitrate in the dispute between the workmen and their employers, writes to Lord Ashburton:—"I fear, from what has passed, that there is too much heat now to expect that any temperate advice will be attended to. Sure I am that a time will come when the workmen will deeply regret the steps they have taken, if they really are endeavouring by combination to deprive the masters of their natural right of managing their own business in their own way. I feel deeply (220) for the men, and I should have been very glad if we could have seen our way to suggest any sort of arbitration which could solve the difficulty, but I cannot." The masters issued a document explanatory of their position, in which they said: "All we want is to be let alone. With less than that we shall not be satisfied. Until we accomplish that we shall not re-open our establishments. With every respect to noble and distinguished referees whose arbitration has been tendered to us, and with no reason to doubt that their award would be honest, intelligent, and satisfactory, we must take leave to say that we alone are the competent judges of our own business, that we are respectively the masters of our own establishments, and that it is our firm determination to remain so. To this principle we recognise no exceptions."

15.—The African chief Sandilla sues for peace, but afterwards refuses to comply with the conditions laid down by Governor Smith.

16.—Severe snow-storm in the North of Scotland and loss of life near Crieff and Killen.

18.—As illustrating the value of the gold harvest in Australia, a letter of this date from Mount Alexander diggings records: "From where I write are the main diggings in the country. They extend for about ten miles, and three weeks since contained from 15,000 to 20,000 persons. Gold is still being found in several new places in the colony. To give you an idea of the business carried on, I may mention that I sent down 26 lbs. of gold and about 200*l.* in sacks last escort, the proceeds of one week."

19.—Discovery of the remains of a party of British missionaries who had perished by starvation in Patagonia. They left this country in the autumn of 1850, and landed at Picton Island, Terra del Fuego, on the 6th December following. Rumours that they had perished by the hands of the natives reached this country some months since, and Captain Moorshead, of her Majesty's ship Dido, was instructed to ascertain their fate on his way to the Pacific station. For some time no traces of the missionaries were found, but as the explorers were about to return to the Dido, certain writing was noticed on rocks across the river and elsewhere, which proved to be the words, "Go to Spaniard Harbour." Hastening to Spaniard Harbour, they saw on the beach a boat turned upside down; and on coming near to it, they found two dead bodies, which were identified, by scattered books and papers near them, as those of Captain Gardiner and Mr. Maidment. On one of the papers was written legibly, but without date: "If you will walk along the beach for a mile and a half, you will find us in the other boat, hauled up in the mouth of a river at the head of the harbour, on the south side. Delay not; we are starving." Hurrying to the point indicated, they found the wreck of a second boat, and the remains of two more bodies, which they supposed to be those of Mr. Williams, surgeon, and John Pearce, Cornish fisherman, other members of the expedition. The papers showed that all the others had died of starvation, and were buried near to where the survivors were found. The tale of their sufferings was told in the diary of Captain Gardiner, the superintendent, kept by him with tolerable regularity till near the hour of his death—the last words of it being scarcely legible from the weakness of the hand which wrote them.

22.—The Prince President of the French Republic decrees the confiscation of the property of the Orleans family. The dotation made by Louis-Philippe in favour of his children of the reversionary interest of the Orleans estates was also cancelled.

28.—Provincial Diets restored to Holstein.

29.—The Duke de Nemours and the Prince de Joinville, in addressing M. Montalembert and M. Dupin, Procureur-Général, who had protested against the confiscation of the Orleans property, write: "We will not lower ourselves to point out how particularly odious the calumnies are when brought forward by a man who on two different occasions received proofs of the magnanimity of King Louis-Philippe, and whose family never received anything from him but benefit. We leave it to public opinion to do justice to the words as well as to the act which accompanies them; and if we are to believe the testimonies of sympathy which we receive from every side, we are sufficiently avenged."

February 2.—Martin Merino, a priest of the Franciscan order, attempts to assassinate the Queen of Spain when passing with her court along one of the galleries of the Escorial to the church of the Atocha. The stays worn by her Majesty caused the dagger to turn aside from the vital part aimed at, and the assassin succeeded in inflicting only a flesh wound, which, however, bled profusely. Merino was sentenced to death by the garotte, and executed on the Campo de Guardias, after being deprived, amid much ceremony, of his priestly office.

3.—Parliament opened by the Queen in person; the state procession passing for the first time under the great arch of the Victoria Tower. The Royal Speech indicated that bills would be introduced for improving the administration of justice in its various departments, and also for making such amendments in the Act of the late reign, relating to the representation of the people, as might be considered likely to carry into more complete effect the principles upon which that law was founded.

—Overthrow of General Rosas as Dictator near Buenos Ayres. A severe action was fought near the Passo del Rey, between the forces of Rosas and the allied Brazilian troops under the command of General Urquiza, when the former was completely defeated and a large portion of his army destroyed.

3.—Lord John Russell having explained the circumstances connected with the resignation of the Foreign Office by Lord Palmerston, in December last, the ex-Secretary said: "It was obvious that if the Minister for Foreign Affairs were never allowed, in easy and familiar conversation with Foreign Ministers, to express an opinion on foreign events, whether important or not, not as the organ of the Government, but as an opinion which he had himself formed at the moment, then such a restriction on the conduct of Foreign Ministers would be extremely injurious and prejudicial to the public service. It was a misrepresentation of the fact to say that he had given instructions to Lord Normanby inconsistent with the relations of general intercourse between England and France. It was no instruction at all. He did not profess to give the opinion of the Government as that of England. It was his own opinion, and, whether right or wrong, it was shared by numbers in France. So far as his conversation with the French Ambassador went, he had merely expressed his individual opinion that there had been for some time such an antagonism between the President and the Assembly, that their co-existence had become an impossibility, and if one or the other side were to prevail it would be better that it should be the President."

—The Moniteur publishes the organic decree for the election of deputies to the French Assembly: one deputy for every 35,000 electors, with an additional one when there was a surplus of 25,000 in the department. All Frenchmen twenty years of age, enjoying civil and political rights, to be electors.

5.—Mr. Forbes Mackenzie's Bill regulating public-houses in Scotland read the first time in the House of Commons.

—Catastrophe at Holmfirth, a village in the West Riding of Yorkshire, situate in a narrow pass, where several valleys converged towards the plain, and down which ran a narrow stream, the drainage of the neighbouring hills. In order to maintain an adequate supply of water for the factories thickly scattered along the valley, large reservoirs had been formed above the town, but the most of them were of inadequate strength, and from the recent long-continued rains were now unusually full. Soon after midnight of the 4th, the embankment of the Bilberry reservoir, 150 yards long and 90 feet high, gave way, and the whole mass of the pent-up water, about 50 feet in depth, rushed down the gorge in one solid column. Mills and dye-houses, walls, cottages, barns, and stables, went down before the flood; trees were uprooted, carts and wagons swept away. The numerous bridges which crossed the stream intercepted the rolling débris, and formed dams behind which the waters for a time accumulated. Then rushing forward with increased force, the deluge swept through the hamlet of Holm, carrying away or wrecking whole streets of cottages, shops, and manufactories (in numerous (221) cases overwhelming the terrified inmates in the surging waters), and thence proceeded on its devastating course down the gorge for a distance of five miles, where the valley opened out into flatter ground, and the flood spread over a surface which, in a great measure, dissipated its power. Nearly a hundred human beings were overwhelmed in this destructive flood. In many cases whole families were drowned; one old man attending the corpses of nine children and grandchildren to the grave. The damage to property was estimated at 600,000*l.* Adults to the number of 4,986, and children to the number of 2,142, earning between them 4,000*l.* per week, were rendered destitute. The extent of the catastrophe excited universal sympathy throughout the kingdom and colonies, and the sum of 45,000*l.* was gathered in a short time for the relief of the sufferers. This not only met the claims made upon the fund, but helped to restore the reservoir to a condition which revived the industry of the valley. From the inquiry which took place before the coroner, it appeared that when the reservoir was constructed a waste pit was formed in the dam to carry off all water after it had risen to a certain height, and the orifice of this was, of course, below the level of the top of the embankment. As the embankment gradually settled down this was reversed, and the opening of this safety-valve became considerably above the top level. When the waters therefore rose to the top of the dam, they began to pour over the edge, the embankment yielded, and in a moment the mass of water burst through the rotten works to rush onward with irresistible speed. The jury returned a verdict imputing gross and culpable negligence to the commissioners, engineers, and overlookers, and regretting that, in consequence of the commissioners being a corporate body, they could not find them guilty of manslaughter.

9.—Lord John Russell obtains leave to bring in a bill to extend the right of voting for members of Parliament, and to amend the laws relating to the representation of the people. Disputing the right of every man to the suffrage, seeing that the only object in view ought to be the good government of the country, he wished to preserve the balance of county and borough representation, and also small boroughs, without which many able men would be excluded from Parliament. He did not in the meantime propose to disfranchise any constituency, but would deal with electoral corruption under another bill. He proposed to lower the franchise in boroughs, to householders rated at 5*l.* instead of 10*l.*; in counties, to occupiers of houses rated at 20*l.*; to copyholders and long leaseholders of 5*l.* instead of 10*l.*; and, lastly, to give a vote to persons in counties or boroughs paying assessed or income-tax to the amount of 40*s.* per annum. The bill, which was but coldly received, was read a first time on the 12th, but afterwards withdrawn on the defeat of the Ministry.

16.—Lord John Russell introduces the Government Militia Bill. He proposed to establish it on the local, instead of the old regular militia plan; two-thirds of the officers to be appointed by the Lord Lieutenant, and one-third by the Crown; the limits subjecting parties to the ballot to be, in the first year, 20 to 23 years of age; in the second, 20 to 25; and in the third, 20 to 30. The men were to be formed into battalions, and assembled for training, 28 days in the first year and 14 in each subsequent year. In the event of danger of invasion, the corps might be embodied and sent to any part of the country; 70,000 to be raised the first year, 100,000 the second, and 150,000 the third; the final extent to be determined by the Crown and Parliament hereafter.

17.—Decree issued in France, making the birthday of the Emperor Napoleon I. (August 15) the only national holiday.

18.—The representatives of Austria and Prussia formally transfer the Government of Holstein to the Danish Commissary at Kiel. The integrity of the Danish monarchy was secured, and the administration and independence of Schleswig and its old union with Holstein guaranteed by treaty.

20.—Died, in his 75th year, Sir H. J. Fust, Judge of the Court of Arches.

— Resignation of the Russell Ministry. On the Committee bringing up their Report on the Militia Bill, Lord Palmerston proposed to substitute the words "regular" for "local." Lord John Russell opposed the amendment, but, on a division, was defeated by 135 to 126 votes. Accepting this as an indication of want of confidence, he gave up the bill, and the Ministry tendered their resignation to her Majesty, which she was pleased to accept. Lord Derby was thereupon sent for, and undertook the formation of a Government.

21.—A letter from Sir G. Grey to Earl Fitzhardinge conveys the royal sanction to the formation of a Rifle Corps in Cheltenham.

— Publication of the forged "Letters of Percy Bysshe Shelley, with an Introductory Essay by Robert Browning." In reviewing the book, the Athenaeum wrote: "On the whole, the contents are valuable chiefly for incorporation in some future edition of the complete essays and letters of Shelley." Suspicion having been excited by Mr. F. T. Palgrave's discovery that one of the so-called Essays descriptive of Florence, and bearing the post-mark of Ravenna, had been copied from an article by his father, in an old number of the Quarterly Review, a rigid inquiry was made into the history of the collection. It turned out that the letters had been purchased singly, from time to time, by Mr. White, bookseller, Pall Mall, the vendor being a lady who represented herself as acting for an invalid sister, but whom Mr. White latterly discovered to be acting in suspicious complicity with the so-called George Gordon Byron. The letters were afterwards sent for sale to Sotheby and Wilkinson's, and purchased by Mr. Moxon, at high prices. Many glaring instances of plagiarism having been pointed out, the book was withdrawn from circulation. A collection of 147 pretended Byron letters, obtained through the same channel, had, in April 1849, been sold privately by Mr. White to Mr. Murray, of Albemarle-street, for 123*l*. Mr. Moxon's experience prevented any of these coming before the public.

25.—The Birkenhead steam-ship, conveying troops to the Caffre War, wrecked in calm weather on Point Danger, about fifty miles from Simon's Bay, on the South African coast. In about twenty minutes, she broke into three pieces and went down, carrying hundreds with her, and leaving hundreds more struggling with sharks amid fragments of the wreck. The rush of water through the hole aft the foremast where she struck was so great that the whole of the men in the lower troop-deck must have been drowned in their hammocks. Captain Wright, of the 91st, writes: "The order and regularity that prevailed on board, from the time the ship struck till she totally disappeared, far exceeded anything that I thought could be effected by the best discipline. Every one did as he was directed, and there was not a murmur nor a cry among them till the vessel made her final plunge." Of 630 officers, seamen, soldiers, and boys on board, 438 were drowned.

26.—Died at Sloperton Cottage, near Devizes, in his 72d year, Thomas Moore, the poet.

27.—Ministerial re-elections. In the House of Peers Lord Derby, in explanation of his reasons for taking office and of the policy he proposed to adopt, contended that when the entire supply of an article came from abroad the whole increase of price caused by taxation fell upon the consumer, but that was not the case when the article was partly of foreign and partly of home supply; and he would not shrink from declaring his opinion that there was no reason why corn should be the solitary exception to the rule. Though a revision of our financial policy might be desirable, it was a question only to be solved by reference to the clearly-expressed and well-understood opinion of the intelligent part of the people.

March 1.—At the opening of the Aylesbury Assizes, Lord Campbell censures Mr. Scott Murray, the high sheriff of Berks, for permitting his Romish chaplain to ride in the carriage with the judges, and sit in the court with them in the garb of his order.

2.—Meeting at Manchester to reconstruct the Anti-Corn-law League.

5.—In the lists of the new Ministry, Sir E. Sugden (Lord St. Leonard's) appears as Lord Chancellor; Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Disraeli; Home Secretary, Mr. Walpole; Foreign, Earl of Malmesbury; Colonial, Sir J. Pakington.

12.—At a meeting of 160 members of the House of Commons, at Lord John Russell's residence, Chesham-place, it was resolved to ask the new Government to make a full declaration of its policy.

15.—In answer to Mr. Villiers' question, as to the policy of Government in reference to the food of the people, the Chancellor of the Exchequer said her Majesty's present Ministers believed that very great injustice had been done to the agricultural and other interests in 1846, and that it was desirable for the benefit of all classes that this injustice should be remedied; but they were not pledged to any specific measure, and no proposition could be made till the verdict of the country had been obtained. In answer to Lord Beaumont, the Earl of Derby made a similar declaration in the House of Lords. "The next election," he said, "must finally decide, at once and for ever, the great question of our commercial policy."

22.—The St. Albans Disfranchisement Bill passes through committee in the Commons, Mr. J. Bell making a final appeal to the House to spare the borough. The bill passed early in the session through the House of Lords, and received the royal assent.

25.—John Keene, of Albury, aged 20, and Janet Keene, his wife, aged 25, tried at Kingston assizes for the murder of the latter prisoner's illegitimate child, by throwing it down a well near Albury Heath. Keene was convicted and executed, and the female prisoner acquitted.

26.—Died in Dublin, in his 84th year, the Most Rev. Dr. Murray, Catholic Archbishop of Dublin, a man of singular piety and moderation.

29.—Lord Ellenborough moves for and obtains a return of the papers connected with the forfeiture of the territories held by Prince Ali Morad, forfeited on the ground of his having been guilty of fraud and forgery in obtaining them. Lord Broughton imputed to the machinations of Ali Morad, the Scinde War, which ended in the destruction of the power of the Ameers. Lord Derby stated that a light altogether unexpected had been recently thrown on the case of the Ameers of Scinde; and an inquiry had been directed to ascertain how far the Indian Government had acted at any time on the advice of Ali Morad.

—Imperial projects of the French President. At the swearing-in of the Senate and Legislative body, the President hinted that the Empire might yet be called into existence as a necessity. "If by underhand intrigues parties endeavour to sap the basis of my Government; if, in their blindness, they contest the legitimacy of the popular election; if, finally, they endanger by their incessant attacks the future prospects of the country, then, and only then, it may be reasonable to demand from the people in the name of the repose of France, a new title which will irrevocably fix upon my head the power with which they invested me." This intention to assume imperial power having been brought under the notice of the Russian and Prussian Cabinets, they replied that it would be a violation of the treaties of 1814 and 1815, inasmuch as these treaties excluded for ever the family of Bonaparte from the throne of France. They might not, however, be indisposed to recognise him as an elective emperor enjoying for life a station analogous to the kings of Poland, if such title were conferred on him by a new plébiscite.

29.—In the House of Commons the Home Secretary, Mr. Walpole, moves that a bill be prepared to amend and consolidate the laws relating to the Militia. He proposed to raise, if possible, without abandoning the ballot, 80,000 volunteers, to be drilled and trained under the Regulations of the 43d George III., and to receive bounties of 3*l.* or 4*l.*, either paid at once or at the rate of 2*s.* or 2*s.* 6*d.* per month, as the volunteer might prefer. The number of days' training in the year would be generally twenty-one, but the Crown would have the power of increasing it to seven weeks, or limiting it to three days.

April 1.—Advices from the Cape mention that Sir H. Smith, placing himself personally at the head of his troops, had at last driven Macomo out of the Water Kloof, destroying his camp and capturing his chief wife, and was advancing on him and Sandilla united in their last stronghold of the Amatolas. Our loss in rank and file had been heavy, and there were credible statements that horrible tortures were inflicted by the Caffres on the English prisoners.

2.—In bringing up the Militia Bill, Mr. Walpole gives notice that he will move the insertion of a clause providing "that any person who shall serve in the Militia for two years shall be entitled to be registered and have a vote for the county in which he resides." He intimated on the 5th that he did not intend to press this motion, Mr. C. Williams declaring that the proposal originated in an after-dinner joke of Lord Derby's. The bill, after a minute discussion in committee, was read a third time on the 7th of June, and passed the House of Lords on the 21st of the same month.

— In Dublin, Dr. Cullen, Roman Catholic Primate, is elected successor of the late Archbishop Murray. A Papal bull, confirming the election, was received 4th June.

— On the motion of Lord Derby, a Select Committee was appointed to inquire into the Act regulating the affairs of the East India Company, with the view of ascertaining chiefly whether it would at this time be advisable to abolish the Court of Directors, and have the nominal as well as the real ruling authority vested in a responsible department of Government.

3.—Thomas C. Wheeler, a young man residing in Kennington-road, in a fit of insanity, murders his mother by cutting her throat with a carving-knife, and then cuts off her head, which he placed on a table set out for dinner.

5.—In the House of Lords, Lord Ellenborough submits a resolution requesting the production of papers relating to the Burmese war. In assenting, the Earl of Derby explained that the expedition now on its way to the Burmese shores, or already on them, was not intended to be against the capital or interior of the country; but only to strike a blow against Rangoon and Martaban, which, by terrifying the Burmese, and showing the efficiency of our forces, would induce them to accept our terms. The second time Commodore Lambert entered the Irrawaddy he only made the same demands as at first; and now, on his third entry, he bore word to the King of Ava, that if he would express his regret for what had occurred, and pay a sum to reimburse the expenditure of our preparations, hostilities would be suspended and peace restored. Lord Derby concluded by observing, that "if the steps taken shall not be sufficient before the rainy season to induce the Burmese authorities to tender their submission and to enter into terms of peace, then it will be for the Governor-General to consider what steps it will be his duty to take in the arduous struggle which will then be forced upon him."

— "Grand Promenade" demonstration in the Exhibition building, with the view of inducing the Government to preserve the structure for purposes of public utility and recreation. About 80,000 people present.

14.—Rangoon stormed by a force under General Godwin. "The advance," he writes, "to the east entrance of the pagoda was of about 800 yards, which the troops crossed in a most steady manner, under the fire of the walls crowded with the enemy. When the storming party reached the steps, a tremendous rush was made to the upper terrace, and a deafening cheer told that the pagoda no longer belonged to the Burmese. The enemy ran in confusion from the southern and western gates, where they were met by the fire of the steamers. All the country round has fallen with the pagoda."

15.—Seven children perish in a fire at Renton, near Glasgow. The flames extended over two small houses, and before any aid could be rendered the roof fell in, burying the whole of the children in the house at the time.

17.—The Goldsmiths' Company entertain her Majesty's Ministers. Lord Derby, illustrating his recent efforts to form a Ministry by the new gold discoveries, said: "It was supposed that the crop of statesmen was one of very limited amount, for which, if you were disposed to search, you must dig in certain favoured localities, and confine yourself to searching for them there. I am happy to think, gentlemen, that to some extent I have been instrumental in dispelling that illusion. A fortunate adventurer, I have boldly opened a new mine, and I am happy to say that in the opinion of competent judges, so far as it has been yet worked, the ore that has been raised contains among it as large a proportion of sterling metal, with as little admixture of dross, as any that was ever drawn from the old and exclusive mines to which we were formerly confined."

19.—Baron Alderson delivers the judgment of the Exchequer Court in the case of Miller v. Salomons, who had taken part in the proceedings of the House after refusing to take the customary oath "on the true faith of a Christian."—"I am of opinion," said the learned judge, "that these words do form a distinct and essential part of the oath; because they interpret, and give a peculiar and stringent sense to the previous words, and are, in fact, incorporated in and form part of each sentence in that oath, so that without them no part of the oath has exactly the same meaning that it has when they are added to it. I believe that they were advisedly and on great consideration originally adopted (perhaps on Sir Edward Coke's advice), and that they have been found effectual, and for that reason retained ever since. I think, therefore, that the oath is not taken at all if these words are omitted by the person swearing, and that Mr. Salomons has therefore voted without previously taking the Oath of Abjuration. I do most seriously regret that I am obliged, as a mere expounder of the law, to come to this conclusion, for I do not believe that the case of the Jews was at all thought of by the Legislature when they framed these provisions. I think that it would be more worthy of this country to exclude the Jews from these privileges, if they are to be excluded at all (as to which I say nothing), by some direct enactment, and not merely by the casual operation of a clause, intended apparently in its object and origin to apply to a very different class of the subjects of England. I regret also that the consequences are so serious, involving disabilities of the most fearful kind, in addition to the penalty sought to be recovered in this action, and in fact making Mr. Salomons for the future almost an outlaw. It is to be hoped that some remedy will be provided for these consequences, at least by the Legislature. My duty is, however, plain: it is to expound the law, not to make it; to decide on it as I find it, not as I wish it to be. It seems to me that the law on this point is quite clear, and that the judgment must be for the plaintiff." The Lord Chief Baron and Mr. Baron Parke concurred. Mr. Baron Martin was of opinion that the defendant had lawfully taken the oath.

20.—Mr. Horsman's motion for an address to her Majesty, praying that inquiry might be made whether due respect was paid to the decrees and canons of the Church in the institution of Mr. Bennett into the vicarage of Frome, lost by 100 votes to 80.

22.—The House of Lords, after the second reading of the St. Albans' Disfranchisement Bill, agree, by a majority of 41 to 15, to hear counsel at the bar against the bill, but the privilege was declined.

23.—The Oxford University Commissioners conclude their inquiry, having met eighty-seven times since the 19th of October, 1850. Their elaborate Report, which ultimately led to various reforms, gave a complete review of the history, condition, and present working of the most important colleges. On the subject of subscription, the Commissioners express a well-founded conviction, "that the imposition of Subscription in the manner in which it is now imposed in the University of Oxford, habituates the mind to give a careless assent to truths which it has never considered, and naturally leads to sophistry in the interpretation of solemn obligations."

25.—General Rosas lands at Plymouth from Buenos Ayres.

27.—The Count de Chambord issues a manifesto from Venice, urging French Royalists to enter into no engagement in opposition to their political faith. The salvation of France, he urged, was connected with the re-establishment of the legitimate monarchy.

28.—The motion for the second reading of the bill abolishing tests in the Universities of Scotland, negatived by 172 to 157.

30.—The ordinary revenue for the ensuing year, exhibiting a probable deficiency of fully 2,000,000*l.* The Chancellor of the Exchequer, in introducing his budget, proposed to continue the Income-tax for another year, as a provisional remedy, until other means could be devised. The Government, he said, were not averse to considering the whole of our financial system, but it was impossible they could have done so hitherto, and he felt strongly that nothing could be more unwise than tampering with the indirect taxation of the country before they had laid down any fixed principle upon which our system of taxation should be based.

May 3.—Sir J. Pakington introduces a bill conferring a representative constitution upon New Zealand.

5.—The schooner Titania, the property of Mr. R. Stephenson, the eminent engineer, destroyed by fire in Cowes harbour.

9.—M. Arago refuses to take the oath of allegiance to the new Constitution. He writes to the Minister of Instruction: "Circumstances rendered me in 1848, as a member of the Provisional Government, one of the founders of the Republic; as such, and I glory in it at present, I contributed to the abolition of all political oaths. At a later period I was named by the Constituent Assembly president of the Executive Committee. My acts in that last-named situation are too well-known to the public for me to have need to mention them here. You can comprehend, Monsieur le Ministre, that in presence of these reminiscences my conscience has imposed on me a resolution which perhaps the director of the Observatory would have hesitated to come to. I have, therefore, to request you to appoint a day on which I shall have to quit an establishment which I have been inhabiting now for nearly half a century." On the same subject General Changarnier writes thus to the Minister of the Interior: "I have no need to deliberate so long upon a question of duty and honour. This oath, exacted by the perjured man who has failed to corrupt me—this oath I refuse." By special decree M. Arago was permitted to remain at the Observatory without taking the oath.

10.—The ceremony of distributing the eagles and standards to the French army takes place with imposing splendour in the Champ de Mars. When the distribution was completed, the President said: "Soldiers! the history of nations is, in a great measure, the history of armies. On their success or reverse depends the fate of civilization and of the country. If conquered, the result is invasion or anarchy. If victorious, it is glory or order. . . . Soldiers! resume these eagles, not as a menace against foreign powers, but as the symbol of our independence, as the souvenir of an heroic epoch, and as a sign of the nobleness of each regiment. Take again the eagles which have so often led our fathers to victory; and swear to die if necessary in their defence." The standard-bearers then marched to the chapel erected on the ground for the purpose of getting their insignia blessed and sprinkled with holy water. The Archbishop pronounced a short address to the standard-bearers justifying the ceremony of blessing the insignia of war. At the close of the religious part of the ceremony it was noticed that the cavalry shouted "Vive l'Empereur" with great enthusiasm.

— The Chancellor of the Exchequer proposes to assign the four seats for Sudbury and St. Albans to the West Riding of Yorkshire and the southern division of Lancashire. Mr. Gladstone moved the order of the day, there being, he argued, no urgency for the settlement of such a question as this. On a division, the Government proposal was negated by 234 to 148.

— Colliery explosion in the Duffryn Pit, Aberdare, Glamorganshire, and loss of sixty-four lives. In trying to escape, the workmen had in several places fallen on each other and blocked up the passages leading to the shaft. They were found suffocated, piled up in heaps. — On the same day, the water broke into the Gwendraeth Vale Pit between Llanelly and Carmarthen, and, with one exception, drowned the whole of the twenty-eight men in the works at the time.

11.—Commencement of debate on Mr. Spooner's motion for a Select Committee to inquire into the system of education carried on at the College of Maynooth. The motion for inquiry was supported by Government on the grounds that the condition of the grant had not been adequately fulfilled, and that the objects for which it was made no longer existed to the same extent. Mr. Gladstone said, while he would throw no obstacle in the way of the proposed inquiry, at the same time if the endowment was to be withdrawn, which was the logical consequence of the course the House was entering on, Parliament must be prepared to enter upon the whole subject of the reconstruction of ecclesiastical arrangements in Ireland. After a debate adjourned over several evenings till the 15th of June, the motion was abandoned by its proposer.

18.—International treaty relative to the succession of the Crown of Denmark, signed in London.

19.—Commencement of the sale of Marshal Soult's Pictures. The gem of the collection, Murillo's "Conception of the Virgin," was purchased for the Louvre, at 23,440*l.* Titian's "Tribute Money" was bought for our own National Gallery, at 4,500*l.* The total sum realized was 1,477,838 francs, or about 60,000*l.*

— A dispute between the London Booksellers' Association and the retail booksellers having been referred to Lord Campbell, Dean Milman, and Mr. Grote, as arbitrators, Lord Campbell this day delivered judgment, finding that the attempt made by the Association to establish the alleged exceptional nature of the commerce of books has failed, and that it ought no longer to be carried on under these regulations.

20.—The miners of the Downbrow Pit, Preston, making light of warnings in certain dangerous parts of the workings, enter one of them with a lighted candle, and thereby cause an explosion in which thirty-five lives are sacrificed.

24.—The escort from Mount Alexander diggings brings into Melbourne 31,478 ounces of gold, the result of a week's diggings, and the largest quantity yet obtained.

29.—Mr. Heywood's motion, for the appointment of a Select Committee to consider the preservation of the Crystal Palace, with a view to its applicability to purposes of public recreation and instruction, lost by 221 votes against 103. The building was afterwards purchased for 70,000*l.* by Mr. Laing, M.P., chairman of the Brighton Railway, and others, for erection on a new site at Sydenham.

31.—James Birch, of the World newspaper, Dublin, sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment for an outrageous attack on the character of a widow lady, Mrs. French, daughter of Mr. Brewster, Q.C., who was leading counsel for Sir William Somerville, in the action of Birch v. Somerville.

June 7.—In his address to the electors of Buckinghamshire, the Chancellor of the Exchequer says: "The time has gone by when the injuries which the great producing interests endure can be alleviated or removed by a recurrence to the laws which, previously to 1846, protected them from such calamities. The spirit of the age tends to free intercourse, and no statesman can disregard with impunity the genius of the epoch in which he lives. But every principle of abstract justice and every consideration of high policy counsel that the producer should be treated as fairly as the consumer; and intimate that when the native producer is thrown into unrestricted competition with external rivals, it is the duty of the Legislature in every way to diminish, certainly not to increase, the cost of production. It is the intention of her Majesty's Ministers to recommend to Parliament, as soon as it is in their power, measures which may effect this end. One of the soundest means, among others, by which this result may be accomplished, is a revision of our taxation."

8.—The floor of the Liverpool Corn Exchange gives way under an audience gathered to hear the two Protectionist candidates, Mackenzie and Turner. Two persons—workmen beneath—killed.

— In opposition to Ministers, and by a majority of 45, Mr. Horsman carries his motion for a Select Committee to inquire into the facts connected with the institution of Mr. Bennett to the vicarage of Frome. He afterwards abandoned the case, owing to the difficulty experienced in forming the committee, and because his opponents insisted that he should prepare the articles of charge against the Bishop of Bath and Wells.

9.—Owing to the disorderly proceedings of Mr. Feargus O'Connor in the House of Commons, arising from mental aberration, the hon. member, on the motion of Mr. Walpole, was committed to the custody of the Serjeant-at-arms. He was afterwards removed, at the wish of his friends, to Dr. Tooke's establishment at Chiswick.

10.—Fire at Messrs. Clowes' printing-office, Duke-street, Southwark. In the warehouse, known as the "chapel," about 200 tons of type were melted, 20,000 reams of paper, and a vast quantity of printed sheets destroyed, amongst the latter being the 8vo. edition of the Exhibition Catalogue.

— In the Arches Court, Sir J. Dodson gives judgment in the case of the Rev. Mr. Gladstone, affirming the decision of the Bishop of London, and admonishing the rev. gentleman against preaching or administering divine service in the unconsecrated chapel of Long-acre, and from performing divine service there or elsewhere in the diocese of London and province of Canterbury till he had obtained a licence. Mr. Gladstone was likewise condemned in the costs of the proceedings.

14.—Lord Malmesbury intimates the intention of Government to withdraw the Surrender of Criminals Bill, on the ground of a serious alteration which had just taken place in the law of France. Under that law, as it now stands, the French Government would seem to have the power to reclaim any criminal from any part of the world, wherever he committed the offence, though it were not committed on French ground, and though the party committing it were not a Frenchman.

15.—Royal proclamation prohibiting Roman Catholic ecclesiastics from engaging in religious processions, or appearing in their priestly dress in any other than their ordinary place of worship.

17.—Establishment of the Bay Island colony, Honduras.

18.—John Nicholls, schoolmaster, dies in Gray's-inn-lane from starvation. He was latterly reduced to earn his livelihood by writing bills for tradesmen's windows. The parish authorities allowed a loaf a week for the support of himself and his paralytic wife. The poor woman found him dead in bed at her side in the course of the morning. The following day, Nicholls became entitled to 120*l.* in cash, and an annuity of 60*l.* The coroner's jury returned a verdict, censuring the parochial authorities for their cruelty in the case.

21.—Came on for trial, in the Court of Queen's Bench, the action for libel raised by Dr. Achilli, formerly a priest of the Church of Rome, but now a Protestant preacher, against Dr. Newman, of the Oratory. The alleged libel was contained in a pamphlet published in October last, entitled "Letters on the present Position of Catholics in England." "Mothers of families (this Achilli seems to say), gentle maidens, innocent children, look at me, for I am worth looking at. You do not see such a sight every day. Can any church live over the imputation of such a production as I am? I have been a Catholic and an infidel; I have been a Roman priest and a hypocrite; I have been a profligate under a cowl. I am that Father Achilli, who, as early as 1826, was deprived of my faculty to lecture for an offence which my superiors did their best to conceal, and who in 1827 had already earned the reputation of a scandalous friar. I am that Achilli, who, in the diocese of Viterbo, in February 1831, robbed of her honour a young woman of eighteen; who, in September 1833, was found guilty of a second such crime, in the case of a person of twenty-eight; and who perpetrated a third, in July 1834, in the case of another aged twenty-four. I am that Cavaliere Achilli who went to Corfu, made the wife of a tailor faithless to her husband, and lived publicly and travelled about with the wife of a chorus singer. I am that professor in the Protestant College at Malta, who, with two others, was dismissed from my post for offences which the authorities cannot get themselves to describe." In another passage

Dr. Newman spoke of the Reformed Church: "In the midst of outrages such as these, my brothers of the Oratory, —wiping its mouth, clasping its hands and turning up its eyes,—it trudges to the Town Hall to hear Dr. Achilli expose the Inquisition." The defendant brought forward evidence in justification, and several women were examined, who deposed to the acts of immorality alleged against Achilli in Italy, and also in London. Evidence was also given of the judgment of the Inquisition, whereby, on the ground of such charges, he was deprived of all ecclesiastical functions for ever, and sent to a convent for three years.—The jury returned a verdict of Guilty of libel and publication; and found the 19th charge (that Dr. Achilli had been deprived of his professorship, and prohibited from preaching) proved. Lord Campbell directed a verdict to be entered for the Crown on both pleas, and stated that he would report the above special finding to the Court when necessary.

29.—Died at Washington, aged 75, Henry Clay, statesman.

— After lengthy and repeated discussions in both Houses of Parliament, the Chancellor of the Exchequer is able to-day to intimate that the misunderstanding between this country and Tuscany, arising out of the Mather case, has been entirely removed. "There had been a most ample acknowledgment of regret on the part of the Tuscan Government, and the very best sentiments now subsisted between the two Powers."

— Riot at Stockport between Irish Catholic and English Protestant working-men. The immediate exciting cause was a procession of children attending the Roman Catholic schools the previous Sunday. On their side two chapels were broken into, and their furniture torn out and burnt on the highway; the retaliatory measures consisting of an attack on a school connected with St. James's Church, and the breaking of the windows of Mr. Graham, a surgeon who had rendered himself obnoxious to the Roman Catholic party. The rioters had repeated encounters with each other, and out of the 114 apprehended, 60 were suffering under injuries received in the disturbance. An Irishman, named Moran, who wounded several with a pitchfork, was himself struck down and beaten so unmercifully, that he died in the course of the evening. Ten English and ten Irish were committed for trial at Chester Assizes, and there sentenced to terms of imprisonment varying from two years to two months.

July 1.—Parliament prorogued by the Queen in person, the Speech on the occasion giving intimation that it was her Majesty's intention to announce a dissolution with the least possible delay.

— The new Metropolitan Burial Act comes (228) into operation, empowering parochial authorities to form cemeteries on the representation of ten or more rate-payers that the present place of burial is insufficient or dangerous to health.

1.—Collision off Northfleet between the Margate steam-ship Duchess of Kent and the Ravensbourne bound for Antwerp. The damage sustained by the former was so serious that she filled and sunk in deep water nine minutes after the accident. With one exception, the passengers were got off, either by the Ravensbourne or other boats close at hand when the collision took place.

12.—Election riots at Cork and Limerick. The interference with voters was carried to an extent which compelled the clerks to close the booths and suspend the polling. At Limerick one man was thrown from the gallery of the hustings, and spiked on the rails beneath. The military were attacked with stones, five of them unhorsed, and two officers wounded. The troops then charged with drawn swords, and next day thirteen persons were under hospital treatment.

— Accident at Burnley station to a train of thirty-five carriages returning with an excursion party of Sabbath-school children and teachers. Owing to an omission on the part of the pointsman, the train entered the station on the wrong rails, and came into collision with the buffers fixed in the wall of a bridge. Three children and one adult were killed on the spot.

13.—Election riot at Belfast between Protestants and Romanists. The chief seat of the disturbance was between College-square and Barrack-street, where many houses were wrecked, and, in the later stages of the struggle, two or three people seriously injured by the discharge of fire-arms. Respectably dressed women were seen supplying the combatants with paving-stones and brickbats from the rear of the houses, while girls were engaged breaking the more unwieldy missiles into smaller sizes for the use of the rioters. A troop of Dragoons, and two companies of the 46th Foot, were sent from the barracks, and succeeded in clearing the streets.

22.—Conflict at Six-mile Bridge, Clare, between the peasantry and a small body of military called out to protect the tenants of the Marquis of Conyngham to the polling-booth. Exasperated by the usage to which they were subjected, the soldiers fired upon their assailants, when six were shot and as many more wounded. The coroner's jury returned a verdict of wilful murder against one of the magistrates and eight of the soldiers. The bill was thrown out at Clare Assizes, and a cross prosecution raised against two priests withdrawn.

Curious case of bribery at Derby election. Flewker, an election agent, having betrayed the confidence of the ministerial candidates, the chairman of the Opposition committee, with two or three policemen in plain clothes, all duly furnished with the sign and pass-word, proceeded to one of the rooms in the County Tavern. Some opposition was made to their entrance at first, but on each placing his forefinger on his lip and using the words "It's all right, Radford sent us," they were at once admitted. In the room they discovered a man named Morgan, whom they at once apprehended. They found upon him 265*l.* in gold, and 40*l.* in notes, and on the table before him was a book in which were entered names and numbers from the register of voters, and against certain of them were figures indicating the sums paid. They also found upon him the following letter:—"A good and safe man, with judgment and quickness, is wanted immediately at Derby. I suppose that you cannot leave your own place; if not, send some one in whom you can trust in your place. Let him go to Derby on receiving this, and find the County Tavern in the centre of the town, and send his card to Cox, Brothers, and Company, lead-works, as coming from Chester. That will be enough. W. B., Monday." On examination before a magistrate, Morgan freely admitted that his book contained the names of electors who had received money for their vote. The note was afterwards traced to the Secretary-at-War, Major Beresford, and his complicity in the transaction led to a parliamentary inquiry (see Dec. 16).

31.—A diversity giving rise to much comment was noticed in the speeches delivered during the present election contest by ministerial supporters, regarding the views of the Cabinet on the subject of Free-trade. At Lynn, Lord Stanley said, "The question of Protection is set at rest, and I am glad of it." "Why," said Mr. Disraeli at the Bucks election dinner, "no one can suppose that the present administration has any intention or ever had any intention of taxing the food of the people, or of bringing back the laws repealed in 1846." In Lincolnshire, Mr. Christopher plainly stated, that he believed it to be Lord Derby's intention to restore Protection, a sentiment echoed with more or less distinctness by Mr. Walpole at Midhurst, Lord John Manners at Colchester, and Lord Granby at North Leicestershire. Not only, said Mr. Macaulay, did they suit their language to town or county constituencies, but individual candidates were seen from the same reason to change all their former professions. Lord Maidstone, a vehement Protectionist, adopted the policy of Sir Robert Peel when standing for Westminster; while Sir Fitzroy Kelly, Peel's Solicitor-General, made a speech at East Suffolk which might have been composed out of Lord Maidstone's hexameters. The one forgot his votes; the other his verse.

August 2.—Died, aged 52, Alfred Count d'Orsay, a fashionable writer and artist.

5.—The first pillar of the New Crystal Palace at Sydenham fixed by Mr. Laing, the chairman of the company, in the presence of a large and distinguished company. Speeches were delivered on the occasion by Sir J. Paxton, Sir C. Lyell, and Mr. Scott Russell.

6.—Numerous fires at Constantinople, presumed to be the work of incendiaries.

8.—A decree of the Prince President permits M. Thiers, and certain other exiles, to return to France.

9.—In the Encumbered Estates Court, Dublin, the number of estates disposed of were 777, in 4,083 lots, producing a total of 7,353,736*l.*

10.—Lord Frankfort appears at Bow-street Police-court on a charge of sending a letter of an improper character to Lord Henry Lennox. The letter, written under a feigned name, was similar in character to a bundle of others taken from Lord Frankfort's servant at the Post-office, informing different parties that the writer, having been trained under Wilmer Harris, still continued to arrange assignations between ladies and gentlemen. Lord Frankfort was committed for trial at the Central Criminal Court, but the case was removed by a writ of certiorari to the Queen's Bench. It came on for hearing there on the 3d December, when the jury returned a verdict of "Guilty of defamation," and the court sentenced Lord Frankfort to twelve months' imprisonment in the House of Correction.

— Establishment of an Association for promoting a cheap System of Colonial and International Postage, Earl Granville president.

13.—The Emperor of Austria returns to Vienna from a tour in Hungary, where he had been favourably received by the people.

16.—So great is the scarcity of harvest labourers in West Sussex, that the farmers apply for the help of the Fusilier Guards stationed at Chichester, to cut their wheat.

20.—Earthquake at St. Jago, Cuba, destroying the southern part of the city, and many of the inhabitants.

21.—American newspapers of this date announce the formation in Alabama and other Southern States, of a secret society called the "Order of the Lone Star," whose object was declared to be "the extension of the institutions, the power, the influence, and the commerce of the United States over the whole of the Western Hemisphere and the Islands of the Atlantic and Pacific seas."

28.—Collision on Lake Erie between the steamer Atlantic, laden with Norwegian emigrants, and the propeller Ogsdenburg. The former sank, and about 200 of those on board were drowned.

30.—Private Edward Dunn, of the 30th depot, Dover Castle, commits suicide by throwing himself from Shakspeare's Cliff.

September 2.—The Free Library of Manchester opened.

5.—Destructive flood in the valley of the Severn.

6.—Museum of Practical and Ornamental Art, under the auspices of the Board of Trade, opened in Marlborough House. The nucleus of the collection was formed with a Treasury grant of 5,000*l.* apportioned to the Board of Trade for the purchase of suitable objects from the Great Exhibition.

7.—Mr. Simpson, of Cremorne Gardens, with Monsieur and Madame Poitevin, appear at the Westminster Police-court, to answer a charge of cruelty to horses, in so far as they had on different occasions attached one to a balloon, and permitted it to ascend with a person sitting on its back. The evidence as to the cruelty attending the feat was of a contradictory character, but on Mr. Simpson promising that it would not be repeated, the summons was dismissed. At the Ilford Petty Sessions the same parties were fined 5*l.* each, for permitting a heifer to ascend bearing Madame Poitevin on its back.

8.—Bronze statue of Sir Robert Peel uncovered in the Market-place of Bury, the statesman's native town.

— Conference of Irish members in Dublin, to secure the passing of Mr. Sharman Crawford's Tenant Right Bill through Parliament.

14.—Died at Ramsgate, aged 40, Augustus Welby Pugin, an enthusiast in Gothic art, and an architect of great genius.

— The Milan Gazette announces that in future the two universities of Pavia and Padua would be open without restriction, as they were before the events of 1848.

— Death of the Duke of Wellington at Walmer Castle. Preserving to the last the activity for which he was distinguished, the Duke took his customary walk in the grounds on the 13th, inspected the stables, and gave directions regarding a journey to Dover. After dining with his customary cheerfulness on venison, he retired to rest apparently in his usual health. Early on the following morning when his valet came to awake him, his Grace did not get up, and ordered the apothecary, Mr. Hulke, to be sent for. He arrived at the Castle shortly before nine o'clock, and found his Grace complaining of uneasiness in the chest and stomach, though perfectly conscious, and answering all the questions put to him correctly. Medicine was ordered, and during its preparation the Duke took a little tea and dry toast. "At this time," writes J. W. Hulke, "there were no symptoms indicative of danger, and my father went home. Shortly he received another communication, stating that the Duke was much worse. My father and I directly went to the Castle. His Grace was in bed unconscious, breathing laboriously. Remedial measures which in former attacks had been useful, were now of no avail. Dr. McArthur soon arrived, and advised an emetic to be given, as this had been very serviceable on a former occasion. Soon after one o'clock he became very restless; he tried to turn on the left side, and there was occasionally twitching of the left arm. Respiration was extremely difficult, but easier when he was raised. This induced us to place his Grace in an easy chair, and his breathing became immediately much more free, but the pulse sank. He was now brought into a more horizontal posture; the pulse rallied for a short time and then gradually declined. Respiration became very feeble, and at twenty-five minutes past three o'clock, P.M., he expired. So easy and gentle was the transition, that for the moment it was doubted. I held a mirror before his mouth. It remained bright. He was indeed no more!" The Duke of Wellington was born at Dangan Castle, Trim, 1st May, 1769.

16.—The Queen receives intelligence of the death of the Duke of Wellington. Writing at Alt-na-Giuthasach, her Majesty records:—"We were startled this morning, at seven o'clock, by a letter from Colonel Phipps, enclosing a telegraphic despatch, with the report, from the sixth edition of the Sun, of the Duke of Wellington's death the day before yesterday, which report, however, we did not at all believe. . . . We got off our ponies (at the Dhu Loch), and I had just sat down to sketch, when Mackenzie returned, saying my watch was safe at home, and bringing letters: amongst them there was one from Lord Derby, which I tore open, and alas! it contained the confirmation of the fatal news; that England's, or rather Britain's pride, her glory, her hero, the greatest man she ever had produced, was no more! Sad day! Great and irreparable national loss! Lord Derby inclosed a few lines from Lord Charles Wellesley, saying that his dear great father had died on Tuesday, at three o'clock, after a few hours' illness, and no suffering. God's will be done! The day must have come. The Duke was eighty-three. It is well for him that he has been taken when still in the possession of his great mind, and without a long illness; but what a loss! One cannot think of this country without 'the Duke,'—an immortal hero! In him centred almost every earthly honour a subject could possess. His position was the highest a subject ever had; above party, looked up to by all, revered by the whole nation, the friend of the Sovereign; and how simply he carried these honours. With what singleness of purpose, what straightforwardness, what courage, were all the motives of his actions guided! The Crown never found, and I fear never will, so devoted, loyal, and faithful a subject, so staunch a supporter. To us (who also have lost now so many of our valued and experienced friends), his loss is irreparable, for his readiness to aid and advise, if it could be of use to us, and to overcome any and every difficulty, was unequalled. To Albert he showed the greatest kindness and the utmost confidence. His experience and his knowledge of the past were so great, too; he was a link which connected us with bygone times, with the last century. Not an eye will be dry in the whole country."

19.—Evidently with the view of putting the Ecclesiastical Titles Bill to the test, "John, Archbishop of Tuam," writes to the Earl of Derby, as First Minister of the Crown, on this the anniversary of "the Feast of the Seven Dolours of the Blessed Virgin."

20.—The Queen, at Balmoral, causes the Earl of Derby to write to the Home Secretary, that she "had received with the deepest grief, on Thursday last, the afflicting intelligence of the sudden death of his Grace the late Duke of Wellington. . . . Her Majesty is well aware that, as in the case of Lord Nelson, she might, of her own authority, have given immediate orders for this public mark of veneration for the memory of the illustrious Duke, and has no doubt but that Parliament and the country would cordially have approved the step. But her Majesty, anxious that this tribute of gratitude and of sorrow should be deprived of nothing which could invest it with a thoroughly national character,—anxious that the greatest possible number of her subjects should have an opportunity of joining it,—is anxious, above all, that such honours should not appear to emanate from the Crown alone; and that the two Houses of Parliament should have an opportunity, by their previous sanction, of stamping the proposed ceremony with increased solemnity, and of associating themselves with her Majesty in paying honour to the memory of one whom no Englishman can name without pride and sorrow. The body of the Duke of Wellington will, therefore, remain, with the concurrence of his family, under proper guardianship, until the Queen shall have received the formal approval of Parliament of the course which it will be the duty of her Majesty's servants to submit to both Houses upon their re-assembling. As soon as possible after that approval shall have been obtained, it is her Majesty's wish, should no unforeseen impediment arise, that the mortal remains of the late illustrious and venerated Commander-in-Chief should, at the public expense, and with all the solemnity due to the greatness of the occasion, be deposited in the cathedral church of St. Paul's, there to rest by the side of Nelson,—the greatest military by the side of the greatest naval chief who ever reflected lustre upon the annals of England."

— During a "progress" in the southern departments of France, the President of the Republic presided at the inauguration of an equestrian statue erected to the Emperor Napoleon at Lyons. "Your town," he said, "has ever been associated with remarkable incidents in the different phases of the life of the Emperor. You selected him Consul on his way to cross the mountains to collect fresh laurels; you selected him Emperor, all powerful; and when Europe confined him to an island, you were again the first, in 1815, to salute him Emperor. . . . Prudence and patriotism require that the nation take counsel before fixing its destinies, and it is still difficult for me to know under what name I can render the greatest services. If the modest title of President could facilitate the mission that was confided to me, and from which I have not shrunk, it is not from any personal interest that I would desire to change this title for that of Emperor. Let us, then, offer on this stone our homage to a great man. In doing so we at once do honour to the glory of France and the generous gratitude of the people. We thus record the fidelity of the Lyonnese to immortal recollections." In an address to his clergy, the Bishop of Châlons spoke thus of the President: "May he be blessed, this man of God,—this great man; for it is God who has raised him up for the happiness of our country, to cure all the wounds which sixty years of revolution have inflicted."

29.—The American ship Mobile wrecked in a storm off the Blackwater Bank, near Wexford. There were sixty passengers and a crew of twenty-three on board when the vessel struck; she went to pieces with such rapidity, that only one passenger and eight of the crew were saved.

During this month considerable attention was directed to a case of imposture and credulity at Shottesham, Suffolk, where a young girl, named Elizabeth Squirrel, was said to have lived three months without food, and to have been favoured during that time with numerous angelic visions. "Medical men," writes the Ipswich Express, "clergymen, Dissenting ministers, and members of the aristocracy, alike shared in the intense desire to gaze on this extraordinary child, and to listen to the words which fell from her, with as much weight as if she had really indisputable credentials that she was an oracle from heaven." On being subjected to a rigid watch, it was found that food must have been conveyed to her secretly.

October 1.—Eliot Bower, the Paris correspondent of the Morning Advertiser, murders Saville Morton, of the Daily News, by wounding him in the neck with a knife when leaving his house in the Rue de Seze. Bower was incited to the attack through revelations made by his wife (during an attack of fever) regarding the paternity of her youngest child. He fled immediately to England, but returned to take his trial before the Court of Assizes of the Seine. The jury returned a verdict of acquittal on the 28th of December, and Mr. Bower was thereafter set at liberty.

2.—Died at Edinburgh, aged 84, Thomas Thomson, a Record scholar, and constitutional lawyer of great attainments, and intimate friend of Sir Walter Scott.

5.—In the will case of Gilmour v. Gilmour and others, tried before a jury at Glasgow, the Lord Advocate, on the part of the plaintiff, withdraws from the contest, as his client was now satisfied, from the evidence adduced, that no unfair means had been used to induce the testator, Allen Gilmour, to make the second will in favour of the defender.

7.—Proclamation of the Empire at Sèvres : “The town of Sèvres, obeying its sentiments of affection and gratitude for Prince Louis Napoleon Bonaparte, the Envoy of God, and the elect of France, her saviour and her glory, proclaims him Emperor of the French under the name of Napoleon III., and confers on him and his descendants hereditary right.”

9.—Addressing the Chamber of Commerce at Bordeaux, the President said : “To promote the welfare of the country, it is not necessary to adopt new systems, but the chief point above all is to produce confidence in the present and security for the future. For these reasons, it seems, France desires a return to the Empire. There is one objection to which I must reply. Certain minds seem to entertain a dread of war ; certain persons say the Empire is only war. But,” speaking with strong emphasis, “I say the Empire is peace. Glory descends by inheritance, but not war.” On returning to Paris, the President received a royal reception, and was presented with addresses from the Municipal Council, imploring him to yield to the wishes of his entire people, “by resuming the crown of the immortal founder of your dynasty, as it is only under the title of Emperor that you can accomplish the promises of the magnificent programme you addressed to attentive Europe at Bordeaux.”

12.—The Earl of Derby elected Chancellor of the University of Oxford, in room of the late Duke of Wellington.

13.—Cannon, a ferocious London sweep, sentenced to death for a savage attack on police-constable Dwyer, at the “Bricklayers’ Arms” public-house. The savage first rushed against the officer, head downwards, and having thrown him upon the ground, commenced trampling upon his prostrate victim. He had been convicted twenty times before for assaults, chiefly on constables, but on this occasion, to his great astonishment, he was not indicted on the ordinary charge, but for inflicting bodily injury with intent to murder. He offered no defence, and was found guilty.

16.—Release of Abd-el-Kader. On returning from his tour in the provinces, Prince Louis Napoleon entered the Château d’Amboise, and informed the chief that his captivity was at an end. He was to be taken to Broussa, in the states of the Sultan, and as soon as the necessary preparations could be made he would receive from the French Government an allowance worthy of his former rank.

18.—Liverpool Free Library opened.

— The Bishop of Rochester gives judgment in the case of the Rev. Robert Whiston, removed from the Mastership of Rochester School, in 1849, for publishing a pamphlet exposing the administration of the Dean and Chapter. The Bishop pronounced the pamphlet libellous, as regards the Dean and Chapter ; but thought Mr. Whiston might have been misled by legal opinions of high authority upon the main charge against the Dean and Chapter, of illegally appropriating to their own use a disproportionate share of the cathedral revenues. Sentence of suspension confirmed till the 1st of January, 1853, on which day Mr. Whiston was to be reinstated in his office.

22.—The will of James Camden Neild proved in Doctors’ Commons by the keeper of her Majesty’s Privy Purse, and other executors. He bequeathed all his real personal property to the Queen, for her own private use and advantage. The estate was sworn to as under 250,000*l.*

— Edward Gurling, a keeper in the Zoological Gardens, dies after a few hours’ illness, from the effects of the bite of a cobra snake which he had rashly taken out of its case and placed round his neck. The wounds were small punctures on each side of the nose.

24.—Died at Marshfield, aged 70, Daniel Webster, American statesman.

26.—Lord Roden writes to Lord Shaftesbury that he had received a reply from the Tuscan Minister for Foreign Affairs, declining to receive a deputation on the subject of Madia. “They are Tuscan subjects,” writes the Minister, “and have been condemned to five years’ imprisonment by the ordinary tribunals for propagating Protestantism, which is prescribed by our laws as an attack upon the religion of the state. Their punishment is the application of these laws, and their appeal for a reversal of their sentence has been rejected by the Court of Cassation.”

27.—Conference at Jerusalem between representatives of the Greek and Latin Churches, and certain Turkish dignitaries, for the purpose of arranging the rival claims to the Holy Places—a dispute with which the Porte, as protecting power, had been for three years greatly troubled. Alif Bey read an order from the Sultan permitting the Latins to celebrate Mass once a year, but requiring the altar and its ornaments to remain undisturbed. “No sooner,” writes the British Consul, “were these words uttered than the Latins, who had come to record their triumph over the Orientals, broke out into loud exclamations as to the impossibility of celebrating Mass upon a schismatic slab of marble, with a covering of silk and gold instead of plain linen ; among schismatic vases, and before a crucifix which had the feet separated instead of one nailed over the other.” The Conference broke up in confusion.

28.—Conference of the Religious Equality Association, in the Rotunda, Dublin. The main object of the association was the abolition of the present Church establishment. A resolution was passed disclaiming any intention of demanding a portion of the revenue of the Established Church for the Roman Catholic Church. Irish members were also urged to keep in opposition to any Government not willing to concede perfect religious equality.

31.—The Fire Annihilator Works, Battersea-fields, destroyed by fire.

November 1.—A meeting held at the London Tavern to consider Mr. Pearson's scheme for making a City railway terminus communicating with the railways north of the Thames, by means of four underground lines. The meeting passed resolutions approving of the scheme, and took steps also for carrying it into effect.

— The directors of the Submarine Telegraph Company celebrate the re-opening of telegraphic communication between London and Paris by sending a message to the Prince President, expressive of their wish that "this wonderful invention may serve, under the Empire, to promote the peace and prosperity of the world."

2.—At the request of several prominent pleaders in his Court, the Lord Chancellor consents to adjourn the sittings in Chancery from Westminster to Lincoln's-inn for the present term.

— Mr. Macaulay addresses his constituents at Edinburgh for the first time since his re-election. In a speech of great power and brilliancy, he touched upon the principal political topics of the day, commenting with severity on certain recent ministerial blunderings, most notably on Mr. Walpole's proposition to confer the franchise on Militiamen, as possessing the qualification of "youth, poverty, ignorance, a roving disposition, and five-foot two."

— Great Free-trade meeting in Manchester, designed to afford an opportunity to the advocates of unrestricted commercial intercourse, on the eve of the meeting of Parliament, for declaring their firm adherence to the principles of Free-trade adopted in 1846. It was attended by 79 members of Parliament.

4.—The new Parliament opened by commission, the Commons meeting for the first time in their new chamber in the Palace of Westminster. Mr. Shaw Lefevre was unanimously re-elected Speaker, and the swearing-in of members thereafter proceeded with.

7.—The French Senate pass a Senatus Consultum re-establishing the Imperial dynasty: Louis Napoleon to be Emperor, with the title of Napoleon III.; the Imperial dignity to be hereditary in the direct descendants, natural and legitimate, of Louis Napoleon Bonaparte, from male to male, by order of primogeniture, and to the perpetual exclusion of the females and their descendants. A decree deposited in the Archives fixed the order of succession in the Bonaparte family, in case he should leave no direct legitimate or adopted heir.

8.—The Victoria steamer wrecked in a storm off Wingo Beacon, near Gottenburg.

9.—The shock of an earthquake felt on the shores of Dublin and Wicklow. Taking nearly a circular direction, it was noticed in England as far as Gloucester. No actual damage was done.

10.—Died at his residence, Pimlico, aged 62, G. A. Mantell, LL.D., Vice-President of the Geological Society.

— At a meeting of the Society of the Friends of Italy, in the Music Hall, Store-street, London, Kossuth apologised to Mazzini and others for not making a speech. "In consequence of my duty I have taken the rule that for the future I have only a single speech reserved for due time, and that speech is, 'Up, boys, and at them—follow me!' Until I have an occasion to deliver that speech, I will have none else. So I am done with oratory."

— The two Houses of Convocation commence a sitting of one week's duration. Various discussions took place on the renewal of Synodical action, but they led to no result. The Bishops of Oxford, Salisbury, Chichester, and St. David's joined in a protest against the Primate adjourning the Synod sine consensu fratrum.

— In the Court of Queen's Bench, Dublin, the Attorney-General obtains a conditional order to quash the verdict of the coroner's inquest against the soldiers engaged in the Six-Mile-Bridge affray.

— Lying in state of the Duke of Wellington. The body was brought from Walmer to Chelsea Hospital this day, and lay in state there till Monday, the 15th, when it was removed to the Horse Guards, where the Audience Chamber had been prepared for its reception. On Saturday, the 13th, one of the days on which the public were admitted to the lying in state without tickets, a frightful confusion took place, two women being crushed to death, and others seriously injured. On some of the days 100,000 people passed through the hospital. The Queen, Prince Albert, and several of the Royal children visited on the 11th, and on the 15th the new Duke of Wellington, with a number of relatives and the entire household, passed some time uninterrupted in the hall.

11.—The new Parliament opened. The Queen attended in person and delivered the Speech from the throne. It opened with a reference to the death of the Duke of Wellington, and a desire that steps should be taken to indicate the loss sustained by the nation.—"It gives me much pleasure to be enabled by the blessing of Providence to congratulate you on the generally improved condition of the working classes. If you should be of opinion that recent legislation, in contributing with other causes to this happy result, has at the same time inflicted unavoidable injury on certain important interests, I recommend you dispassionately to consider how far it may be practicable equitably to mitigate that injury, and to enable the industry of the country to meet successfully that unrestricted competition to which Parliament in its wisdom has decided that it should be subjected." A liberal and generous policy was recommended towards Ireland, and bills promised relating to improvements in the educational systems of Oxford and Cambridge, secondary punishments, and law reform. In the debate which followed, Lord Derby took occasion to intimate, that in consequence of the result of the elections the Government did not intend to revive the question of Protection. "On the part of myself and my colleagues, I bow to the decision of the country, and having so bowed I declare on their part and on mine, that, while desirous to the utmost of our power to mitigate that unavoidable injury which the adoption of the policy to which I refer has inflicted, and must inflict upon important classes, I do not adopt it with any reserve whatever. I adopt it frankly as the decision of the country, and honestly and fairly I am prepared to carry it out as the decision of the country." In the House of Commons, the Chancellor of the Exchequer said: "Neither he nor any of his colleagues had the slightest intention to propose any policy which would give artificial prices, or attempt to give what hon. gentlemen on the other side have mentioned as compensation for the losses occasioned by changes in the legislation which has regulated the commercial interests of this country; but what we do say is—and I will state it as distinctly as I can succeed in expressing myself, with none of those cloudy words for which the noble lord has given me credit,—that we think those commercial changes have been effected without at the same time a change, a corresponding change, in our financial system; and I say, notwithstanding what the noble lord has asserted, that it is our intention, believing that a proper revision of our taxation has not taken place, to put before this House a policy that will place our financial system more in harmony with our commercial system."

15.—On the motion for considering a message from the Queen respecting the funeral of the Duke of Wellington, the Chancellor of the Exchequer entered at some length into the characteristics and achievements of the warrior-statesman. Next evening a critic in the Globe drew attention to one passage of noticeable neatness, describing the various accomplishments a general required to possess, as taken almost word for word from an eulogy pronounced by M. Thiers on Marshal Gouvion de St. Cyr, in 1829, and quoted in the Morning Chronicle of July 1st, 1848. "The Duke of Wellington," says the Globe, "has experienced the vicissitudes of either fortune, and his calamities were occasionally scarcely less conspicuous than the homage which he ultimately secured. He was pelted by a mob. He braved the dagger of Cantillon. The wretched Capefigue even accused him of peculation. But surely it was the last refinement of insult that his funeral oration, pronounced by the official chief of the English Parliament, should be stolen word for word from a trashy panegyric on a second-rate French Marshal." On the 21st, Mr. G. S. Smyth, the writer of the article in the Morning Chronicle, sent a letter to the Times, stating that Mr. Disraeli, instead of being indebted to him, was the person who had first drawn his attention to M. Thiers' striking eulogium on the military character.

16.—Mr. Hume's motion for a call of the House, prior to the discussion of Mr. Villiers' resolutions, carried by 147 to 142. This motion was withdrawn on the 22d.

18.—Funeral of the Duke of Wellington. Before daybreak this morning the troops commenced to take up their positions in and about Whitehall. At eight o'clock the hangings of the tent covering the funeral car were unfurled, and the first minute-gun fired. Some idea of the grandeur and extent of this great military display may be realized from the fact that, though the Rifles led the way when the first gun was fired, it was an hour and a half before the car was in motion, and half an hour later still before the extreme rear started. The Rifles were then close upon Charing-cross. The route of the procession was from Whitehall, through St. James' Park, up Constitution-hill, and along Piccadilly, St. James's-street, Pall-mall, Charing-cross, the Strand, Fleet-street, and Ludgate-hill, to St. Paul's. Galleries crowded with spectators were erected almost along the entire line, while beneath these again, and closely packed, were spectators in the streets, who had gathered, it was estimated, to the number of a million and a half. A few policemen were sufficient to preserve peace and order in this mighty multitude. The car reached the Cathedral door a few minutes past twelve o'clock. Under the dome on either side of the area rose the segments of an amphitheatre, in which were the seats allotted to the two Houses of Parliament, the foremost being occupied by the Ministry, Judges, and high functionaries of State. Following the chorists, along the nave came various groups of soldiers, the foreign marshals carrying the Duke's colours, and Prince Albert, with the Sword of State before him, and a company of officers following. The coffin was conveyed upon a wheeled bier, the pall being flung back and the white feathers of the Duke's hat waving in the wind which swept along the nave. Dean Milman read the service, in a clear and sonorous voice. At its conclusion, Garter King-at-Arms proclaimed the style and titles of the Duke; a wand was broken and thrown down on the coffin, and the ceremony closed with a benediction pronounced by the Bishop of London. The military engaged in the procession were then marched back to their quarters, and the huge assembly of spectators quietly dispersed.—In addressing the House of Lords the following night, Lord Derby said: "When, amidst solemn and mournful music, slowly and inch by inch the coffin which held the illustrious dead descended into its last long resting-place, I was near enough to see the countenances of many of the veterans who were companions of his labours and of his triumphs, and was near enough to hear the suppressed sobs and see the hardly-checked tears, which would not have disgraced the cheeks of England's greatest warriors, as they looked down for the last time upon all that was mortal of our mighty hero. Honour, my lords, to the people who so well knew how to reverence the illustrious dead! Honour to the friendly visitors—especially to France, the great and friendly nation, that testified by the presence of their representative their respect and veneration for his memory! They regarded him as a foe worthy of their steel. His object was not fame nor glory, but a lasting peace. We have buried in our greatest hero the man among us who had the greatest horror of war. The great object of this country is to maintain peace. To do that, however, a nation must possess the means of self-defence. I trust that we shall bear this in mind, not in words only, but in our actions and policy, setting aside all political and party considerations, and that we shall concur in this opinion—that, in order to be peaceful, England must be powerful; but that, if England ought to be powerful, she ought to be so in order that she should be more secure of peace."

20.—Miss Berry, the last survivor of the Horace Walpole "set," died this day at her house in Curzon-street, in her 90th year.

22.—The Court of Queen's Bench grant a rule for a new trial in the case of Achilli v. Newman, on the ground that the verdict formerly given for the plaintiff was against evidence. The matter did not proceed further.

23.—Judgment against the Crown in the Irish Queen's Bench on Attorney-General Napier's notice to quash the inquisition finding a verdict of wilful murder against the soldiers in the Six-Mile-Bridge affray.

— Mr. Villiers introduces his series of Free-trade resolutions, declaring it to be the opinion of Parliament "That the improved condition of the country, and particularly of the industrious classes, is mainly the result of recent commercial legislation, and especially of the Act of 1846, which established the free admission of foreign corn, and that that Act was a wise, just, and beneficial measure; That it is the opinion of this House that the maintenance and further extension of the policy of Free-trade, as opposed to that of Protection, will best enable the property and industry of the nation to bear the burden to which they are exposed, and will most contribute to the general prosperity, welfare, and contentment of the people; And that this House is ready to take into its consideration any measure consistent with the principles of these resolutions which may be laid before it by her Majesty's Ministers." On the first night of the debate, the Chancellor of the Exchequer moved an amendment, "That the House acknowledges with satisfaction that the cheapness of provisions occasioned by recent legislation has mainly contributed to improve the condition and increase the comfort of the working-classes, and that unrestricted competition having been adopted after due deliberation as the principle of our commercial system, this House is of opinion that it is the duty of the Government unreservedly to adhere to that policy in those measures of financial and administrative reform which, under the circumstances of the country, they may deem it their duty to introduce." As the Ministry looked upon the question in the light of a vote of confidence or no confidence, this amendment was withdrawn in favour of one more skilfully framed by Lord Palmerston, and introduced the second night of the debate: "That it is the opinion of this House that the policy of unrestricted competition, firmly maintained and prudently extended, will best enable the industry of the country to bear its burthen, and will thereby most surely promote the welfare and contentment of the people; and that the House will be ready to take into consideration any measures consistent with these principles, which, in pursuance of her Majesty's gracious speech and recommendation, may be laid before it." The discussion extended over three nights, when, on a division, Mr. Villiers' motion was negatived by a majority of 256 to 236, and Lord Palmerston's amendment carried by 468 votes against 53, the latter representing the minority into which the great Protectionist party had now dwindled.

23.—Large importation of Australian gold. Three vessels arrive in the Thames, bearing seven tons of the precious metal. One of them (the Eagle) carried the unheard-of quantity of six tons. She made the passage from Melbourne to the Downs in 76 days.

— General Sir Chas. Napier makes application in the Court of Queen's Bench for a criminal information against Mr. Murray, publisher, in respect of an article in the Quarterly Review, alleged to reflect unjustly on his character in regard to his proceedings with the Ameers of Scinde, and on the conduct of his troops towards the women of the Ameers on taking possession of Hyderabad. Lord Campbell thought the application not well founded, and refused the rule.

25.—Decree of imprisonment passed by the Tuscan judges against Francesco and Rosa Madia for reading the Scriptures in their own house, and otherwise acting in hostility to the religion of the State.

26.—In the debate on Mr. Villiers' resolutions, Colonel Sibthorp created great amusement by his earnest advocacy of Protection. "Let them go," he said, "to the farmer, the tradesman, the labourer, and ask each of them what he had been and what he was now, and they would soon find out the truth. Why, half of the farmers were on the parish. And then they talked of emigration as a means of improving the country! Did any one ever hear of improving a country by sending people out of it? When all classes had been injured by these Free-trade measures, as they were called, and when nothing else could be done to ruin them, they had got up the Great Exhibition. (A laugh.) Talk about the good effects of that display! He affirmed that one effect of it was, that there never was more disease in the metropolis than ever since. (A laugh.) The noble lord's resolution was a trap to catch the unwary, but he had not been caught in it yet. (A laugh.) He believed the day would come when those who advocated the cause of Free-trade would admit with sorrow that they never were more mistaken in their lives. For himself, he would not vote for either of their resolutions. (Cheers and laughter.) He would not do anything to place his countrymen in the power of those whom he looked on as plunderers and robbers from the beginning, and who would first rob us of our trade and of our independence, and then rob us of our honour—males and females. (Cheers and laughter.)"

27.—Died, in her 37th year, Ada, Countess of Lovelace, only daughter of Lord Byron.

December 1.—The Corps Législatif announce the result of the appeal to the people on the subject of reviving the Empire:—Ayes, 7,864,189; Noes, 253,145; Nil, 63,326. The proclamation of the Empire took place at Paris next day, and throughout France on the 5th. The oath of allegiance was now made to express obedience to the Constitution, and fidelity to the Empire.

— Lord Malmesbury announces the recognition of the French Empire by the British Government. On making a similar intimation in the House of Commons on the 6th, the Chancellor of the Exchequer said it had been announced in a friendly way to the Government, that in accepting the new title, the Emperor did not, in any sense, wish to assert an hereditary claim; but, on the contrary, accepted all the acts of the Governments from 1814.

— Mutiny on board the English ship Berenice in the straits of Gaspar. The Java and Manilla men, who made up the greater part of the crew, under the pretence that their rations were improperly withheld, attacked Captain Candy, when on deck, and murdered him in the presence of his wife; her they afterwards attacked and murdered along with two servants, while the third mate and a French passenger were drowned in their attempt to escape. Having attached weights to the whole of the bodies and thrown them into the sea, the mutineers set fire to the ship, and escaped in a small boat to Maraybaya.

3.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer introduced his financial statement. His main propositions were five in number, and affected the duties on malt, hops, and tea, the House-tax, and the Income-tax. 1. The duty on malt to be reduced from 2s. 7½d. and 5 per cent. to

1s. 3¾d. and 5 per cent. on the bushel. This duty to be levied uniformly on all malt made from barley, bere or bigg; the discrimination in favour of bere or bigg being abolished. The drawback allowed to spirits distilled from malt in Scotland to be likewise repealed. The loss to the revenue from this reduction was estimated at 2,500,000*l.* Instead of the absolute prohibition of the importation of malt, imposed by the existing law, foreign malt to be admitted at a duty of 1s. 8d. and 5 per cent. upon a bushel. 2. The Excise duty on native hops to be reduced from 2*d.* and 5 per cent. to 1*d.* and 5 per cent. per lb. The Customs' duty on foreign hops to be reduced from 2*l.* 5*s.* to 1*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* per cwt.; or from about 4*d.* to nearly 2*d.* per lb. The loss of revenue by this reduction was estimated at 120,000*l.* 3. The duty on tea to be reduced from its present rate of 2*s.* 2½*d.* per lb., the reduction being 4½*d.* in 1853, and 2*d.* in each of the next five years, when the duty would remain fixed at 1*s.* 4. The tax on inhabited houses,—shops, public-houses, and farm-houses,—to be increased to 1*s.* and 1*s.* 6*d.* in the pound, and to be extended to houses worth the annual rent of 10*l.* or upwards. The tax so augmented was estimated to produce 1,723,000*l.* a year. 5. With respect to the Income-tax, the tax on farmers' profits, Schedule B, to be reduced from 3½*d.* to 1¾*d.* in the pound in England, and from 2½*d.* to 1¼*d.* in the pound in Scotland. The tax on Schedules D and E (trades, professions, and offices) to be reduced from 7*d.* to 5½*d.* in the pound. The duties in Schedules C and E (funds and public offices) to be extended to Ireland. In Schedules A and C (land and funds) the minimum to be reduced from incomes of 150*l.* to incomes of 50*l.* a year. In Schedules B, D, and E, (farmers' profits, trades, professions, and offices) the minimum to be reduced from incomes of 150*l.* to incomes of 100*l.* a year. The Income-tax, so modified, was estimated to produce 5,421,000*l.*, nearly the same as its present amount. The reduction, in all branches, would affect the revenue to the extent of over 3,000,000*l.* The Chancellor of the Exchequer also proposed to extend the Income-tax to property and salaries in Ireland; and with reference to that source of income generally, he proposed to introduce a distinction between permanent and precarious incomes, making the exemptions on industrial incomes commence at 100*l.* a year, and on incomes arising from property at 50*l.* a year. By this means he calculated that for the financial year (1853-54) there would be 2,500,000*l.* in hand to meet an extra expenditure of 2,100,000*l.* The Budget was unfavourably received by the Free-trade party in the House, and the discussion upon it unusually protracted.

10.—In the Dublin Commission Court, Henry Kirwan, artist, was found guilty of murdering his wife with a sword-cane, and afterwards throwing her into the water at Ireland's Eye. He had been married twelve years, but during the whole of that time had been living with another woman, by whom he had eight children. Neither of the women knew of the other until six months before her death, when Mrs. Kirwan learned the fact. On the 6th of September last, the Kirwans went to the island above mentioned in Dublin Bay, for the avowed purpose of sketching. He had then a sword-stick with him. Another party visited the island, and at four o'clock saw Mrs. Kirwan alive; the couple being then alone on the island. At seven o'clock, cries of distress were heard. When the boatmen returned at eight o'clock, according to instructions, Mrs. Kirwan was missing; and after a search her body was found on a rock, with marks of violence in various places. A coroner's jury returned a verdict of "Accidental death;" and the body was buried in a part of Glasnevin cemetery, so wet that in two months it had decomposed. The position of the corpse on the beach was described by one of the boatmen:—"Her bathing dress was up under her arms, and there was a sheet under her; her head was lying back in a hole, and her feet were in a pool of water about the size of my hat. I saw cuts on her forehead and under her eye; there was also blood coming down from her ears, her side, breast, and other places." Kirwan told the boatman that his wife left him to bathe at half-past six o'clock; but the continued fall of the tide proved that she could not have been drowned, or carried by the water to the spot where she was found. The clothes were found in a spot which had been previously searched, and after Kirwan had been a short time away from the searchers. Mr. Justice Crampton passed sentence of death, but a reprieve was afterwards granted.

10.—Died, at Haileybury College, aged 62, Professor William Empson, editor of the Edinburgh Review.

15.—The Turkish frontier, from Dulcigno northwards, blockaded by the Turkish fleet in order to prevent the Montenegrins receiving munitions of war or provisions by sea.

16.—The Select Committee appointed to inquire into the bribery alleged to prevail at last Derby election, report that the evidence satisfied them, that an organized system of bribery was carried on in the borough. The letter found on Morgan and addressed to Frail, of Shrewsbury, they were also satisfied was written by the Right Hon. William Beresford, Secretary-at-war, and a member of the House. They did not think, however, there was sufficient evidence that the arrangements, scheme, and object referred to in the petition, were known to be concurred in by that gentleman, "but your committee are of opinion that the equivocal expressions of that letter ought, at least, to have suggested to him an idea of the improper use to which that letter might have been, and in fact was applied. And they think it exhibited a reckless indifference and regard to consequences which they cannot too highly censure."

16.—Fall of the Derby Ministry. On this the fifth evening of the debate on the Government resolutions for carrying the budget into effect, the Chancellor of the Exchequer replied to his assailants. Criticising the financial proposals of Sir Charles Wood, in 1848, Mr. Disraeli said: "Talk of recklessness, indeed, why, in the whole history of finance, there is nothing like this recklessness of the right hon. gentleman. And what was the ground on which he withdrew the monstrous and enormous proposition which he vainly sought to justify? When he was defeated, baffled, and humiliated—(cheers)—he came down to the House and found that he had sufficient revenue, without doubling the Income and Property-tax. Why, history will not credit it. (Hear, hear.) The future historian will not be believed who tells us that a minister proposed to double the Property and Income-tax, and when refused that he came down to say that he had sufficient ways and means without it. (Vehement cheering.) And then he tells me, in not very polished and scarcely parliamentary language, that I do not know my business. (Loud cheers.) He may have learned his business. (Laughter.) The House of Commons is the best judge of that. (Cheers.) I care not to be his critic; but if he has learned his business, he has still to learn that petulance is not sarcasm, and that insolence is not invective. (Loud and prolonged ministerial cheering.) . . . We had last night from the member for Carlisle a most piteous appeal to the House upon the hardship of taxing poor clerks of between 100*l.* and 150*l.* a year. He stated that 150*l.* was exactly the point where skilled labour ends. You can recall the effective manner in which the right hon. gentleman said that—(great laughter)—an unrivalled artist in my opinion when he tells us that this is the point where the fustian jacket ceases to be worn, and broadcloth becomes the ordinary attire. (Much laughter.) Such, sir, was the representation of that eminent personage, for whom I have great regard—I don't so much respect him, but I greatly regard him." (Roars of laughter.) A good deal of amusement and no little astonishment was created by a Shandean allusion to the national "reserve of producing power," which he observed had been overlooked by Mr. Lowe in his criticism. "The reserve of producing power we possess may be inferred from the fact that now, in a south-eastern county, the Census shows that to 100 married women of from 20 to 45 years of age, there are 70 women of the same ages unmarried, and of whom only 7 bear children notwithstanding. (Continued laughter.) I have a confidence in this reserve of producing power, which the hon. and learned gentleman, with his colonial experience, has not given this country full credit for." The Chancellor of the Exchequer concluded: "I know what I have to face—I have to face a coalition. (Cheers.) The combination may be successful. A combination has been before this successful; but coalitions, though they may be successful, have always found that their triumphs have been but brief. (Cheering again.) This I know, that England does not love coalitions. (Cheers.) And I appeal from the coalition to that public opinion which governs the country — that public opinion whose wise and irresistible influence can control even the decrees of Parliament, and without whose support even the most august and ancient institutions are but as the baseless fabric of a vision." Mr. Gladstone followed, and closed the debate censuring the Chancellor of the Exchequer for the unwarrantable licence he had assumed in his speech. Amid frequent and noisy interruptions from the Ministerialists, he was heard to say: "The right hon. gentleman must permit me to tell him that he is not entitled to charge with insolence men of as high position and of as high character in this House as himself. I must tell him that he is not entitled to say to my right hon. friend the member for Carlisle, that he regards but does not respect him. And I must tell him that whatever else he may have learnt, he has not learnt to keep within those limits in discussion, of moderation, and of forbearance, that ought to restrain the conduct and language of every member of this House, the disregard of which, while it is an offence in the meanest amongst us, is an offence of tenfold weight when committed by the leader of the House of Commons." Speaking of the statement as a scheme of finance, he said if the House gave the sanction of its high authority to this unsound and delusive scheme, the day would come when they would look back on their vote with a bitter lament and ineffectual repentance. On a division on the House-tax resolution, a majority of 19 appeared against the Government, the numbers being—for, 286; against, 305. On the motion of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the House adjourned at four o'clock on Friday morning till Monday the 20th, when intimation was made in both Houses that Ministers had tendered their resignation to her Majesty, who had sent for Lord Aberdeen.

18.—The Moniteur contains a decree of the Emperor to the following effect:—"In case of our leaving no direct heir, legitimate or adopted, our well-beloved uncle, Jerome Napoleon Bonaparte, and his descendants, direct and legitimate, the issue of his marriage with the Princess Catherine of Wurtemberg, from male to male, by order of primogeniture, to the perpetual exclusion of the females, are appointed to succeed us."

20.—Proclamation, at Rangoon, of the annexation of Pegu. "The Court of Ava having refused to make amends for the injuries and insults which British subjects had suffered at the hands of its servants, the Governor-General of India in Council resolved to exact reparation by force of arms. The forts and cities upon the coast were forthwith attacked and captured; the Burmah forces have been dispersed wherever they have been met; and the province of Pegu is now in the occupation of British troops. The just and moderate demands of the Government of India have been rejected by the king; the ample opportunity that has been afforded him for repairing the injury that was done, has been disregarded; and the timely submission, which alone could have been effectual to prevent the dismemberment of his kingdom, is still withheld. Therefore, in compensation for the past, and for better security in the future, the Governor-General in Council has resolved, and hereby proclaims, that the province of Pegu is now, and shall be henceforth, a portion of the British territories in the East."

20.—In intimating the resignation of his Government, Earl Derby declared, in the House of Lords, that it had fallen before an unprincipled combination of parties in the Lower House, who had leagued themselves together for its destruction from the first moment of the session.

—Mr. Gladstone, M.P., insulted at the Carlton Club by certain Conservative members who had been feasting Major Beresford on his so-called acquittal by the committee on the Derby election.

22.—Dispute between the Greek and Latin Churches concerning the holy places at Jerusalem. Stated in bare terms (says Kinglake), the question was whether, for the purpose of passing through the building into their grotto, the Latin monks should have the key of the chief door of the church of Bethlehem, and also one of the keys of each of the two doors of the Sacred Manger, and whether they should be at liberty to place in the sanctuary of the Nativity a silver star adorned with the arms of France. In pursuance of urgent instructions from the French emperor, M. de Lavalette pressed his case with such success, at Constantinople, that on this day the Latin patriarch, amid great ceremony, was permitted to replace the glittering star in the sanctuary of Bethlehem, and had handed over to him, at the same time, the key of the great door of the church and the keys of the Sacred Manger. Indignant at this outrage on the orthodox Church, Count Nesselrode wrote to Baron Brunnow:—"It may happen that France, perceiving any hesitation on the part of the Porte, may again have recourse to menace and press upon it so as to prevent it from listening to our just demands. The Emperor has, therefore, considered it necessary to adopt, at the outset, some precautionary measures in order to support our negotiations, to neutralize the effects of M. Lavalette's threats, and to guard himself in any contingency which may occur, against a Government accustomed to act by surprises." One of the "precautionary measures" was the despatch of the 5th corps d'armée to the frontiers of the Danubian provinces.

26.—Meeting of ladies at Stafford House, to agree upon an address to the women of the United States on the subject of slavery. The Duchess of Sutherland read a draft of the proposed memorial, stating that “a common origin, a common faith, and we sincerely believe, a common cause, urge us at the present moment to address you on the subject of that system of negro slavery which still prevails so extensively; and, even under kindly disposed masters, with such frightful results in many of the vast regions of the Western world.” The address was replied to by Mrs. Tyler, wife of the ex-President, who pointed out where the Duchess might find fitting objects for her sympathy in London, in Ireland, and on her own Highland estates. “Leave it,” she said, “to the women of the South to alleviate the sufferings of their dependants, while you take care of your own. The negro of the South lives sumptuously in comparison with 100,000 of your white population in London.”

27.—The Earl of Aberdeen explains the circumstances which had induced him to undertake the formation of a Ministry, and points out the policy intended to be pursued on various public questions. With regard to foreign Powers he would adhere to the principle pursued for the last thirty years, and which consisted in respecting the rights of all independent states, in abstaining from interference in their internal affairs, while at the same time we asserted our own rights and interests; above all, his earnest desire would be to secure the general peace of Europe. This policy might be observed without any relaxation of those defensive measures which had been lately undertaken after, perhaps, too long neglect. At home, the mission of the Government would be to maintain and extend Free-trade principles, and to pursue the commercial and financial system of the late Sir Robert Peel. A crisis in our financial arrangements would speedily occur by the cessation of a large branch of the revenue, and it would tax the ingenuity of all concerned to readjust our finances according to the principles of justice and equity. The questions of education and legal reform would receive every attention at the hands of the Government; nor would an amendment of the representative system, undertaken without haste or rashness, be excluded from its mature consideration.

— New writs ordered to supply fourteen vacancies in the House of Commons caused by acceptance of office in the new Administration.

30.—The Prince of Augustenburg, in consideration of a sum of 3,500,000 dollars, signs an act, renouncing for himself and his family all right to the succession of any part of the Danish dominions. The Prussian plenipotentiary at Frankfort who negotiated this renunciation was Herr von Bismarck.

1853.

January 1.—List of the new Coalition Ministry published. First Lord of the Treasury, Earl of Aberdeen; Secretaries of State—Foreign, Lord John Russell; Home, Viscount Palmerston; Colonial, Duke of Newcastle; Lord Chancellor, Lord Cranworth; Chancellor of the Exchequer, Rt. Hon. W. E. Gladstone; Lord President, Earl Granville; Lord Privy Seal, Duke of Argyll; First Lord of the Admiralty, Sir James Graham; Board of Control, Sir C. Wood; Secretary at War, Rt. Hon. Sidney Herbert; First Commissioner of Works, Sir W. Molesworth. In the Cabinet, without office, Marquis of Lansdowne. The re-election of Ministers to the seats vacant through the acceptance of office commenced to-day.

— The Marquis of Chandos declines to contest the University of Oxford in opposition to Mr. Gladstone. An opponent was afterwards found in the person of Mr. Dudley Perceval, of Christchurch, son of a former Premier, the Right Hon. Spencer Perceval.

3.—Mr. Max Müller appointed to a Lectureship of Modern Literature in Oxford University.

— Ministerial re-elections. The new Foreign Secretary, in his address to the electors of the City of London, thus defended his party from the charge of factious combination brought against it by Lord Derby:—“If an omnibus, with some dozen passengers, were seen going down Ludgate-hill at a furious pace, and breaking into the shop-windows, and injuring everybody that was going by, why every man would concur—the men that were going eastward and the men that were going westward—all would concur in stopping that omnibus, and telling the coachman to get off his box. And how much surprised would all those passengers with the policeman at their head be, if the coachman were to say, ‘Why, this is a factious combination. You, gentlemen, are going some of you one way and some another, and yet you have all combined to prevent me driving my omnibus into the shops. Such, however, was the charge made against us—a charge, however, which I think you will say we need not be very much concerned at.’” At Tiverton, on the same day, the Home Secretary said he trusted the new Government would be able to maintain peace abroad with dignity and honour. He asked for the Government nothing but that which an Englishman will always accord—a free stage and no favour—a fair trial and a just and impartial judgment. At Carlow, Mr. Sadleir, who had accepted the appointment of a Lord of the Treasury, lost his election by 8 votes.

— Railway accident near the Oxford station of the London and North-Western Company's Buckinghamshire branch. In consequence of the late rains, a portion of a tunnel between Wolvercote and Oxford had fallen in. The injury was partially repaired; but meanwhile the up line only had been reserved for traffic, while the down line was appropriated to the use of the contractors until the tunnel should have been suitably restored. One set of rails, therefore, was assigned to the traffic. On this evening, as a coal train was expected at the Oxford station at 5.20, the passenger train was not to start till 5.30. The driver, the fireman, and the guard of the last-named were warned of this by the station-master, who then retired into his office. Soon after, a ballast-train engine entered the station by the down line (the contractors') without any train behind it; when the driver of the passenger train, without stopping to inquire whether or not this was the coal train of which he had received information, put his own train in motion with unusual speed, and set out on his fatal journey. At the bridge, a little way out of Oxford, the signalman, who should have shown a red light, showed a green or "go on" lamp, which encouraged the driver to pursue his way at an increased speed. The result was a collision with the coal train, then advancing from an opposite direction. The consequences were of the most fearful kind. The engine of the passenger train was turned round and thrown into a ditch. The first engine attached to the coal train fell upon it, the wheels of each being transfixed, while the second engine ran into a ditch. The third-class and second-class carriages were completely broken up, and the passengers scattered about in every direction. The crash of the collision was heard at a great distance, and parties resident in the neighbourhood were therefore soon on the spot, endeavouring to render assistance. The two engine-drivers and three out of the four stokers were killed on the spot, two of the passengers died soon after from injuries received, and nearly the whole of those in the carriages were more or less injured.

4.—Nomination-day at Oxford University. Mr. Gladstone was proposed by Dr. Hawkins, Provost of Oriel, and Mr. Perceval by Archdeacon Denison. In conformity with the etiquette of University elections, neither of the candidates were present. The opposition offered to Mr. Gladstone was based principally on his recent votes on ecclesiastical questions, and his acceptance of office in a Ministry composed of Conservatives, Whigs, and Radicals. The Times wrote of the new candidate as "a very near relative of our old friend, Mrs. Harris. To remove any doubt on this point, let him be exhibited at Exeter Hall, with documentary evidence of his name, existence, and history; his first class, his defeat at Finsbury, his 'talents,' and his principles. If we must go to Oxford to record our votes, it would at least be something to know that we were voting against a real man and not a mere name." The Morning Chronicle, in a similar strain, said: "A section of the Carlton Club, doubtless under the auspices of Major Beresford, are making a tool of the Oxford Convocation for the purposes of the meanest and smallest political rancour against Mr. Gladstone."

5.—Convention entered into between the Persian Government and Colonel Shiel, the British Minister at the court of Teheran, whereby the Shah undertook not to send troops to Herat, unless the Herat territory was invaded by a foreign army, and in that case, if troops were sent, to withdraw them as soon as the foreigners should retire. He engaged, also, not to interfere in the internal affairs of Herat, "except so far as interference existed in the time of Yar Mahomed Khan (who had paid tribute-money to the Shah as a sign of nominal fealty), and to recall within four months the Persian agent from Herat." If, however, Great Britain interfered in the affairs of Herat, the convention was to be invalid. The British Minister on his part undertook to use all his influence to induce foreign powers to leave Herat in a state of independence.

9.—Sir Hamilton Seymour, meeting the Emperor of Russia in the Palace of the Archduchess Helen, is engaged in a conversation by his Majesty, which proves the first of a series of confidential communications on the affairs of Turkey. These affairs (the Emperor said to our ambassador) were "in a very disorganized condition; the country itself seems to be falling to pieces. The fall will be a very great misfortune, and it is very important that England and Russia should come to a perfectly good understanding upon these affairs, and that neither should take any decisive step of which the other is not apprised." On the 21st Feb. the Emperor repeated:—"I tell you, if your Government has been led to believe that Turkey retains any element of existence, your Government must have received incorrect information. I repeat to you that the sick man is dying, and we can never allow such an event to take us by surprise. We must come to some understanding; and this we should do, I am convinced, if I could hold but ten minutes' conversation with your Ministers—with Lord Aberdeen, for instance, who knows me so well, who has full confidence in me, as I have in him. And, remember, I do not ask for a treaty or a protocol; a general understanding is all I require—that between gentlemen is sufficient; and, in this case, I am certain that the confidence would be as great on the side of the Queen's Ministers as on mine." On the 22nd February, the Emperor said:—"There are several things which I will never tolerate. I will begin with ourselves. I will not tolerate the permanent occupation of Constantinople by the Russians. Having said this, I will say that it never shall be held by the English or French, or any other great nation. Again, I never will permit an attempt at the reconstruction of a Byzantine empire, or such an extension of Greece as would render her a powerful state; still less will I permit the breaking-up of Turkey into little republics—asylums for the Kossuths and Mazzinis, and other revolutionists of Europe. Rather than submit to any of these arrangements, I would go to war, and, as long as I have a man and a musket left, would carry it on." The Emperor then went on to say that, in the event of a dissolution of the Ottoman empire, he thought it might be less difficult to arrive at a satisfactory territorial arrangement than was commonly believed. "The Principalities are," he said, "in fact, an independent state, under my protection; and this might so continue. Servia might receive the same form of government. So again with Bulgaria. There seems to be no reason why this province should not form an independent state. As to Egypt, I quite understand the importance to England of that territory. I can, then, only say, that if, in the event of a distribution of the Ottoman succession upon the fall of the empire, you should take possession of Egypt, I shall have no objection to offer. I would say the same thing of Candia; that island might suit you, and I do not know why it should not become an English possession."

10.—Robert Ferdinand Prieß, a grain merchant, of Crosby-hall Chambers, examined at the Mansion House, on the charge of uttering forged bills of lading, whereby he had fraudulently obtained the sum of 18,000*l.* from Holford and Co., bankers, New Broad-street. The prisoner was further charged with obtaining 51,000*l.* by a similar fraud from Collman and Stotterfoht, and 9,000*l.* from Monteaux and Co. Being committed for trial at the Central Criminal Court, he was there convicted and sentenced to transportation for life. So enormous were the prisoner's transactions in grain that they affected the price of the general market, and the fluctuations consequent thereon were for a time attributed to political action. The sum lost in one operation was estimated at 100,000*l.*

12.—The Irish Tenant League censure Messrs. Keogh, Sadleir, and Monsell, for taking office under Lord Aberdeen.

18.—Lord John Russell urges upon Sir Henry Bulwer the necessity of remonstrating with the Tuscan Government on the subject of the Madiai. "As this is a matter affecting a Tuscan subject, it may be said that her Majesty's Government have no right to interfere. If this means that interference by force of arms would not be justifiable, I confess at once that nothing but the most extreme case would justify such an interference. But if it be meant that her Majesty has not the right to point out to a friendly sovereign the arguments which have prevailed in the most civilized nations against the use of the civil sword to punish religious opinions, I entirely deny the truth of such an allegation."

20.—After a poll extending over fifteen days, Mr. Gladstone is elected member for Oxford University by a majority of 124, the numbers being—Gladstone, 1,022; Perceval, 898. Christchurch polled for Mr. Gladstone (241)

153, to 92 against; Balliol, 67 to 37; and Exeter, 103 to 40. Mr. Perceval had small majorities in Queen's, New, St. John's, Wadham, and Magdalen Hall. Of the Professors and others in authority, 74 voted for Gladstone, 15 for Perceval, and 12 remained neutral. In 1852, Mr. Gladstone polled 1,108 votes; and in 1847, 997.

20.—Dr. Price, head master of Christ's Hospital, committed suicide by hanging himself from the bedpost. He was understood to be in a deranged state at the time.

22.—The Emperor Napoleon announces his intended marriage with Mademoiselle de Montijo, Countess of Teba.

28.—Lord John Russell writes to Lord Cowley regarding the dispute between Russia and Turkey about the Holy Places:—"Her Majesty's Government cannot avoid perceiving that the Ambassador of France at Constantinople was the first to disturb the status quo in which the matter rested. Not that the disputes of the Latin and Greek Churches were not very active, but without some political action on the part of France those quarrels would never have troubled the relations of friendly Powers. In the next place, if report is to be believed, the French Ambassador was the first to speak of having recourse to force, and to threaten the intervention of a French fleet to enforce the demands of his country. I regret to say that this evil example has been partly followed by Russia; and although the report of the march of 50,000 Russian troops to the Turkish frontier appears to have been unfounded or premature, yet it is but too certain that, if the quarrel is prolonged, the Emperor means to support his negotiations by arms."

29.—In the Court of Queen's Bench, Mr. Justice Coleridge delivers judgment in the adjourned case of Achilli v. Newman. He expressed the conviction of the court, that Dr. Newman honestly believed the truth of the allegations he made against Dr. Achilli, and that he did not compose and publish the libel from personal malice, but because Dr. Achilli had assailed a religion Dr. Newman held dear, and had done so in Birmingham, where it was extremely important his authority should not be lessened. Still, it was not to be denied that he had repeated the offensive expressions, as if they were matter for exultation and merriment, and, as it would appear, with utter recklessness of their great importance and serious nature. "Firmly attached as I am, and I believe ever shall be, to the Church of England, in which I have lived and in which I hope to die, yet there is nothing on my mind on seeing you before me but the deepest regret. I can hardly expect that you will take in good part many of the observations I have felt it my duty to make. Suffer me, however, to say one or two words more. The great controversy between the Churches will go on, we know not, through God's pleasure, how long. Whether henceforward you will take any part in it or not, it will be for you to determine; but I think the pages before me should give you this warning, upon calm consideration, that if you engage in this controversy, you should engage in it neither personally nor bitterly. The best road to unity is by increase of holiness of life. If you for the future sustain, as you may think you are bound to do, by your publications the cause of the Church of Rome, I entreat you to do it in a spirit of charity, in a spirit of humility, in a spirit worthy of your great abilities, of your ardent piety, of your holy life, and of our common Christianity. The sentence of the court is that you pay to her Majesty a fine of 100*l.*, and that you be imprisoned in the first class of misdemeanants in the Queen's Prison, until the fine be paid." The fine was instantly paid, and Dr. Newman left the court with his solicitor.

29.—Marriage of the Emperor of the French to her Excellency Mademoiselle Eugénie de Montijo, Comtesse de Teba. The civil celebration was performed in the Tuileries by M. Fould, and the ecclesiastical, on the 30th, in Notre-Dame, by the Archbishop of Paris.

February 3.—The Earl of St. Germans (with his Countess) makes a triumphal entry into Dublin, as Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland. One of his first official acts was to restore the Earl of Roden and Messrs. Beers to the Commission of the Peace, and Mr. Kirwin to his magisterial duties at Roscommon.

— Sir Charles Wood, the new Secretary to the Board of Control, addresses his Halifax constituents at a banquet, in language which Mr. Disraeli afterwards brought under the notice of Parliament:—"Take our nearest neighbours. Such a despotism never prevailed in France, even in the time of Napoleon the First. The press gagged, liberty suppressed, no man allowed to speak his opinion, the neighbouring country of Belgium forced to gag her press, no press in Europe free but ours, which, thank God, he cannot gag. And hence his hatred of our press, that alone dares to speak the truth."

6.—Renewed disturbances at Milan, and circulation of insurrectionary proclamations, addressed to the Italians by Mazzini, and to the Hungarians by Kossuth.

7.—Dissolution of the National Society for the Protection of British Industry.

9.—A family of eight persons suffocated in a fire in Morgan's Royal Oak inn, near Brecon.

— Came on for hearing in the Court of Exchequer the action for libel raised by the Hon. Lennox Butler against Mr. Oliveira, M.P. The alleged libel was uttered during the last election contest at Hull, when the defendant described the plaintiff as a person who had been expelled from the Star Club some years since for refusing to pay the sum of 10*l.* 8*s.*; and further that he (Oliveira) had threatened to kick Butler out of his house. Verdict for the plaintiff. Damages 100*l.*

10.—Re-assembling of Parliament, pursuant to the adjournment of 31st December last. Lord John Russell made a statement of the measures intended to be brought forward during the session.

11.—Judgment given in the Rolls Court against Mr. George Hudson in the suit at the instance of the York and North Midland Railway. The defendant was ordered to account for all the shares appropriated by him, as well as for those alleged to have been presented to persons of influence in Parliament, to facilitate the passing of the Company's bills.

12.—Three soldiers, belonging to the 7th Royal Fusiliers, perish in the snow on Dartmoor, when on their way to Dartmoor Prison.

14.—The Lord Chancellor explains the intention of the Government with respect to Law Reform, and lays on the table a bill for the registration of assurances in England. The measures in contemplation were: (1) a bill of relief to suitors in Chancery; (2) three bills in regard to lunacy; and (3) a bill abolishing second and third class certificates in cases of insolvency.

15.—The Liverpool and Dublin steamer Queen Victoria strikes upon the rocks of Howth during a snow-storm, and sinks almost instantly with between sixty and seventy of the crew and passengers. About an equal number were saved. From an inquiry made into the cause of the disaster, it appeared to have been owing mainly to the negligence of the captain and mates, who went down with the vessel. Though unable to see the light through the storm, they neither slackened speed nor took soundings.

17.—Mr. Kinnaird proposes, but afterwards withdraws, a motion for an address to the Queen on the subject of the persecution of Protestants in Tuscany. Pointed reference having been made to the Madiai case in the course of the debate, Mr. Lucas replied that they had both been engaged in a system of proselytism at the instigation of foreign emissaries. At this moment, he said, acts of persecution were going on against Roman Catholics in Protestant countries quite as deserving of our interference as the case of the Madiais, and he intended to bring some of them before the House.

— The Queen's Advocate applies to the Prerogative Court for delivery out of the registry of the will and codicils of the late Napoleon Buonaparte, who died at the island of St. Helena, 5th May, 1821, leaving property within the jurisdiction of the court not exceeding 600*l.* The learned judge, in compliance with the wish of her Majesty's Government, granted the request, though not in the precise terms of the application.

— The Earl of Cardigan urges the Government to abolish the office of Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland. In answer to an address presented at his first levee by the Corporation of Dublin, the new Lord-Lieutenant, the Earl of St. Germans, said :—" I am persuaded that the abolition of Lord-Lieutenant would be productive of much practical inconvenience, and of little countervailing practical advantage ; I am moreover persuaded that the maintenance of this office is desired by the great body of the Irish people : and I therefore think that its abolition would be highly inexpedient."

18.—Joseph Libeny, a Hungarian, attempts to assassinate the Emperor of Austria, on the ramparts of Vienna, by stabbing him in the neck. He was immediately seized, tried, and executed.

— Debate in the House of Commons on our relations with France, and the language used by the Secretary of the Board of Control, to his constituents at Halifax, regarding that Power. " There is no doubt," said Mr. Disraeli, " that there is a considerable prejudice in this country against the present ruler of France, because he has terminated what we esteem a parliamentary constitution and has abrogated the liberty of the press. It is unnecessary for me to say, that it is not probable I shall ever say or do anything which should tend to depreciate the influence or to diminish the power of Parliament or the press. (Hear, hear.) My greatest honour is to be a member of this House, in which all my thoughts and feelings are concentrated ; and as for the press, I am myself a gentleman of the press, and have no other scutcheon." (Cheers.) Passing on to the peculiar position of France with reference to the change of rulers, and expressing a hearty sympathy with the fallen dynasty, Mr. Disraeli alluded to the discretion and moderation which should be exercised by the responsible advisers of her Majesty, when speaking of neighbouring friendly Powers. . . . " If I had to form an opinion of the policy of the Cabinet from the first declaration made by so eminent a member of it as the First Lord of the Admiralty, I should certainly be induced to suppose that some great change was about to occur. How are we to account for such a declaration ? I will not be so impertinent as to suppose it was an indiscretion. (Hear, and laughter.) An indiscretion from All the Talents ? Impossible ! (Laughter.) Can it be then design ? I will not misrepresent the right honourable gentleman ; I will not commit the mistake I made the other day. . . . Some people are uncharitable enough to suppose that the present Government have neither a principle nor a party ; but in Heaven's name why are they a Ministry if they have not got discretion ? (Hear.) That was the great point upon which the Cabinet was established. Vast experience, administrative adroitness—safe men who never would blunder. These were the men who not only took the government without a principle and without a party, but to whom the country ought to be grateful for taking it under such circumstances." Mr. Disraeli afterwards addressed himself to the President of the Board of Control. " I know the right honourable gentleman is in the habit of saying very offensive things without meaning it ; I know he has outraged the feelings of many individuals without the slightest intention of doing so ; and, therefore, in reference to his peculiar organization, I can only say that it is a very awkward accomplishment. As regards the First Lord of the Admiralty, he has had a great deal of experience, to be sure, but then he has been a long time in Opposition ; and something might be said for him in the way of excuse on that account, if, indeed, so great a personage could condescend to an excuse. (Laughter.) The right hon. baronet might say, or some one might say for him, that he had been a good many years without attending a Cabinet Council—that no new Council had been summoned before he went to his constituents—that he was called upon unexpectedly, and without previous arrangement and understanding with his colleagues—that it was a strange thing he should have made such a business of it, but still these things would happen sometimes. (Cheers and laughter.) But what is the position of the President of the Board of Control ? He was hardly out of office till he was in again. (A laugh.) He had been in office for five or six years, and a hardish time he had of it, no doubt (a laugh) ; but, nevertheless, he agreed again to lend his gravity to the councils of his royal mistress. (Laughter.) He was properly anxious that the people of this country should have none but discreet men to administer their affairs, and, therefore, without making any stipulations as to the policy or principles of the Government, he became a Minister again, and attended twenty Cabinet Councils before he went down to make the Halifax demonstration. (Cheers and laughter.) And yet, with this renovated sense of responsibility—knowing how much depended on everything said by a Minister under these circumstances—the right hon. gentleman, fresh from Cabinet Councils, knowing all the questions at issue, goes to his constituents, and describes the ruler of the French in language which I have more than once referred to, and will not now repeat." Pointing out the peculiar necessity for a cordial alliance with France at this time, on account of the threatening aspect of the Eastern Question, Mr. Disraeli took occasion to comment on the anomalous position occupied in the Ministry by Lord John Russell. " We understood from the first that the noble lord had accepted office as Secretary of State provisionally ; but people were surprised at this ; and then there came forth a paragraph, in which they were ' authorized to state ' that this was a mistake, that the noble lord was not to hold office as Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, but was to have some office where there was nothing to do somewhere in the neighbourhood of Waterloo-bridge. (A laugh.) In fact, the only place the description met was that of the toll-gatherer of that unfortunate bridge. (Roars of laughter.) Well, sir, that paragraph was not satisfactory,

The noble lord, whatever the opinions of some of us may be, is rather a favourite of the people of England (hear, hear), and they did not consider that exactly the treatment to which a man of his position was entitled. (Cheers.) There was then another paragraph, in which it was stated 'on authority' that all the other paragraphs were erroneous, that the noble lord was going to resign the office of Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, but was certainly to continue leader of the House, and that he was to have a room allowed him in the office of the Secretary of State. (Laughter.) But the climax was reached when a fourth and rather an angry paragraph, written, it seemed, with some feeling of personal indignation, appeared, in which it was stated that nothing could be more erroneous or premature than the announcements that the noble lord was going to remain in the Foreign Office—that he was not to continue leader of the House of Commons—that he was to have a room in the Foreign Office—a small room, I think it said—but that he was to be allowed two clerks. (Much laughter.) Sir, I confess I must protest against this system of shutting up great men in small rooms (renewed laughter), and of binding to the triumphal chariot-wheels of administrative ability all the fame and genius of the Whig party. (Cheers.) I think I have a right to ask the noble lord frankly, 'Are you Secretary of State, or are you not?' (Loud cheers.)" Appealing from the great Liberal and Whig parties to the Radicals, "Where," asked Mr. Disraeli, "are the Radicals? Is there a man in the House who declares himself to be a Radical? Not one. He would be afraid of being caught and turned into a Conservative Minister. . . . We have now got a Ministry of 'progress,' and every one stands still. (Cheers.) We never hear the word 'Reform' now; it is no longer a Ministry of Reform, it is a Ministry of Progress, every member of which resolves to do nothing. (Laughter.) All difficult questions are suspended. (Hear, hear.) All questions which cannot be agreed upon are open questions. Now, I don't want to be unreasonable, but I think there ought to be some limit to this system of open questions. (Cheers.) It is a system which has hitherto prevailed only partially in this country, and which never has prevailed with any advantage to it. Let us, at least, fix on some limits to it. Let Parliamentary reform, let the ballot, be open questions if you please; let every institution in Church and State be open questions; but, at least, let your answer to me to-night prove that, among your open questions, you are not going to make one of the peace of Europe." (Cheers.) Sir James Graham, in reply, taunted Mr. Disraeli, not only with decorating the tomb of Wellington with a branch plucked from the funeral wreath of a French marshal, but with describing other friendly Powers, in presence of representatives of their own nation, as our "scandalous and discomfited allies." "He says the press is his escutcheon. I must say the leaders in the Morning Chronicle are also his supporters, and his Standard-bearer is to be found in the evening press." (Laughter.) Reminding him of the dislike of the people of this country to misquotations as well as to coalitions, the member for Carlisle denied that, even in the heat of a contested election, he had used the words attributed to him by Mr. Disraeli. "I must be allowed," he said, in concluding, "to state that, although willing and anxious to maintain the most friendly relations with France, and though desirous that not one word should fall from me to excite their enmity, still, if I am not, either on the hustings or in this House, to say that which my heart dictates, and my mind and conscience dictate, then certainly I am not fit to be a Minister, or to sit in the House of Commons. (Hear, hear.) I am still a member of a free community, a community that dares to defend the truth, and loves the truth, and is still the guardian of this happy country, which, after all, is the last refuge of the liberties of Europe. (Cheers.)"

21.—John Williams, a native of Boston, United States, tried before the High Court of Justiciary, Edinburgh, for the murder, on the highway, of Andrew Mather, tollkeeper at Cleekhinion, Berwickshire. The daughters of the murdered man found the prisoner sleeping beside the body of his victim, and under the plaid which Mather had worn when attacked. Williams was found guilty, and executed at Greenlaw.

24.—Accident in the Ealing cutting of the Great Western Railway, resulting in the death of one of the Directors of the Company, Mr. Gibbs, of Clifton, and the serious injury of another, Dr. Pritchard Smith.

27.—Termination of the Caffre War by the submission of the powerful Gaika chief Sandilla. The conditions granted by General Cathcart extended the royal mercy and pardon to the rebel chief and his people, but declared that the Gaika tribes cannot be permitted to retain the Amatolas and their other frontier lands, which are forfeited to the Government.

28.—St. George's Church, Doncaster, destroyed by fire. The alarm was given at an early hour in the morning, when the whole of the lower part of the edifice, from the west end of the nave to the opposite extremity of the chancel, was in flames. About two o'clock the roof of the nave fell in, carrying with it the fine perpendicular window; then the south side of the roof of the chancel, when the flames shot above the battlements in one uninterrupted line from end to end of the sacred edifice; and, finally, about half-past two, the roof of the tower dropped into the belfry, where the fire was raging with the fury of a furnace. Within an hour afterwards, the entire fabric, with all its galleries, screenwork, stalls, organ, and decorations, was utterly consumed. The destruction of this fine specimen of ecclesiastical architecture excited a wide-spread regret, and meetings of the local gentry and clergy were at once held to take steps for rebuilding the church in something like its original splendour. The oldest part of the edifice destroyed was said to date back to 1070 A.D., and the nave and tower to the reign of Henry III.

March 2.—Prince Menschikoff, accredited to Constantinople as Russian Ambassador and Plenipotentiary, visits the Grand Vizier, but refuses to call upon the Foreign Minister Fuad Effendi, on the ground that the Russian Minister at Constantinople had accused him of breach of faith. In consequence of this insult Fuad Effendi resigned his office, and was succeeded by Rifaat Pasha. Lord Stratford, who reached Constantinople soon after, wrote to Lord Clarendon, that at an interview with the Grand Vizier and the Minister for Foreign Affairs they had informed him, "That since the arrival of Prince Menschikoff the language held by the Russian Embassy to them had been a mixture of angry complaints and friendly assurances, accompanied with positive requisitions as to the Holy Places in Palestine, indications of some ulterior views, and a general tone of resistance, at times bordering on intimidation."

— The Times writes: "We have already intimated that the time is fast approaching when the maintenance of the Ottoman empire in its present form will be found to be impracticable, acknowledged to be undesirable; but whatever political vicissitudes the Christian and Slavonic provinces of Turkey may witness, they can pass under no form of government more barbarous and oppressive than that which has so long overwhelmed them. We profess, therefore, to feel no anxiety for the maintenance of the Ottoman empire, which bears the stamp of a tyrannical past, a worthless present, and an extinct future."

4.—Accident near the Dixenfold station of the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway. While the express train was proceeding at the rate of between forty and fifty miles an hour, one of the driving-wheels of the engine broke, causing it to fall across the line. Three of the carriages following were hurled off the rails and smashed to pieces, and the passengers injured in the most frightful manner. Three of them, with the engine-driver, were killed on the spot; and two others died after lingering for some days.

— Second reading of the Canada Clergy Reserves Bill, in the House of Commons, carried by a majority of 83.

8.—The jubilee of the British and Foreign Bible Society celebrated in Exeter Hall, under the presidency of the Earl of Shaftesbury. Since its commencement the Society had instituted 8,000 branches, and circulated 43,000,000 copies of the Scriptures.

— Gervinus, author of an "Introduction to the History of the Nineteenth Century," condemned to four months' imprisonment by the High Court of Mannheim for exciting to sedition in that work. This sentence was afterwards cancelled as too lenient, and a new trial ordered for inciting to high treason.

11.—Died, aged 66, M. J. B. Orfila, eminent French chemist and physician.

— Second reading of the Jewish Disabilities Bill, in the House of Commons, carried by 263 votes to 212, on Sir F. Thesiger's amendment to discuss it that day six months.

12.—Another explosion in the Risca Vale Colliery, near Newport, and loss of ten lives.

13.—Disturbances at Yeadon, near Leeds, between the Wesleyans and Reformed Methodists; one of the latter shot.

14.—Abraham Sewell, a maniac, aged 38, living at West Auckland, Durham, murders his mother, aged 82, by beating her when in bed with a poker and rolling-pin, and inflicts serious injury upon his father, when attempting to protect the old woman.

17.—Santa Anna elected President of the Mexican Republic.

19.—Fire in the Prince of Wales' Tower, Windsor Castle. The state apartments with their priceless furniture were for some time placed in the greatest jeopardy, but the exertions of the firemen and assistants, headed by Prince Albert, confined the fire to the room in which it originated, and two storeys of bedrooms above.

25.—Explosion in the Arley Coal Mine, Wigan. On the officers of the pit effecting a descent into the works, they found the strong doors dividing the up-cast from the down-cast shaft blown to atoms, and among the fragments fifteen of the workmen dead. A little further on twenty men and boys were found alive, then two others, and near the extremity of the workings various groups of suffocated miners were found. Fifty-eight perished in all.

— Election riot at Blackburn, dispersed by the military after several houses had been broken into and wrecked.

31.—The correspondence of Lord Nelson with Lady Hamilton, and of the Queen of Naples with Lady Hamilton, amounting in all to about 600 letters, sold at Sotheby and Wilkinson's. The naval hero's last letter, written on board the Victory, before going into action at Trafalgar, was bought for the British Museum at 23*l*. The entire collection brought 501*l*. 6*s*. 6*d*.

April 1.—Wreck of the London and Aberdeen steamer Duke of Sutherland, at the entrance of Aberdeen harbour, and loss of sixteen of the passengers and crew. While trying to avoid the risks caused by a south gale the vessel struck upon the dangerous rocks beyond the pier-head, and in about ten minutes commenced to break up under a violent sea. A few of the crew launched the life-boat; but they had not pulled many yards from the wreck when she was upset, and those who had sought refuge in her were only saved by the exertions of people on shore. A coble put off to the wreck, but also upset, and six out of the seven men who manned her were drowned. A few were got off the steamer by rocket lines. Those washed off and drowned were two ladies (cabin passengers), three steerage passengers, the commander, Captain Howland, who attempted to reach the shore by the rocket line, and ten of the crew.

1.—Manchester made a city by Royal Charter.

4.—The merchants, bankers, and traders of London having presented an address to the Emperor of the French, expressive of their desire for the continuance of cordiality and goodwill between this country and France, Lord Campbell called the attention of the House of Lords to the occurrence, as a transgression of that rule which authorized the carrying on of intercourse between independent nations by ambassadors only, or some other official appointed by Government. He wished to know whether the deputation which was said to have waited on the Emperor had been sanctioned by the Government of her Majesty. The Earl of Clarendon said that sanction had not been given or asked, but the Address itself, though unnecessary, was at the same time unobjectionable.

— Lord John Russell explains the intentions of the Government with respect to National Education, and obtains leave to introduce a Bill on the subject. He showed what had been done with respect to the education of the poorer classes since public day-schools were established, examined the voluntary and secular system, deciding against each, and gave an outline of the Government measure, which embraced an extension of the present system, and a plan for dealing with educational charities. Of secular education he said:—"The people of this country act on a right instinct when they openly declare that there shall be religious training, which shall comprise all the great doctrines of Christianity. Therefore neither I nor the present Government can be a party to any plan proposing a secular mode of teaching."

7.—At ten minutes past one o'clock this afternoon the Queen was safely delivered of a Prince (Leopold).

8.—Mr. Gladstone, Chancellor of the Exchequer, brings forward his resolutions on the National Debt. His plan consisted of three parts: first, the liquidation of certain minor stocks amounting to 9,500,000*l.*; second, a change in the issue of Exchequer Bonds; and third, a voluntary commutation of the Three per Cent. Consols and the Three per Cent. Reduced, making together a capital of nearly 500,000,000*l.*, thereby laying the foundation of a permanent irredeemable Two and a Half per Cent. Stock, which was the ultimate aim of the Government, and the key to the resolutions he submitted to the House. These resolutions, after considerable discussion, were agreed to.

11.—The Lord Chancellor moves the second reading of a bill for altering the punishment of transportation. He thought they should only leave as subjects for transportation those who were now liable for fourteen years and upwards, including cases of receiving stolen goods, outrages, assaults on the person, attempts to do grievous bodily harm, house-breaking, burglary, and cattle-stealing. For the remaining class, he thought that those who would have been transported for seven years should henceforth be kept in penal servitude for four, and so on, in proportion up to fifteen, for which term he proposed ten years' penal servitude. In the House of Commons, Mr. Keating objected to the ticket-of-leave clauses; but the bill ultimately passed the Commons as it came from the Lords.

12.—Mr. Brett moves the presentation of an address to the Queen, praying that the orders given for the gradual abolition of Kilmainham Hospital may be cancelled. The motion was opposed by the Secretary of War chiefly on the ground that the pensioners preferred out-door relief; but on a division the House authorized the Address by a majority of 198 to 131.

14.—Mr. Milner Gibson's resolution for abolishing the advertisement-duty carried against Government by 200 to 169. The resolutions proposed at the same time relative to the stamp and paper duties were negatived by considerable majorities.

15.—The Jewish Disabilities Bill read a third time in the House of Commons,—majority 288 to 230.

18.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer, in a speech of five hours' duration, introduces the financial scheme of the Government. The main features were the extension of the legacy-duty, gradual reduction of the Income-tax, equalization of spirit-duties, abolition of soap-duty, universal penny receipt stamp, reduction of duty on cabs and hackney-coaches, and the equalization of assessed taxes. The resolutions moved in terms of the Budget showed that 123 articles at present paying duty would be set free altogether, and in the case of 133 the present duties were to be reduced. The total relief he estimated at 5,384,000*l.* On the subject of the Income-tax—the colossal engine of finance—Mr. Gladstone said:—"If the Committee have followed me, they will see that we stand on the principle that the Income-tax ought to be marked as a temporary measure; that the public feeling that relief should be given to intelligence and skill, as compared with property, ought to be met, and may be met; that the Income-tax in its operation ought to be mitigated by every rational means compatible with its integrity; and, above all, that it should be associated in the last terms of its existence, as it was in its first, with those remissions of indirect taxation which have so greatly redounded to the profit of this country, and have set so admirable an example—an example that has already in some quarters proved contagious—to the other nations of the earth.”

28.—Died, aged 80, Ludwig Tieck, German poet, novelist, and translator.

29.—The Government Jewish Disabilities Bill thrown out in the House of Lords on the second reading, by a majority of 49.

—Wreck of the Rebecca, of London, on the west coast of Van Diemen's Land, while on her passage home from Sydney. She struck on a reef when sailing at the rate of eight and a half knots an hour, and drifted shoreward, where she went to pieces under a heavy sea. Of 30 persons on board 11 were saved.

May 2.—The Budget resolutions, relating to the Income-tax, carried, after three nights' debate, by 323 to 252 votes.

3.—Wreck of the American emigrant ship William and Mary, in the channel of the Bahamas, and loss of 170 lives. The captain, the most of the crew, and about thirty passengers, got off in two of the boats, and were picked up by passing vessels.

5.—Prince Menschikoff presents his ultimatum to the Porte in the shape of a note accompanied by the draught of a proposed convention or arrangement which the Porte was to sign within five days, under a threat of serious consequences if a longer delay took place. The note (which was written in the third person, in the name of the Ambassador) demanded that “The Orthodox Eastern religion, its clergy, and its possessions, shall enjoy for the future, without any prejudice, under the protection of his Majesty the Sultan, the privileges and immunities which are assured to them ab antiquo, and, upon the principle of perfect equity, shall participate in the advantages accorded to the other Christian sects.” He could not consider any delay in answering other “than as a want of respect towards his Government, which would impose on him the most painful duty.” After an interview with Lord Stratford, Rifaat Pasha wrote on the 10th that, while the Porte was willing to negotiate with respect to certain of the demands made by Russia, it was “contrary to international rights that our Government should conclude a treaty with another on a dangerous matter, affecting not only those things on which her independence was grounded, but, as it is well known, her independence itself in its very foundations.” On the 12th Prince Menschikoff succeeded in obtaining a private audience of the Sultan, but his Highness having previously been informed by the English Ambassador that, in the event of imminent danger, he was instructed to request the aid of her Majesty's fleet in the Mediterranean, the Russian Envoy did not succeed in his attempt to turn the Sultan from the line of policy advised by England, viz. to treat as two distinct things the original question of the Holy Places and this new claim for a Russian Protectorate under a secret treaty. The Ottoman Council declining to enter into the treaty or convention required by Russia, Prince Menschikoff took his departure from Constantinople with the Embassy on the 15th. Having ascertained on leaving that the Sultan was about to issue a firman confirming the privileges of the Greek Church, Prince Menschikoff wrote to the Turkish Minister for Foreign Affairs: “Whatever may be the motive of this determination, a declaration or any other act which, although it may preserve the integrity of the purely spiritual right of the Orthodox Eastern Church, tends to invalidate the other rights, privileges, and immunities accorded to her religion and clergy from the most ancient times, and which they enjoy to the present moment, will be considered by the Imperial Cabinet as an act of hostility to Russia and to her religion.”

5.—In Committee of Ways and Means, Mr. Lawless made a motion to exempt Ireland from the Income-tax. A “scene” was created by Mr. Duffy's declaration “that in the worst days of Walpole and the Pelhams more scandalous corruptions did not exist than he had seen practised under his own eye in corrupting Irish members.” The debate was at once interrupted by Mr. V. Scully and Mr. J. Ball, rising together. Amid great confusion, Lord John Russell challenged Mr. Duffy to make good his words or retract them. The words were ordered to be taken down; and on being reported to the House, the chairman formally called upon Mr. Duffy to explain or retract. Mr. Duffy said, if the House granted him a committee, he would lay all the facts before it; and then withdrew. Next night he made an explanation expressive of regret if he had offended against any rule of the House.

6.—Commencement of the sale of Louis Philippe's Spanish and Standish galleries at Christie's. The first, containing 528 pictures, produced 27,000*l.*; and the second, 244 pictures, 10,000 guineas.

8.—Died at Rome, where he was held in high regard, Father Roothan, General of the Jesuits.

10.—Attempt made to extort money from Mr. Gladstone, by charging him with improper conduct towards a female in the Haymarket. Walking home from the Italian Opera, whither he had gone in his brougham after the division on the Nunneries Bill, he was accosted by one of the unfortunates frequenting that locality: while listening to her story, a person named Wilson stepped forward, and, addressing him by name, said he would expose him in the Morning Herald, unless a sum of money was paid there and then, or a situation promised in Somerset House. After some little delay, during which the female passed into her lodgings, a policeman was procured, and the offender given into custody. He was tried at the Central Criminal Court, on the 15th of June, and sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment with hard labour.

12.—Opening of the Dublin Exhibition, erected by Mr. Dargan, for displaying works of industry to his countrymen by way of encouragement and example. The ceremony was performed by the Lord-Lieutenant (the Earl of St. Germans), accompanied by the Countess and a large train of Irish nobility and gentry, knights of St. Patrick, officials, and dignitaries.

17.—Destruction by fire of Brogden's North Shore Cotton Mills, Liverpool. Advantage had been taken of the absence of the workmen during the Whitsun holidays to execute some repairs in the machinery, and it was supposed the disaster originated through the carelessness of some of the tradesmen thus employed. The value of the buildings, machinery, and goods destroyed was estimated at 80,000*l.*

— The Governor of Jamaica, in opening the Legislature, censures both Houses for attempting, under cover of providing for the principal supplies, to appropriate its grants so as to defeat former permanent appropriations.

— At the annual meeting of the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society Mrs. Beecher Stowe was present, with some friends from America, and received a flattering welcome. Eight days afterwards, she was presented with an address by the same body in Willis's Rooms.

19.—The ship Argyll foundered at sea near the coast of Newfoundland, while on her passage to Quebec. The passengers and crew, numbering 17 persons, escaped in the boats, but only to endure such privations from famine and exposure, that 15 of them perished. The survivors were picked up by a French brig in lat. 50° N., long. 32° W. The Aurora of Hull went down next day, with 26 of her passengers and crew, in lat. 46° N., long. 38° W.

24.—The Edinburgh Adelphi Theatre destroyed by a fire which broke out about five P.M., apparently in the music-room.

27.—In answer to Mr. Disraeli, Lord John Russell said that the most perfect confidence and accord subsisted between her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople and the Ambassador of the Emperor of the French. They each took the same view of the Russian proposals. In the present state of the negotiations, it would be improper to produce the instructions upon which Lord Stratford acted; but he might say the policy which dictated them was that of maintaining inviolate the faith of treaties and the independence of Turkey.

30.—Lord John Russell declines to inform Mr. Disraeli whether or not the British fleet had been ordered to the Dardanelles.

— Election of Chamberlain for the City of London. Sir John Key, alderman of the ward of Bridge Without, and twice Lord Mayor, the candidate started by the Corporation, obtained 3,185 votes, against Mr. Scott, of the Chamberlain's office, who polled 2,914. This was the largest number of the Livery who ever voted in such a contest.

June 1.—Count Nesselrode sends from St. Petersburg a despatch, informing Baron Brunow of the Emperor's intention to occupy the Principalities. On the same day a despatch was forwarded from the Foreign Office here to Lord Stratford de Redcliffe, authorizing him in certain specified contingencies to send for the fleet, which would then repair to such place as he might point out. Next day instructions were sent to Admiral Dundas to proceed at once to the neighbourhood of the Dardanelles, and there place himself in communication with her Majesty's Ambassador.

— Lord Hotham's Judges Exclusion Bill thrown out in the Commons on the motion for a third reading. With the exception of a short speech on the new India Bill, on the 24th, this was the last occasion on which Mr. Macaulay addressed the House. He spoke with great vigour against the bill. There was no more reason, he said, for excluding judges from the House of Commons than from the House of Lords, where every member was in some measure a judge. Without affording any compensating benefit whatever, it was a measure which would at once lower the influence and lessen the usefulness of the House of Commons. "I see," he concluded, "no special reason for excluding the Master of the Rolls; and, I would, therefore, leave our door open to him. I would open it to the Judge of the Admiralty, who has been most unwisely excluded. I would open it to other great judicial officers who are now excluded solely because their offices did not exist in 1705, particularly to the two Lords Justices and the three Vice-Chancellors. In this way we should, I am convinced, greatly facilitate the important and arduous work of law-reform; we should raise the character of this House; and I need not say that with the character of this House must rise or fall the estimation in which representative institutions are held throughout the world. But, whether the extensive changes which I have recommended shall be thought desirable or not, I trust that we shall reject the bill of the noble lord. I address myself to the Conservative members on your left hand; and I ask them whether they are prepared to alter, on grounds purely theoretical, a system which has lasted during twenty generations without producing the smallest practical evil. I turn to the Liberal members on this side; and I ask them whether they are prepared to lower the reputation and to impair the efficiency of that branch of the legislature which springs from the people. For myself, sir, I hope that I am at once a Liberal and a Conservative politician; and in both characters I shall give a clear and conscientious vote in favour of the amendment."

— At the Custom House tea deliveries at the reduced duty are made to-day to the amount of 200,000*l.*

2.—Explosion on board the Times screw-steamer in Dublin harbour. Two of the passengers were killed on the spot, and ten died after their removal to the hospital.

3.—Sir Charles Wood introduces the new Bill for the government of India, in a speech of five hours' length. He proposed to continue the relations of the Board of Control to the Board of Directors as they stand, but to change the constitution and limit the patronage of the Court of Directors. The thirty members of the Court were to be reduced to eighteen—twelve elected in the usual way, and six nominated by the Crown from persons who have been Indian servants for ten years. With respect to patronage, now entirely in the hands of the Court of Directors, it was proposed to do away altogether with nomination by favour, and to make civil and scientific appointments depend on merit alone. The bill gave rise to frequent and lengthy discussions in the Commons, but was finally passed with some trifling amendments on the 28th of July. Sir John Pakington's motion for abolishing the salt monopoly was carried against the Government by 117 to 107. In the House of Lords the bill was severely criticised by Lord Ellenborough, but was ultimately carried through all its stages there, and in due course received the royal assent.

— Messrs. Keogh, Monsell, and Sadleir, having resigned their appointments under Lord Aberdeen, in consequence of the language used by Lord J. Russell regarding the Catholic religion in the debate on the ecclesiastical revenues of Ireland, Lord Aberdeen now writes to these members of his party:—"While the vote on that occasion had the sanction of the Government, the reasons for that vote given by Lord John Russell and the sentiments of which you complain are not shared by me, nor by many of my colleagues." This explanation led to a withdrawal of the resignations.

5.—Fire on the premises of the Patent Gutta Percha Company's Wenlock Basin, City-road, and destruction of property valued at 100,000*l.* The flames spread to two vessels lying in the basin, and from them to a range of warehouses on the opposite side. Among the premises destroyed was a Patent Fire-wood Factory, and the works of a Patent Copperage Company.

6.—Wreck of the Nessree, thirty-five miles south of Bombay, and loss of about 350 passengers, chiefly Indian pilgrims coming from Arabia.

8.—Drummond's (Duke de Melfort) Restitution Bill read a second time in the House of Lords; the object, as explained by the Lord Chancellor, being the removal of the attainder against the earldom of Perth, forfeited for the adherence of the fifth Earl to the fortunes of the Stuarts in the Rebellion of 1745.

9.—Gavazzi riots in Canada. At Quebec the reverend padre was thrown out of his pulpit, and at Montreal the disturbance was so serious that the military called out to repress it were compelled to fire in self-defence. Seven persons were killed, six severely or mortally wounded, and ten or twelve others slightly injured.

— During the Commemoration at Oxford, the Earl of Derby is installed as Chancellor, and a large number of his friends and political supporters receive the honorary degree of D.C.L.

11.—In the House of Commons, Mr. Keogh entered into an examination of the charges made against him with reference to the formation of the late and the present Government—charges which, he said, impeached his veracity, and were derogatory to his personal honour.

12.—Count Nesselrode addresses a circular note to the Russian Ministers and diplomatic agents throughout Europe, explanatory of Prince Menschikoff's mission to Constantinople, and designed to "rectify the false statements which may have been circulated about it in the countries in which they resided." A note was appended to the circular, showing the terms Russia was willing to accept for the protection of "the orthodox religion of the Orient, its clergy, churches, and possessions." This note, and another dated the 20th, was answered by M. Drouyn de Lhuys on behalf of France, and by the Earl of Clarendon on behalf of England.

14.—Formation of a military encampment on Chobham Common, the force comprising four regiments of cavalry, three battalions of Guards, two brigades of infantry, each comprising three regiments, one troop of Royal Horse Artillery, three batteries of Horse Artillery, a company of Sappers, and a Pontoon train. A variety of military displays were made in the presence of large gatherings between the 21st of June, when operations in the field commenced, and the 20th of August, when the camp broke up.

16.—More personal explanations in the House of Commons between Mr. Keogh, Lord Naas, and others, as to the offer of office to the former by Lord Derby.

21.—St. John's College, Hurstpierpoint, a Middle Class Training Institution, opened.

— The Liverpool Election Committee report that they found neither Mr. Turner nor Mr. Forbes Mackenzie duly elected to serve in the present Parliament.

23.—In the debate on the second reading of the India Bill, Lord Stanley in a very thin House moved, "That further information is necessary to enable Parliament to legislate with advantage for the permanent government of India; and that at this late period of the session it is inexpedient to proceed with a measure which, while it disturbs existing arrangements, cannot be considered as a final settlement." Mr. Macaulay supported the bill as one introducing present improvements, and leaving scope for future reforms. The chief part of his speech was devoted to the question of admission to the Civil Service of India by competition. "It seems to me," he said, "that there never was a fact better proved by an immense mass of evidence—by an experience almost unvaried—than this; that men who distinguished themselves in youth above their contemporaries in academic competition almost always keep to the end of their lives the start they have gained in the earlier part of their career. Look to the Parliament from the time when parliamentary government began in this country—from the days of Montagu and St. John to those of Canning and Peel. You need not stop there, but come down to the time of Lord Derby and my right honourable friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer. Has it not always been the case, that the men who were first in the competition of the schools have been the first in the competition of life? Look also to India. The ablest man who ever governed India was Warren Hastings, and was he not in the first rank at Westminster? The ablest Civil servant I ever knew in India was Sir Charles Metcalfe, and was he not a man of the first standing at Eton? The most distinguished member of the aristocracy who ever governed India was Lord Wellesley. What was his European reputation? What was his Oxford reputation?" Noticing the academical triumphs of Lord Ellenborough himself, who was now so much opposed to the Government Bill, Mr. Macaulay referred to the great array of judges who had been eminent in youthful study, and concluded by expressing his approval of the measure, because it provided the best means that can be imagined for effecting the gradual admission of natives to a share in the higher offices of the Government. The debate was continued over a week and resulted in the second reading of the bill by a majority of 182.

26.—The Emperor of Russia issues a manifesto, in which he declares that, "having exhausted all the means of persuasion, and all the means of obtaining in a friendly manner the satisfaction due to our just reclamations, we have deemed it indispensable to order our troops to enter the Danubian Principalities, and thus show the Porte how far its obstinacy may lead it. Nevertheless, even now, it is not our intention to commence war. By the occupation of the Principalities, we wish to have in our hands a pledge which will guarantee to us in every respect the re-establishment of our just rights."

27.—Professor Faraday sends to the Athenæum a description of the nature and results of the indicator he had constructed for exposing the current delusion of table-turning.

27.—The rivers of Bolivia flowing into the Amazonas and La Plata declared free to the navigation of all nations.

July 1.—Explosion at the Bent Grange Colliery, Oldham, resulting in the death of seventeen men and boys.

2.—The Russian troops, in two divisions, cross the Pruth and occupy the Principalities.

4.—The Leith steamship Trident destroyed by fire in St. Katherine Docks.

6.—Died Lady Florentia Sale, widow of Gen. Sir Robt. Sale, and author of "Journal of the Disasters in Affghanistan."

8.—The American squadron, under Commodore Perry, anchors in the Bay of Jeddo, and commences negotiations with the Japanese.

9.—Inundations throughout South Wales, caused by heavy rains. At Brecon, the river Honddu rose with great rapidity, and carried away the bridge from its foundations. The inhabitants of certain streets only escaped by retreating to the upper storey of their dwellings.

13.—Earl Shaftesbury challenged to fight a duel. In a speech on the Juvenile Mendicants Bill, he cited the judgment of Lord Eldon in the case of William Pole-Tylney-Long-Wellesley (Lord Mornington), to show that the proposed detention of children whose parents are immoral was nothing new in law. Lord M. resented this as an interference with his private affairs, without taking notice of his justification in being twice elected for Essex, and writes to the Earl that he must apologize or fight. Lord Shaftesbury, in answer, briefly defended his quotation from an ordinary legal authority, and, so far as the challenge was concerned, referred Lord M. to the magistrate at Bow-street, or to his solicitors. Lord Mornington rejoined that this added to the original insult, and was besides "very absurdly impertinent." In a case before the Lords Justices in Chancery, the same week, Lord Mornington wrote, "I have ever felt as a peer of the realm that I am more bound to respect the law than other men."

14.—Wreck of the Fazl Kereem, an Arab ship which left Aden the previous day with the Calcutta and Bombay mails, transferred from the East India Company's steamer, Ajadha. Out of 191 persons on board, only eleven were saved, ten escaping in the long boat, and one floating ashore on a plank.

—The New York Exhibition opened by the President of the United States.

15.—The Merchant Shipping Bill passes through Committee in the Commons.

—The city of Venezuela, in S. America, destroyed by an earthquake. As many as 800 persons were said to have been buried in the ruins; an entire company of artillery, with Colonel Percy, perishing in their quarters.

22.—In a discussion on the Succession Duties Bill, the Earl of Malmesbury denounced the scheme as cruel in principle. It took a man at a time and fleeced him ; and when he had disappeared, it took another and fleeced him ; so that it would be impossible ever to collect a numerically strong expression of opinion respecting it against the Minister of the day. By the bill Chancellors of the Exchequer would in future be like vultures soaring over society, and watching for a harvest of dead meat.

27.—Archbishop Whately, ex-Chancellor Blackburn, and Mr. Baron Green withdraw, under pressure, from the Irish Board of National Education.

— Cab-strike in the metropolis, in retaliation for the new Act passed, reducing the fares from 8*d.* to 6*d.* per mile.

31.—The representatives of the four great Powers (Great Britain, France, Austria, and Prussia), assembled in conference at Vienna, agree upon a note to be submitted to Russia and Turkey, as a basis for settling the differences between these Powers. The propositions, which originated with Austria, and were slightly altered by France, were accepted by the Emperor of Russia.

August 1.—Sir John Romilly, Master of the Rolls, gives judgment in the case of the Hon. and Rev. Earl of Guildford and the Hospital of St. Cross, Winchester, the question being brought before him in the form of an information to obtain a decree for the regulation and future management of two charities ; one the hospital above referred to, the other the Alms-house of Noble Poverty—separate institutions, but both practically one charity. The hospital was founded in the twelfth century, by Henry de Blois ; the alms-house in 1446, by Cardinal Beaufort ; and they were intended to support thirteen poor men, and give a dinner every day to one hundred poor men, with other benefits for the indigent. Three several times the Master of the hospital had attempted to obtain the revenues for his own use ; first, in the fourteenth century, when William of Wykeham successfully resisted the attempt. He was opposed by William de Stowell, then the Master of the charity, and by Sir Roger de Cloud his successor, when the dispute was referred to the Pope, who condemned Sir Roger in costs, and decided in favour of William of Wykeham. The second attempt was in the reign of Elizabeth, when an Act was passed to confirm the original trust, providing that no Master should have power to grant lands, and that the funds of the charity must thenceforward be applied for the relief of the poor. The third attempt was made in 1696, when the brethren and two chaplains agreed to a document called a Consuetudinarium, or settlement of the custom of administering the funds of the hospital, making over the revenues to the Master. This was sanctioned by the visitor, the Bishop of Winchester, though Sir John Romilly now described it as one of the most extraordinary and nefarious deeds which the court had ever perused. It commenced by stating, that after diligent search no deeds or documents had been discovered for the government of the charity, although at the very time the Master and brethren were in possession of the original deed, the Pope's Bull, the statutes of Henry and Elizabeth, and the documents of the House of Noble Poverty. Under this glaring and discreditable deed the charity was carried on for a century and a half, though not without warnings, from time to time, that the funds were being misapplied. Sir John Romilly now decided that an injunction must be issued to restrain the granting of any lands or fines of the charity, and an inquiry directed as to the laws now existing, the present state of the charity, and the appropriation of the funds. The Attorney-General had left it to the court to settle the time at which the present Master, the Earl of Guildford, should be called upon to render an account ; but from the framing of the information the court could not go further back than the date of filing. The costs of the Bishop of Winchester to come out of the funds.

1.—Sir James Graham introduces the Naval Coast Volunteers Bill, which passes without opposition, through both Houses, before the close of the session.

6.—Mutiny on board the Aratoon Opar, trading between Hong Kong and Calcutta ; the Chinese sailors murdering Captain Lovett and five other of the passengers and crew.

8.—Commenced at Gloucester Assizes the case of Smyth (or Provis, the impostor) against Smyth and others. The object of the action was to recover certain estates in the county of Gloucester, formerly the property of Sir Hugh Smyth, Bart., of Ashton Hall, near Bristol, the plaintiff claiming to be the son and heir of Sir Hugh Smyth, who died in the year 1824. Sir H. Smyth was known to have been twice married, but had no issue by either marriage. The plaintiff claimed to be the son of Sir H. Smyth by a third and earlier marriage, alleged to have taken place in Ireland, with Jane, the daughter of Count Vandenberg, in the year 1796, and to have been born at Warminster, in the county of Wilts. His mother having died in child-birth, he was brought up by a woman named Lydia Reed, and his birth was for some reason kept secret. Plaintiff went abroad, and on his return to this country he was not made acquainted with his pedigree, till recently, when, by the discovery of certain documents, he came to the knowledge that he was entitled to a baronetcy, and estates which were variously estimated to be worth from 20,000*l.* to 35,000*l.* a year. The defendant was the grandson of Sir Hugh Smyth's sister Florence, and still a minor. The plaintiff was put into the witness-box on the second day of the trial and made to tell the story of his life under the searching pressure of Sir F. Thesiger. He stood the first day's examination with rare coolness; but on the morning of the third day appeared chop-fallen and disconcerted. The first decisive blow given to his story was when it was shown that a letter, in his handwriting, sealed with the Smyth seal, was dated the 13th March, while he had sworn that he did not obtain an impression of the seal before the 17th, and had then to get it engraved. What defence he would have made at this point of the evidence it is impossible to say; but he turned pale, and requested permission to retire. At this moment a telegram from London brought the news that the police had discovered that the plaintiff applied to an engraver at 161, Oxford-street, in January last, to engrave the Bandon crest on the ring which had been produced during the trial as a relic, and the words "F. Gookin" on a brooch, which he had sworn was in his possession as another family relic for years. Upon this a dramatic scene occurred. The plaintiff admitted that this was true, and Sir F. Thesiger sat down deeply moved. The court was hushed in silence. Sir F. Thesiger then rose again, and said he should not spare his feelings longer. Sir F. Thesiger: You said yesterday, that for eighteen months during the years 1818 and 1819 you were in the house of Dr. Williams, in Parliament-street, suffering from illness? Plaintiff: I did not say Dr. Williams. Sir F. Thesiger: Now, were you not during those eighteen months in Ilchester Gaol, under a conviction for horse-stealing? Plaintiff: No, I was not. Sir F. Thesiger: Were you not sentenced to death, under the name of Thomas Provis, for stealing a gelding, the goods and chattels of George Hadden? and was not your sentence commuted to eighteen months' imprisonment, in consideration of your youth? Plaintiff: It was not I; it must be some other person. Sir F. Thesiger: Have you got the marks of the evil on your neck, and also on your right hand? The witness hesitated, but at last bared his neck and hand: and there the marks were apparent. Those on the right hand were the marks he alleged to have been inflicted in childbirth, and which he represented in a deed as the indelible marks of identity of the Smyth family. Sir F. Thesiger: You mentioned in one of your letters that you were at Colonel Hadden's on a visit? Plaintiff: I do not remember the name. Sir F. Thesiger: Was his name George Hadden? Plaintiff: I do not know. Here Sir F. Thesiger drew attention to the fact that the motto on the deed of 1823 was "Qui capit capitur." The cross-examination was continued for a short time longer; when the judge spoke to the plaintiff's counsel, Mr. Bovill; and that gentleman, rising, said that after so appalling an exhibition he and his brethren would not continue the contest any longer. The plaintiff was then removed to Gloucester Gaol. He was tried on the 1st April ensuing, on charges of forgery and perjury, and sentenced to twenty-one years' transportation.

8.—Grand naval review at Spithead. Some idea of this demonstration may be formed from an enumeration of the aggregate of guns, horse-power, and tonnage in the fleet, and from the number of men employed for the full complement of each ship. There was an engine power of 9,780 horses (nominally, but in reality double that amount); 44,146 tons of shipping; and ships' companies that should altogether have amounted to 10,825 hands, although the actual number fell short of that by 1,000. The fleet comprised twenty-five ships of war, thirteen of which were screw-steamers, nine paddle-wheel, and three sailing ships of the line. There were no less than 1,087 guns, the smallest being 32-pounders, and the largest throwing 84-pound shells; but the 68-pounders were the chief features of the armament. At forty-five minutes past ten the Victoria and Albert entered between the leeward ships of the fleet, passing first the Vesuvius and Terrible, and then proceeding straight down the line towards the Duke of Wellington at the weather extremity. As the royal yacht passed up the line, she was followed by the Vivid and Elfin; by the Fairy, with the members of the Prussian royal family on board; by the Banshee, with General Simpson, Governor of Portsmouth, and several other distinguished officers; by the Black Eagle, Bulldog, and Hecla, laden with the Lords of the Admiralty and their friends; by the Stromboli and Gorgon, bearing on their decks both Houses of Parliament; by the Lizard, Fly, and several other vessels, carrying pendants and freighted with persons who had been provided with tickets for the day. Nearly every yacht-club was represented, from the clipper schooner of 200 tons down to the Thames cutter of 10, clothed in their snow-white canvas, big jibs and gaff-topsails set. The dusky forms of numerous steamers, struggling under the enormous loads of living creatures who swarmed from stem to stern, on paddle-box, deck, rigging, and yards, contrasted with the livelier lines of the sailing vessels, and relieved their monotony. Her Majesty was greeted in the most enthusiastic manner by the passengers in the steamers which happened to be near enough to see her. After the Queen and suite had inspected the Duke of Wellington, the signal was given to weigh, and her Majesty led the fleet out to sea, the royal yacht occupying a central position between the Duke on the starboard and the Agamemnon on the port side, but slightly in advance of both. A few miles below the Mole the signal was given to form line abreast, which the ships did at cable length from each other, the line from end to end extending a distance of three miles. At 2.40 the signal was given "to chase," and later in the afternoon the exciting series of manœuvres culminated in an engagement between the most powerful vessels of the fleet. An Admiralty order was issued next day expressing her Majesty's high approval of the exemplary conduct exhibited on the occasion by admirals, captains, officers, and men. "The Queen received also with peculiar pleasure the hearty proofs of goodwill and attachment to her person and family which mingled grateful feelings with proud recollections, and added happiness to conscious strength, in witnessing the evolutions of such a fleet ready to defend the power of the Crown and the independence of the nation."

8.—Hans Smith Macfarlane and Helen Blackwood executed at Glasgow, for their share in the murder of a ship-carpenter named Boyd, whom they threw out of the window of a brothel, when in a state of helpless intoxication.

—The head waiter of the George inn, at Portsmouth, shot in the lobby of that house by the accidental explosion of a fowling-piece which Mr. Powell, of Chichester, had taken with him to the review and neglected to discharge or uncap before packing up.

12.—After a litigation of thirteen years, the House of Lords decided against the validity of the Braintree Church-rate.

15.—Accident at the Crystal Palace, Sydenham. While seventeen workmen were engaged on the scaffolding at the north end of the middle transept, constructing "trusses" for the erection of the iron ribs, the platform suddenly gave way, and the whole of the men fell to the floor of the building, a distance of 102 feet. Ten of them were taken up dead, and two more died after removal to Guy's Hospital. The other five sustained severe injuries.

16.—Lord John Russell, in concluding his promised explanation relative to the Eastern negotiations, said he thought, from the acceptance of the Vienna note by Russia, there was now a fair prospect of securing the objects in view without involving Europe in hostilities or exposing the independence and integrity of Turkey.

17.—Robbery at Middleton Hall, Derbyshire, the seat of Lord Denman. A box containing the freedom of the City of London, three gold coronation medals, and two or three articles of silver plate was carried off. The crime was traced to a man named Simpson, who offered a piece of the stolen silver plate for sale at York, and who appeared to have obtained access to the house through the culpable conduct of the under-butler.

18.—Lieutenant Bellot, of the French navy, drowned at Cape Grinnel, Wellington Channel, while aiding in the search for Sir John Franklin by carrying the Admiralty despatches to Sir Edward Belcher.

19.—The House of Lords reverse the decision of the judges in the Bridgewater Will case. When the late Earl died, in 1823, it was found that he had devised a great portion of his vast property to Lord Alford, son of Earl Brownlow, with remainder in succession to the Egertons of Tatton, Milton, and Malpas, in Cheshire, and their heirs male; but he annexed to the possession of the estates the strange condition, that the possessor under the will should obtain the marquise or dukedom of Bridgewater within five years, or that the property should pass to the next heir. Lord Alford became possessed of the property, and assumed the name of Egerton, in 1849, on the death of the Countess of Bridgewater; but he died in 1851 without having fulfilled the condition of the will; and his son filed a bill in Chancery against the trustees, praying that he might be declared equitable tenant in tail-mail in possession. To this Mr. Charles Henry Egerton, brother of the late Lord Alford, demurred; and Lord Cranworth decided, that, as the late Lord Alford had not attained to the dignity of Marquis or Duke of Bridgewater, the estates passed to Mr. Charles Henry Egerton. Against this decree the son of the late Lord Alford, John William Spencer Brownlow Egerton, appealed to the House of Lords. The general arguments for the appellant were, that the condition was a subsequent condition and therefore illegal; that it was against public policy thus to tie up the estates and embarrass the Crown; that Lord Alford could not comply with the proviso, for he could not make himself Marquis or Duke of Bridgewater, and that therefore the condition could not be performed. Counsel having been heard, the Lord Chancellor, on the 30th ult., submitted several questions to the judges for their opinion. Certain of the judges affirmed the decision of the courts below, but Lords Lyndhurst, Brougham, Truro, and St. Leonard's took an opposite view, and the Lord Chancellor therefore now pronounced judgment reversing the decree.

19.—The Porte declines to accept the Vienna note without certain alterations, to which Russia will not consent.

20.—Parliament prorogued by Commission. Lord Palmerston expressed the belief of the Government that Parliament might be prorogued without anxiety. With reference to the evacuation of the Danubian Principalities, the Emperor of Russia (he was confident) would take the earliest opportunity of the settlement of the difference with Turkey, to evacuate the territory of his own accord. The Royal Speech referred to the Eastern difficulty in these words:—"It is with deep interest and concern that her Majesty has viewed the serious misunderstanding which has recently arisen between Russia and the Ottoman Porte. The Emperor of the French has united with her Majesty in earnest endeavours to reconcile differences the continuance of which might involve Europe in war. Acting in concert with the Allies, and relying on the exertions of the Conference now assembled at Vienna, her Majesty has good reason to hope that an honourable arrangement will speedily be accomplished."

22.—Private O'Neill, of the 12th Foot, shoots Corporal Brown in Belfast barracks for threatening to report him for misconduct. When seized in the barrack-yard, O'Neill admitted firing the shot, and expressed himself as highly satisfied with the result.

24.—Joseph Mobbs, of the Minorities, known as "General Haynau," from his systematic course of brutality towards his wife, completed his career of cruelty early this morning by cutting her throat. He afterwards attempted to commit suicide, but failing in the attempt was tried for the offence, and executed 21st November.

29.—The Queen and Prince Albert, with the Prince of Wales and Prince Alfred, visit Dublin, and inspect the Exhibition of Irish Industry there. Mr. Dargan was presented, and kissed hands.

—Died at Oaklands, near Portsmouth, Sir Charles James Napier, the conqueror of Scinde, aged 71.

31.—Bread riot at Liège, leading to the suspension of the Corn-laws.

September 4.—The cholera broke out with great severity at Newcastle. It appeared in London on the 11th, in the same quarter where the disastrous outbreak of 1849 took place.

8.—Fall of a house in the Strand, adjoining Arundel-street, causing the death of the occupant, Mr. Thompson, tailor, his wife, and foreman. The coroner's jury found that the accident was owing to the gross negligence of Mr. Abraham, surveyor to the Duke of Norfolk, in not causing the party wall to be sufficiently shored up and underpinned before the excavations for certain new buildings adjoining were commenced. When put on his trial, the judge interrupted the statement of counsel for the Crown, by saying that it was clear the indictment could not be sustained, as the law of manslaughter had not been understood by the jury.

10.—Fire at the ship-building yard of F. Scott Russell & Co., Millwall, destroying property valued at 100,000*l.* The fire was discovered almost simultaneously by a policeman on duty in the neighbourhood and by the watchman employed on the premises. It was at first thought the flames could be confined to the building in which they broke out, but the combustible nature of the stock afforded such ready and abundant fuel that the fire spread in all directions, igniting in succession the erecting shops and the long range of workshops used by the carpenters and painters.

—A body of thirty-five students belonging to the "Ülemah" present a petition to the Supreme Council of the Sultan, enjoining war on the enemies of Islam, under threats of great disturbance throughout the empire.

11.—The Vienna Gazette announces the discovery of the crown of St. Stephen, and other regalia of Hungary, at Orsova, where they had been buried in 1849 by the Hungarian insurgents. They were now presented to the Emperor of Austria.

17.—Explosion of a powder-magazine at Gibraltar used by the 30th regiment. Of the six men employed in the magazine at the time, five were killed, and the other dangerously injured.

23.—During an interview with Lord Aberdeen and Lord Clarendon, Count Walewski, after speaking of the crisis at Constantinople, which M. de La Cour's despatch had led the French Government to expect, said that his Government thought it "indispensably necessary that both fleets should be ordered up to Constantinople," and added that "he was directed to ask for the immediate decision of her Majesty's Government, in order that no time might be lost in sending instructions to the ambassadors and admirals." Lord Clarendon, while admitting that no intelligence of the nature referred to by M. de La Cour had been received from Lord Stratford de Redcliffe, intimated that they would without hesitation take upon themselves to agree to the proposals of the French Government. On the same day Lord Stratford was instructed to bring the British fleet to Constantinople.

24.—Interview between the Emperors of Russia and Austria at Olmütz.

27.—Inquiry commenced at the Thames Police-court into the mutinous occurrences on board the Queen of the Teign, between Singapore and the west coast of Africa, resulting in the death of five of the mutinous Lascars. The master, two seamen, and two Lascars were sent over in custody by the Governor of Gibraltar on a charge of murder; but full inquiry showed they had only acted in self-defence, and two of the Lascar witnesses, Ahalt and Ali, were committed for trial. At the Central Criminal Court the jury ignored the bill against the master and seamen, but sent the two above-named to trial. They were found guilty, and sentenced to fifteen years' transportation.

28.—The damage at sea caused by the equinoxial gales was unusually great this season. The most serious casualty occurred off the coast of Barra, one of the Western Islands, where the Anna Jane, of Liverpool, was driven ashore with about 500 emigrants on board. The masts went overboard in succession, and soon afterwards the ship broke up, the deck between the main and mizen-mast being crushed down upon the berths below, occupied by terror-stricken women and sleeping children. The poop and fore-castle drifted ashore, and on these were all who survived the wreck, 102 in number. At day-break next morning the shore was lined with corpses, and over 250 were gathered together and buried in pits.

October 1.—Two burglars effect an entrance into the shop of D. C. Rait, jeweller, Glasgow, by raising the hearth-stone of one of the rooms above, and collect about 2,000*l.* worth of plunder. An alarm being raised by the private watchman of the court, the robbers attempted to escape, leaving their bag of plunder on the stairs of the warehouse. One was captured, the other got off.

2.—Died M. Arago, French astronomer, aged 67.

3.—The floor of one of the rooms of the Corporation Arms public-house, Preston, gives way under a crowd of work-people, collected to receive their weekly "strike" money. One girl was taken out dead, and 40 or 50 others, mostly females, suffered severe fractures.

4.—Fire at Lee Mill, Halifax, and destruction of buildings and machinery affording employment to 1,000 people.

5.—Serious calamity near the Straffan station of the Great Southern and Western Railway of Ireland. A slight accident occurring to the express train which left Cork at 12 noon, the guard and stoker were sent down the line to exhibit the danger signals, and warn the driver of a goods train known to be behind. The signals being either unseen or unheeded, it came up full speed against the express, smashing the last carriages to fragments, and inflicting serious injuries on the occupants. Thirteen passengers were killed on the spot, three died after long suffering, and many were maimed for life. The coroner's jury returned a verdict of manslaughter against the driver and stoker of the goods train.

— The Porte issues a declaration making the further continuance of peace dependent upon the evacuation of the Principalities within fifteen days. The Russian general replied that he had no orders to commence hostilities, nor to conclude peace, nor to evacuate the Principalities.

7.—Interview between the Emperor of Russia and the King of Prussia, at Potsdam.

14.—The combined fleets of England and France, which had for some time been lying in Besika Bay, passed up the Straits at the request of the Sultan. The Turkish Government addressed a note to the representatives of Austria and Prussia, explaining and justifying the step.

18.—The ship Dalhousie, one of the White Horse line of Australian passenger ships, founders in the Channel off Beachy Head, and goes down with the whole of her crew and passengers, sixty-three or four in number. Only one seaman escaped to tell the story of the disaster. On coming to the surface he placed himself on one of the "chocks" of the long-boat, and managed to float about till he was rescued by a brig, and taken to Dover. It was supposed that this calamity, which occasioned a great sensation at Lloyd's, originated in the starting of a "butt," or that the vessel struck upon a wreck or spar floating in the Channel. The afternoon was stormy, but not so severe as to excite fears for the safety of the ship.

19.—Lord Palmerston advises the Presbytery of Edinburgh on the subject of cholera:—"It does not appear to Lord Palmerston that a national fast would be suitable to the circumstances of the present moment. The Maker of the universe established certain laws of nature for the planet in which we live; and the weal or woe of mankind depends upon the observance or neglect of those laws. One of those laws connects health with the absence of those gaseous exhalations which proceed from overcrowded human beings, or from decomposing substances, whether animal or vegetable; and those same laws render sickness the almost inevitable consequence of exposure to those noxious influences. But it has pleased Providence to place it within the power of man to make such arrangements as will prevent, or disperse, such exhalations, so as to render them harmless; and it is the duty of man to attend to those laws of nature, and to exert the faculties which Providence has thus given to man for his own welfare. Lord Palmerston would, therefore, suggest, that the best course which the people of this country can pursue to deserve that the further progress of the cholera should be stayed, will be to employ the interval that will elapse between the present time and the beginning of next spring in planning and executing measures by which those portions of their towns and cities which are inhabited by the poorer classes, and which, from the nature of things, must most need purification and improvement, may be freed from those causes and sources of contagion which, if allowed to remain, will infallibly breed pestilence, and be fruitful in death, in spite of all the prayers and fastings of an united but inactive nation. When man has done his utmost for his own safety, then is the time to invoke the blessing of Heaven to give effect to his exertions."

20.—A wagon filled with forty people, many of them children engaged in hop-picking, upset in passing over a small bridge near Tunbridge. The stream being unusually swollen, about thirty were swept down the current and drowned. The survivors managed to cling to the wagon or sides of the bridge till assistance reached them.

24.—Previous to her departure for Australia, Mrs. Chisholm delivers a farewell address to a company of emigrants and their friends, in Spitalfields. A resolution was carried expressive of gratitude for her exertions on their behalf.

27.—Dismissal of the Rev. F. D. Maurice from his professorships in King's College. At the first meeting of the Council after the long vacation, Principal Jelf laid before that body, in his official capacity, a correspondence (privately printed) which had taken place during the three preceding months between Mr. Maurice and himself, on the subject of certain statements made by the Professor in the concluding paper of his lately-published work, "Theological Essays." These statements had reference to the eternity of the future punishment of the wicked. At the same meeting of the Council Mr. Maurice put in a printed "Answer to the Principal's Final Letter." With these documents in their hands, the Council adjourned till to-day, when, at a special meeting summoned for the purpose, they entered fully into the consideration of the whole matter, and came to the resolution that the opinions set forth, and the doubts expressed in the Essay laid before them, were of dangerous tendency, and calculated to unsettle the minds of theological students; and that the continuance of Mr. Maurice's connexion with the College would be seriously detrimental to its usefulness. As the Principal had advised Mr. Maurice to be present at the opening of the term to commence his usual courses, the Professor forwarded a remonstrance to the Council on the 7th Nov., calling upon them to state what article of faith condemned his teaching. "I cannot, my lords and gentlemen, believe that, great as are the privileges which the Right Rev. Bench has conceded to the Principal of King's College, their lordships the bishops ever intended to give him an authority superior to their own, superior to that of the Articles by which they are bound; I cannot think that they wish to constitute him and the Council arbiters of the theology of the English Church. Such a claim would be as alarming, I apprehend, to the public as to our ecclesiastical rulers. If some parents have been suspicious of the influence which I might exercise over their sons, I believe that there are few parents in England who will not complain that the College has departed from its original principle when it gives such a scope to the private judgment of its chief officer, or even to the judgment of the body which manages its affairs. . . . If I have violated any law of the Church, that law can be at once pointed out; the nature of the transgression can be defined, without any reference to possible tendencies and results. It is this justice, and not any personal favour, my lords and gentlemen, which I now request at your hands."—After reading this letter, the Council decided that they did not think it necessary to enter further into the subject, and declared the two chairs held by Mr. Maurice in the College to be vacant.

28.—Riots at Wigan, originating in disputes between the masters and the factory workmen and colliers, about 9,000 of whom were out on strike for increase of wages. They attacked the Royal Hotel, where the masters had held their meetings, and attempted to burn the houses of parties who had rendered themselves obnoxious to the mob. They were driven from the streets, late in the afternoon, by a detachment of the 34th Foot which arrived by train. The rioters next day attempted to destroy the saw-mills at Haig, but were driven back by the work-people and police who garrisoned the building.

28.—Died Lord Cloncurry, aged 81.

29.—At the Central Criminal Court, the Rev. Wade Meara pleaded guilty to printing and publishing false and scandalous libels against the Hon. Craven Fitzhardinge Berkeley and others. A written apology was read in court, and Meara bound over in his own recognisances to appear for judgment when called on.

November 1.—Moses Hatto, groom, murderer Mary Ann Sturgeon, housekeeper to Mr. Goodwin, of the Burnham Abbey farm, near Windsor. In the absence of his master, and in a fit of passionate revenge (as he afterwards described it), the murderer entered the house-keeper's room, and there attacked her with the lard-beater; he afterwards followed the poor woman to her bed-room, where he finished his murderous work with a poker. To hide his crime Hatto set fire to the body, by surrounding it with inflammable material; and, but for the arrival of his master, all trace of guilt might thus have been lost. As it was, the body was consumed above the waist, and the under part considerably scorched. From the murderer exhibiting unusual cunning in destroying the most prominent traces of his connexion with the crime, the evidence produced against Hatto was purely circumstantial. The jury returned a verdict of Guilty, and he was ordered for execution. He confessed his guilt the same night.

— The Dublin Exhibition closed in the presence of 20,000 people. The Lord-Lieutenant said he could not declare the Exhibition closed without expressing an earnest wish for the health, happiness, and prosperity of the man to whom they were all indebted for the instruction they had received from the many productions of art and nature contained within the walls. On the following day a grand dinner was given to Mr. Dargan at the Mansion House.

— The Emperor of Russia declares war against Turkey. "By our manifesto of the 26th of June of the present year we made known to our faithful and dearly-beloved subjects the motives which had placed us under the obligation of demanding from the Ottoman Porte inviolable guarantees in favour of the sacred rights of the Orthodox Church. We also announced to them that all our efforts to recall the Porte, by means of amicable persuasion, to sentiments of equity and to the faithful observance of treaties, had remained unfruitful, and that we had consequently deemed it indispensable to cause our troops to advance into the Danubian Principalities; but in taking this step we still entertained the hope that the Porte would acknowledge its wrong-doings, and would decide on acceding to our just demands. Our expectation has been deceived. Even the chief Powers of Europe have in vain sought by their exhortations to shake the blind obstinacy of the Ottoman Government. It is by a declaration of war, by a proclamation filled with lying accusations against Russia, that it has responded to the pacific efforts of Europe, as well as to our spirit of long-suffering. At last, enrolling in the ranks of its army revolutionary exiles from all countries, the Porte has just commenced hostilities on the Danube. Russia is challenged to the combat, and she has no other course left her than, putting her trust in God, to have recourse to force of arms, and so to compel the Ottoman Government to respect treaties, and obtain reparation for the insults with which it has responded to our most moderate demands, and to our most legitimate solicitude for the defence of the orthodox faith in the East, professed also by the people of Russia. We are firmly convinced that our faithful subjects will join their prayers to those which we address to the Almighty, beseeching Him to bless with His hand our arms in this just and holy cause, which has always found ardent defenders in our ancestors. In te, Domine, speravi; non confundar in aeternum. NICHOLAS."

1.—The English Archbishops issue a declaration designed to protect Bishop Gobat of Jerusalem from the attacks now being made upon him by a section of the Church for proselytizing, and expressing sympathy with him in the difficulties by which he was surrounded.

2.—Formation of an Association for the Vindication of Scottish Rights, under the presidency of the Earl of Eglinton.

— Disastrous floods in Cork; St. Patrick's Bridge, over the Lee, being swept away with all the people on it at the moment.

4.—The American barque Victoria, 600 tons burthen, loaded partly with iron and partly with box and bale goods, destroyed by fire, in the Clyde, opposite Whitinch. The flames spread rapidly over the vessel; and as she was run aground, all attempts to extinguish the flames by scuttling were useless. The cargo was totally destroyed, and the hull burnt down to the water's edge.

— First encounter between the Russians and Turkish forces at Oltenitza. "The engagement," writes Omer Pasha, "lasted four hours from noon and during this interval their wagons never ceased carrying off the dead. At 5 P.M. a total confusion ensued in the Russian ranks; their lines were completely broken and their retreat precipitate. An hour later some few rallied in the neighbouring villages, but the remainder fled in disorder. Our loss amounted to 106 men."

7.—Commenced before the Court of Assizes, in Paris, the trial of thirty-three persons accused of plotting to assassinate the Emperor

Napoleon. The trial terminated on the 15th, when ten of the conspirators were condemned to transportation for life, and the rest to terms of imprisonment varying from three to ten years.

9.—At the Lord Mayor's Show, an allegorical procession representing Justice, the Nations, and Prosperity, excited great interest in passing along the streets.

13.—The Turks blow up the works at Oltenitza, and retire across the Danube to Kalafat, where they kept the Russians in check for some time.

18.—Lorenzo Beha, a German Jew silversmith, residing in Norwich, murdered and robbed between Wellingham and Tittleshall, West Norfolk. The body was found lying by the side of a ditch, on Tittleshall common, the head nearly cut off, and four deep wounds across the face. Suspicion pointing to a labourer named Thompson, he was at once apprehended, and on searching his house most of the stolen property was discovered. On his trial at the spring assizes he was found guilty, and confessed the crime previous to execution.

22.—Dense fog in the metropolis. On the streets and river the utmost confusion prevailed, and in the neighbourhood of railway stations a complete block existed for hours. In the shops there was an entire cessation of business.

25.—Abel Burrows, a fanatical Methodist, mad with drink, murders an old woman in the village of Reach, near Leighton Buzzard, to give effect to what he called his religious enthusiasm. The capital sentence was commuted to penal servitude for life.

28.—Collision between the Marshall, screw steam ship trading between Hamburg and Hull, and the Swedish barque Woodhouse, near the Newsand Float. The steamer sank, it was supposed, almost immediately, but there was no survivor left to tell the story of her disaster. She had on board 150 emigrants, a crew of 18, and a miscellaneous cargo. The captain of the Woodhouse deposed that the steamer struck his vessel twice, and then passed on without answering any of his remonstrances. The night was extremely dark, and the breeze fresh from the south-west. The mast-heads of the Marshall were seen at low water about five miles from the Float.

30.—Dr. Colenso consecrated Bishop of Natal in the church of St. Mary, Lambeth, by the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of London, and the Bishop of Lincoln. Dr. Armstrong was at the same time consecrated Bishop of the other new see of Grahamstown. The Bishop of Oxford preached a sermon on the occasion ("Separate me Barnabas and Saul"), to which after-occurrences gave much significance. "Yes, beloved brethren in the Lord," said the Bishop, "it is to such a strife and into such dangers that you go, and to which we dare to send you. And how could you or we venture on such works, unless the Holy Ghost had said, 'Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them;' unless your office were of God's appointment; unless you were certain of Christ's presence with you in fulfilling it; of His perpetual sympathy; of the strength and love which He pours on those who serve under His cross; of the repeated cleansing of your soul from sins of commission and neglect through His most precious blood; unless your service were indeed the upholding and perpetuation of His own personal ministry; unless it were indeed full of the power of God the Holy Ghost; unless those words which we shall use over you to-day meant in very deed all, and more than all, which their mysterious fulness utters, 'Receive the Holy Ghost for the office and work of a Bishop in the Church of God, now committed unto thee by the imposition of our hands, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.' Yes, beloved brethren, here is might enough to turn into strength all your uttermost weakness. Here is that undying certainty of power and love to which we dare to trust you, whilst we add you as new links to the ever-lengthening chain of Christ's anointed witnesses." In December 1862 the Bishop of Oxford, and nearly every other Bishop of the Church, prohibited this most recent link in the chain of anointed witnessess from preaching in any pulpit within their dioceses.

30.—Destruction of the Turkish fleet in the harbour of Sinope. About noon the Russian squadron, composed of six sail of the line, two sailing frigates, and three steamers, entered the bay. The line-of-battle ships anchored near the Turkish vessels, and immediately lowered and armed their boats. At half-past one o'clock, at the moment when a boat was pushed off from the Russian admiral's ship, the frigate of the Turkish admiral opened fire. The Russian vessel recalled her boat, and the action commenced. In half an hour one Turkish frigate was blown up, an hour after two others met the same fate, and within two hours and a half all the squadron was disabled, with the exception of one frigate which managed to elude the pursuit of the Russian ships, and carried the news of the disaster to Constantinople. A large portion of the town was also fired. The Turks were reported to have lost 4,000 men. When the Emperor received news of the engagement, he addressed a letter to Prince Menschikoff, requesting him, on behalf of the honour and glory of Russia, to thank his brave seamen for the success of the Russian flag. The feeling which this outrage excited in Western Europe was given expression to by Lord Clarendon, in a despatch to the British Minister at St. Petersburg. "It would," he writes, "have been a matter of sincere satisfaction to her Majesty's Government, that the combined fleets should have remained at anchor in the Bosphorus, while negotiations were pending. But this has been rendered impossible by the attack on the Turkish squadron at Sinope. The intentions of the English and French Governments, which were long since announced to the Porte, must be firmly and faithfully executed. For this purpose, although with no hostile designs against Russia, it is essential that the combined fleets should have the command of the Black Sea; and the necessary instructions have accordingly been addressed to the Ambassadors and Admirals of England and France." The Russian fleet, thereafter, withdrew within the defences of Sebastopol.

December 1.—Suffocation of the Sadler family, three in number, at Elesecar village, near Rotherham. From an examination of the room in which the bodies were found, Mr. Haywood, chemist, gave it as his opinion that they had all died from inhaling the vapours of cyanide of potassium, proceeding from the adjoining stack of the blast furnace used in Elesecar Iron-works.

3.—In the suit brought by the York and North Midland Railway Company against George Hudson for 54,000*l.*, the Master of the Rolls gives judgment in favour of the Company.

7.—Inauguration of the statue of Marshal Ney, erected on the spot where he was executed, in the Avenue of the Observatory, Paris.

10.—Great fires in New York. Through the carelessness of one of the workmen, the premises of Harper Brothers, publishers, were totally consumed, and about 3,000 work-people thrown out of employment. Ten days afterwards a fire in Front-street spread to the shipping in the East River, and destroyed among others the Great Republic, valued at 300,000 dollars.

11.—The Governors of the Charterhouse decline acceding to the prayer of the Poor Brethren of the Institution for an increase to the pension of 25*l.* allotted to them under the foundation of Thomas Sutton.

12.—General Santa Anna assumes dictatorial power, and the title of Most Serene Highness, with the consent of the Mexicans.

13.—Issue of the Charter for the new Wellington College. It recited that upwards of 100,000*l.* had been subscribed to found a college for the education of the children of deceased military officers who have borne commissions in the Royal Army or in the East India Company's service. The governors were empowered to hold property as a corporation to the annual value of 15,000*l.*, and to manage all matters appertaining or incidental to the government of the College. The Queen to be Visitor. Rev. E. W. Benson first head master.

16.—The Times and Chronicle make the unexpected announcement that Lord Palmerston had resigned his office of Secretary of State for the Home Department, the cause assigned being his opposition to the contemplated Reform Bill of the Government. Rumours of other resignations were so frequent at this time as to lead to the belief that the Cabinet was falling to pieces. Lord Palmerston was afterwards induced to resume the duties of his office.

20.—John Charles Topner tried before the Royal Court, Guernsey, for the barbarous murder of the widow Saujon, who resided by herself in a cottage in the Relte Road. After Topner had overpowered his victim, but to all appearance long before she was dead, he set fire to her clothes, and then seized what plunder he could conveniently take away. When found, the body was in a great measure consumed, but sufficient remained to furnish evidence of the most frightful protracted suffering. The prisoner was found guilty, and executed on the 10th February.

23.—The Royal Paper Mills at Esher destroyed by fire. The flames were first discovered in the rag warehouse, and, as they were then raging with terrific fury, they soon extended to the different ranges of building used as the engine and heating houses, the hydraulic press houses, the weighing department, and the finishing house, where eight steam-engines were employed. Nothing was saved.

24.—Wreck of the American steamship San Francisco, on her voyage with troops from New York to California. The number on board was between 750 and 800; of these above 200 were swept overboard during the storm, and another 100 were carried off by an epidemic which broke out among the survivors during the seven days they kept by the sinking ship. They were discovered still afloat by the British barque The Three Bells, on the 31st, and taken off by her and The Antarctic, which came up two days later. In the same storm the Liverpool emigrant ship Staffordshire was lost on the coast of Newfoundland. Of 221 on board only 45 men and one woman were saved.

28.—During a gale in the Irish Channel, the steamer Eva, of Glasgow, breaks in two. Of seventeen persons on board six were saved by the crew of a fishing trawl and taken to Kingston. The Eva had been built for light river traffic, and at the time of the disaster was setting out on a voyage to Australia, rigged as a sailing vessel.

31.—Fire in the City, destroying various warehouses in Bread-street, Friday-street, Watling-street, and Cheapside. By great exertions, and with an abundant supply of water, the firemen were able to keep down a conflagration which at one time threatened the entire centre of the City.

— Professor Owen and other eminent men of science entertained at dinner in the model of the Iguanodon, in the grounds of the Crystal Palace, Sydenham.

— Reschid Pasha, on behalf of the Sultan, accepts a new note prepared by the four great Powers, and desires that a definite answer be sent from St. Petersburg within forty days. On the 13th January the Plenipotentiaries in Vienna approve of Reschid Pasha's answer, and forward the note to St. Petersburg. On the 28th of the same month, Count Orloff arrived at the Austrian capital with the answer of Russia refusing the new note, and bearing certain counter-proposals as the basis for negotiation. At their meeting on the 2d February, the Plenipotentiaries declared these terms inadmissible, and such as ought not to be transmitted to the Government of the Sultan.

January 1.—The Cathedral of the "Holy Catholic Apostolic Church," Gordon-square, opened for worship.

3.—Severe snow-storm accompanied by intense cold. In London the thermometer indicated eight degrees below zero. The North-Western line was blocked up at the Tring cutting, and a mail-train lay embedded there for five hours. The Great Northern was blocked up on both rails at Grantham, and traffic between Peterborough and Newark became impossible by either road or rail. In consequence of the blocking-up of the Thames coals rose to an enormous price, and the metropolis was threatened with total darkness, from the inability of the gas companies to procure a supply. On one of the days of the storm there were only three laden coal vessels in the river.

— Kelsall's woollen mills, at Rochdale, destroyed by fire, and three of the work-people killed in their attempt to escape from the fourth storey of the building. Ten or twelve others who threw themselves out were much injured, and conveyed to the hospital.

4.—Disastrous gale on the north-east coast. At Sunderland 25 vessels were wrecked on the shore, and at Shields 17. In the course of the month there were recorded at Lloyds 300 wrecks, in which 700 people perished.

9.—Bread riots at Exeter, caused by the advance of the 4lb. loaf to 9d. The shops were broken into, and the food as usual stolen or destroyed by the mob. Similar disturbances took place at Tiverton, Taunton, and Bideford.

13.—Sir R. H. Inglis resigns his seat for the University of Oxford, which he had represented in nine successive Parliaments, on the score of ill-health, as mentioned in a letter to the Vice-Chancellor.

18.—Fall of a portion of the old Excise-office in Broad-street, killing two men and injuring four others.

21.—Wreck of the emigrant ship Taylor on Lambay Island, a few miles north of Howth. She left the Mersey at noon on Thursday the 19th, with fair weather; but it soon came on to blow, making it necessary to close-reef topsails. This was effected with difficulty, owing to the stiffness of the rigging and the insufficiency of the crew, many of the latter being foreigners scarcely able to understand orders. They were six hours taking in two reefs. During all this time the vessel was drifting to leeward in a narrow sea. All Friday the wind blew a gale, and the ship was repeatedly put about. She was described to have been very fast, but, owing to some defect of construction or management, she was slow in "going round" and drifted some five miles to leeward each time. She also seemed to lose her speed as soon as she was overpressed with sail. Another defect was now discovered—all the compasses, disturbed by the iron hull and fittings, differed some points from each other, and others would not work at all. Under these circumstances, with a slight haze, and owing to the numerous tacks and shifts of wind, the captain lost all knowledge of his position till 4 A.M. on Saturday, when the Skerries light was sighted, and the ship was found to be at about the same spot at which the pilot quitted her on Thursday evening. The wind continued to blow hard and shifted to the S.S.W., when suddenly the haze lifted, and land was seen. The ship was instantly put about, but refused to act, and drifted rapidly towards the shore. Two anchors were then dropped, but the chain-cables snapped, and the ship struck on the rocks. The greatest confusion prevailed among the passengers, many attempting to jump on to the rocks, but perishing in the sea. Spars and ropes were extended from the ship to the shore, and by this means a large portion of the male passengers saved themselves; but of more than 100 women three only were rescued. The ship continued to roll heavily against the rocks for a little time, when a sea broke over her carrying everything before it, and she went down stern foremost. Of 528 persons, 290 were drowned.

26.—Commencement of the Croker-Russell correspondence regarding Moore's Diary. As illustrative of a passage in the sixth volume, where Barnes of the Times requested Moore to spare Croker in anything he might write, Lord John Russell added a note:—"To Moore it was unnecessary to address a request to spare a friend. If the request had been addressed to the other party, asking him to spare Moore, what would have been the result? Probably while Moore was alive, and able to wield his pen, it might have been successful. Had Moore been dead, it would have served only to give additional zest to the pleasure of safe malignity." Mr. Croker now writes to Lord John Russell:—"I do not feel myself called upon to examine the conjectural estimate that your lordship makes of 'the zest and pleasure' of 'safe malignity.' It has been, no doubt, formed on the best data a man can have for his opinions—the feelings of his own mind. 'Those can best paint them who have felt them most;' and when it is recollected that the person to whom you have thus hypothetically attributed the results of your own personal experience is in his 74th year, and in a probably advanced stage of mortal disease, it will be, I think, generally admitted that your lordship is well entitled to lecture us on both the theory and practice of 'safe malignity.' Your lordship's opinion of me, or mine of you, is a matter on which I should not have thought it worth while to have said a word; but you have embodied with your personal impertinence a gross misrepresentation of a fact, which I wish to set right. In that passage your lordship thought fit to leave the name in blank; but with a spiteful slyness, which, I believe, is a main feature of your character, you give in the next page but one an unmistakable designation of the person meant. So that those who might not recognise me under the injurious character given in the first passage could have no doubt, from the incidental circumstances of the second, which identified me." Next day Lord John Russell answered:—"The note to which you refer in your letter of yesterday's date was written on the supposition that you are the author of an article on Moore in the Quarterly Review. I endeavoured, in publishing the 'Diary,' to omit passages offensive to individuals. I omitted some regarding you, which, though not bitter or malicious, might, I thought, give you pain. There was one in which he said he found you less clever and more vain than he expected, or had supposed. This I allowed to stand. As one of the public men of the day you are accustomed to write most severely of others. To escape all criticism on yourself seems an immunity hardly to be expected."—"I have not been guilty," replied Croker, "of any such absurdity. I believe that few men have had, during a long life, more incessant proof that I have no such convenient privilege. Such an idea I never uttered nor entertained. It would be not merely arrogance, but imbecility; and I trust this correspondence will convince your lordship I am not yet in my dotage." In closing his side of the correspondence, Lord John Russell used the words: "It would be useless for us to attempt to persuade one another."—"I had no motive," replied the critic, "and no intention to persuade your lordship to anything. I did not meddle with your opinion. I charged you with a gross and wilful offence against me: the public is now the judge whether I have proved my charge."

27.—Wreck of the Liverpool ship W. H. Davis, in the North Channel, and loss of twenty-three people, all on board with one exception. The ship had become unmanageable in the course of the recent westerly gales, and when attempting, during the night, to weather Barra Head, she went ashore on the rocks of Vatersay, within a short distance of the spot where the Anna Jane was lost in September last. The master and crew took to the rigging, but the ship was dashed to pieces in a few minutes after she struck, and they perished amid the falling wreck. The steward was the only person who escaped.

29.—The Emperor Napoleon writes to the Emperor of Russia:—"Your Majesty has given so many proofs of your solicitude for the tranquillity of Europe, and by your beneficent influence has so powerfully arrested the spirit of disorder, that I cannot doubt as to the course you will take in the alternative which presents itself to your choice. Should your Majesty be as desirous as myself of a pacific conclusion, what would be more simple than to declare that an armistice shall now be signed, that all hostilities shall cease, and that the belligerent forces shall retire from the places to which motives of war have led them? Thus the Russian troops would abandon the Principalities, and our squadrons the Black Sea. Your Majesty, preferring to treat directly with Turkey, might appoint an ambassador, who could negotiate with a plenipotentiary of the Sultan a convention, which might be submitted to a conference of the four Powers. Let your Majesty adopt this plan, upon which the Queen of England and myself are perfectly agreed, and tranquillity will be re-established and the world satisfied. There is nothing in the plan which is unworthy of your Majesty, nothing which can wound your honour; but if, from a motive difficult to understand, your Majesty should refuse this proposal, then France, as well as England, will be compelled to leave to the fate of arms, and the chances of war, that which might now be decided by reason and justice." The Emperor of Russia replied on the 9th of February:—"I have made, for the maintenance of peace, all the concessions, both of form and substance, compatible with my honour; and in claiming for my co-religionists in Turkey the confirmation of the rights and privileges which they have long acquired at the price of Russian blood, I claimed nothing which was not confirmed by treaties. If the Porte had been left to herself, the difference which has so long kept Europe in suspense would have been solved. A fatal influence has thrown everything into confusion. By provoking gratuitous suspicions, by exciting the fanaticism of the Turks, and by deceiving their Government as to my intentions and the real scope of my demands, it has so exaggerated the extent of the questions, that the probable result seems to be war. . . . My confidence is in God and in my right, and Russia, as I can guarantee, will prove herself in 1854 what she was in 1812. If, however, your Majesty, less indifferent to my honour, should frankly return to our programme—if you should proffer me a cordial hand, as I now offer it to you at this last moment—I will willingly forget whatever has wounded my feelings in the past. Then, Sire, but then only, we may discuss, and, perhaps, we may come to an understanding. Let your fleet limit itself to preventing the Turks from sending additional forces to the theatre of war. I willingly promise that they shall have nothing to fear from my attempts. Let them send a negotiator. I will receive him in a suitable manner. My conditions are known at Vienna. That is the only basis upon which I can allow discussion."

31.—Parliament opened by the Queen in person. "I have continued," said her Majesty, in reference to the Eastern difficulty, "to act in cordial co-operation with the Emperor of the French, and my endeavours, in conjunction with my allies, to preserve and to restore peace between the contending parties, although hitherto unsuccessful, have been unremitting. I will not fail to persevere in these endeavours; but as the continuance of the war may deeply affect the interests of this country and of Europe, I think it requisite to make a further augmentation of my naval and military forces, with the view of supporting my representations, and of more effectually contributing to the restoration of peace." In both Houses the debate on the Address had reference chiefly to the rupture between Russia and Turkey, and to the alleged undue influence exercised by Prince Albert in the conduct of the public business of the country. "It is intimated to us," said Lord Derby, "that a state of warfare has ensued from the failure of all our negotiations. A state of warfare with whom? Are we belligerents? Are we partisans? Are we carrying on war openly and boldly, or are we carrying on that which is tantamount to war, but a war carried on in a pettifogging manner, and, I might almost say, in a manner discreditable to this great country. . . . The policy of Russia for the last 150 years has been a policy of gradual aggression—not a policy of conquest, but of aggression. It has never proceeded by storm, but by sap and mine. The first process has been invariably that of fomenting discontent and dissatisfaction amongst the subjects of subordinate states—then proffering mediation—then offering assistance to the weaker party—then declaring the independence of that party—then placing that independence under the protection of Russia—and, finally, from protection proceeding to the incorporation, one by one, of those states into the gigantic body of the Russian empire. I say nothing of Poland, or of Livonia, but I speak of Mingrelia, Imeritia, and the countries of the Caspian, even as far as the boundary of the Araxas; and, again, the Crimea itself. Although she has pursued this steady course for 150 years, she has from time to time desisted from her schemes where she has found that they met with opposition, and has never carried any one of them into effect where she has been certain to meet the opposition of this country."—The Marquis of Clanricarde characterised the foreign policy of the Government as secret, vacillating, and unsuccessful.—The Earl of Clarendon defended the Government, which was warranted, he said, in protracting negotiations rather than commit the country to the terrible alternative of war. In the House of Commons, Lord John Russell triumphantly refuted the calumnies relating to the Prince Consort's interference in the foreign affairs of the country. The Address was agreed to in both Houses without a division.

February 1.—The Parliament buildings of Quebec again destroyed by fire.

3.—Mr. Cardwell obtains leave to bring in two bills for the further amendment of the Navigation-laws: one, to throw open the coasting trade to foreign vessels; the other to consolidate and amend those laws which, since the repeal of the Navigation Act, had been passed for the benefit of British shipping. The second bill (he said) would consolidate the law with respect to registry and measurement, abolish the registry ticket, and introduce the greatly-improved system of measurement known as Captain Moorsom's. It was proposed to appropriate a small sum from the Board of Trade funds for the purpose of organising the life-boats on the coast, so that more lives might be saved. Mr. Cardwell reported that the recent changes in the Navigation-laws had worked well; not realizing the apprehensions of overwhelming foreign competition. Wages were higher than ever, and freights higher. There were not enough British ships for the purposes of the coasting trade, while fleets of foreign ships entered the Tyne in ballast. Last year 190,000 seamen left the ports of the kingdom; and during the first three months of the operation of the new Manning Clause there were only 25,000 foreign seamen. Our shipping trade and commerce increased by 2,282,639*l.* in 1851, by 2,564,429*l.* in 1852. It was on such grounds that, after mature inquiry and deliberation, Ministers resolved to adopt the postponed measure permitting foreign vessels to engage in our coasting trade. The bill was carried through both Houses during the session.

4.—The survivors of the Bona Dea, from Savannah, picked off the wreck by the Cuba, of Sunderland. For eleven days they had suffered the most extreme agony from want of food and water, everything having been washed out of the vessel in the storm of 25th January. One of the survivors records: "February 1. The men again drew lots. One poor fellow, who appeared to be in a dying state, offered himself to save the rest. Mr. M'Leod interfered, and cheered them up with the prospect of being soon relieved.—February 2. The men now becoming unmanageable and determined to have the dying man sacrificed. The poor fellow had offered to do the deed himself, and cut his arms in two places to bleed to death, but no blood came. The men afterwards surrounded him, and one of them cut his throat. The scene that followed was too horrible to detail.—February 3. Many of the men frantically mad, and crawling about the deck in a shocking manner.—February 4. Mr. M'Leod and two men the only portion of the crew able to go about. The remainder were prostrate, and four quite deranged. All, in fact, were fast sinking, and could not possibly have survived another day, the immense quantity of salt water they drank increasing their sufferings to a frightful degree." About nine A.M. the Cuba was observed through the haze, and within an hour a boat was alongside to take them off.

6.—Lord John Russell announces in the House of Commons that the Russian ambassador intended to withdraw from the Court of St. James's.

7.—Mr. Butt obtains the appointment of a Select Committee to inquire into the charges of corruption made against the Irish members at a public dinner in Tuam. The Times having drawn attention to these charges, Mr. Mowbray Morris, the manager of the paper, was examined; but, though closely questioned, the Committee did not succeed in obtaining from him much valuable information. In answer to one question Mr. Morris said:—"With all respect to the Committee, I submit that the question here involved is the independence of the press. I think that the press of this country—there being no censorship established by law—is amenable to no authority whatever except that of the courts of law, and that not even a Committee of the House of Commons has a right to question the conductors of the paper as regards the opinions they have expressed; and that there is no tribunal except the courts of justice which can compel them to do so. I therefore think I should sacrifice the interests of the Times, and do a grievous injury to the press of this country, if I answered the question." Dr. Gifford, of the Standard, was also examined.

8.—Eight lives lost in a fire at the back of St. Anne's Church, Princes-street, Soho. Within a few minutes after the fire had been discovered, an interpreter named Puzzi, who lived on the second floor, appeared at the windows with his wife and three children, imploring assistance. He afterwards threw himself into the street, but sustained such injuries that he died after his removal to Charing Cross Hospital. In a few minutes afterwards, and before the arrival of either engines or fire-escape, all the inmates previously seen at the windows had disappeared. The charred remains of seven were found on the second floor when the fire was subdued.

—The Russian ambassador, Baron Brunow, leaves London, passing over from Dover to Calais the following morning.

10.—A deputation from the Society of Friends, composed of Sturge, of Birmingham, Charlton, of Bristol, and Pease, of Darlington, waits upon the Emperor of Russia at St. Petersburg, to present an address expressive of the sorrow which filled their hearts at the thought of the approaching war. The Emperor replied both verbally and in writing that he abhorred war as sincerely as they did, and was ready to forget the past if an opportunity was afforded.

He must, however, insist on Turkey discharging the obligations imposed on her by treaties.

13.—Lord John Russell obtains leave to bring in a bill to amend the laws relating to the Representation of the People of England and Wales. He proposed to disfranchise all boroughs which had fallen below 300 electors, or have a smaller population than 5,000, and to take one member from thirty-three boroughs having less than 500 electors, or a population under 10,000 inhabitants. He would divide certain counties, and give three members to each division, and an additional member to each county and town with more than 100,000 inhabitants. He would give four additional members to Yorkshire, four to Lancashire, and thirty-eight to other counties; and one to Southwark. This would in all give fifty-five new members. The three towns of Birkenhead, Staleybridge, and Barnsley having more than 20,000 inhabitants, would have a member each; and Kensington and Chelsea would, as had been suggested, be formed into a borough with two members. He proposed to give the franchise to the Inns of Court, and one member to the University of London. To make full provision for the representation of minorities, electors in districts returning three members would have two votes only, so that any section comprising not fewer than two-fifths of the gross electorate would secure the return of their candidate. It was intended to make several franchises common to counties and towns: namely, first, a salary of 100*l.* for any employment, public or private, paid half-yearly or quarterly, and not as weekly wages; secondly, 10*l.* a year dividends from the funds; bank stock, or the East India Company; thirdly, the payment of 40*l.* Income-tax or assessed taxes; fourthly, the being a graduate of any university; and fifthly, the having had for three years 50*l.* in a savings'-bank. As regarded counties and boroughs, it was proposed to admit the 10*l.* householder to the county franchise; but in order to avoid vote-manufacture, the building must be rated at 5*l.* a year, unless the voter was resident. As regarded the borough franchise, he considered that the Reform Act did not make sufficient provision for the admission of the working classes; and after a tribute to these classes, for whom he thought the door ought to be opened wider, he proposed that the borough franchise should follow a 6*l.* municipal rating. There would be under his scheme sixty-six vacancies; sixty-three of these he apportioned under one of the schedules, and the remaining three he proposed to give to populous towns in Scotland and to a Scotch University.

14.—The Earl of Clarendon states in the House of Lords, that though war was not yet declared, it could hardly be said we were at peace. He thought we were in an intermediate state, but every hour drifting nearer and nearer to a state of war.

16.—Bursting of the Sheffield and Tinsley

Canal, the inundation causing extensive damage to the warehouses, workshops, and cottages on the banks.

17.—In the course of a debate on Mr. Layard's motion on the Eastern Question Lord John Russell said:—"For my part, if most unexpectedly the Emperor of Russia recede from his former demands, and at the sight of all Europe disapproving his conduct, and of two of the most considerable nations of Europe being prepared to act in arms, if necessary, against him, he should acknowledge the independence and integrity of the Porte in the only manner in which it could be satisfactorily done, I shall, and we shall, rejoice to be spared the efforts and the burdens of a conflict. But, if that is not to be, and if peace is no longer consistent with our duty to Europe, and our duty to the world—if the ambition of this enormous Power has got to such a pitch that even its moderation is more ambitious than the ambition of other states—if Russia will not be contented with anything less than the subjugation of the whole empire of Turkey and the possession of Constantinople itself—if such are her feelings and such are her objects—then we can only endeavour to enter into this contest with a stout heart. May God defend the right! and for my part I shall willingly share the burden and the responsibility."

18.—Another explosion in the Arley coal mine, near Wigan, causing the destruction of eighty-nine lives. Nearly three hours elapsed before the fire could be extinguished, so as to enable the searchers to enter the levels; and when they could descend, their progress was necessarily slow on account of the destruction of brattices, doors, and stoppings by the explosion. The work was of the most disagreeable character, heaps of dead workmen and mutilated remains requiring to be passed in order that the first attention might be given to the living. A few were saved by great exertion, but the number was trifling compared with the dead bodies sent up to the pit mouth.

21.—The Emperor of Russia issues a war manifesto. "England and France have ranged themselves by the side of the enemies of Christianity against Russia fighting for the orthodox faith. But Russia will not alter her divine mission; and if enemies fall upon her frontiers, we are ready to meet them with the firmness which our ancestors have bequeathed to us. Are we not now the same Russian nation of whose deeds of valour the memorable events of 1812 bear witness? May the Almighty assist us to prove this by deeds. And in this trust, taking up arms for our persecuted brethren professing the Christian faith, we will exclaim, with the whole of Russia, with one heart, 'O Lord, our Saviour, whom have we to fear?'"

22.—Count Buol, the Austrian Minister, informs the Prussian Ambassador, Baron de (263)

Bourqueney, "If England and France will fix a day for the evacuation of the Principalities, the expiration of which shall be the signal for hostilities, the Cabinet of Vienna will support the summons." In reply to Lord Clarendon's question, if Austria in such circumstances would declare war herself, the only reply was that she would "support the summons." On the 20th of April, weeks after England and France were committed to a war policy, Austria and Prussia contracted an offensive and defensive alliance by which they guaranteed to each other all their respective possessions (so that an attack upon the territory of the one would be regarded by the other as an act of hostility against its own territory) and engaged to hold a part of their forces "in readiness for war." The occupation of the territories on the Lower Danube by Russia being a danger to the whole German Confederation, Austria was to address a communication to the Russian court, with the view of putting a stop to the further advance of the Czar's armies upon Turkish territory.

22.—Departure of the Guards for the war. At 5 o'clock this morning the Grenadiers marched from St. George's Barracks, Trafalgar-square, to the Waterloo railway station, for Southampton, amid the warm greetings of thousands who lined the streets. At Southampton they were joined by the Coldstreams, who had unexpectedly been brought down from Chichester. Crowds of people watched the dock gates, and rushed in with the soldiers; nor were their hearty cheers and embraces terminated until the gigantic transports swung from their moorings and steamed down the river. The 28th embarked at Liverpool, and the 33d and 50th at Dublin, amid similar demonstrations. The Fusiliers left the Wellington Barracks on the morning of the 28th, the Queen and royal family cheering them as they passed, from a balcony of Buckingham Palace.

— Concluded in the Court of Queen's Bench the case of Lumley v. Gye, the plaintiff alleging that the defendant had wrongfully induced Miss Joanna Wagner to break her engagement with him, whereby he had lost divers large sums of money. Damages laid at 30,000*l.* Verdict for the defendant.

27.—The steamship Edinburgh, trading between Leith and Hamburg, runs ashore on Borkum Reef, at the mouth of the Texel. Three of her passengers and nine seamen were drowned when endeavouring to save themselves in the boats. The vessel was afterwards got off, and the remainder of the crew managed to navigate her to Hamburg.

— Lord Clarendon writes to Count Nesselrode:—"The British Government, having exhausted all the efforts of negotiation, is compelled to declare to the Cabinet of St. Petersburg that, if Russia should decline to restrict within purely diplomatic limits the discussion in which she has for some time past been engaged with the Sublime Porte, and does not, by return of the messenger who is the bearer of my present letter, announce her intention of causing the Russian troops under the orders of Prince Gortschakoff to commence their march with a view to recross the Pruth, so that the provinces of Moldavia and Wallachia shall be completely evacuated on the 30th of April next, the British Government must consider the refusal or the silence of the Cabinet of St. Petersburg as equivalent to a declaration of war, and will take its measures accordingly. The messenger who is the bearer of this letter to your Excellency is directed not to wait more than six days at St. Petersburg for your reply." On the fifth day from the messenger's arrival, Count Nesselrode verbally informed the English Consul that "his Majesty does not think it becoming in him to give any reply to Lord Clarendon's letter." In the course of the same interview, the British agent asked the Count what the intentions of his Government were with reference to the consular arrangements between the two countries, in the event of a declaration of war. Count Nesselrode replied:—"That will entirely depend upon the course her Britannic Majesty's Government may adopt. We shall not declare war." The messenger (Captain Blackwood) returned to England on the 25th March.

March 1.—Departure of the City of Glasgow steam ship from Liverpool for Philadelphia. She had on board 111 cabin passengers, 293 steerage, and a crew of 76. She was never heard of afterwards, nor were any fragments picked up which could be identified as belonging to her.

2.—Jeremiah Smith, Mayor of Rye, sentenced to twelve months' confinement in Newgate, for perjury committed before a Committee of the House of Commons appointed to inquire into the cases of bribery alleged to have occurred in connexion with the last election for the borough of Rye.

— Died Signor Giambattista Rubini, the greatest tenor singer of his time, aged 58.

3.—Lord John Russell announces the postponement of the Bill for amending the Representation of the People.

6.—Exportation of corn from the Baltic and Black Sea ports of Russia prohibited.

— Explosion of a firework factory in Westminster-road, causing the death of the proprietor (Coton) and a young assistant.

— The Chancellor of the Exchequer brings forward the Budget. In making the financial statement of the year, he said that Ministers had been induced to select this early day in order that foreign nations might be aware of the promptitude with which Parliament was prepared to find the ways and means for carrying on the struggle in which we are about to embark, and also that the House might be enabled fully to consider them, as war entailed the disagreeable consequence of increased expenditure. But for the extraordinary circumstances connected with our foreign relations, a surplus of 1,166,000*l.* might have been anticipated with confidence; but as matters now stood, the total difference against the Exchequer, resulting from a comparison of the income and expenditure of 1854 and those of 1853 would be 4,506,000*l.* He proposed that in the meantime a sum of 1,250,000*l.* be voted for the expenses of the army in the East, being at the rate of 50*l.* a head for 25,000 men.

7.—The Reform Club entertain Admiral Sir Charles Napier at dinner previous to his departure with the Baltic fleet. Lord Palmerston occupied the chair, and gave the toast of the evening in an entertaining speech. Sir James Graham said that he looked upon Sir Charles not only as a gallant but as a discreet commander, and he had his entire confidence. "He does not go forth under any hypocritical pretence of conducting a religious war, but to assert the independence of Europe, to maintain the balance of power, and to resist as lawless a spirit of aggression and of reckless aggrandisement as ever disgraced any country. My gallant friend says when he goes into the Baltic he will declare war. I, as First Lord of the Admiralty, give him my free consent to do so. I hope that the war may be short, and that it may be sharp."

11.—The Baltic fleet leaves Spithead under Admiral Sir Charles Napier, having been visited on the previous day by her Majesty. The fleet arrived in Wingo Sound on the 15th, and passed through the Great Belt on the 25th.

13.—The Earl of Derby draws the attention of the House of Lords to a document published in the Sf. Petersburg Journal, purporting to be an official answer from the Emperor of Russia to a speech made by Lord John Russell in the House of Commons. The Times had commented on this article in a manner which induced Lord Aberdeen to say that information had been obtained by a breach of confidence on the part of some person in the Foreign Office. This charge was afterwards withdrawn. As the defence set up by the Emperor rested upon the communications made to the British Cabinet through Sir Hamilton Seymour, the Government now consented to submit their "secret and confidential" despatches to the House. (See Jan. 9, 1853.)

—Mr. Justice Talfourd dies in the Assize Court, Stafford, in the act of charging the grand jury. While urging the necessity of increased sympathy between the different classes of society, the learned judge suddenly fell forward with his face upon his book, and then swayed on one side towards his senior clerk and younger son, who caught him in their arms, and carried him out, still wearing his scarlet robes. Life was extinct within five minutes. Mr. Justice Wightman, who was then sitting on the civil side, made intimation of the event in his court, and at once suspended business.

—Acrimonious discussion in the House of Commons regarding statements made by Ministers at the Napier banquet. Mr. Bright said he had read the proceedings with pain and humiliation; the reckless levity displayed being in his opinion discreditable to the grave and responsible statesmen of a civilized and Christian nation. On rising to reply, Lord Palmerston said, "Sir, the honourable and reverend gentleman,"—when Mr. Cobden started up to call the attention of the Speaker to the phrase as flippant, undeserved, and not justified by the rules of the House. Lord Palmerston:—"I will not quarrel about words (a laugh), but as the hon. gentleman has been pleased to advert to the circumstance of my being chairman at the dinner to which allusion has been made, and as he has been kind enough to express an opinion as to my conduct on that occasion, I deem it right to inform the hon. gentleman that any opinion he may entertain either of me personally, or of my conduct, private or political, is to me a matter of the most perfect indifference. (Cheers and laughter.) I am further convinced that the opinion of this country with regard to me and to my conduct will in no way whatever be influenced by anything that the hon. gentleman may say. I therefore treat the censure of the hon. gentleman with the most perfect indifference and contempt. (Some cries of 'Order!') Is that parliamentary or not? (Laughter.) If it is not, I do not insist upon the expression. (Cheers and laughter.)"

16.—Mr. F. Peel intimates that, after a full inquiry into the allegations made against Mr. Stonor, the Duke of Newcastle had thought it right not to confirm his appointment to the judgeship of Melbourne.

17.—Lord John Russell introduces the promised ministerial measure to make further provision for the good government and extension of the University of Oxford and colleges therein. The bill, amended in various clauses, passed both Houses during the session.

21.—The Earl of Ellenborough draws the attention of the House of Lords to the frauds committed in the contract for hay furnished to the vessels conveying cavalry to the East. Hay paid for at the rate of 7*l.* 10*s.* per ton, packed in trusses, had been found stuffed with shavings, and other refuse matter. The Duke of Newcastle admitted the correctness of the report, and undertook to see that the law was brought to bear upon the authors of the fraud.

22.—This afternoon the avenues of Westminster-hall and of the Peers' entrance to the House of Lords were occupied by a large assemblage of persons anxious to see her Majesty's Ministers come down to Parliament with the declaration of war against Russia. The Lord Chancellor took his seat upon the wool-sack a few minutes before five o'clock, at which hour the ladies' gallery on either side of the throne was filled with peeresses. The space below the bar was crowded with members of the House of Commons and others having the privilege of entrée. There was a large attendance of peers both on the Ministerial and Opposition benches. After the presentation of petitions, the Earl of Aberdeen (whose rising was followed by a loud cry of "Order, order!") advanced to the table and said, "A Message from the Queen, my Lords." The noble Earl having handed her Majesty's Message to the clerk-assistant, Mr. Lefevre, it was by him taken to the Lord Chancellor. The Lord Chancellor, rising, then read the Message, amid breathless silence, informing the House that the negotiations with the Emperor of Russia had terminated, and that her Majesty felt bound "to afford active assistance to her ally the Sultan against unprovoked aggression." An address in answer, after a long debate, was agreed to on the 31st, Lord Aberdeen declaring that even now, when compelled to make war, he should carry it on with the utmost vigour only for the sake of securing a speedy peace, and, like the purest patriot of our Civil War, who, when buckling on his armour, murmured "Peace, peace!" a prayer for a return of peace would ever be uppermost in his mind.

24.— Prince Gortschakoff crosses the Danube to occupy the Dobrudja.

— Collision in the Channel, about nineteen miles off the Start, between the American ship Ann Kemble and the barque Bonetta, of Liverpool. Of a crew of fourteen on board the latter, only the captain, mate, and second mate were saved.

26.—The Duke of Parma assassinated in his capital. The Duchess assumed the regency, and Baron Ward was ordered to leave the country.

28.—Declaration of the causes of war published in the London Gazette:—"It is with deep regret that her Majesty announces the failure of her anxious and protracted endeavours to preserve for her people and for Europe the blessings of peace. The unprovoked aggression of the Emperor of Russia against the Sublime Porte has been persisted in with such disregard of consequences, that, after the rejection by the Emperor of Russia of terms which the Emperor of Austria, the Emperor of the French, and the King of Prussia, as well as her Majesty, considered just and equitable, her Majesty is compelled, by a sense of what is due to the honour of her crown, to the interests of her people, and to the independence of the states of Europe, to come forward in defence of an ally whose territory is invaded, and whose dignity and independence are assailed." Her Majesty, in justification of the course she is about to pursue, refers to the transactions in which she has been engaged. The Emperor of Russia had some cause of complaint against the Sultan with reference to the settlement which his Highness had sanctioned, of the conflicting claims of the Greek and Latin Churches to a portion of the Holy Places of Jerusalem and its neighbourhood. To the complaint of the Emperor of Russia on this head justice was done; and her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople had the satisfaction of promoting an arrangement to which no exception was taken by the Russian Government. But while the Russian Government repeatedly assured the Queen's Government that the mission of Prince Menschikoff to Constantinople was exclusively directed to the settlement of the question of the Holy Places at Jerusalem, Prince Menschikoff himself pressed upon the Porte other demands of a far more serious and important character, the nature of which he in the first instance endeavoured, as far as possible, to conceal from her Majesty's Ambassador. And these demands, thus studiously concealed, affected not the privileges of the Greek Church at Jerusalem, but the position of many millions of Turkish subjects in their relations to their Sovereign the Sultan. These demands were rejected by the spontaneous decision of the Sublime Porte. Two assurances had been given to her Majesty: one, that the mission of Prince Menschikoff only regarded the Holy Places; the other, that his mission would be of a conciliatory character. In both respects her just expectations were disappointed. . . . Her Majesty, in conjunction with the sovereigns of Austria, France, and Prussia, has made various attempts to meet any just demands of the Emperor of Russia without affecting the dignity and independence of the Sultan; and had it been the sole object of Russia to obtain security for the enjoyment by the Christian subjects of the Porte of their privileges and immunities, she would have found it in the offers that have been made by the Sultan. But as that security was not offered in the shape of a special and separate stipulation with Russia, it was rejected. Twice has this offer been made by the Sultan, and recommended by the four Powers: once by a note originally prepared at Vienna, and subsequently modified by the Porte; once by the proposal of bases of negotiation agreed upon at Constantinople on the 31st of December, and approved at Vienna on the 13th January, as offering to the two parties the means of arriving at an understanding in a becoming and honourable manner. It is thus manifest that a right for Russia to interfere in the ordinary relations of Turkish subjects to their sovereign, and not the happiness of Christian communities in Turkey, was the object sought for by the Russian Government; to such a demand the Sultan would not submit, and his Highness, in self-defence, declared war upon Russia; but her Majesty, nevertheless, in conjunction with her allies, has not ceased her endeavours to restore peace between the contending parties. The time has, however, now arrived when the advice and remonstrances of the four Powers have proved wholly ineffectual, and the military preparations of Russia becoming daily more extended, it is but too obvious that the Emperor of Russia has entered upon a course of policy which, if unchecked, must lead to the destruction of the Ottoman empire. In this conjuncture her Majesty feels called upon, by regard for an ally, the integrity and independence of whose empire have been recognised as essential to the peace of Europe, by the sympathies of her people with right against wrong, by a desire to avert from her dominions most injurious consequences, and to save Europe from the preponderance of a Power which has violated the faith of treaties, and defies the opinion of the civilized world, to take up arms, in conjunction with the Emperor of the French, for the defence of the Sultan. Her Majesty is persuaded that in so acting she will have the cordial support of her people; and that the pretext of zeal for the Christian religion will be used in vain to cover an aggression undertaken in disregard of its holy precepts, and of its true and beneficent spirit. Her Majesty humbly trusts that her efforts may be successful, and that by the blessing of Providence peace may be re-established on safe and solid foundations."

31.—According to an ancient custom, the Sergeant-at-arms, accompanied by other officials of the City, read her Majesty's Declaration of War from the steps of the Royal Exchange.

—Hungerford-hall, Strand, London, one of the speculative structures of the Exhibition year, destroyed by a fire which broke out at half-past seven o'clock in the evening.

During this month the war-intelligence caused Consols to fluctuate from $91\frac{1}{8}$ to $85\frac{1}{2}$.

April 3.—At half-past two o'clock this afternoon members of both Houses of Parliament proceeded in procession to Buckingham Palace, to present the Address to the Queen in answer to her Majesty's Message relating to the declaration of war against Russia. When the House re-assembled at half-past five, the Speaker read the royal answer to the Address.

4.—The Treasury order the seizure of two steam-frigates building at Northfleet for the Emperor of Russia as "the property of an enemy." They were added to her Majesty's navy under the names of the Cossack and Tartar.

10.—Three men executed at Monaghan for the murder of Thomas Bateson in 1851. The scene near the scaffold was striking and unusual. After partaking of a good breakfast, they walked together for some time in the prison yard, two of them smoking and all exhilarated. When pitied, Coomey replied he never felt so happy; he was sure of meeting his Saviour! Quin said he would not accept a reprieve if it came. The sub-sheriff said he was sorry to see men in their position. "Sorry!" said one of them in a tone of surprise; "why, it is glad you should be, sir." He then asked them if they had any statement to make to him in relation to the offence for which they were to die. "No," said Coomey, "our Saviour said nothing when he was executed!" Quin and Grant were first taken to the scaffold. Quin said, "Hell cannot now scare us;" and, addressing the hangman, "He's doing the best job ever done for us." At their request the priests blessed them; and one said, "Remember the thief on the cross; in one moment you'll be in heaven!" upon which Quin exclaimed, "Mary, Mother of God! receive us; prepare heaven for us." Grant said nothing. When they were hanged, the crowd shrieked and yelled. Coomey came next. "I am quite content; I am going to my God," said he. When the rope was adjusted, he meekly asked, "May I now go, gentlemen?" The drop fell, and the culprit died without a struggle, amid the frantic shouts and cries of the multitude below.

10.—Treaty of alliance signed between England and France. The high contracting parties engaged to do what lay in their power for the re-establishment of a peace which should secure Europe against the return of the existing troubles; and, in order to set free the Sultan's dominions, they promised to use all the land and sea forces required for the purpose. They engaged to receive no overture tending to the cessation of hostilities, and to enter into no engagement with the Russian court, without having deliberated in common. They renounced all aim at separate advantage, and declared their readiness to receive into their alliance any of the other Powers of Europe.

—Lord Raglan, Commander-in-Chief of the British expedition, and the Duke of Cambridge, leave London for the East.

—Lord John Russell announces the withdrawal of the Government Reform Measure. Towards the close of his speech his lordship's feelings were overcome, and as he used the word "suspicion," in reference to his motives, his utterance was choked, and the sentences he struggled to pronounce were evidently given through tears. As soon as this was perceived, loud and cordial cheers broke out in every part of the House, and were repeated again and again.

12.—Commenced in the High Court of Justiciary the trial of William Smith, surgeon, for the murder of William M'Donald, farm-servant at Burnside, parish of St. Fergus, Aberdeenshire, on the 19th November last. He was found shot in the prisoner's field, with a pistol lying beside him, and suspicion at once fastened on the prisoner—a suspicion partly based on the nature of the wound, but more particularly from the circumstance that Smith had effected three insurances upon M'Donald's life, one of them for 999*l.* 1*s.* expiring five days after the murder. In the policies of all these insurances it was a condition that they should not be vitiated in the event of suicide. In summing up on the third day of trial, the Lord Justice Clerk said he did not think there was sufficient evidence to infer the guilt of the prisoner, or even to establish the fact that a murder was committed. The jury, by a majority, returned a verdict of "Not Proven."

13.—Moses Moses, a general dealer in Houndsditch, examined at the Mansion House on a charge of receiving stolen goods. The police were induced to search his premises in connexion with a recent theft of wool, and discovered vast quantities of goods, the produce of recent burglaries and robberies. A wagon could hardly contain the pile of furs and silver plate, while the value was estimated at little short of 10,000/. Moses was tried at the Central Criminal Court and sentenced to fourteen years' transportation.

15.—The American emigrant ship Powhattan, from Havre, wrecked on the United States coast, and 250 of those on board drowned.

16.—The City of San Salvador destroyed by an earthquake.

21.—Her Majesty's revenue steam-cruiser, Argus, tows the first prize of war into Portsmouth harbour, the vessel being the Froyo (440 tons), bound with salt for Abo, and captured off Beachy Head.

22.—The first gun of the allied fleet fired against the Russians at Odessa, in revenge for an outrage committed upon a flag of truce. The fortifications were subjected to a fire which lasted ten hours, and did not cease until most of the batteries were silenced or destroyed.

23.—Emperor of Russia issues another war manifesto.

24.—Collision off the coast of Genoa between the Silicia and the Ercolano, the latter a passenger steamboat, with several English families on board. The casualty occurred after night-fall, and appeared to have been occasioned by the total want of watchmen on board the Ercolano. She was cut to the water's edge, and began at once to settle down in deep water. A few of the passengers and crew were saved by the boats of the Silicia, and some others, among whom was Sir Robert Peel, managed to swim or float ashore on pieces of the wreck, but by far the greater number on board went down with the vessel. Mr. Halsey, M.P. for Hertfordshire, his wife, son, and two domestics, were among those drowned.

26.—General fast to implore the Divine blessing on our arms that peace may be early restored.

28.—Collision in the Channel, off the Start, between the American ship Hesper and the emigrant ship Favourite, with 191 passengers on board, besides crew. When the ships parted from each other, the emigrants could be seen rushing about the deck of the sinking vessel in frantic confusion; but the heavy sea and wind prevented the Hesper from rendering any prompt aid, and the whole of the unfortunate creatures on board went down with the Favourite.

29.—A fire broke out in Brossette's beer-shop, Whitechapel, attended with serious loss of life. The director of the fire-escape found the family on the first floor, almost suffocated by the smoke. Holding one child by its clothes in his teeth, and another with the mother under each arm, he brought them down the ladder; on a second attempt he rescued the landlord himself; but on trying a third time the fire ignited the ladder, and immediately afterwards the whole upper part of the premises gave way, killing two of the firemen and burying eight inmates in the smoking ruins. The bodies were found next morning.

May 1.—Sir J. Graham advises Sir C. Napier, in the first instance, to feel his way, and to make good his hold in the Gulf of Finland. "When I say this, I by no means contemplate an attack either on Sweaborg or on Cronstadt. I have a great respect for stone walls, and have no fancy for running even screw line-of-battle ships against them. Because the public here may be impatient, you must not be rash; because they, at a distance from danger, are fool-hardy, you must not risk the loss of a fleet in an impossible enterprise." Sir James adds, that he believes "both Sweaborg and Cronstadt to be all but impregnable from the sea—Sweaborg more especially; and none but a very large army could co-operate by land efficiently, in the presence of such a force as Russia could readily concentrate for the immediate defence of the approaches to her capital." He advises the Admiral, then, if he has none but naval means at his command, to "pause long, and consider well, before he attempts any attack on the Russian squadrons in their strongholds, being afraid that they were much too cautious to come out and meet him. Had you been weaker," Sir James observes, "they might have done so. Now they will wait, and watch an opportunity, in the hope that you will seriously cripple your force, by knocking your head against their forts, when they may take you at a serious disadvantage, and inflict a fatal blow. These considerations must not be overlooked by you; I recall them to your mind, lest, in the eager desire to achieve a great exploit, and to satisfy the wild wishes of an impatient multitude, you should yield to some rash impulse, and fail in the discharge of one of the noblest duties, which is the moral courage to do what you know to be right, at the risk of being accused of having done wrong. You will reflect on it, and I am certain that your judgment will not err."

—The committee conducting the Preston strike announce that the employers had "succeeded in their unholy undertaking" of resisting the rise of 10 per cent. This was the 37th week of the struggle, and it was calculated that as much as 500,000*l.* was lost in carrying it on.

2.—Three masons killed by lightning while working at the church of Mount St. Mary, Richmond-hill, Leeds.

—Wreck of the Liverpool emigrant ship Winchester. She left Liverpool on the 9th with 447 people on board. On the 17th she lost her masts, and afterwards drifted about for sixteen days, making water fast. She was then in the track of vessels, and the crew of the steamship Washington greatly exerted themselves to save as many as possible of the passengers. Many had died from injuries received by the rolling of the vessel, and numbers were swept overboard in the storm. A few minutes after the Washington had completed her humane work, the Winchester foundered, carrying with her the corpses of 25 passengers who had died on board.

5.—Serious rioting, accompanied by murder and robbery, takes place among the Chinese settlers at Singapore.

8.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer submits a supplementary financial statement showing a total extra expenditure to be provided for of 6,850,000*l.* The Income-tax to be doubled till the end of the year; 1*s.* per gallon added to Scotch and 8*d.* to Irish whisky. A readjustment of the sugar-duties it was calculated would produce 700,000*l.*, and an increase of the Malt-tax from 2*s.* 9*d.* to 4*s.*, 2,450,000*l.* The gross net augmentation of the public burdens in consequence of the war was calculated at present to amount to 8,683,000*l.*

9.—In a Committee of Ways and Means, Mr. Ball's motion to omit the word "malt" in the resolution increasing the duties on certain articles was negatived by 224 to 143 votes. It was afterwards agreed that the increased Malt-tax should be continued during the war.

10.—The Lady Nugent, transport-ship, sails from Madras for Rangoon, with 350 rank and file of the 25th Madras Light Infantry, twenty women and children, the staff officers, and a crew of thirty seamen. She was never afterwards heard of, nor any portion of her wreck identified. It was generally thought she went down with all hands on board during a severe gale which swept across her path about fourteen days after leaving Madras.

12.—Her Majesty's steam-frigate Tiger running ashore off Odessa, is fired upon and destroyed by the Russians. Her crew, many of them severely wounded, were taken prisoners into the city, and kindly treated.

—Bal costumé given by the French Ambassador in London, attended by Her Majesty and Prince Albert. Among the magnificent decorations were various emblems illustrative of the alliance between France and England.

16.—Mr. Milner Gibson's resolution concerning the unsatisfactory state of the law affecting the periodical press, and pledging Parliament to an early consideration of the same, carried without a division.

19.—The Arrogant and Hecla bombard the little fort of Eckness on the coast of Finland, and capture a merchant vessel.

25.—In consequence of the entry of a French fleet into the Piræus, the King issues a proclamation, announcing that Greece will maintain a strict neutrality in the war with Russia.

29.—Lord John Russell intimates that 6,000 men had been sent from France to occupy the Piræus along with a regiment from this country, on account of the Greek Government conniving at insurrection in the adjoining Turkish provinces. They were determined that Greece should not be either secretly or openly the ally of Russia in the present war.

—On the withdrawal of the Canterbury Bribery Prevention Bill, a debate took place in which Mr. Disraeli assailed the Government, and Lord John Russell in particular, on the score of the repeated defeats they had experienced, and the humiliating spectacle presented by a Ministry compelled to withdraw so many important measures. "It is of great importance," he said, "to impress these circumstances on the House and the country, because we are never to forget that we enjoy the great blessing of having our affairs administered by men who are remarkably distinguished by their ability (laughter)—men who have made enormous sacrifices, both for their country and for themselves. (Laughter.) Than the noble lord himself no man has made greater sacrifices. He has thrown over all his old colleagues, and connected himself with a coterie of public men who, the greater part of their lives, have been depreciating his great abilities, and running down his eminent renown. (Cheers and laughter.) If the noble lord had succeeded in the object for which he made such enormous sacrifices, I could understand more clearly than I do the present position of the noble lord (laughter); but we find it otherwise. Six of these seven great measures have, at the end of May, disappeared—three having been withdrawn, and the other moiety defeated (hear, hear); and I feel that the time has come when it is impossible not to consider that we have not received the ample compensation held out to us for the breaking up of parties, and for not following the spirit and genius of our parliamentary constitution. (Hear, hear.) We have not received that full and ample compensation in well-digested and statesmanlike measures that was held out to us. We were told that the Government had no principles, but 'all the talents'; and we had a right to expect that the noble lord—who always wishes to behave handsomely to the House—would at least have given us something as a compensation for the remarkable state of affairs which has banished all his natural colleagues to invisible positions in this House, and placed him on a bench surrounded by those who have been decrying his career for the last quarter of a century. (Laughter.) Lord John Russell in reply defended the measures brought forward by Government, showed how many of importance had been passed, and charged Mr. Disraeli with acting for or against the Oaths Bill, according to the political conveniences of the hour. Later in the evening, Mr. Disraeli returned to the charge, denying emphatically that he had ever absented himself from a division, when measures designed for the relief of the Jews were under discussion. He also charged Lord John Russell with offering a factious opposition to Lord Derby's Ministry, and being now engaged in carrying out the very measures they had planned, with the aid of colleagues to whom he had all his life been opposed. Lord John Russell replied with great animation, explaining the reasons which had induced him to accept office under Lord Aberdeen, and the confidence he had in the wisdom of the colleagues with whom he was acting. "I think," he said, "we are engaged at present in a most difficult task, apart from any measures of reform of Parliament, of oaths, or of corrupt purposes. Should I be of opinion that the conduct of the war is not safe in the hands of the present Government—that that Government is not carrying on the war with the vigour which makes war successful, and with a view to a peace which alone could be safe and honourable—from that moment I should cease to be a member of it. (Loud cheers.) But, Sir, considering that that is the great and pressing question of the country, no taunts of the right honourable gentleman would make me leave the Government with which I am connected—a position, God knows, of more labour and anxiety than of any pleasure, profit, or emolument. (Hear, hear, and cheers.) I repeat that, unless I were convinced that the present Government was more likely than any Government which could be formed to carry on the war successfully, and to conclude it by an honourable peace, I should cease to be one of its members; but so long as I have that opinion, I shall trust to the House and to the country for putting a fair interpretation upon my conduct. (Loud cheers.) I rely upon that justice which hardly ever fails to construe rightly the actions of public men. (Loud and continued cheering.)"

31.—Destruction of the Europa troop-ship by fire while on her voyage to the East. Lieut.-Col. Moore, veterinary-surgeon Kelly, four sergeants, twelve rank and file, and one woman perished on the occasion, with the whole of the horses, baggage, and equipment of the troops on board. Lieut.-Col. Moore remained on board the burning vessel to the last, making the best arrangements in his power for removing the men; he was stated to have been at last driven into the mizzen chains by the violence of the flames and to have perished there. The surviving officers and men were saved in the boat, and picked up by three different vessels, whence they were removed to her Majesty's ship

Tribune, which met them at sea. The origin of the fire was never discovered.

June 3.—The Sachem Indians assemble at their Council Fire to address her Majesty on the war:—"We, the Chiefs and Sachems of the six nations of Indians residing on the Grand River, in Canada West, being assembled at our Council Fire General Council, take this opportunity of assuring your Majesty of our unalterable attachment to your Majesty. Great Mother, we have heard that your Majesty is now at war with a powerful nation, and that your warriors, with those of the French, as your allies, have gone on the war-path. We are happy to hear of this alliance, and we feel that our Great Mother's cause must be just. Great Mother, your children of the six nations have always been faithful and active allies of the Crown, and the ancestors of your red children never failed to assist in the battles of your illustrious ancestors. Great Mother, we now renew the offer of our services against any external or internal enemy that may dare to attack this portion of your dominions, and we pray the Great Spirit to bless your warriors and those of your allies with victory."

6.—Abolition of "Clothing Colonels." Under a warrant of this date, the colonels of all regiments were in future to receive a fixed allowance in lieu of the pecuniary emolument hitherto derived from the off-reckonings.

7.—Lord Elgin concludes a treaty at Washington, by which the British American coast fisheries are thrown open to the States, the free navigation of the St. Lawrence and Canadian lakes guaranteed to them, and the products of the United States and British America, with the exception of sugar and tobacco, reciprocally admitted duty free.

8.—Lord John Russell intimates the intention of the Government to divide the functions of Secretary of State for War and the Colonies. The following evening, the Earl of Aberdeen said the Duke of Newcastle would fill the former office, but without control over the finance or patronage of the army. Sir George Grey succeeded to the Colonial department.

10.—Mrs. Brough, of Esher, formerly in the service of her Majesty as nurse to the Prince of Wales, murders her family of six children, by cutting their throats, and then attempts to commit suicide by cutting her own. She was found in a state of great weakness from loss of blood by two labourers in Claremont Gardens, who had their attention drawn to the house by seeing a pillow stained with blood hanging out of the window. One of them got a ladder, and, mounting to the top, saw Mrs. Brough coming up the staircase with her hair hanging down and her face covered with blood. The children were found dead in the bedroom. Mrs. Brough made a statement to the chief of the Surrey Constabulary, to the effect that during the night she was so ill that she went down stairs to get a knife to cut her own throat. "Finding a razor," she said, "I went to Georgy, and cut her first; then to Carry, and cut her; then to Henry, who said, 'don't, mother.' I said, 'I must,' and did cut him. Then I went to Bill: he was fast asleep. — I turned him over. He never woke: I served him the same. The two other children, Harriet and George, were awake. They made no resistance at all. I then laid down and did myself. I cannot state what occurred for some time after that, as I found myself weak and lying on the floor. The great nasty black cloud was gone then." The woman was living alone with her children at the time, her husband having recently been compelled to separate from her on account of his discovery of her improper conduct in London. At her trial at Guildford, on the 9th August, the jury returned a verdict of Not Guilty on the ground of insanity.

10.—The Crystal Palace, Sydenham, opened by the Queen, with great ceremony, in the presence of 40,000 spectators. The commotion incident to this event was noticed in the City from an early hour in the forenoon, and by the time the doors were opened the closely-packed multitude stretched far into the grounds of the Palace. Around the dais in the centre of the transept were gathered the Archbishop of Canterbury, the diplomatic body, the Directors of the Company, the Lord Mayors of London, Dublin, and York, and the civic dignitaries of other cities throughout the kingdom. At three o'clock the Queen entered the Palace, leaning on the arm of Prince Albert, and followed by the King of Portugal, the Duke of Oporto, and a brilliant company. The National Anthem was led off by a crowded orchestra, under the bâton of Mr. Costa; Miss Clara Novello and Signor Lablache being the most noticeable of the singers. In answer to the address presented by Mr. S. Laing, M.P., Chairman of the Company, her Majesty said:—"It is my earnest wish and hope that the bright anticipations which have been formed as to its future destiny may, under the blessing of Divine Providence, be completely realized, and that this wonderful structure and the treasures of art and knowledge which it contains may long continue to elevate and interest as well as to delight and amuse the minds of all classes of my people." Copies of the guide books to the various departments of the Palace having been presented to her Majesty by the authors and other officials, the royal procession was formed and proceeded through the building. Prayer was then offered up by the Archbishop of Canterbury, after which the orchestra performed the Hallelujah chorus with immense effect. When it had ceased, her Majesty, through her Lord Chamberlain, the Marquis of Breadalbane, declared the Palace open. This concluded the more formal part of the day's ceremony, her Majesty then retiring, while the notes of the National Anthem were once more swelling through the Palace.

13.—The Lord Chancellor, in moving the second reading of the Divorce Bill, explained that the object of the measure was to facilitate divorces on account of adultery, and to transfer the jurisdiction over matrimonial suits from the ecclesiastical courts to Chancery, where a Court of Divorce was proposed to be established. The new court would consist of the Lord Chancellor, the Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench, the Master of the Rolls, and two other members appointed under the Great Seal. Bill read a second time.

— Miguel Yzquierdo, a young Spaniard, sentenced to death for the murder of a lad named Scales at North Mimms. On first being called to plead, the jury found him mute by the visitation of God. They now found him wilfully mute, which enabled Mr. Justice Earle to enter a plea of Not Guilty. The extreme sentence of the law was afterwards commuted.

14.—When addressing the electors of the City of London, after his acceptance of the office of President of the Council, Lord John Russell said:—"We have all reviewed the glories of Nelson, of St. Vincent, and of Camperdown; but the victories which they gained were achieved over an enemy which came out into the open sea to meet them, and who in fair fight were encountered by the valour and the prowess of our admirals and sailors. We have now to deal with an enemy who encloses his ships in walls of granite, who places them behind stone walls and batteries of guns, and who has never ventured to meet Dundas or Napier in the open sea. If he did, no doubt these gallant admirals would be able, in the nautical phrase, to give a good account of the Russian fleets."

15.—The Times gives expression to a feeling now being widely discussed, that Sebastopol ought to be attacked by the allies:—"The grand political and military objects of the war could not be attained as long as Sebastopol and the Russian fleet were in existence. If that central position of the Russian power in the south of the empire were annihilated, the whole fabric, which it had cost the Czars of Russia centuries to raise, must fall to the ground. . . . The taking of Sebastopol, and the occupation of the Crimea, were objects which would repay all the costs of the war, and would permanently settle in our favour the principal questions in dispute. A peace which should leave Russia in possession of the same means of aggression would only enable her to recommence the war at her pleasure."

18.—Inauguration of the monument erected to the memory of Thomas Hood in Kensal Green cemetery. Mr. Monckton Milnes pronounced an eulogium on the author of "The Song of the Shirt."

— Died in Mexico, of cholera, aged 49, Madame Henriette Sonntag (Countess de Rossi), soprano singer.

19.—Lord Lyndhurst, in a speech of great clearness and ability, draws attention to the Memorandum lately issued by the cabinets of Vienna and Berlin to their envoys at the German Diet, contending that the ambition and aggressive policy of Russia, which he fully exposed, required more vigorous measures of oppression than a mere return to the status quo in any future arrangements with that Power.—Lord Clarendon in reply expressed his disbelief that Austria had any intention of concluding peace with Russia on the terms suggested by Lord Lyndhurst, which he fully declared would be unacceptable to England and France. Nothing but some result sufficient to fetter and cripple the enemy would be considered satisfactory.—The Earl of Derby maintained that the Memorandum bound Austria and Prussia to accept peace whenever Russia consented to evacuate the Principalities; but the peace of Europe must be secured from Russian ambition; some of the past conquests of Russia must be wrested from her grasp; the Black Sea must not remain a Russian lake, nor the Danube a Russian river.—The Earl of Aberdeen remarked that the war from the beginning had been defensive—to preserve Turkey from encroachment; but that contingencies might require the invasion of Russia. The Western Powers were not bound to accede to any Austrian propositions for peace. He denied that Europe had suffered much real peril from the ambition of Russia, instancing that, even towards Turkey, Russia since the Treaty of Adrianople had interfered only for the purpose of protecting the Porte from a rebellious vassal. War should be waged merely for the sake of peace, though not less vigorously on that account, and should be terminated at the first moment that peace became possible on a just and honourable basis.

20.—Mrs. Hudson Kirby burnt on the stage of Plymouth theatre while taking her part in an amateur performance given by the officers of the garrison.

—Collision between the Olympus, from Liverpool, and the Trade Wind, from New York, in lat. $41^{\circ} 50'$ and long. $57^{\circ} 2'$. Both vessels went down within an hour and a half after the occurrence, a few only of each of the crews being saved in the boats.

21.—Sir William Clay's Church-rates Abolition Bill lost by a majority of 27 in a House of 391.

—Circular Memorandum issued from the Horse Guards giving the army generally permission to keep the upper lip unshaven, as the practice had been found beneficial by the army in the East. But "a clear space of two inches must be left between the corner of the mouth and the whisker, where whiskers are grown. The chin, the under lip, and at least two inches of the upper part of the throat must be clean shaven, so that no hair can be seen above the stock in that place."

22.—In the House of Lords a debate on a breach of privilege was originated by the (272)

Marquis of Clanricarde, who complained that certain returns respecting the commissariat, ordered on the motion of Earl Grey on the 8th April, included a document of later date, containing various strictures on the noble Earl's speech, by Sir C. Trevelyan, a Government official. After a prolonged discussion the papers were withdrawn for the purpose of substituting an amended return.

22.—On bringing up the Report on the Oxford University Bill, in the Commons, Mr. Heywood's clause to abolish the Matriculation Oath was carried against Government, by 252 to 161. A second clause, for abolishing the oath on taking degrees, was rejected by 205 to 196.

23.—The Russians retire from the siege of Silistria, and retreat across the Danube, pursued by the Turks. In this siege of thirty-nine days the Russians were reported to have lost 12,000 men, Schilders, their chief engineer, being among the killed, and many other generals of distinction. Between 40,000 and 50,000 projectiles were thrown among the gallant defenders of the fortress. Its successful defence was mainly due to the bravery of the Governor, Moussa Pasha (killed by a shell in the last days of the siege), to Gruch, a scientific Prussian officer, and to two British officers, Captain Butler and Lieutenant Nasmyth, who, being accidentally in the place when the Russians sat down before it, remained to share its dangers. Butler died of fever and exhaustion two hours before the Russian retreat was discovered.

24.—In the Court of Common Pleas, a Somersetshire magistrate, named Cridland, was sentenced to pay 1,000*l.* damages for writing offensive letters to his wife, from whom he was divorced.

26.—Fire at Olney, Buckinghamshire, commencing in a tradesman's shop in the High-street, and burning about sixty houses and a large amount of agricultural produce.

—During a debate on Lord Aberdeen's motion for the production of a despatch in reference to the Treaty of Adrianople, the Marquis of Clanricarde declared that the noble Earl had shown himself the constant supporter of arbitrary power in every nation of Europe, a partisan of Russia, and an opponent of every national effort to obtain constitutional liberties wherever undertaken. He was, in a word, the evil genius of the present Government.

27.—Mr. Collier carries a resolution, pledging the House to a modification of the law of partnership, so as to permit persons to embark in commercial enterprise with limited liability.

—Spain declared in a state of siege, O'Donnell having taken the field with 2,000 cavalry of the garrison of Madrid.

29.—The Duke of Newcastle urges upon Lord Raglan the necessity of making an immediate attack upon Sebastopol:—"I have, on the part of her Majesty's Government, to instruct your lordship to concert measures for the siege of Sebastopol, unless with the information in your possession, but at present unknown in this country, you should be decidedly of opinion that it could not be undertaken with a reasonable prospect of success. The confidence with which her Majesty placed under your command the gallant army now in Turkey is unabated; and if, upon mature reflection, you should consider that the united strength of the two armies is insufficient for this undertaking, you are not to be precluded from the exercise of the discretion originally vested in you, though her Majesty's Government will learn with regret that an attack from which such important consequences are anticipated must be any longer delayed. The difficulties of the siege of Sebastopol appear to her Majesty's Government to be more likely to increase than diminish by delay." The draft of this despatch was read over to the Cabinet, and assented to without discussion.

29.—Quarrel, leading to a court-martial, between Lieutenant Greer and Lieutenant Perry, of the 46th Regiment, stationed at Windsor Barracks. In his written defence Perry said, that being alone in the world, and in the possession of only limited means, he determined to be a "quiet man," and thus became an object of reproach and ridicule. This night Greer forced Perry to toss and gamble, and, having lost, cursed him. When Perry got up to leave the room Greer dragged him back by the coat, seized him under the arms, jammed him against the wall, and then struck him on the chest and stomach. Unable to bear this any longer, Perry snatched up a candlestick and struck Greer until he relaxed his grasp. The cross charges of assault and unbecoming conduct occupied the military tribunals many weeks. The verdict laid before the Commander-in-Chief recommended that Lieutenant Perry be dismissed from the service, and Greer severely reprimanded; but this being thought contrary to evidence, her Majesty was pleased not to confirm the sentence. A Horse-Guards' memorandum of the 2d of September explained the course which Lord Hardinge thought proper to take in bringing the questions relating to the discipline of the 46th to an issue.

— The Oxford University Bill read a third time in the Commons, with the addition of a supplementary clause abolishing Test oaths on taking the B. A. degree.

July 2.— Attempted abduction of Miss Eleanor Arbutnot, by Mr. John Carden, of Barnane, Clonmel. She was seized when returning from church in a covered car, and in the company of several lady friends, who were fortunately able to offer such resistance as prevented the abductor carrying out his design. The screams of the terrified women brought speedy assistance, and Carden, with his party of six assistants, fled with precipitate haste. They were overtaken by the mounted police near Farna Castle, and immediately committed to prison. In Carden's carriage, which was overturned in a ditch, there was found a six-barrel revolver, bottles of chloroform, salts, cords, disguises, and 315*l.* in gold and notes. At the trial at Clonmel Assizes, on July 28th, the jury, so far as the chief prisoner was concerned, returned a verdict of Not guilty of the felony, but Guilty of an attempt to commit it. Judge Ball sentenced him to two years' imprisonment with hard labour. On being placed a second time at the bar for assaulting Smethwick, a shepherd, who had interfered to protect Miss Arbutnot, the jury returned a verdict of Not guilty.

3.—The Centenary Festival of the Society of Arts celebrated by a banquet in the Crystal Palace.

7.—The Oxford University Bill passes through Committee in the Lords, with a clause, moved by Viscount Canning, exempting Fellowships in respect of certain preferences. It was read a third time and passed on the 13th, and received the royal assent on the 7th August.

12.—The Emperor Napoleon reviews the French troops at Boulogne, previous to their embarkation in British ships of war for the Baltic.

13.—Lord Granville enters into a personal explanation in the House of Lords, with respect to a charge made against him of introducing the Russian Count Pahlen into a London club. The Count (he said), an old friend of his father's, and of many eminent statesmen in this country, had arrived in London on no political mission, but solely with the view of settling his own private affairs. In such circumstances he signed, as he had frequently done before, the printed form recommending a foreigner to the Travellers' Club. He did not believe such conduct illegal or unpatriotic; on the contrary, he thought that civility towards an individual stranger with whose country we were at war was just one of those mitigations of the old barbarous rights of war which modern civilization had introduced.

17.—The House of Commons agree to a vote of 17,300*l.* to defray the expense of the new office of Secretary of State for War.

— Insurrection in Madrid, ending in the flight of the Ministry, and the appointment of a Junta to restore the municipality of 1843.

19.—After ten sittings, a coroner's jury returned a verdict that a child named Richardson had died in consequence of an operation for lithotomy unskilfully performed by surgeons at the Royal Free Hospital, Gray's-inn-lane.

— Lord Raglan informs the Duke of Newcastle that he intended to attack Sebastopol, "more in deference to the views of the British Government, and to the known acquiescence of the Emperor Napoleon in these views, than to any information in the possession of the naval and military authorities either as to the extent of the enemy's forces or their state of preparation. The fact must not be concealed that neither the English nor the French admirals have been able to obtain any intelligence on which they can rely with respect to the army which the Russians may destine for operations in the field, or to the number of men allotted for the defence of Sebastopol; and Marshal St. Arnaud and myself are equally deficient in information upon these all-important questions, and there would seem to be no chance of our acquiring it." In replying to this despatch, the Duke wrote:—"I cannot help seeing, through the calm and noble tone of your announcement of the decision to attack Sebastopol, that it has been taken in order to meet the views and desires of the Government, and not in entire accordance with your own opinion. I wrote to the Queen the moment I received your despatch, and in answer she said: 'The very important news which he conveyed to her in it of the decision of the generals and admirals to attack Sebastopol have filled the Queen with mixed feelings of satisfaction and anxiety. May the Almighty protect her army and her fleet, and bless this great undertaking with success!'"

21.—Cholera breaks out among the troops at Varna, sixteen French soldiers dying out of twenty-five attacked. It increased with such rapidity that fatigue parties were almost constantly engaged in the melancholy duty of burying the dead. The troops in consequence were much dispirited. Regiments were reduced to 300 or 400 sickly men, and letters sent home were full of prayers that, at whatever risk, they might be led against the enemy rather than die the inglorious death so fast decimating their ranks. By August the brigade of Guards—the flower of the army—was so exhausted and beaten that they had to make two marches to get over the ten miles of ground lying between Alladyn and Varna. In this brigade alone there were upwards of 600 attacked by cholera. The Light Division lost 112 men, and Sir De Lacy Evans about 100. Among the French the mortality was still more frightful. Nearly 3,000 were reported to have perished under General d'Espinas during an expedition to Kostendji, one of the worst regions in the pestilential Dobrudscha.

22.—Lord Clarendon writes to Lord Westmoreland at Vienna:—"After making such great efforts and sacrifices, and engaged as they are in a just cause, the Allied Powers will not stop in their course without the certainty that they will not again be called upon after a short interval to recommence the war. . . . The privileged frontier of Russia in the Black Sea has enabled her to establish in those waters a naval power which, in the absence of any counterbalancing force, is a standing menace to the Ottoman empire. The uncontrolled possession by Russia of the principal mouth of the Danube has created obstacles to the navigation of that great river which seriously affect the general commerce of Europe. Finally, the stipulation of the Treaty of Kutschuk-Kainardji relative to the protection of the Christians has become by a wrongful interpretation the principal cause of the present struggle. Upon these points the status quo ante bellum must undergo important modifications."

24.—The House of Commons agree to a vote of 3,000,000*l.* for carrying on the war.

28.—The Bribery Bill passes the House of Commons. It was read a third time in the House of Lords on the 7th August, the Commons accepting the amendments made there, on condition that the measure was restricted in operation to one year instead of two.

29.—The King of Denmark proclaims a new constitution for the united monarchy.

August 1.—Came on for trial at the Kilkenny Assizes, before Mr. Justice Ball and a jury, the great Mountgarret case, involving a peerage and estates of the value of 10,000*l.* per annum. The plaintiff was Mr. Pierce Somerset Butler, the eldest son of Colonel the Hon. Pierce Butler, fourth son of Edmund, eleventh Viscount Mountgarret; and the defendant was the son of the Hon. Henry Butler, the third son of the said Edmund, being the son of Henry Butler by Anne, daughter of John Harrison, Esq. This lady, the plaintiff asserted, Henry had married while he had another wife still living; that, consequently, this marriage was a nullity, and the issue—of whom the defendant was the eldest son—illegitimate: from which it followed that the plaintiff, and not the defendant, became heir to the viscounty and family estates on the death of the three elder brothers without lawful issue, his own father being dead. It appeared that Somerset Butler, the second, Henry Butler, the third, and Pierce Butler, the fourth son of Edmund, predeceased the eldest son Edmund, who had been advanced to the dignity of Earl of Kilkenny, limited to him and his issue, whereby, at his death without children, the earldom lapsed, and the viscounty only passed to his collateral heirs; and that the defendant, presuming his legitimacy, had assumed the title, and entered into possession of the estates, from which the plaintiff now sought to eject him. The fact of the legal marriage of Henry Butler with Amanda Colebrooke, prior to his marriage with Anne Harrison, was the fact really to be decided by this trial.—On the fourth day of trial the jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, with 6*l.* damages. The defendant obtained a new trial, when the jury gave a verdict reinstating him in his property.

4.—Experiment off Portsmouth with the new Lancaster gun. The target was one of the Needle rocks. The first and second shots failed; the third, fourth, and fifth took a very high flight, went far above the rocks over the lofty hill on which the lighthouse stands, and damaged that structure on bursting.

The terrified inhabitants soon made signals of distress, and the firing was discontinued.

4.—At the Appleby Assizes, John Atkinson, organist, was sentenced to nine months' imprisonment for carrying off (with her own consent) Ann Jane Ward, a pupil in Miss Bishop's boarding-school, twelve years of age, and heiress of 10,000*l.* A marriage ceremony had been gone through at Greta Green.

6.—At Kuruk-Derè, General Guyon (Kurshid Pasha) attacks a force of 20,000 Russians approaching Kars; but, after a loose irregular combat of four hours' duration, the Turks retreated in confusion, leaving 1,200 killed on the field, 1,800 wounded, and 15 pieces of cannon. Above 2,000 were taken prisoners. Long before the fight became general, there was scarcely one superior officer to be seen on the field.

9.—During a severe thunderstorm at Ipswich, St. Mary's National School was set on fire by lightning, and three of the children killed. Nearly the whole of the pupils in the boys' department were thrown down and injured.

10.—Fire at Varna, destroying large quantities of the military stores gathered there by the allied armies.

12.—Parliament prorogued by the Queen in person. His Highness the Maharajah Dhuleep Singh occupied a seat on the woolsack.

15.—At the Fête Napoleon intimation is made that the Emperor had set apart 8,000,000 francs to carry out the will of Napoleon I.

16.—The Rev. Thomas Robinson, a benefited clergyman of the Isle of Wight, commits suicide by throwing himself from the summit of Shakspeare's Cliff.

—The fortress of Bomarsund, occupied by 2,235 men, surrenders to the allied fleet in the Baltic, after a severe cannonade. The news of this first success in the war was received with great enthusiasm throughout Britain and France, on the 19th.

17.—Fire on the premises of Messrs. Cubitt, builders, Pimlico. The workshops were nearly all destroyed, and their contents greatly injured.

26.—Gathering of Literary and Scientific Institutions at Worsley Hall, the seat of the Earl of Ellesmere, for the purpose of securing a friendly reunion, and of aiding a fund to purchase a library for the Institutional Association of Yorkshire and Lancashire.

28.—Renewed disturbances at Madrid in consequence of the departure of the Queen-mother.

29.—A combined English and French squadron make an unsuccessful attack on the fortified Russian town of Petropaulovski, in Kamschatka. The commander of the English division (Admiral Price) committed suicide in his cabin during the engagement.

30.—Archdeacon Robert Wilberforce resigns his preferment in the Established Church "not being any longer able to subscribe to the Supremacy of the Crown." He had previously published a book on the doctrine of "The Real Presence in the Eucharist."

September 4.—Laying of the submarine telegraph between Holyhead and Balcadden Bay, Ireland.

5.—Visit of Prince Albert to the Emperor of the French at Boulogne.

8.—Died, aged 72, Cardinal Angelo Mai, Oriental and Biblical scholar.

14.—The allied forces land in the Crimea. The troops, consisting of 24,000 English, 22,000 French, and 8,000 Turks, sailed from Varna on the 5th, and arrived at daybreak this morning at the place of disembarkation, near Old Fort. Before nightfall all the infantry and part of the artillery were landed. On the 15th the swell on the shore considerably impeded operations, but some progress was made through the exertions of the fleet under the command of Rear-Admiral Sir Edmund Lyons. Before leaving Varna a series of instructions was issued to our troops by Lord Raglan, providing for all contingencies likely to happen before landing. Owing to the shifting, through accident or some other cause, of a buoy laid down on the night of the 13th, to mark the common landing-place, the English troops were separated a little from the French, and landed on the narrow strip of beach which divided the Lake of Kamishlu from the sea.

15.—Attempt to upset a train conveying a party of Orangemen from Londonderry to Enniskillen. Large stones were laid along the line at various places, and on the train coming up one of the engines was thrown down the embankment, and the other came into collision with the carriages. One driver was killed, and two others injured. The Orangemen attributed the outrage to the malevolence of the Roman Catholics, who in turn denied the accusation, and offered 100*l.* reward to discover the perpetrators. The coroner's jury returned a verdict of wilful murder against six persons, all workmen on the line, believing that the outrage had originated in a dispute with their employers.

18.—The Rev. Hugh Pollard Willoughby, Rector of Burthorpe, Gloucestershire, attempts to shoot Mr. Giffard, barrister, in the Central Criminal Court. The ball fell out of the pistol, and the powder inflicted only a slight wound. When tried for the offence, the jury returned a verdict of Not guilty, on the ground of insanity.

—St. George's Hall, Liverpool, formally opened with a musical festival. The British Association commenced its sittings in the building on the 20th.

19.—The Charlotte troop-ship wrecked in Algoa Bay. Every means was taken to make a communication with the shore. The life-boat was launched, and three times approached the wreck, but by some strange terror the unfortunate persons on board could not avail themselves of the means of safety within their reach. At daybreak next morning not a vestige of the ill-fated vessel was to be seen where she was wrecked; but a mass of broken masts and timber entangled in torn ropes and sails lay along the shore. By this disaster sixty-two soldiers of the 27th, eleven women, all the children, twenty-six in number, and eighteen of the crew perished. The few who were saved leapt over the side and trusted to the mercy of the waves.

20.—Battle of the Alma. General Bosquet's division crossed the river near the mouth about 11.30; the Turkish battalion passing at the same time close to the bar and within musket range of the beach. This movement was unopposed. With inconceivable rapidity the Zouaves swarmed up the cliff, and it was not till they formed on the height and deployed from behind a mound there that the Russian batteries opened upon them. Waiting the development of the French attack, Lord Raglan caused our infantry for a time to lie down and remain quite passive; but, wearying of this inactivity, and anticipating a little in a military point of view the crisis of action, he gave orders for our whole line to advance. "Up rose those serried masses," writes the Times' correspondent, "and, passing through a fearful shower of round case-shot and shell, they dashed into the Alma, and floundered through the waters, which were literally torn into foam by the deadly hail. At the other side of the river were a number of vineyards occupied by Russian riflemen. Three of the staff were here shot down; but, led by Lord Raglan in person, they advanced, cheering on the men. And now came the turning-point of the battle, in which Lord Raglan, by his sagacity and military skill, probably secured the victory at a smaller sacrifice than would have been otherwise the case. He dashed over the bridge followed by his staff. From the road over it, under the Russian guns, he saw the state of the action. The British line, which he had ordered to advance, was struggling through the river and up the heights in masses, firm indeed, but mowed down by the murderous fire of the batteries, and by grape, round-shot, shell, canister, case-shot, and musketry, from some of the guns in the central battery, and from an immense and compact mass of Russian infantry. Then commenced one of the most bloody and determined struggles in the annals of war. The 2d Division, led by Sir De Lacy Evans, in the most dashing manner crossed the stream on the right. The 7th Fusiliers, led by Colonel Yea, were swept down by fifties. The 55th, 30th, and 95th, led by Brigadier Pennefather (who was in the thickest of the fight, cheering on his men), again and again were checked, indeed, but never drew back in their onward progress, which was marked by a fierce roll of Minié musketry; and Brigadier Adams, with the 41st, 47th, and 49th, bravely charged up the hill, and aided them in the battle. Sir George Brown, conspicuous on a grey horse, rode in front of his Light Division, urging them with voice and gesture. The 7th, diminished by one-half, fell back to reform their columns lost for the time; the 23d, with eight officers dead and four wounded, were still rushing to the front, aided by the 15th, 33d, 77th, and 88th. Down went Sir George in a cloud of dust in front of the battery. He was soon up, and shouted, '23rd, I'm all right. Be sure I'll remember this day,' and led them on again; but in the shock produced by the fall of their chief the gallant regiment suffered terribly, while paralysed for the moment. Meantime, the Guards on the right of the Light Division and the brigade of the Highlanders were storming the heights on the left. Their line was almost as regular as though they were in Hyde-park. Suddenly a tornado of round and grape rushed through from the terrible battery, and a roar of musketry from behind it thinned their front ranks by dozens. It was evident that our troops were just able to contend with the Russians, favoured as they were by a great position. At this very time an immense mass of Russian infantry were seen moving down towards the battery. They halted. It was the crisis of the day. Sharp, angular, and solid, they looked as if they were cut out of the solid rock. It was beyond all doubt that, if our infantry, harrassed and thinned as they were, got into the battery, they would have to encounter a formidable fire, which they were but ill calculated to bear. Lord Raglan saw the difficulties of the situation. He asked if it would be possible to get a couple of guns to bear on these masses. The reply was 'Yes; ' and an artillery officer brought up two guns to fire on the Russian squares. The first shot missed, but the next, and the next, and the next, cut through the ranks so cleanly, and so keenly, that a clear lane could be seen for a moment through the square. After a few rounds the columns of the square became broken, wavered to and fro, broke, and fled over the brow of the hill, leaving behind them six or seven distinct lines of dead, lying as close as possible to each other, marking the passage of the fatal messengers. This act relieved our infantry of a great incubus, and they continued their magnificent and fearful progress. The Duke of Cambridge encouraged his men by voice and example, and proved himself worthy of his proud command and of the royal race from whence he comes. 'Highlanders,' said Sir C. Campbell, ere they came to the charge, 'I am going to ask a favour of you: it is, that you will act so as to justify me in asking permission of the Queen for you to wear a bonnet! Don't pull a trigger till you're within a yard of the Russians!' They charged and well they obeyed their chieftain's wish. Sir Colin had his horse shot under him; but he was up immediately and at the head of his men, shouting, 'We'll hae naen but Highland bonnets here!' but the Guards passed on abreast, and claimed, with the 33d, the honour of capturing a cannon. They had stormed the right of the battery ere the Highlanders had got into the left, and it is said the Scots Fusilier Guards were the first to enter. The second and Light Division crowned the heights. The French turned the guns on the hill against the flying masses, which the cavalry in vain tried to cover. A few faint struggles from the scattered infantry, a few rounds of cannon and musketry, and the enemy fled to the south-east, leaving three generals, drums, three guns, 700 prisoners, and 4,000 killed and wounded behind them." The allied loss was 619 killed and 2,860 wounded. The Russian loss was reported to be about 8,000.

22.—Died, at Stoke Albany, Notts, in his 76th year, Lord Denman, formerly Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench.

23.—The Russians sink seven vessels of their Black Sea fleet at the entrance of the harbour of Sebastopol. An eye-witness writes:—"Two days after the Alma a rumour spread through the allied fleet that the Russian squadron, after so many months' confinement, was about to weigh anchor, and try a desperate conflict with the force which had so long condemned it to inactivity. But it soon appeared that a sacrifice after the fashion of Moscow was contemplated by the Russian commandant. While the English were looking on, the seven vessels began slowly to sink at their moorings, and within half an hour they lay at the bottom, with nothing visible but the tops of their masts, effectually barring the entrance against any force for many a month to come."

27.—Collision off Cape Race, between the French steamer Vesta, carrying 147 passengers, and the English mail-steamer Arctic, carrying 233 passengers, and a crew numbering 135. The Vesta was so seriously injured that a number of those on board took to the boats for the purpose of reaching the Arctic, but, in the confusion incident to the collision, they were both swamped, and all on board drowned. By great skill the captain managed to keep his shattered vessel afloat till he reached St. John's. To the Arctic the accident was of the most calamitous character. The head of the vessel was laid for the nearest land, Cape Race, but, in four hours and a half after the collision, the water rose to the fires, which it extinguished, and the ship foundered. Out of all on board only 31 of the crew and 14 passengers were saved. They were in two boats, and managed to reach the coast of Newfoundland.

28.—The allied armies, after accomplishing a brilliant and successful flank-march, establish a basis of operations at Balaklava.

29.—Death of Marshal St. Arnaud, leader of the French division of the expeditionary force in the Crimea. Writing to his widow, the Emperor said:—"He associated his name with the military glory of France on the day when, having decided upon landing in the Crimea, in spite of timid counsels, he gained with Lord Raglan the battle of the Alma, and opened to our army the road to Sebastopol. I have lost in him a devoted friend in difficult positions, as France has lost in him a soldier always ready to serve her in the moment of danger." The words "timid counsels" giving rise to some irritation here, a paragraph afterwards appeared in the Moniteur explaining that their only aim was "to throw out in stronger relief the energy of Marshal St. Arnaud, by contrasting it with those very natural differences of opinion which, on the eve of so important a decision, had manifested themselves in the councils of the French army and fleet."

30.—Arrival of the news of the battle of the Alma. A Gazette extraordinary was at once issued, containing the telegraphic despatch sent by Lord Stratford de Redcliffe to the Earl of Clarendon, by way of Belgrade. Shortly before 10 o'clock at night, the Lord Mayor proclaimed the victory from the steps of the Royal Exchange.

—The Czar's reception of the news of the Alma. Mr. Kinglake embodies various current stories in his narrative of this occurrence. "Prince Menschikoff wrote no despatch recounting the disaster he had undergone on the Alma, but he sent an aide-de-camp to St. Petersburg. For several days towards the close of the month of September the Czar had been growing more and more impatient for tidings—an impatience rather longing for good news than expecting evil. It was said that he looked upon what he deemed to be the unwarlike rashness of the invasion with a feeling akin to pity; and assuring himself that the Allies would soon be his prisoners, he ordered, they say, that in that event the captive armies of the West, but more especially the English, should be treated with kindness. At length the moment came when it was announced to the Czar that an aide-de-camp fresh come from the Crimea was in the ante-room. He was instantly brought into the Czar's presence. By brief word or eager gesture he was ordered to speak. He spoke: 'Sire, your army has covered itself with glory, but——.' Then instantly the Czar knew that the tale to be told was one of disaster. With violent imprecations he drove the aide-de-camp from his presence. The aide-de-camp, however, understood that he was liable to be again called in; and after a time (a quarter of an hour I think I have heard) he was once more in the Czar's presence. The Czar was changed in look. He seemed to be more composed than he had been, but was pale. When the aide-de-camp approached, the Czar thrust forward his hand as though to snatch at something, and imperatively cried, 'The despatch!' The aide-de-camp answered, 'Sire, I bring no despatch.'—'No despatch?' the Czar asked, his fury beginning to rekindle as he spoke. 'Sire, Prince Menschikoff was much hurried, and ——.'—'Hurried!' interrupted the Czar.

‘What ! what do you mean ? Do you mean to say he was running ?’ Again his fury became uncontrollable ; and it seems that it was some time before he was able to hear the cruel sound of the truth. When at length the Czar came to know what had befallen his army, he gave way to sheer despair ; for he deemed Sebastopol lost, and had no longer any belief that the Chersonese was still a field on which he might use his energies.”

October 1 (Sunday).—General thanksgiving for the abundant harvest observed with great devotion and gratitude. Allusion was made in most of the churches to the victory of the Alma.

2.—The morning papers publish telegrams announcing the fall of Sebastopol. One, dated Bucharest, September 28, and purporting to come from the Consul of France to his Excellency the Minister of Foreign Affairs, was in these words :—“A French steamer, coming out of the Bosphorus, met another coming from the Crimea, which announced that she was carrying to Constantinople the intelligence of the capture of Sebastopol. The steamer from the Bosphorus touched at Varna to announce the event, of which we expect hourly an official confirmation.” On the 3d a despatch in confirmation of the above was received by the Turkish Minister from Vienna :—“Today (October 2) ; at noon, a Tartar arrived from Constantinople with despatches from Omar Pasha ; his Highness being at Silistria, the despatches had to be forwarded to him at that place. The Tartar announces the capture of Sebastopol. 18,000 Russians were killed and wounded, and 22,000 made prisoners. Fort Constantine was destroyed, and other forts mounting 200 guns taken. Of the Russian fleet, six sail of the line were sunk, and Prince Menschikoff had retired to the bottom of the bay with the remaining vessels, declaring that he would burn them if the attack continued.” “The public,” wrote the Times, “must form their own opinion for the present as to the credibility of this statement, but we are enabled to say that it is regarded with great confidence in the highest quarters, and when the same despatch reached the Emperor of the French at the camp at Helfaut, he instantly announced to the troops that Sebastopol had fallen.”

4.—Conflagration at Memel, destroying the greater part of the town, including the Custom-house, the banks, churches, immense warehouses, and stacks of timber, hemp, flax, and tallow.

6.—Fire at Newcastle and Gateshead. Between twelve and one o'clock this morning a fire broke out in Wilson's worsted manufactory, Hillgate, Gateshead. After raging with great fury for about two hours, the roof fell in, and the heat became so intense that it melted the sulphur stored in an adjoining bonded warehouse, which came pouring out in burning torrents, and communicated the fire to every storey of the building. In the immediate neighbourhood was another warehouse filled with the most inflammable materials—3,000 tons of sulphur, 130 tons of nitrate of soda, 10 tons of peat-ash, and 5 tons of arsenic. Soon after the flames had taken possession of this building an explosion took place which shook to their foundations the towns on each side of the Tyne, and an enormous mass of burning material was projected across the river to the houses on the Quay-side. The bridges shook as if they would fall to pieces, and the surface of the river was agitated as by a storm. The shock of this tremendous explosion was felt over the whole eastern seaboard, from Blyth, in Northumberland, to Seaham, in Durham. The crowds assembled upon the quay to witness the fire on the Gateshead side were mown down as if by a discharge of artillery, many of them being killed on the spot by the blazing material or suffocated by the sulphur. The fire also began to spread rapidly among the “chares,” or lanes, leading off the Quay, scores of houses and offices falling before its fury. The Custom-house was at one time in serious danger, and the shipping in the river required to be moved to a lower berth. All through the night, and the two following days, the fire continued its devouring course, the most prominent properties then destroyed being Davidson's large flour-mill, standing near the original seat of the fire, and the timber-yard of Carr & Co. In Gateshead, the entire mass of buildings—extending several hundred yards—from Bridge-street and Church-street, eastward, and from Church-walk to the river, was entirely consumed. On the Newcastle side, from the corner of Sandgate to within a few yards of the Custom-house and back to the Butcher-bank, shops, offices, warehouses, and dwelling-houses were one mass of calcined ruins. The loss of life was also great. Upwards of forty bodies were recovered from the ruins, among the number being Ensign Poynter of the 26th Cameronians, and Corporal Stephenson of the same regiment, who perished exerting themselves to subdue the flames and protect property ; Mr. Bertram, a magistrate ; Mr. Dobson, architect ; and a family of four, named Hart. Fifty were carried, wounded, to the Infirmary, and about an equal number to the Dispensary. A general opinion prevailing that gunpowder in large quantities had been stored in the warehouse where the explosion took place, a most searching inquiry was made under the direction of officials sent by Government. It was not established that gunpowder to any extent whatever was stored in the warehouse, but from the evidence (after experiments) of H. L. Pattinson, of Felling Chemical Works, it appeared that the inflammable substances piled on the various floors, when mixed together, as naturally happened, and subjected to copious streams of water, became possessed of an explosive force much greater than even manufactured gunpowder.

8.—The Bank of Victoria at Ballarat broken into, and 14,300*l.* in money and 200 ounces of gold-dust carried off. The two watchers on the premises were overpowered, and the safe rifled by three men disguised with crape over their faces. On the testimony of Quinn, an accomplice, Henry Garratt, an English convict, was apprehended in London, and a large part of the plunder found in his possession. He was sent back to Melbourne, where he was tried and executed for the offence.

13.—Her Majesty issues a Commission directed to Prince Albert, and a large number of noblemen and gentlemen, empowering them to raise and distribute a "Patriotic Fund" for relief of the orphans and widows of soldiers, sailors, and marines, who may fall in the present war. Public feeling being greatly roused by the alleged insufficient provision made for the wounded, the Times undertook to administer a fund which, in seven days, amounted to 7,000*l.* It distributed in all no less than 25,462*l.* A third body, calling itself "The Central Association in aid of the Wives and Families of Soldiers ordered on Foreign Service," administered upwards of 100,000*l.*

17.—Recriminatory correspondence between Sir James Graham and Admiral Napier. Sir James Graham, in answer to a letter from Sir C. Napier, writes:—"You refer to my letters at the end of August, as contemplating then the early termination of active operations in the Baltic for this year. I was not prepared, even at that time, for the immediate departure of the French army after the capture of Bomarsund, and I pointed out to you Abo, Sweaborg, and Revel as points which, with military aid, were open to attack. Much less was I prepared for the withdrawal of the French squadron from the combined naval operations, almost instantaneously with the departure of the army, so soon as Bomarsund had been destroyed." And he refers to a report made by General Jones, to the effect that Sweaborg might be successfully attacked, in which opinion General Baraguay-d'Hilliers had concurred. Sir James Graham closes this letter by remarking that an effort should have been made by the combined forces of the Allies, but that, as the French squadron was on its way home, nothing now remained but gradually to withdraw the line-of-battle ships, and to await the moment when ice should enclose the Russian fleet within the Gulf of Finland for the winter. Sir Charles's reply is dated from Kiel. Referring to the lateness of the season, and the continuation of bad weather, the Admiral says:—"Had people considered one moment, they would have seen the impracticability of the attempt; but they thought Sebastopol was taken, and I must take Sweaborg, Revel, and Cronstadt. After the French generals had reconnoitred Sweaborg, I examined it again, and sent home my opinion as to how it ought to be attacked—by ships, batteries, gun-boats, mortar-boats, &c., at great length; and the Admiralty, as if anxious to get up a case against me, take it into their heads that I meant to attack it with the fleet alone, and were going to send back the French squadron and Admiral Plumridges's ships; and though I have remonstrated, they persist in still thinking so; and you, Sir James, seem to have fallen into the same error. You say, 'Then came your own second reconnoissance, and a plan of naval attack, which you considered practicable.' Had I seen the smallest chance of success, I should have attacked without the French; but I did not: and surely my opinion is worth more than a general of Engineers; but the Admiralty seem to think differently. The general talked of destroying Sweaborg in two hours. It is much more likely the ships would have been set fire to by red-hot shot and shells, and some of them on shore by that time. Be assured it is a most difficult place to attack, and whoever does it will have a hard nut to crack. No admiral has as yet ventured to attack such a fortress, defended, as it is, by art and nature. The sunken rocks alone, combined with the smoke from the guns and steamers, is no bad defence." Sir Charles winds up as follows:—"I am conscious of having done my duty; and if you are dissatisfied, you can bring me to a court-martial, or remove me: as I before mentioned to the Admiralty, I am very far from well; and I assure you this correspondence has not improved my health, and I am suffering much from cold. . . ." To this letter Sir J. Graham rejoined:—"I am very unwilling to be involved in a written controversy with you, but you have brought it on yourself, by your report of the 25th of September, after your second reconnoissance of Sweaborg. That report appeared to me to be entirely at variance with the opinions previously expressed by you; and I certainly understood you then to say, that if you had mortars, rockets, and Lancaster guns, you considered Sweaborg assailable by sea. In May you declared it to be unassailable by sea or land, and the Admiralty did not send you the appliances which, in September, you declared to be wanting, because they believed, from your account, they would be useless against a place which in the first instance you pronounced to be impregnable. I could not bring myself to believe that the want of Lancaster guns, or even of mortars, rendered a sea attack, on your plan of the 25th September, impossible, if you had twenty-five sail of the line assembled before the place, with all the means of vertical fire. I am sincerely sorry to hear that you are unwell. I hope that Kiel harbour and milder air will restore you to health." In the last of the series, written from Kiel, November 6th, Sir C. Napier says:—"There is not a word in either my public or private letters that justifies the construction that you and the Admiralty have thought proper to put on them. My letter in answer to their lordships' last despatch is plain enough; but if their lordships think proper to deliberate on one part of my letter, and ignore another part, I can only protest against it; and I am quite prepared to defend myself against any unjust attacks that are made against me. Enough has not been done to satisfy an impatient public, as you called them; some one must be blamed, and I am the chosen one; but I will not allow myself to be crushed, because I could not do impossibilities. All this stir has been caused by the reports of two engineers (one French and the other English), diametrically opposed to each other; in addition to which was the report of the capture of Sebastopol, not yet taken, though the fleet there is assisted by an army of 70,000 men, in a fine climate; and I have been expected to take places much stronger with a fleet alone; and the same people who so often warned me against unnecessarily risking my fleet, are now dissatisfied because I did not expose them to certain destruction. I have gone through the world with honour and credit to myself, and just as I am about to leave it unworthy attempts are being made to ruin my reputation; but they will fail, and recoil on themselves."

17.—The siege batteries of the allied armies opened fire upon the Russian works south of Sebastopol about half-past six o'clock this morning, exploding a magazine in Fort Constantine, and injuring the face of the fort.

22.—Dr. Rae, the Arctic traveller, arrives at Deal with intelligence of the fate of Sir John Franklin's expedition. According to information from Esquimaux in Pelly Bay, in the spring, four winters past (1850) a party of white men, amounting to about forty, were seen travelling southward over the ice, and dragging a boat with them, by Esquimaux, who were killing seals near the north shore of King William's Land. None of the party could speak the Esquimaux language; but by signs the natives were made to understand that their ship, or ships, had been crushed by ice, and that they were now going to where they expected to find deer to shoot. From the appearance of the men, all of whom, except one officer, looked thin, they were then supposed to be getting short of provisions, and they purchased a small seal from the natives. The same season, at a later date, but previously to the breaking-up of the ice, the bodies of some thirty persons were discovered on the continent, and five on an island near it, about a long day's journey to the N.W. of a large stream, which could be no other than Back's Great Fish River (named by the Esquimaux Oot-ko-hi-ca-lik), as its description and that of the low shore in the neighbourhood of Point Ogle and Montreal Island agree exactly with that of Sir George Back. Some of the bodies had been buried (probably those of the first victims of famine), some were in tents, others under the boat, which had been turned over to form a shelter, and several lay scattered about in different directions. Of those found on the island, one was supposed to have been an officer, as he had a telescope strapped over his shoulders, and his double-barrelled gun lay underneath him. From the mutilated state of many of the corpses, and the contents of the kettles, it was evident that our wretched countrymen had been driven to the last resource—cannibalism—as a means of prolonging existence. There appeared to have been an abundant stock of ammunition, as the powder was emptied in a heap on the ground by the natives out of the kegs or cases containing it; and a quantity of ball and shot was found below high-water mark, having probably been left on the ice close to the beach.

24.—Election of the New Hebdomadal Council at the University of Oxford, under the Act of last session.

25.—Tried at the Central Criminal Court Joseph Windle Cole, merchant, charged with obtaining money by representing that he had a disposable power in certain spelter and tin, and of issuing, with the assistance of a wharfinger named Maltby (not in custody), invalid dock warrants with intent to defraud. The first case taken up was that of Messrs. Lang and Co., of Mincing-lane, who, on the faith of warrants handed to them by the prisoner, had advanced the sum of 10,000*l.* The jury returned a verdict of Guilty, and the prisoner was sentenced, by Chief Baron Pollock, to four years' imprisonment. Other false warrants had been knowingly put into circulation through the house of Overend, Gurney, and Co.

— The African mail-steamer Forerunner wrecked off the coast of Madeira, under circumstances of inexcusable folly. She went down headforemost in 120 feet of water, carrying fourteen persons with her. The Board of Trade Commission pronounced that the wreck was occasioned by the vessel "being negligently run upon a well-known rock, situate about 200 yards from the cliff of Fara, the land being at the time distinctly visible, and no necessity whatever existing for the vessel being so near the spot." The captain was declared incompetent and dismissed the service.

— Battle of Balaklava. "The enemy," writes Lord Raglan, "commenced their operations by attacking the work on our side of the village of Camara, and after very little resistance carried it. They likewise got possession of the three others in contiguity to it, being opposed only in one, and that only for a very short space of time. The furthest of the three they did not retain, but the immediate abandonment of the others enabled them to take possession of the guns in them, amounting in the whole to seven. Those in the three lesser forts were spiked by the one English artilleryman who was in each. The Russian cavalry at once advanced, supported by artillery in very great strength. One portion of them assailed the front and right flank of the 93d, and were instantly driven back by the vigorous and steady fire of that distinguished regiment, under Lieutenant-Colonel Ainslie. The other and larger mass turned towards her Majesty's heavy cavalry, and afforded Brigadier-General Scarlett, under the guidance of Lieutenant-General the Earl of Lucan, the opportunity of inflicting upon them a most signal defeat. The ground was very unfavourable for the attack of our Dragoons, but no obstacle was sufficient to check their advance, and they charged into the Russian column, which soon sought safety in flight, although far superior in numbers. As the enemy withdrew from the ground which they had momentarily occupied, I directed the cavalry, supported by the 4th Division, under Lieutenant-General Sir George Cathcart, to move forward, and take advantage of any opportunity to regain the heights; and, not having been able to accomplish this immediately, and it appearing that an attempt was making to remove the captured guns, the Earl of Lucan was desired to advance rapidly, follow the enemy in their retreat, and try to prevent them from effecting their object. In the meanwhile the Russians had time to reform on their own ground, with artillery in front and upon their flanks. From some misconception of the instruction to advance, the Lieutenant-General considered that he was bound to attack at all hazards, and he accordingly ordered Major-General the Earl of Cardigan to move forward with the Light Brigade. This order was obeyed in the most spirited manner. Lord Cardigan charged with the utmost vigour, attacked a battery which was firing upon the advancing squadrons, and, having passed beyond it, engaged the Russian cavalry in its rear; but there his troops were assailed by artillery and infantry as well as cavalry, and necessarily retired, after having committed much havoc upon the enemy. They effected this movement without haste or confusion; but the loss they have sustained has, I deeply lament, been very severe in officers, men, and horses, only counterbalanced by the brilliancy of the attack and the gallantry, order, and discipline which distinguished it, forming a striking contrast to the conduct of the enemy's cavalry, which had previously been engaged with the Heavy Brigade." Next day the enemy moved out of Sebastopol with a large force of infantry, cavalry, and artillery—amounting to 6,000 or 7,000 men—and attacked the left of the 2d Division, commanded by Lieutenant-General Sir de Lacy Evans, who speedily and energetically repulsed them, assisted by one of the batteries of the 1st Division, and some guns of the Light Division. He was supported by the brigade of Guards, also by several regiments of the 4th Division, and in the rear by the French division commanded by General Bosquet, who was most eager in his desire to give him every aid.

— The charge of the Light Brigade at Balaklava, which gave rise to much criticism, was caused by the following written order placed in the hands of Lord Lucan by Captain Nolan :—“ Lord Raglan wishes the cavalry to advance rapidly to the front, follow the enemy, and try to prevent the enemy carrying away the guns. Troop of Horse Artillery may accompany. French cavalry is on your left. Immediate.—R. AIREY.” “ After carefully reading the order,” writes Lord Lucan, “ I hesitated, and urged the uselessness of such an attack, and the dangers attending it. The aide-de-camp, in the most authoritative tone, stated that they were Lord Raglan's orders; that the cavalry should attack immediately. I asked him, ‘ Where, and what to do,’ as neither enemy nor guns were within sight. He replied in a most disrespectful but significant manner, pointing to the further end of the valley, ‘ There, my lord, is your enemy; there are your guns.’ So distinct in my opinion were your written instructions, and so positive and urgent were the orders delivered by the aide-de-camp, that I felt it was imperative on me to obey, and I informed Lord Cardigan that he was to advance; and to the objections he made, and in which I entirely agreed, I replied that the order was from your lordship.” Captain Nolan, the bearer of the order, was among the earliest who fell in the charge. The Times correspondent described the unparalleled feat, as witnessed from a point commanding a view of the charge :—“ The whole brigade scarcely made one effective regiment, according to the numbers of continental armies; and yet it was more than we could spare. As they passed towards the front, the Russians opened on them from the guns in the redoubt on the right, with volleys of musketry and rifles. They swept proudly past, glittering in the morning sun in all the pride and splendour of war. We could scarcely believe the evidence of our senses! Surely that handful of men are not going to charge an army in position? Alas! it was but too true; their desperate valour knew no bounds, and far indeed was it removed from its so-called better part—discretion. They advanced in two lines, quickening their pace as they closed towards the enemy. A more fearful spectacle was never witnessed than by those who, without the power to aid, beheld their heroic countrymen rushing to the arms of death. At the distance of 1,200 yards the whole line of the enemy belched forth, from thirty iron mouths, a flood of smoke and flame, through which hissed the deadly balls. Their flight was marked by instant gaps in our ranks, by dead men and horses, by steeds flying wounded or riderless across the plain. The first line is broken, it is joined by the second, they never halt or check their speed an instant; with diminished ranks, thinned by those thirty guns, which the Russians had laid with the most deadly accuracy, with a halo of flashing steel above their heads, and with a cheer which was many a noble fellow's death-cry, they flew into the smoke of the batteries; but ere they were lost from view the plain was strewn with their bodies, and with the carcasses of horses.

They were exposed to an oblique fire from the batteries on the hills on both sides, as well as to a direct fire of musketry. Through the clouds of smoke we could see their sabres flashing as they rode up to the guns and dashed between them, cutting down the gunners as they stood. We saw them riding through the guns, as I have said : to our delight we saw them returning, after breaking through a column of Russian infantry, and scattering them like chaff, when the flank fire of the battery on the hill swept them down, scattered and broken as they were. Wounded men and dismounted troopers flying towards us told the sad tale : demi-gods could not have done what we had failed to do. At the very moment when they were about to retreat, an enormous mass of Lancers was hurled on their flank. Colonel Shewell, of the 8th Hussars, saw the danger, and rode his few men straight at them, cutting his way through with fearful loss. The other regiments turned and engaged in a desperate encounter. With courage too great almost for credence, they were breaking their way through the columns which enveloped them, when there took place an act of atrocity without parallel in the modern warfare of civilized nations. The Russian gunners, when the storm of cavalry passed, returned to their guns. They saw their own cavalry mingled with the troopers who had just ridden over them, and, to the eternal disgrace of the Russian name, the miscreants poured a murderous volley of grape and canister on the mass of struggling men and horses, mingling friend and foe in one common ruin. It was as much as our Heavy Cavalry Brigade could do to cover the retreat of the miserable remnants of that band of heroes as they returned to the place they had so lately quitted in all the pride of life. At 11.35 not a British soldier, except the dead and dying, was left in front of those bloody Muscovite guns. Our loss, as far as it could be ascertained, in killed, wounded, and missing, at two o'clock to-day, was as follows :—

	Went into Action. Strong.	Returned from Action.	Loss.
4th Light Dragoons	118	39	79
8th Hussars . . .	104	38	66
11th Hussars . . .	110	25	85
13th Light Dragoons	130	61	69
17th Lancers . . .	145	35	110

26.—Destruction by fire of the bonded warehouses in Launcelot's Hay, Liverpool, destroying property valued at over 95,000*l*.

—The Dutch Boers blockade a tribe of Caffres under Makapan in a cavern to which they had retreated. When a capitulation was made in November, it was found that 900 of them were suffocated.

28.—Musical fête at the Crystal Palace in support of the Patriotic Fund. The great attraction of the day was the performance of the band of the French Guides, sent over for the occasion by the Emperor.

29.—John Bright writes in reply to an invitation to attend the Manchester Patriotic Fund Meeting :—"My doctrine would have been non-intervention in this case. The danger of the Russian power was a phantom ; the necessity of permanently upholding the Mahometan rule in Europe is an absurdity. Our love for civilization, when we subject the Greeks and Christians to the Turks, is a sham ; and our sacrifices for freedom, when working out the behests of the Emperor of the French, and coaxing Austria to help us, are pitiful imposture. The evils of non-intervention were remote and vague, and could neither be weighed nor described in any accurate terms. . . . You must excuse me, if I cannot go with you ; I will have no part in this terrible crime. My hands shall be unstained with the blood which is being shed. The necessity of maintaining themselves in office may influence an Administration ; delusion may mislead a people ; Vattel may afford you a law and a defence ; but no respect for men who form a Government, no regard I have for going with the stream, and no fear of being deemed wanting in patriotism, shall influence me in favour of a policy which, in my conscience, I believe to be as criminal before God as it is destructive of the true interests of my country."

30.—A Working Men's College opened in Red Lion-square. The inaugural lecture was spoken by the Rev. F. D. Maurice, in St. Martin's Hall.

November 3.—Riot at Cambridge, between the police and the undergraduates, who interrupted a lecture being delivered in the Town Hall against the use of tobacco.

5.—Battle of Inkerman. Soon after midnight those who guarded the trenches or lay sleepless in their tents heard the tolling of bells as for some sacred ceremony. The distant sounds of chanting were even said to have been caught up by persons who watched still nearer to the beleaguered city. The solemn peal ceased about two hours before daylight, and was succeeded by the bright flash and heavy report of ordnance in the rear of the British lines. After a little time there was again a deep silence, only broken by a low rumbling heard by the furthest pickets, who thought it to be the noise of wagons laden with supplies entering the town. The morning was extremely dark, with a drizzling rain, rendering it almost impossible to discover anything beyond the flash and smoke of artillery and heavy musketry fire. It soon became evident that the enemy, under cover of a vast cloud of skirmishers, supported by dense columns of infantry, had advanced numerous batteries of large calibre to the high ground to the left and front of the 2d Division, while powerful columns of infantry attacked with great vigour the brigade of Guards. Additional batteries of heavy artillery were also placed by the enemy on the slope to our left; the guns in the field amounting in the whole to ninety pieces, independently of the ship-guns and those in the works of Sebastopol. Protected by a tremendous fire of shot, shell, and grape, the Russian columns advanced in great force, requiring every effort of gallantry on the part of our troops to resist them. At this time two battalions of French infantry, which had on the first notice been sent by General Bosquet, joined our right, and very materially contributed to the successful resistance to the attack, cheering with our men, and charging the enemy down the hill with great loss. About the same time a determined assault was made on our extreme left, and for a moment the enemy possessed themselves of four of our guns, three of which were retaken by the 88th, while the fourth was speedily recaptured by the 77th Regiment, under Lieutenant-Colonel Egerton. In the opposite direction the brigade of Guards, under his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, was engaged in a severe conflict. The enemy, under the cover of thick brushwood, advanced in two heavy bodies, and assaulted with great determination a small redoubt which had been constructed for two guns, but was not armed. The combat was most arduous, and the brigade, after displaying the utmost steadiness and gallantry, was obliged to retire before very superior numbers, until supported by a wing of the 20th Regiment of the 4th Division, when they again advanced and retook the redoubt. This ground was afterwards occupied by French troops, and the Guards speedily reformed in rear of the right flank of the 2d Division. In the meanwhile Lieutenant-General the Hon. Sir George Cathcart, with a few companies of the 68th Regiment, considering that he might make a strong impression by descending into the valley, and taking the enemy in flank, moved rapidly forward; but finding the heights above him in full occupation of the Russians, he suddenly discovered that he was entangled with a superior force; and, while attempting to withdraw his men, he received a mortal wound: shortly previous to which Brigadier-General Torrens, when leading the 68th, was likewise severely wounded. After this the battle continued with unabated vigour and with no positive result (the enemy bringing upon our line not only the fire of all the field batteries, but those in front of the works of the place, and the ship-guns) till the afternoon, when the symptoms of giving way first became apparent; and, although the fire did not cease, the retreat became general. Heavy masses were observed retiring over the bridge of the Inkerman, and ascending the opposite heights, abandoning on the field of battle five or six thousand dead and wounded, multitudes of the latter having already been carried off by them. In this, the severest engagement of the campaign, the British loss in killed and wounded was 2,612, of whom 145 were officers. French loss, 1,726. The Russians, said to have mustered 50,000 strong, were reported to have lost 12,000; but in no engagement during the war could the loss of the enemy be precisely ascertained.

5.—Arrival of Miss Florence Nightingale, with her nurses, at Scutari, on their mission of mercy to the wounded soldiers in hospital. Five rooms which had been set apart for wounded general officers, and were now fortunately unoccupied, were given up to the new nurses, who in appearance and demeanour formed a strong contrast to the usual aspect of hospital attendants. Under their management the chaotic confusion of the place was quickly reduced to order, and the wounded, before left for many long hours unattended, now scarcely uttered a groan without some gentle nurse being at hand to adjust their pillow or alleviate their pain. One of the nurses writing home on the 11th, when the wounded from Inkerman were being brought in, says:—“I know not which sight is most heartrending; to witness fine strong men worn down by exhaustion and sinking under it, or others coming in fearfully wounded. The whole of yesterday was spent in sewing men’s mattresses together, then in washing and assisting the surgeon to dress their wounds, and seeing the poor fellows made as comfortable as their circumstances would admit of after five days’ confinement on board ship, during which their wounds were not dressed. Out of the four wards committed to my charge, eleven men died in the night simply from exhaustion, which, humanly speaking, might have been stopped could I have laid my hands upon such nourishment as I know they ought to have had.” Medical as well as all other stores had been sent in profusion from England; yet even lint was wanting, or could not be found, for the dressing of the wounds. Medicines and medical appliances lay rotting on the beach at Varna, or buried in the hold of vessels in Balaklava harbour. It was even asserted that hospital stores sent from England by the Government were openly sold in the bazaars of Constantinople, and as far inland as Adrianople. In the discussions to which the neglect of the wounded gave rise, the Secretary-at-War admitted that a system had been engendered during the peace, “which greatly encumbered the hospitals, of check and countercheck, for the purpose of economy. There have been all manner of forms to be gone through before the stores could be issued to the medical officers. Every account I get says this: the medical men in their vocation are beyond all praise; they work night and day; their tenderness, humanity, zeal, and energy are mentioned by every one, friend or foe. But it does appear to me that the deficiency is this: that, with plenty of stores, no one seemed to know where to lay their hands upon them; with plenty of materials at their disposal, the forms were so cumbrous that they never could be produced with the rapidity required for the purposes of a military hospital."

11.—Seven lives lost at the Thistleyfield Colliery by the breaking of the chain to which the cage was attached.

—The Times, in a leading article, draws public attention to the sufferings and losses which had befallen our army in the Crimea:—"We are carrying on our part of the siege of Sebastopol with an army which sickness, the bloody victory of the Alma, and the inevitable consumption of life by an army acting in the face of an enemy, have reduced to little more than one-half of the number with which we landed in the Crimea on the 14th of September. We are obliged to eke out the scanty numbers of our force by draughts from the fleet, and when our ships were called upon to attack the Russian forts, their crews, weakened by cholera, and by the numbers detached to serve in the siege, did not suffice to work the whole of the guns."

12.—Died, aged 79, Charles Kemble, actor.

14.—Disastrous storm in the Black Sea. Of the French line-of-battle ships within the harbour of Balaklava two were wrecked and three disabled. The English Agamemnon and Sanspareil were driven ashore, but afterwards got off. Outside the roadstead the destruction among the transports was appalling. The Prince, a superb steamer of 2,700 tons, lately purchased for the transport service, had just arrived with a large body of troops, and an immense quantity of stores—being, in fact, the greater part of the winter clothing for the troops, medicines, and hospital necessaries. She had landed the troops; but not being able to enter the crowded harbour, was ordered outside. When the gale reached its height, she threw out additional anchors. The chain cables, however, had not been secured at the ends, and of course ran out at the hawse holes, when the ship drove on to the cliffs, where she was speedily dashed to fragments. All her crew (except a midshipman and six sailors), and some valuable officers of the Army and Medical Service, who chanced to be on board, perished with her. The money value of the vessel and cargo was not less than half a million. The Resolute, which was freighted with a prodigious quantity of munitions of war (including 700 tons of gunpowder), met the same fate. In an instant not a vestige was left of the ship or cargo, and all on board were drowned. Thirty-two English transports, many of them of great size and value, were wrecked either on the steep cliffs of Balaklava and the Chersonese promontory, or along the coast about Eupatoria. Many of these were burnt to prevent them falling into the hands of the Cossacks, who thronged down to the shore, and were said to have deliberately shot down the wrecked seamen as they clung to the rigging. The French transports did not suffer so seriously. They were much smaller than the English, and were sheltered in the bays and creeks which indented the French position. Of the transports saved, the greater part were dismasted, and many otherwise injured. The destruction of the Prince and her cargo was an incalculable mischief to the British army; and much of the intense suffering of the troops during the winter was caused by the loss of the clothing, blanketing, and other provisions against the severity of the climate, which she brought out. The loss of life was lamentable, exceeding 1,000, and the value of the shipping destroyed was over 2,000,000*l.* The armies on shore also suffered greatly from the effects of the storm. The tents were torn up from their fastenings, huts were blown down, and the men exposed naked and halfstarved to the full severity of the gale, and the bitter cold with which it was accompanied. Many soldiers were found dead in the trenches or on the heights; the sick and wounded were destroyed wholesale; horses died of cold and starvation; and the whole sanitary condition of the army became seriously deteriorated. It is probable that the enemy's troops suffered even more severely than the Allies—particularly those on the march over the exposed steppes of the Crimea and Southern Russia.

17.—Lord John Russell urges upon Lord Aberdeen the necessity for some change being made in the office of Secretary-at-War. "In order to carry on the war with efficiency, either the Prime Minister must be constantly urging, hastening, completing the military preparations, or the Minister of War must be strong enough to control other departments. Every objection of other Ministers—the plea of foreign interests to be attended to, of naval preparations not yet complete, and a thousand others, justifiable in the separate heads of departments, must be forced to yield to the paramount necessity of carrying on the war with efficiency of each service, and completeness of means to the end in view. If, therefore, the first considerations here presented lead to the conclusion that the Secretary of State for the War Department must be in the House of Commons, the latter considerations point to the necessity of having in that office a man who, from experience of military details, from inherent vigour of mind, and from weight with the House of Commons, can be expected to guide the great operations of war with authority and success. There is only one person belonging to the Government who combines these advantages. My conclusion is that before Parliament meets Lord Palmerston should be entrusted with the seals of the War Department." Lord Aberdeen answered:—"I think you will admit that, although another person might, perhaps, have been preferred on the first constitution of an office, it is a very different thing to displace a man who has discharged his duties ably and honourably, merely in the belief that another might be found still more efficient. Undoubtedly, the public service must be the first object; but, in the absence of any proved defect, or alleged incapacity, I can see no sufficient reason for such a change; which, indeed, I think is forbidden by a sense of justice and good faith. . . . On the whole, then, believing that any change like that proposed would be of doubtful advantage to the public, feeling very strongly that it would be an act of unfairness and injustice towards a colleague, and thinking, also, that all such changes, unless absolutely necessary, only tend to weaken Government, I must repeat that I could not honestly recommend it to the Queen."

17.—Died, aged 51, Lord Dudley Coutts Stuart, M.P., the zealous advocate of the rights of Poland.

18.—Died, at his residence near Great Yarmouth, in his 90th year, Captain George William Manby, well known as the inventor of apparatus for saving life in cases of shipwreck.

21.—Lord Raglan gazetted a Field Marshal: the commission to bear date 5th November.

23.—The Mary Graham, with a cargo of coals on board, driven ashore near Sunderland. Of twenty-four on board only one escaped.

25.—Died at Abbotsford, whither he had retired in broken health, John Gibson Lockhart, editor of the Quarterly Review and biographer of his great father-in-law, Sir Walter Scott.

28.—From the imperfect arrangements in the Commissariat and Land Transport departments, the sufferings endured by our army in the Crimea throughout this and the following month were of the most intense description, and excited a corresponding feeling in England. The siege was practically in abeyance; our army, weakened by losses and sickness, was only able to hold its own; the batteries were nearly silent; the camp was rapidly becoming a quagmire; the roads, cut up by the daily passage of heavy guns and Commissariat wagons, became almost impassable. Horses and mules died of cold, starvation, and hard work; indeed, the army had more than it could do to feed itself. Worn out by night work in the trenches, amid rain and storm, the men returned to the camp only to find dripping tents, rotten straw embedded in mud to lie upon, and an overtaxed Commissariat unable any longer to supply them with rations. To add to this catalogue of disasters, the cholera again broke out in the camp this morning, and for weeks carried off, on an average, sixty men a day. The poor Turks, encamped above Balaklava, neglected by their own authorities, were cut off in hundreds by famine and disease, till of a force originally 8,000 strong less than one-half remained of famine-stricken spectres.

29.—Tried at the Central Criminal Court the Rev. Thomas Tierney Ferguson, a Roman Catholic priest, charged with felony, in so far as he had unlawfully solemnized a marriage between two persons of the Roman Catholic persuasion in a place other than the one mentioned in the certificate of the superintending registrar, and also in the absence of the registrar for the district. He was found guilty; but as the sole object of the prosecution was to have the law declared, he was only called on to give recognizances to appear to receive judgment when called on.

30.—The Nile, coasting steamer trading between London and Liverpool, lost with all hands in a storm, about forty miles from the Longship Light. A portion of her wreck was discovered next day washed ashore at Portreath, and five of the bodies at Tehidy.

December 3.—Affray between soldiers and the gold-diggers at Eureka, Ballarat, who were resisting payment of the customary licence-fee to dig. The troops surrounded the camp of the insurgents, and fired over their heads; but the diggers at once rushed for their guns, and shot three of the military. After a sustained fight of about twenty minutes, the diggers hauled down their flag and surrendered to the soldiers, when it was found that twenty-six of them were killed; 126 were made prisoners.

— Destruction by fire of the Whittington Club, Arundel-street. The engines were powerless for saving any of the contents of the building, but prevented the fire extending to adjoining properties.

6.—The Queen to Mr. Sidney Herbert:—"Would you tell Mrs. Herbert that I begged she would let me see frequently the accounts she receives from Miss Nightingale or Miss Bracebridge, as I have no details of the wounded, though I see so many from officers, &c., about the battle-field; and naturally the former must interest me more than any one. Let Mrs. Herbert also know that I wish Miss Nightingale and the ladies would tell these poor noble wounded and sick men that NO ONE takes a warmer interest, or feels more for their sufferings, or admires their courage and heroism, MORE than their Queen. Day and night she thinks of her beloved troops. So does the Prince. Beg Mrs. Herbert to communicate these my words to those ladies, as I know that our sympathy is much valued by these noble fellows. VICTORIA."

8.—Ceremony of promulgating the dogma of the Immaculate Conception at Rome. Amid extraordinary splendour and solemnity, the Pope placed a diadem on the figure of the Madonna which forms the upper portion of the altar-piece in the Cardinals' Chapel of St. Peter's. Fifty-four cardinals walked in the procession, forty-four archbishops, ninety-four bishops, and a multitude of priests beyond numbering. During High Mass his Holiness read with deep emotion a brief abstract of the Bull, declaring, pronouncing, and defining, "that the doctrine which holds that the blessed Virgin Mary, at the first instant of her conception, by a singular privilege and grace of the Omnipotent God, in virtue of the merits of Jesus Christ, the Saviour of mankind, was preserved immaculate from all stain of original sin, has been revealed by God, and, therefore, should be firmly and constantly believed by all the faithful. Whoever shall presume to think otherwise has suffered shipwreck of the faith, has revolted from the unity of the Church; and if he gives utterance to his thoughts he incurs, by his own act, the penalty: justly established against heresy." The number of strangers who flocked to Rome to view the ceremony exceeded all modern precedent.

8.—Emmanuel Barthélemy, a French refugee, murders George Moore, by attacking him with a loaded cane in his own house, Warren-street, New-road. Finding his means of escape at the back cut off by a locked gate, the murderer retraced his steps through the house to get into the New-road, and, on meeting with resistance, shot an old soldier named Collard, living next door, whom the screams of the servant had called to the assistance of her master. Collard died in University College Hospital the same evening. A woman who entered the house with Barthélemy succeeded in making her escape amid the confusion. The object of both was presumed to be the plunder of Moore's house and shop. The murderer was seized after a short run from the scene of crime; and on being taken to the police-station in George-street was identified as the person who shot Cournet in a duel at Egham, in Oct. 1852. There was found on him a piece of a cane (the head was lying in Moore's house), a dagger in a sheath sewn into the body of his coat, twenty-four ball-cartridges fitting the pistol, and some percussion caps. On the 4th of January Barthélemy was tried at the Central Criminal Court for the murder of Collard, it being thought that this case admitted of more precise proof than the other. He was found guilty, and sentenced to be executed on the 22d. He died impenitent and unbelieving. "I don't want forgiveness of God," he often said; "I want forgiveness of men. I want these doors to be opened." On the scaffold he said he had no belief, and it was of no use therefore to ask forgiveness. Notwithstanding his ferocious professions of Republicanism, other French refugees always suspected Barthélemy to be in the pay of the French police.

— The Pride of the Sea burnt in Cardigan Bay. The fire, which was supposed to have originated in spontaneous combustion, consumed the whole of the cargo, valued at 30,000*l*.

12.—Order issued from the Horse Guards authorizing Lord Raglan, by command of the Queen, to recommend one sergeant from every regiment under his command to a cornetcy or ensigncy,—the commissions to date from the battle of Inkerman.

— Parliament opened by the Queen in (286)

person. The Speech from the Throne made reference to the unusual period at which Parliament had been called together, to take such measures as would lead to the prosecution of the war with the utmost vigour and effect. During the debate on the Address, the Earl of Derby paid an eloquent and touching tribute to the bravery of the army in the Crimea:—"When we read the history of that campaign," he said; "when we read it, not as politicians, but as men and as Englishmen, there cannot be a heart that does not throb with honest and generous pride, that these much-enduring, all-daring, all-achieving men were our countrymen—that they were British subjects like ourselves—and there is hardly an eye from which a tear will not spring unbidden, when we reflect that so many of them are numbered with the dead."

12.—The Duke of Newcastle introduces the Foreign Enlistment Bill, the object of which, as he briefly explained, was to raise a force of 15,000 foreigners to be drilled in this country. Lord Ellenborough, Lord Derby, and others opposed the bill as dangerous, both in principle and policy; but the bill, with slight amendment, was successfully carried through all its stages and passed to the Commons. The bill was read there a third time on the 22d.; Ministers, on a division, having a majority of 38 in a House of 308.

15.—The Duke of Newcastle in the Lords, and Lord John Russell in the Commons, move the thanks of Parliament to the British forces in the Crimea.

— Died, aged 55, Léon Faucher, a French politician of great accomplishments and marked consistency.

17.—The winter in the Baltic commencing with its usual severity, the allied fleet is broken up, and a return made to home ports.

19.—Davidson and Gordon sentenced to two years' imprisonment with hard labour for obtaining goods under false pretences within three months of their bankruptcy. Availing themselves of legal technicalities, the prisoners escaped the punishment due to their offences of non-surrender and embezzlement.

22.—Died at Oxford, in his 100th year, Martin Joseph Routh, D.D., President of Magdalen College for the long period of sixty-three years. He had known Dr. Theophilus Leigh, Master of Balliol, the contemporary of Addison, and who pointed out to him the situation of Addison's rooms; he had seen Dr. Johnson in his brown wig scrambling up the steps of University College; he had been told by a lady of her aunt having seen Charles II. walking round the parks at Oxford (when the Parliament was held there during the Plague of London) with his dogs, and turning the cross-path to the other side when he saw the Heads of Houses coming. Dr. Routh had admitted 183 fellows, 234 demies, and 162 choristers to the college.

January 7.—Luigi Baronelli murders Joseph Latham (or Lambert) in his house, Foley Place, by shooting him through the head, and also attempts to murder Mrs. Lambert by wounding her on the head and neck. The murderer, who appeared to be labouring under a fit of jealousy, made an attempt to commit suicide before he left the house, but was frustrated in his design, and taken into custody. At his trial a plea of insanity was set up, but the jury unanimously found him guilty. Baronelli was executed on the 30th of April.

10.—The Commissioners appointed by the Archbishop of Canterbury to inquire into the allegations made against Archdeacon Denison for preaching doctrines concerning the Eucharist contrary to the Articles report that there is sufficient prima facie ground for instituting further proceedings. They think it due, at the same time, to state that the Archdeacon, with reference to the sermons under consideration, has expressed his full assent and consent to the Articles of religion; and that he has ex animo condemned the doctrines of the Church of Rome, and particularly the Romish doctrine of Transubstantiation.

17.—Mr. Cobden addresses his constituents at Leeds on the subject of the Russian war. A resolution to prosecute the war with vigour was carried against the honourable member.

20.—Four lads drowned in St. James's Park while on the ice. The frost about this time was so intense that at Richmond there was nearly three miles of strong continuous ice. Derwent-water and Windermere were completely frozen over, and Loch Lomond partially so.

23.—Parliament re-assembles after the Christmas recess. Mr. Roebuck gave notice that he intended to move for the appointment of a Select Committee "to inquire into the condition of our army before Sebastopol, and into the conduct of those departments of the Government whose duty it has been to minister to the wants of that army."

—Resignation of Lord John Russell. Writing to Lord Aberdeen, he says:—"Mr. Roebuck has given notice of a motion to inquire into the conduct of the war. I do not see how this motion is to be resisted; but as it involves a censure upon the War Department, with which some of my colleagues are connected, my only course is to tender my resignation. I therefore have to request you will lay my humble resignation of the office which I have the honour to hold before the Queen, with the expression of my gratitude for her Majesty's kindness for many years."

26.—Sardinia joins the alliance of the Western Powers in terms of the fifth article of the Treaty of 10th April, 1854.

29.—Defeat of the Coalition Government on Mr. Roebuck's motion. On this, the second night a division took place, showing a majority against Ministers of 157 in a House of 453. The greatness of the majority appeared to take all parties by surprise, and instead of the usual cheering there was a murmur of amazement ending in derisive laughter. Speaking of the objects of the inquiry, the Chancellor of the Exchequer (Mr. Gladstone) said:—"Your inquiry will never take place as a real inquiry; or, if it did, it would lead to nothing but confusion and disturbance, increased disaster, shame at home, and weakness abroad; it would convey no consolation to those whom you seek to aid, but it would carry malignant joy to the hearts of the enemies of England; and, for my part, I ever shall rejoice, if this motion is carried to-night, that my own last words as a member of the Cabinet of the Earl of Aberdeen have been words of solemn and earnest protest against a proceeding which has no foundation either in the constitution or in the practice of preceding Parliaments; which is useless and mischievous for the purpose which it appears to contemplate, and which, in my judgment, is full of danger to the power, dignity, and usefulness of the Commons of England."—Mr. Disraeli said: "Personally, I care nothing for the consequence, but I feel called upon to decide on an issue which Ministers have interpreted into a question of approbation or confidence. I care not by what name it is called, and I must decide according to the opinions I entertain. Sir, I have no confidence whatever in the existing Government. I told them a year ago, when taunted for not asking the House of Commons to ratify that opinion of mine, that, as they had no confidence in each other, a vote of want of confidence was superfluous. I ask the House of Commons to decide if twelve months have not proved that I was right in that assumption, although its accuracy was then questioned. What confidence has the noble lord the late President of the Council in the Minister for War? What confidence have this variety of Ministers in each other's counsels? They stand before us conformed as men who have not that union of feelings and of sympathy necessary to enable them successfully to conduct public affairs. The late President of the Council, in scattering some compliments among the colleagues he was quitting, dilated upon the patience and ability with which the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs had conducted the duties of his department. I am not here to question these valuable qualities or that patience, but I say that all the patience and all the ability with which the Earl of Clarendon may have wrought are completely lost by scenes like this; and when the Ministers of this country have themselves revealed their weakness to foreign Courts, all the ability and patience of that statesman cannot make up for the weakness which is known to prevail in the councils of England. At all times such a circumstance must be injurious, but at the present moment it may be more than injurious. Two years ago England was the leading Power in Europe; but is there any man in this House who can pretend that she holds that position now? If this be the case—if we are called upon to decide whether the House of Commons has confidence in the Ministry, when the debate is commenced by the secession of the most eminent member of the Government—when affairs are in a calamitous state, and when we are told by the late Lord President that the conduct of the war is intrusted to a Minister who he thinks is unequal to the task—I ask the country, I ask the Ministers themselves, whether they can complain that a member of the Opposition should give his vote according to the belief which he entertains, that the affairs of the country are intrusted to a deplorable Administration?” Commenting on the result of the division, the Times writes:—“It would tax the best read historical student to produce a more complete case of political collapse than that which it is England’s ill fate, sore cost, and we had almost said foul dishonour, to witness this day. The vast prestige of that naval and military organization which we have been nursing so sedulously for these forty years, at the cost of fifteen millions a year, has gone with a touch at the moment of trial.”

29.—Debate in the House of Lords on the conduct of the war. Earl Grey, at the close of a long address, submitted a resolution, “That it is the opinion of this House that great evils have arisen from the present division of authority and responsibility in the administration of the army, and that the whole of the business connected with this important branch of the public service, which is now distributed among different offices, ought therefore to be brought under the direct control of a single and well-organized department.” The Duke of Newcastle and Viscount Hardinge were willing to consent to the resolution, though they disputed in detail some of the occurrences referred to by Earl Grey. After an earnest appeal from Lord Ellenborough, the resolution was withdrawn.

30.—The Duke of Cambridge arrives at Dover from the Crimea.

— In the case of libel raised against Mr. Harrison, printer of the Times, by the Directors of the London and South-Western Railway Company, Mr. Justice Coleridge delivers the judgment of the Court of Queen’s Bench. The jury, he said, gave their verdict at last sittings; and there the matter might have rested but for an article on the 25th December, the purport of which was that the writer did not consider himself interested in the matter. A fine of 300*l.* was inflicted, and immediately paid.

February 1.—Lord Aberdeen in the House of Lords, and Lord Palmerston in the House of Commons, formally announce the resignation of the Ministry, in consequence of the vote (288) on Mr. Roebuck’s motion. The Duke of Newcastle entered at some length into a defence of his conduct as War Minister:—“I have been charged,” he said, “with indolence and indifference. As regards indolence, the public have had every hour, every minute, of my time. To not one hour of amusement or recreation have I presumed to think I was entitled. The other charge—of indifference—is one which is still more painful to me. Indifference, my Lords, to what?” he continued, with deep emotion; “indifference to the honour of the country, to the success and to the safety of the army? My Lords, I have, like many who listen to me, too dear hostages for my interest in the welfare of the military and naval services of the country to allow of such a sentiment. I have two sons engaged in those professions; and that alone, I think, would be sufficient: but, my Lords, as a Minister, as a man, I should be unworthy to stand in any assembly, if the charge of indifference under such circumstances could fairly be brought against me. Many a sleepless night have I passed in thinking over the ills which the public believe and say that I could have cured, and which, God knows, I would have cured if it had been in my power. Indolence and indifference are not charges which can be brought against me; and I trust that my countrymen may before long be satisfied—whatever they may think of my capacity—that there is no ground for fixing that unjust stigma upon me.”

5.—Lord John Russell intimates that he had accepted her Majesty’s commands to form an Administration, but found insuperable objections to the accomplishment of that duty. The Earl of Derby also attempted to construct an Administration, but failed from the reluctance of Lord Palmerston, and other members of the old Cabinet, to join him in office.

— A monition issued from the Consistory Court of the Bishop of London, citing the Hon. and Rev. Robert Liddell, perpetual curate of St. Paul’s, Knightsbridge, to show cause why a licence should not be granted to Charles Westerton, churchwarden, to remove the altar, cross, candles, credence table, and certain cloths from that church.

6.—At a dinner given by the Lord Mayor of London Sir C. Napier recounts his achievements in the Baltic, and the Earl of Cardigan enlarges upon the Light Cavalry charge at Balaklava.

— Earl Granville announces, in the House of Lords, that Lord Palmerston, at the request of her Majesty, had succeeded in forming a Ministry. On the names becoming known, it was found to be virtually a reconstruction of the old Cabinet, with some partial changes, and redistribution of offices. The same day the Ministers were sworn into office at a Privy Council held at Windsor Castle.

9.—The screw collier Will-o’-the-Wisp lost off the Island of Lambay, with all hands.

12.—Dr. Baikie attends a meeting of the Geographical Society to give an account of his travels in Africa, and in particular of his successful expedition up the Chadda.

— Compromise agreed to in the case of Handcock v. Delacour, or De Burgh, Dublin Court of Chancery. It arose upon a petition filed by John Stratford Handcock, the heir-at-law of the late Miss Honoria Handcock, praying that certain charges created by the will of Josephine Handcock might not affect the Canentrilla estate; and that a deed executed by Honoria might be declared fraudulent and void. The pleadings went to show that Lord Clanricarde had first brought about Handcock's marriage with an attractive Irish adventuress named Josephine Kelly; that he continued for years afterwards to keep up an improper intimacy with her; that one son, John Delacour, was the result of this connexion; that though husband and wife had been separated from 1840 to 1843, a reconciliation then took place through the influence of Lord Clanricarde, and a will was executed by Mr. Handcock shortly before death, by which his wife and two children succeeded to his property. Mrs. Handcock continued on terms of intimacy with Lord Clanricarde, neglected her husband's children, and died, leaving everything she possessed to her son John Delacour. The allegations made against Lord Clanricarde, of drawing up wills and disentailing deeds in connexion with the estate, were denied. It was now arranged that the petitioner Handcock, the heir-at-law, should get the estates on condition of paying the respondent Delacour 20,000*l.* when he came of age, being the sum to which he succeeded under his mother's will. In a letter to the Daily News, Lord Clanricarde characterised the allegations made against him as "entirely untrue," and further stated, that any part he had taken in the family affairs of the Handcocks, had been generally opposed to Mrs. Handcock.

14.—The action brought by Mr. Adrian John Hope against the Count Aguado, to recover damages for criminal conversation with Mrs. Hope, terminated in the Court of Queen's Bench to-day, with a verdict for the plaintiff—damages 200*l.* Witnesses spoke to improprieties between the parties at Paris, Havre, and Folkestone.

16.—In the House of Commons, Lord Palmerston makes an ineffectual attempt to stay further action on the part of the Sebastopol Inquiry Committee, by pledging the Government to make a most stringent investigation into the conduct of the war. Colonel Tulloch and Sir John M'Neill were despatched to make special inquiries in the Crimea.

17.—A Russian force, said to number 40,000, defeated by Omer Pasha in an attack on Eupatoria. The Turkish loss was considerable, but Salim Pasha, commanding the Egyptian brigade, was killed. The British fleet covered both flanks with great effect. After a combat of four hours the Russians withdrew.

19.—Mr. Layard draws the attention of the House of Commons to what he called the present deplorable state of public affairs. The House, he said, had declared its want of confidence in the late Administration, and yet the new Ministry merely presented the same men in different offices. What the country wanted was not "septuagenarian experience, but more of youthful activity and energy." Lord Palmerston defended the Government he had formed under circumstances of great difficulty, at a time when no other person could succeed in the task.

20.—Died, at Burnley Hall, Norfolk, in his 78th year, Joseph Hume, Esq., the well-known and highly respected member of the House of Commons, whose services in the cause of economy were fully acknowledged by politicians of all parties.

21.—Bread riots in Stepney, Bethnal-green, Shoreditch, and Bermondsey. In Liverpool the disturbance from the same cause was at one time of the most threatening description.

23.—Sir James Graham, Mr. Gladstone, and Mr. Sidney Herbert explain how the appointment of the Crimean Inquiry Committee led to their withdrawal from Lord Palmerston's new Ministry. In the course of the debate to which these personal explanations gave rise, Mr. Bright made an earnest appeal to Lord Palmerston to stay the war:—"The Angel of Death," he said, "has been abroad throughout the land; you may almost hear the very beating of his wings. There is no one to sprinkle with blood the lintel and the side-posts of our doors that he may spare and pass on; but he calls at the castle of the noble, and the mansion of the wealthy, equally as at the cottage of the humble; and it is on behalf of all these classes that I make this solemn appeal. I tell the noble lord that if he be ready honestly and frankly to endeavour, if possible, by the negotiations to be opened at Vienna, to put an end to this war, no word of mine, no vote of mine, will be given to shake his power for one single moment, or to change his position in this House."

March 1.—Lord Goderich's motion for an address to her Majesty respecting the present system of promotion in the army negated by a majority of 158 to 114.

2.—The Emperor of Russia dies of pulmonary apoplexy, after an attack of influenza. The striking and unexpected news was announced in the House of Lords by the Earl of Clarendon, and in the House of Commons by Lord Palmerston. The intelligence caused great excitement in the money-market. Consols rose 2 per cent.; but the foreign-market was so confused, that brokers refused to cite even nominal quotations.

5.—The Committee appointed to inquire into the condition of the army in the Crimea commenced its sittings to-day. It continued its labours almost daily till the 15th of May, when the examination of Lord Aberdeen closed the voluminous pile of evidence.

6.—At the Oxford Assizes, the Rev. John Allen Giles, D.C.L., a member of the University, was sentenced by Lord Campbell to twelve months' imprisonment for making a false entry as to the particulars of a marriage solemnized by him in the church of Bampton. As to Dr. Giles's motive for inserting the false date, nothing came to light during the trial to show that it was other than a desire to oblige the young couple by secretly marrying them to avoid exposure of the frailty of the woman, a servant in his own family.

— The Chinese Imperialists defeat the insurgents, and recapture Canton and Shanghai.

8.—Mr. Malins introduces, but withdraws after discussion, a motion for papers connected with the services of Sir Charles Napier in the Baltic. Sir James Graham defended the Admiralty against the charges brought against them in connexion with the dismissal of Admiral Napier from his command.

9.—Lord Palmerston, in answer to Mr. Williams, states that there is no intention at present of forming Volunteer Rifle Corps. He thought they would occasion considerable expense, without offering any corresponding advantage. The persons who had volunteered for the service were chiefly engaged in civil employment, and wholly unfit to endure the hardships of a soldier's life.

10.—In Punch of this day John Leech introduces the memorable cartoon of "General Février turned traitor," illustrating the statement of the late Emperor, that "Russia has two generals in whom she can confide—Generals Janvier and Février," the latter being Death in the uniform of a Russian officer laying his hand on the form of the prostrate sovereign.

15.—Another attempt made to restore peace to Europe, by assembling a Conference of the Great Powers at Vienna, to agree upon a new basis of negotiations. According to the instructions given to Lord John Russell, who represented England on the occasion, the end in view was the formal recognition of the Turkish empire in its character as an independent and self-existent state, as a member of the great European family, and as an essential element of the balance of power in Europe. One of the means, it was thought, by which that end could be accomplished was through the abrogation of Russian supremacy in the Black Sea. How to effect this with the least inconvenience to the Powers of Europe was the problem to be solved. Resolutions relating to the Principalities, the free navigation of the Danube, and the independence of the Porte, were agreed to without much difficulty, but the attempt to limit the preponderance of Russia in the Black Sea proved the rock on which this diplomatic effort to restore peace split. In answer to M. Drouyn de Lhuys's question, whether Russia would consider her rights of sovereignty infringed if she deprived herself of the liberty of building an unlimited number of ships of war in the Black Sea, Prince Gortschakoff replied that Russia would not consent to the strength of her navy being restricted to any fixed number, either by treaty or in any other manner. Instead of a limitation, he proposed a counterpoise of forces in the Black Sea, by opening the Straits of the Dardanelles to the flags of war of all nations; but, as this might compel the other Powers to maintain expensive armaments there, it was not thought the proposal rested on a basis which would secure the object of the Conference. The last formal sitting was held on the 26th of April.

16.—Fire in Bermondsey, depriving nearly 100 people of all they possessed, and laying in ruins two of the largest granaries on that side of the river. It broke out soon after 5 A.M. at Lucas's Wharf; and as there was a large quantity of linseed oil, and upwards of 5,000 barrels of tar, in one of the warehouses, the flames soon spread to the adjoining properties. The fire was not subdued till late in the evening.

19.—In the House of Lords, the Earl of Lucan enters into a defence of his conduct regarding the Light Cavalry charge at Bala-klava. In a letter now produced, Lord Raglan stated that after ordering the attack on his own responsibility, Lord Lucan had not done what he could to make it as little perilous as possible.

20.—Lord Lyndhurst denounces the vacillation and timidity of Prussia with regard to the war. The Earl of Clarendon admitted the justice of many of the remarks, but hoped that Power would yet join the Allies.

— Fall of the new iron bridge spanning the Avon, near the Temple Gate, Bristol. A barge going down the river at great speed struck the iron stays under the water on the Bristol side, causing the whole fabric to give way.

21.—Fast-day appointed by proclamation, that special prayer may be made for a blessing on "the just and necessary war in which we are engaged." The House of Lords attended Divine worship in Westminster Abbey, and the Commons in the parish church of St. Margaret's.

24.—Opened in Pall-mall an Exhibition of Water-Colour Drawings and Pictures by amateur artists, and art contributions, in aid of a fund for the relief of the widows and orphans of British officers engaged in the war with Russia. Five of the Queen's children were contributors.

31.—Fire at Sunderland, destroying a druggist's warehouse and six dwelling-houses in Number's Garth.

31.—Died, at Haworth, aged 48, Mrs. Nicholls (Charlotte Brontë), author of "Jane Eyre," &c.

April 3.—At Liverpool Assizes, in the case of Evans v. Evans (formerly Miss Carrington) and Robinson, the jury give a verdict for the plaintiff with 500*l.* damages, the alleged adultery being established on the evidence of parties employed by Detective Field, to bore gimlet holes in doors and partitions, so as to command a view of the defendants.

4.—The first squadron of the Baltic Fleet, under the command of Rear-Admiral Dundas, sailed this afternoon to resume operations against the enemy in that sea.

9.—The allied armies in the Crimea re-open the siege of Sebastopol. During the whole of this day the fire of the besiegers was superior to that of the besieged, and the impression in the allied armies was most favourable. The bombardment was continued with little intermission till the 30th, when, being still unsuccessful, it was reduced to the ordinary fire necessary to cover the operations of the engineers.

13.—Charles King, an acting detective officer in the C division, sentenced to fourteen years' transportation for receiving stolen articles from young thieves whom he made it his business to train and protect.

—Died, aged 55, Sir Henry Thos. de la Beche, Director of the Museum of Practical Geology.

16.—Visit of the Emperor and Empress of the French to the Queen. They were received at Dover by Prince Albert and Count Walewski, and conducted, in the first instance, to the Lord Warden Hotel, where luncheon was partaken of, and a congratulatory address presented by the Mayor and Corporation. They then set out for Windsor, passing in carriages, amid enthusiastic crowds, through that part of the metropolis lying between the Bricklayers' Arms Station and the Great Western Railway. The illustrious visitors reached Windsor about 7 P.M., and were received in the grand hall by her Majesty and the Royal Family, surrounded by the great officers of State and of the Household. On the 18th, the Emperor was elected a Knight of the Garter, and invested in the Throne-room with the Ribbon of the Order by her Majesty. The Emperor and Empress next day visited the City of London, and were received with great magnificence in the Guildhall by the Lord Mayor, who had as his guests the Préfet of the Seine and Municipality of Paris. On the evening of this day, the Queen accompanied her Imperial guests to the Royal Italian Opera, and next day to the Crystal Palace, where an immense gathering of people welcomed the visitors. The Imperial visit terminated on Saturday, the 21st, when they left Buckingham Palace for Dover, where the Empress mail-steamer was in readiness to convey them to Calais.

17.—Lord Robert Grosvenor obtains leave to introduce a bill to prevent Sunday-trading in the metropolis.

20.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer (Sir G. C. Lewis) introduced the annual Budget. He estimated the income from all sources for 1855 at 63,339,000*l.*, and the expenditure at 86,339,000*l.* The deficiency of 20,000,000*l.* he proposed to meet for the most part by a new loan.

—The Rothschilds agree to take up the whole of the new loan of 16,000,000*l.* on the terms proposed by the Chancellor of the Exchequer—100*l.* money for every 100*l.* Three per cent. Consols, the lender of each 100*l.* receiving an annuity of 14*s.* 6*d.* terminable at the end of thirty years.

24.—The Crasus steam transport destroyed by fire off Corsica, when conveying the Sardinian contingent from Genoa to the Crimea. Most of those on board were taken off by other transports in sight.

29.—Giovanni Pianori attempts to assassinate the Emperor of the French, by twice firing at him with a double-barrelled pistol, at the corner of the Rue Balzac. He was executed for the offence on the morning of the 14th May.

30.—Died, aged 68, Sir Henry R. Bishop, musical composer.

May 1.—Captain Christie, of the Transport Service, dies in the Crimea, awaiting an inquiry into his conduct in connexion with the loss of the Prince.

3.—Wreck of the emigrant-ship John on the Manacle Rocks off Falmouth, and loss of 190 lives. Of the four boats on board one was in bad condition, and the life-boat was so improperly stowed as to be unavailable for immediate service. The crew tried the long-boat, but the state of the tide prevented her being launched, and she remained hanging to the davits. None of the survivors seemed to know what became of the fourth boat, the pinnace. Deprived of every means of escape the unhappy passengers crowded the bulwarks and rigging of the wrecked vessel, and were swept in scores into the sea by the fury of the waves. By active exertion two boats put off next morning from the shore, and 93 of the survivors were taken off the wreck, it being remarked at the time as a significant circumstance, that this number included the whole of the officers and crew. The coroner's jury returned a verdict of manslaughter against Captain Rawle, but he was acquitted on trial.

—The Etna floating battery destroyed by fire in the ship building yard of Mr. Scott Russell at Millwall. She was to have been launched with all her engines ready for sea in a few days. During the fire the huge ignited mass slipped from her stocks, and launched herself majestically into the river.

—Lord R. Grosvenor's Sunday Trading

Bill read a second time in the House of Commons, without a division.

4.—Completion of the submarine telegraph between the Crimea and Varna. The first message, transmitted to-day, announced that “a sharp engagement took place on the night of the 1st May, in front and left attack. The whole of the Russian rifle-pits were taken, eight light mortars, and 200 prisoners.”

5.—An Administrative Reform Meeting held in the London Tavern, to carry resolutions alleging that the true remedy for the system of mal-administration which has caused so lamentable a sacrifice of labour, money, and human life, is to be sought for in the introduction of large experience and practical ability into the service of the State.

9.—General de La Marmora joins the Allies in the Crimea with a portion of the Sardinian contingent. The state of the weather prevented the remainder being landed at Balaklava.

11.—The Newspaper Stamp Bill read a third time in the House of Commons, by 138 to 60. It passed the Lords June 6th.

14.—Fall of the Atlas Iron Works, Southwark, and destruction of a large quantity of shot and shell prepared for the army in the Crimea. Seventeen of the workmen were seriously injured, and conveyed to St. Thomas's Hospital.

—Lord Ellenborough proposes an address to her Majesty, expressive of the conviction that the conduct of the war has occasioned general dissatisfaction, and given rise to just complaints, and “that we most humbly lay before her Majesty our deliberate opinion that it is only through the selection of men for public employment, without regard to anything but the public service, that the country can hope to prosecute the war successfully, and to obtain its only legitimate object—a secure and honourable peace.” Attacking Lord Palmerston's pretended knowledge of military affairs, the noble Earl said: “I recollect sitting by the side of the Duke of Wellington in the House of Lords, during the unfortunate difficulty between him and Mr. Huskisson, which led to the resignation of a portion of the gentlemen forming the Government. The Duke of Wellington was suddenly called out of the House, and when he returned he said to me, ‘That was Palmerston who wanted to see me, to tell me if Huskisson went he must go too.’ The Duke continued, ‘I said nothing; it was not for me to fire great guns at small birds.’ That was the opinion of the Duke of Wellington.” Earl Granville defended the Government on the ground mainly that able, practical men could not be induced to give up their business to accept political office. And noticing the charge that the Cabinet was composed of Gowers, Howards, and Cavendishes, he said, “My Lords, I had better make a clean breast of it at once; and I am obliged to admit that some of those who went before me had such quivers full of daughters who did not die old maids, that I have relations upon this side of the House, relations upon the cross benches, relations upon the opposite side of the House, and I actually had the unparalleled misfortune to have no fewer than three daughters in the Protectionist Administration of my noble friend opposite.” After a debate continued beyond midnight, the resolutions were rejected by a majority of 181 to 71. Proxies were not called for the “contents.”

15.—Great bullion robbery on the South-Eastern Railway. This evening, three large boxes, containing gold, were delivered by their owners to Messrs. Chaplin and Horne, the carriers, and by this firm they were conveyed to the South-Eastern Railway, London-bridge. The gold belonged to Messrs. Abell and Co., Messrs. Spielmann, and Messrs. Bult. Every caution was taken with the precious freight. The boxes were bound with iron bars, sealed and weighed by Messrs. Chaplin, and placed in iron safes secured by Chubb's patent locks. To these safes there were duplicate keys, in the possession only of confidential servants of the Railway Company—keys in London, in Folkestone, and also in the possession of the captains of the boats belonging to the South-Eastern Railway. The safes were all specially placed in the guard's van, under his immediate care. On the boxes being taken out of the safes at Boulogne, it was discovered that one weighed 40lbs. less than it ought to have weighed, while the other two each weighed a trifle more than they should have done. Examination proved that the gold had been stolen on the railway. The precious metal had been abstracted, shot substituted, and the outward appearance of the safes restored as they were before. The principal actors in this elaborate crime were Burgess, who had been for thirteen years a guard on the South-Eastern Railway; Pierce, who was a ticket printer to the Company; Tester, a clerk in the Traffic Superintendent's office; and Agar, who had been for years a professional thief. The manner in which the robbery was committed was thus described by Agar, at the trial of his confederates (January 13th, 1857):—“On the night of the robbery, Pierce and I were at a public-house together near the turnpike-gate, Camden-town, whence we took a cab and proceeded with our bags to St. Thomas's-street. I got out there and went to the railway-station as usual. Burgess then came out of the station and wiped his face. This was the appointed signal by which he was to indicate to us when the bullion was going down by train. Burgess then went to his train, when I returned to Pierce in the cab, and told the cabman to drive us up to the Dover Railway office. I had previously seen Tester on the incline, near the terminus, when he said to me, in a hurried manner, ‘All right.’ I went to the ticket-office, and procured two first-class tickets. We kept our courier-bags on, but gave the carpet-bags to a porter. I handed Pierce his ticket, and he entered a first-class carriage. I walked up and down the platform till the train started, and saw the carpet-bags given to Burgess, who placed them in the van. The small black bag was in one of the carpet-bags. Having watched for my opportunity, I at last jumped, unobserved, into Burgess's van, when I crouched down in a corner, and Burgess threw his apron over me. I was in the guard's portion of the van until the train started; after which I got up and saw that there were two iron safes in it. I opened an iron safe and took from it a wooden box. The box now produced is the one in question. It was fastened by nails and iron bands, and was also sealed. I had a pair of pincers with me for raising the iron, and also box-wood wedges with which to force open the lid. I took out from the box, I believe, four bars of gold. One bar I placed in Tester's bag and gave it to Burgess; the other three were placed in the carpet-bag. I then put shot into the box instead of gold. Burgess put the bag intended for Tester into the guard's compartment. The train by this time had arrived at Reigate. When we stopped there I gave the bag to Burgess, and then heard Tester say, 'Where is it?' I saw no more of it till the next morning. I did not see Tester at Reigate; but only heard his voice. When the train again started, Burgess joined me in the van, and I opened another box in the same safe, containing American gold coins. I don't know the amount of these coins, but I put them into a bag, and substituted shot for them also. I then fastened down both of the boxes—the one that had the American gold coin in it with a screw—and I sealed them again with some seals and a wax taper, which I had purchased for the purpose. I then locked the one chest and opened the other, where there was a box, which I found to contain small bars of gold. I took out as many of the small bars of gold as I thought I had shot sufficient in weight to replace, and then I fastened up the box again. The safes from which I took the gold were removed from the train by the railway company's officers at Folkestone, and we went on with the train to Dover. I and Pierce took the courier-bags and the carpet-bags with us. We put up at the Dover Castle Hotel, near the railway terminus. This was about 11 o'clock at night. We entered the coffee-room, where we placed the carpet-bags under the window, and then ordered our supper. During the absence of the waiter we took off our courier-bags. The waiter asked whether we wanted beds, and we answered, 'No;' observing that we had driven to the town, and were going back to London by the 2 A.M. train. I left Pierce at the inn, went myself to the pier, and threw my mallet, chisels, and other tools, into the sea. When I returned to the hotel we paid our bill, and then sent the waiter for some brandy in a soda-water bottle, in order that we might take advantage of his absence to put on our courier-bags again before leaving." Notwithstanding the most anxious inquiries by the police, none of the perpetrators of this daring robbery were traced till Agar himself, in a fit of passion at Pierce's conduct to a woman whom he had left in his care, made known the whole.

15.—In the House of Lords, the Earl of Albemarle's resolution for placing greater restrictions upon the trade of Russia, in order to bring the war to a speedy termination, was negatived by 47 to 31.

— Lord Redesdale complains of the presence of ladies in the House of Lords in places not set apart for their reception. It had (he said) a very prejudicial effect on the appearance of the House, and made it look more like a casino than anything else. (Oh! and laughter.) He hoped it would not be repeated, for he knew at least one peer who would have spoken but for his unwillingness to address an audience of that kind.—Earl Granville accepted his noble friend's satisfactory explanation why some of the speeches delivered on the other side were in the opinion of the supporters of Ministers much less effective than usual.

16.—General Canrobert resigns the command of the French forces in the Crimea. After recommending General Pellissier to the Emperor, the General wrote: "The army which I leave him is intact, hardened to war, full of ardour and confidence. I beseech the Emperor to leave me a soldier's place as commander of a simple division."

17.—The French Palace of Industry opened in state by the Emperor and Empress. In his address, the Emperor said, "In inviting all nations hither, it has been my desire to open a Temple of Concord."

18.—Distribution of War Medals to the Crimean heroes by the Queen. A royal dais was erected in the centre of the parade of the Horse Guards, and the public offices which surround it were fitted up with galleries for spectators. The recipients of the honours were drawn up in the rear of the Foot Guards, who kept the ground. On a given command the soldiers formed four deep, and through the line thus made the Crimean heroes passed to the presence of the Queen. The officers and men then passed before her Majesty in single file, each handing to an officer a card whereon was inscribed his name, rank, wounds, and battles. This card was delivered to her Majesty, who then, with much tenderness and sympathy, presented the medal. A touching feature of the ceremony was the presence of many hardly able to limp past the Queen, and a few so severely wounded as compelled them to be wheeled before her in Bath chairs. About 450 medals were also presented to sailors and marines.

21.—In reply to Mr. S. Herbert, Lord Palmerston states that the means of pacification were not exhausted; that the Vienna Conferences were suspended, not closed; and that proposals made by Russia through Austria would still be favourably received. Mr. Disraeli taunted the Ministers with shirking discussion on the affairs of the Conference, and was replied to by Lord Palmerston, who said he declined to invite discussion himself because the result might be to shut the door to all further hope of peace. If the negotiations did not result in peace, the fault lay not with Lord John Russell, nor with France, nor with Austria—"our ally to a certain extent"—but with the government of Russia. Lord John Russell recapitulated the incidents of the last sitting, and expressed his expectation that Austria would make some further propositions which must terminate the Conference, or reopen them under more favourable auspices than heretofore.

22.—A British force, sent from Sierra Leone to enforce payment of an indemnity from the King of Mallaghan, repulsed with great loss, more than half the party being slain.

24.—Mr. Disraeli submits a motion expressive of the dissatisfaction of the House at the ambiguous language and uncertain conduct of her Majesty's Government in reference to the great question of peace or war. His speech was mainly taken up with a review of Lord John Russell's unsuccessful diplomacy at Vienna, and an urgent appeal not to permit the country to drift into an ignominious peace, as it had before drifted into a disastrous war. An amendment was proposed by Sir F. Baring, simply expressing regret that the Conferences at Vienna had not led to a termination of hostilities, and after a three nights' debate Mr. Disraeli's motion was rejected by a majority of 319 to 219. The conduct of Ministers was still further kept under review, by continuing the debate over the recess, on an amendment proposed by Mr. Lowe, declaring that the refusal of Russia to restrict the strength of her navy in the Black Sea had exhausted the means of suspending hostilities by negotiation.

— At an adjourned examination in bankruptcy of Davidson and Gordon, two merchants concerned in the Cole "warrant" swindles, several witnesses were called to make out charges against them of obtaining large quantities of goods on fraudulent pretences within three months of bankruptcy. But the chief interest of the proceedings centred in the connexion of Overend and Co. with the bankrupts. Mr. Ballantyne referred to the statement of Mr. Chapman, partner in the firm of Overend, that his house had no dealings with the accused after October 1853, when it was discovered that the metal warrants were false; and called a witness, formerly clerk to Davidson and Gordon, who proved that Overend and Co. discounted bills for the bankrupts between November 1853, and the 3d April, 1854, amounting to about 8,000*l.* Mr. Chapman had also stated that his firm, on moral grounds, would have nothing to do with the lease of the bankrupts' distillery; but Mr. Ballantyne produced an agreement by which the lease was conveyed to Mr. Chapman; and Mr. Vallings, solicitor to Overend and Co., stated that he altered and signed the agreement on their behalf.

25.—The Gazette announces that her Majesty had been pleased to order letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal vesting the civil administration of the army and ordnance in the hands of Lord Panmure. This was the first appointment under the new arrangement for consolidating under one Secretary all the civil offices connected with the service.

— Earl Grey proposes that an humble address be presented to her Majesty—"To thank her for having ordered the protocols of the recent negotiations at Vienna to be laid before us; to inform her Majesty that this House deeply deploras the failure of the attempt to put an end by these negotiations to the calamities of the war in which the country is now engaged; and to express our opinion that the proposals of Russia were such as to afford a fair prospect of concluding a peace by which all the original objects of the war might have been gained, and by which her Majesty and her allies might have obtained all the advantages which can reasonably be demanded from Russia." After a debate, the proposal was negatived without a division.

27.—Capture of Kertch. Lord Raglan to Lord Panmure:—"We are masters of the Sea of Azoff without a casualty. The troops landed at Kertch on her Majesty's birthday, and the enemy fled, blowing up their fortifications on both sides of the Straits, and destroying the steamers; some vessels of fifty guns have fallen into the hands of the Allies."

June 2.—Died, aged 74, Thomas Gaisford, Dean of Christ Church, an eminent classical scholar.

4.—In the debate on the adjourned discussion on Mr. Lowe's amendment Sir E. B. Lytton expressed himself as anxious to anticipate the verdict of history. "Let me suppose that when the future philanthropist shall ask what service on the human race did we in our generation signally confer, some one trained perhaps in the schools of Oxford or the Institute of Manchester shall say of this Power that commanded myriads—as many as those that under Xerxes exhausted rivers in their march, and embodied all the forces of barbarism on the outskirts of civilization: Left there to develop its own natural resources, no state molested, though all apprehended, its growth. But, long pent by merciful nature in its own legitimate domains, this power schemed for the outlet to its instinctive ambition: to that outlet it crept by dissimulating guile, by successive treaties; that, promising peace, graduated spoliation to the opportunities of fraud. At length, under pretexts too gross to deceive the common sense of mankind, it proposed to seize that outlet—to storm the feeble gates between itself and the world beyond. Then the historian shall say that we in our generation—the united families of England and France—made ourselves the vanguard of alarmed and shrinking Europe, and did not sheathe the sword until we had redeemed the pledge to humanity, made on the faith of two Christian sovereigns, and ratified at those distant graves which liberty and justice shall revere for ever.”

4.—Treasury warrant issued fixing reduced rates for the postage of books and pamphlets, and regulating the mode of their transmission.

— Dissolution of the Vienna Conference. The event was announced the following evening by the Earl of Clarendon in the House of Lords.

5.—Massacre of a boat's crew at Hango, Gulf of Finland. When attempting to land certain prisoners under a flag of truce, Lieut. Geneste and his party were fired upon, six being killed and the rest taken prisoners, with the exception of one wounded seaman who was working the boat back to the ship when discovered. The outrage gave rise to much indignant comment in Parliament and throughout the country generally. The Russians defended their proceedings by alleging that the boat was taking soundings, that the white flag was not visible, and that the officer in command did not wait for, ask, or obtain the necessary permission which is required to land men under a flag of truce. They, therefore, refused to give up the prisoners, Lieut. Geneste, Dr. Easton, and two others.

— Died, aged 70, Sir Robert Harry Inglis, Bart. formerly M.P. for Oxford University.

6.—The Lord Mayor of London, the Sheriffs, and a deputation from the Aldermen and Common Council arrive in Paris on a visit to the Préfet of the Seine.

7.—The French attack and carry the Mamelon at Sebastopol. General Pélissier telegraphs to the Minister of War:—“At 6:30 our signals for assault were given, and one hour afterwards our eagles floated over the Mamelon Vert and over the two redoubts of Careening Bay. The artillery of the enemy fell into our hands. We are said to have taken 400 prisoners. Our legions occupy the conquered works. On their side our allies, with their usual resolution, carried the works in the quarries, and established themselves there. All the troops showed the most admirable devotion and intrepidity.”

8.—The debate on Mr. Lowe's amendment, as put against Sir T. Baring's resolution in a substantive form, concluded this evening by the withdrawal of the former.

9.—At the annual Trinity House dinner, Prince Albert, in proposing the toast of “Her Majesty's Ministers,” took occasion to allude to the present grave aspect of public affairs:—

“If ever there was a time when the Queen's Government, by whomsoever conducted, required the support, ay, not the support alone, but the confidence, goodwill, and sympathy of their fellow-countrymen, it is the present. It is not the way to success in war to support it, however ardently and energetically, and to run down and weaken those who have to conduct it. We are engaged with a mighty adversary, who uses against us all those wonderful powers which have sprung up under the generating influence of our liberty and our civilization, and employs them with all the force which unity of purpose and action, impenetrable secrecy, and uncontrolled despotic power give him; whilst we have to meet him under a state of things intended for peace and the promotion of that very civilization, a civilization the offspring of public discussion, the friction of parties, and popular control over the Government of the State. The Queen has no power to levy troops, and none at her command, except such as voluntarily offer their services. Her Government can entertain no measures for the prosecution of the war without having to explain them publicly in Parliament; her armies and fleets can make no movement, nor even prepare for any, without its being proclaimed by the press; and no mistake, however trifling, can occur, no weakness exist, which it may be of the utmost importance to conceal from the world, without its being publicly denounced, and even frequently exaggerated, with a morbid satisfaction. The Queen's ambassadors can carry on no negotiation which has not to be publicly defended by entering into all the arguments which a negotiator, to have success, must be able to shut up in the innermost recesses of his heart—nay, at the most critical moment, when the complications of military measures and diplomatic negotiations may be at their height, an adverse vote in Parliament may of a sudden deprive her of all her confidential servants. Gentlemen, constitutional government is under a heavy trial, and can only pass triumphantly through it if the country will grant its confidence,—a patriotic, indulgent, and self-denying confidence to her Majesty's Government. Without this all their labours must be in vain.”

11.—Old Smithfield market closed for the sale of cattle, horses, and sheep.

— Messrs. Strahan, Paul, and Bates, bankers and navy agents, suspend payment. The total amount of debts proved against the two concerns was in round numbers three quarters of a million, and the dividend realized was 3s. 2d. per pound. A week after the petition in bankruptcy had issued an application was made to the magistrate at Bow-street Police-office to apprehend the three partners on a charge of having unlawfully negotiated or otherwise disposed of certain deeds or securities of the value of 22,000*l.* which had been entrusted to them by the Rev. Dr. Griffiths, of Rochester. Bates was apprehended the same evening at 41, Norfolk-street, Strand. The officers found Sir John Dean Paul at his house at Reigate later in the night, but on starting with him next morning for London, they got separated at the station and the bankrupt arrived in the city alone. He gave himself up at Bow-street Police-station about eight o'clock the following evening. Strahan was seized when entering a house in Bryanston-square on the night of the 20th June. They were brought up from time to time for examination, and the charge gone into at great length. When the case was completed, the prisoners were committed for trial, but admitted to bail on giving recognizances to the amount of 10,000*l.*, and two sureties of 5,000*l.* for each prisoner.

12.—Mr. William Brown moves a series of resolutions in the House of Commons on the subject of a decimal coinage:—"That, in the opinion of this House, the initiation of the decimal system of coinage, by the issue of the florin, [in 1849] has been eminently successful and satisfactory; That a further extension of such system will be of great public advantage; That an humble address be presented to her Majesty, praying that she will be graciously pleased to complete the decimal scale with the pound and the florin, as suggested by two Commissions and a Committee of the House of Commons, by authorizing the issue of silver coins to represent the value of the one-hundredth part of a pound, and copper coins to represent the one-thousandth part of a pound, to be called 'cents' and 'mils' respectively, or to bear such other names as to her Majesty may seem advisable." After a debate, in which Mr. Lowe and others opposed the third resolution as fixing the unit too high, the House divided on the first and carried it by 135 to 56; the second was adopted without a division, and the third withdrawn.

13.—The New Metropolitan Cattle Market, Copenhagen Fields, opened by the Lord Mayor and Corporation in presence of the Prince Consort. Sales commenced on Friday, the 15th.

15.—Mr. Layard introduces a debate on Administrative Reform, by submitting a motion to the House, stating that it "views with deep and increasing concern the state of the nation, and is of opinion that the manner in which merit and efficiency have been sacrificed in public appointments to party and family influences, and to a blind adherence to routine, has given rise to great misfortunes, and threatens to bring discredit upon the national character, and to involve the country in grave disasters." Many of the evils complained of were admitted in the course of the debate, which extended over two nights, but on a division the resolution was negatived by 359 to 46.

—The "Know-nothing" council in the United States issues its "Platform of Principle," showing a broad avowal in favour of slavery, and decided hostility to the Roman Catholic Church.

18.—The allied forces make a desperate (296)

but unsuccessful attack on the Redan and Malakhoff batteries. The check experienced in the assault was mainly occasioned by General Mazan mistaking a blazing fusee sent up from the Brancion redoubt, for the rocket signals which had been agreed on as the notice for a general advance. The English lost 21 officers, and 144 men killed; 68 officers and 1,058 men wounded. The French lost 37 officers and 1,544 men killed or missing. The Russians admitted the loss of 781 killed and nearly 4,000 wounded. Next day Prince Gortschakoff addressed the troops:—"Soldiers, the enemy is beaten,—driven back with enormous loss. Allow your commander to repeat his gratitude to you in the name of the Emperor, our august monarch, in the name of our country, of our holy and orthodox Russia. The hour is approaching when the pride of the enemy will be lowered, their armies swept from our soil like chaff blown away by the wind. Till then, let us put trust in God, and let us fight for the Emperor and for our country."

18.—The Sebastopol Inquiry Committee present their Report to the House of Commons, detailing the result of their examination into the condition of the army, and the departments controlling the same, with suggestions for the improvement of both. The Report concluded: "Your Committee report that the suffering of the army resulted mainly from the circumstances under which the expedition to the Crimea was undertaken and executed. The Administration which ordered that expedition had no adequate information as to the amount of the forces in the Crimea. They were not acquainted with the strength of the fortresses to be attacked, or with the resources of the country to be invaded. They hoped and expected the expedition to be immediately successful; and as they did not foresee the probability of a protracted struggle, they made no provision for a winter campaign. The patience and fortitude of the army demand the admiration and gratitude of the nation on whose behalf they have fought, bled, and suffered. Their heroic valour, and equally heroic patience under sufferings and privations, have given them claims upon their country which will doubtless be gratefully acknowledged. Your Committee will now close their report with a hope that every British army may in future display the valour which this noble army has displayed, and that none may hereafter be exposed to such sufferings as are recorded in these pages."

24.—Commencement of the Sunday riots in Hyde Park, caused by the assembling of crowds who thought their liberty infringed by Lord Robert Grosvenor's new bill to prevent Sunday-trading in the metropolis. The disturbance was continued with increasing violence over the two following Sundays; the mob on the 8th of July, not resting content with hooting and hustling the frequenters of the park, broke many windows, and in one or two instances attempted to set fire to houses. A commission was afterwards appointed to inquire into the severities alleged to have been practised by the police when attempting to suppress the disturbances.

28.—Death of Lord Raglan. Until four o'clock this afternoon his lordship had been progressing from his recent illness to the satisfaction of the medical attendant; but alarming symptoms then presented themselves, attended with difficulty of breathing. From 5 P.M. he was unconscious; and he continued gradually to sink till 25 minutes before 9, at which hour he died. A general order issued from the Horse Guards described Lord Raglan as during a long peace employing an unwearied attention to the interests and welfare of the army, shown by the kindness, the impartiality, and justice with which he transacted its duties. "At the head of the troops during the arduous operations of the campaign he resumed the early habits of his life; by his calmness in the hottest moments of battle, and by his quick perception in taking advantage of the ground or the movements of the enemy, he won the confidence of his army, and performed great and brilliant services." Lord Raglan's body was brought to England in the Caradoc, and interred in the cemetery of his ancestors at Bodminton. He was succeeded in the Crimea by General Simpson, recently sent out as the Chief of the Staff.

—A seaman named Veale murders the captain, mate, and one of the crew of the brig Her Majesty, bound for Cork from Salonica with a cargo of Indian corn. On the rest of the crew arming themselves to secure the murderer, he shut himself up in the fore-castle and committed suicide. The vessel was brought into Cork by a portion of the crew of the merchantman Isabella, who had seen the signals of distress raised by those on board Her Majesty.

July 2.—In consequence of the disturbance to which it had given rise, Lord R. Grosvenor withdraws his Sunday Trading Bill.

6.—In the course of a debate on the conduct of the police in Hyde Park on the 1st inst., Mr. G. Dundas recommended as the best tranquillizer of a mob, "the click upon the pavement of the trail of a six-pounder."

7.—In answer to Mr. Milner Gibson, Lord John Russell explains that, though he was personally convinced that the Austrian proposals gave a very fair prospect to the cessation of hostilities, yet the Government on his return home came to the conclusion that the peace proposed would not be a safe peace, and that they could not recommend its adoption. His continuance in office was based upon a consideration of the exigencies of the times, the failure of himself and Lord Derby to form Ministries, and the appearance of instability his retirement might give to the present Cabinet. "And this," said Mr. Disraeli, "is the end of this important session—this is the end of breaking up so many Governments—this is the end of your great national intentions, great national disasters—this is the end of the Government, at the head of which you were to have a Minister of surpassing energy, and, no doubt, transcendent experience—this is the end of the Ministry which was to put the right men in the right places; this is the end, that even peace and war have become mere party considerations—that the interests of the country are sacrificed to the menace of a majority, and that the tumults and turbulent assemblies of Downing-street are to baffle all the sagacity of all the conferences of Vienna."

10.—Sir E. B. Lytton gives notice of a motion, "That the conduct of our Minister in the recent negotiations at Vienna has shaken the confidence of this country in those to whom its affairs are entrusted."

16.—Parliamentary censure being to all appearance unavoidable, if he remained in the Cabinet, Lord John Russell anticipated the effect of Sir E. B. Lytton's motion by announcing to-day that he had resigned. He was succeeded in the Colonial Office by Mr. Labouchere. The retirement of Lord John Russell at this time gave rise to considerable comment, as it was alleged that the step was taken not so much from the fear of political opponents as through the advice of outspoken candid friends. Prominent among these was the Vice-President of the Board of Trade, Mr. Bouverie. "It must have been an awful moment," the Times remarked, "when doubts as to the excellency of his idol began to throb through the soul of this placid neophyte. What after all if Lord John were mistaken? What if he were self-willed, opinionated, perverse, and his doctrines a strong delusion? What if he were to blow cold at Vienna and hot in London, to coo like a turtle-dove at one moment, and scream like a kite on the search for prey the next? Lord John a trimmer! Desdemona unchaste! Brookes's in revolt like a mere assemblage of ordinary men, subject to the like infirmities and passions as their fellow-creatures, and Mr. Bouverie standing by with fiery brain to witness the awful catastrophe!" Referring to the untoward result of the Conference, Mr. Disraeli said in the course of the debate, that it required a divinity inspired by the spirit of a Vice-President of the Board of Trade, to disentangle a knot of such difficulty and delicacy as the one which the noble lord has encountered. "There have been many instances," he said, "of friends and friendships. Friendship is the gift of God, and the most precious to man. It has long occupied the thought and consideration of essayists and philosophers. There is the devoted friend, who stands or falls by one like the noble lord (Lord Palmerston), but there is another kind of friend immortalized by an epithet, which should not be mentioned to ears polite. We all know that friend. It was, I believe, a brilliant ornament of this House who described that kind of friend; and I must say that, although as the devoted friend the Prime Minister must after to-night be allowed to take the highest position; still, for a friend of the other description—candid and not bad-natured—commend me to the Vice-President of the Board of Trade."

17.—An attempt having been made to eject Baron Rothschild from his seat for London, on the ground that he had entered into a contract with the Government, Mr. Walpole, to-day, brings up the Report of the Select Committee appointed to inquire into the question. They found that Baron Rothschild had not forfeited his seat by contracting for the loan.

— Mr. Roebuck moves a resolution based upon the Report of the Sebastopol Committee, pledging the House "to visit with severe reprobation every member of the Cabinet whose counsels led to such disastrous results." After a debate, extending over two nights, the "previous question" was carried by 289 to 182.

— Mr. William Farren retires from the stage after a performance at the Haymarket of the "Clandestine Marriage," in which the veteran sustained the part of Lord Ogleby.

19.—A fire broke out in the Hôtel d'Angleterre, Chamounix, and destroyed the greater part of the village.

21.—Uncovering of Behnes' statue of Sir Robert Peel, in Cheapside.

24.—An English snake found dead in the Highwoods, Colchester, measuring 9 feet 5 inches in length, and 11 inches in girth at the thickest part. It weighed between 140 and 150 pounds.

30.—The returns relative to the French loan of 750,000,000fr. give a total capital subscribed of 3,652,591,985fr., or nearly five times the amount required. The total number of subscribers was 316,864. No less than 231,920,155fr. were made up of subscriptions of 50fr. and under.

August 1.—Viscount Canning entertained by the East India Company on his appointment as Governor-General of India.

3.—Came on, at Warwick Assizes, the trial of Lieutenant William Austin, formerly Governor of Birmingham Borough Gaol, indicted on ten counts for having practised various cruelties by hooks, nails, strait-jackets, &c. upon the person of Edward Andrews, formerly a prisoner in the gaol, and who committed suicide there on the night of the 27th April, 1853. The chaplain said he knew the boy Andrews. "He appeared to be of a mild disposition. I went into his cell on the 19th of April, and found him crying. They were the cries of a person in much pain. The word 'murder' was used frequently. He was strapped to the wall and complained of the compression of his limbs and the tightness of the collar round his neck. I could not get my finger within his collar. He always complained of being too weakly for the crank labour, and so he appeared." Various other acts of cruelty having been spoken to by gaol officials, Mr. Justice Coleridge said, that the use of the strait-waistcoat, the collar, and water were clearly illegal punishments. The jury at once returned a verdict of guilty. Lieutenant Austin was then tried in company with Blount, the surgeon of the gaol, for assaulting a prisoner named Hunt. They were acquitted on this count, but convicted on another, charging them with omitting to make entries in the prison books required by Act of Parliament. Austin was brought before the Court of Queen's Bench and sentenced to three months' imprisonment.

7.—On the order of the day for the third reading of the Appropriation Bill, Lord J. Russell called attention to the prospects of the war, its expenses amounting to 49,000,000*l.* for the present year; to the inability of the Baltic and Black Sea Fleets, however powerful, to effect its termination; to the failure of the Foreign Enlistment Act, and our consequent inability to ward off the danger that threatens the Asiatic frontier of Turkey; to the fact that the Turkish Plenipotentiary was satisfied with the proposal for peace made by Count Buol, and that consequently, if the war was commenced, not for the integrity of Turkey, but for the maintenance of the military renown of France and England, it would be the duty of these Powers not to guarantee loans, but to give direct subsidies to Turkey.

9.—Santa Anna abdicates the dictatorship of Mexico.

— Bombardment of Sweaborg by the allied fleets in the Baltic. Heavy explosions and destructive fires were produced in a few hours. Nearly all the principal buildings on Vargoe and many more on Swartoe, including the dockyard and arsenal, were burnt. The firing was continued till 4 o'clock on the morning of the 11th, at which time 1,000 tons of iron shot and shell had been thrown into the forts by the English alone. The Russian account of the 10th says:—"Since nightfall the aggressor has been firing Congreve rockets into Sweaborg. According to an approximate calculation at least 10,000 shells must have been fired on the 9th from 7 A.M. to 8 P.M. The enemy is now firing thirty rockets a minute." The loss on the side of the Allies was trifling.

14.—Parliament prorogued by Commission. Referring to the war, her Majesty expressed herself convinced that "You will share her satisfaction at finding that the progress of events has tended to cement more firmly that union which has so happily been established between our Government and that of our ally, the Emperor of the French; and her Majesty trusts that the alliance founded on a sense of the general interests of Europe, consolidated by good faith, will long survive the events which have given rise to it, and will contribute to the permanent well-being and prosperity of the two great nations whom it has linked together in the bonds of honourable friendship." Reference was also made to the Metropolitan Improvement Bill, the abolition of the duty on newspapers, and the application of the principle of limited liability to joint-stock associations.

15.—The loan of 5,000,000*l.* raised for the Ottoman Porte on the joint guarantee of France and England, taken up by Messrs. Rothschild. The interest was to be 4 per cent. and the sum paid 102*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* for each 100*l.* stock.

16.—Battle of the Tchernaya. This desperate attempt to raise the siege was made under General Liprandi, who brought into the field five divisions of infantry, 6,000 cavalry, and 20 batteries. Despite the skilful concentration of these masses collected during the night, they were repulsed with great vigour by the French divisions which bore the chief weight of the assault. The Sardinian contingent, placed on the right, fought with great bravery. The Russians were in full retreat on Mackenzie's Farm when the allied reserves were being brought up. They left 2,500 dead on the field, and 1,620 wounded. The allied loss was 180 killed and 810 wounded.

18.—The Queen, with Prince Albert, the Prince of Wales, and the Princess Royal, visit the Emperor and Empress of the French at Paris. They were received by the Emperor at Boulogne, and conducted to the capital in the evening. During the week over which the sojourn extended, royal visits were paid to the Exposition d'Industrie, the Louvre, and the Opera. A splendid entertainment was given by the Municipality of Paris in the Hôtel de Ville, and a ball at Versailles, by the Emperor, which in magnificence eclipsed everything since the days of Louis XIV. There was also a military display on the Champs de Mars, and another at parting, on the 27th, on the heights above Boulogne. Lord Clarendon wrote to Sir George Grey:—"The Queen is profoundly sensible of the kindness with which she has been received by the Emperor and Empress, and of those manifestations of respect and cordiality on the part of the French nation by which she has everywhere been greeted. On personal and political grounds the visit to Paris has afforded the highest gratification to her Majesty."

— Concordat signed between Rome and Austria, whereby the House of Hapsburg surrendered to the Papal See greater rights and privileges than had ever before been extorted from any German sovereign. The first article guarantees the maintenance of the Roman Catholic religion with all the privileges which by the laws of the Church it ought to have. The second article gives to the bishops, clergy, and laity free communication with the Pope. The third article gives the bishops complete authority, pastoral and clerical. The fourth article enables them to do everything belonging to the government of their sees which is in accordance with the explanations or stipulations of the canonical laws, and which, in respect to the discipline of the Church, is approved by the Papal chair. The fifth article places all public and private schools under the control of the bishops; and the sixth gives the bishops the power of appointing and removing the only persons allowed to teach theology. The seventh article provides that none but Catholic priests shall be allowed to teach anything in the middle-class schools, and that the books of instruction be chosen by the bishop. By the eighth article the Emperor is permitted to choose the inspectors of the school of the diocese, but under the declared condition that the candidates from whom he may select shall be chosen by the bishops. The ninth article promises the help of the Government to suppress such books as are dangerous to religion in the judgment of the bishops. The tenth article establishes ecclesiastical courts for the punishment of the clergy and the trial of cases relating to marriage and betrothal. The eleventh article invests the bishops with the power of inflicting ecclesiastical punishment on clergy and laity. The twelfth article renders to the civil courts the power of deciding on the right of patronage, except in the case of a disputed succession.

September 3.—Bartholomew Fair—which dated from the erection of the Priory by Rahere in 1123—proclaimed in Smithfield for the last time.

8.—Dr. Barth, African traveller, whose fate had given rise to much anxiety in the public mind, arrives at Marseilles from Tripoli.

— Edouard Bellemarre, a person of weak intellect, attempts to assassinate the Emperor of the French by shooting at him with a pistol when passing into the Italian theatre.

— Retreat of the Russians from Sebastopol. At daybreak, on the morning of the 5th, the opening fire commenced from our mortar batteries. It was thenceforward continued without cessation by day and night. Besides the huge array of land batteries opposed to the east face, there were six English and six French mortar boats firing shells from Strelitska Bay into the Forts Quarantine and Alexander. It was determined that at noon this day the enemy's works should be stormed, and accordingly the French undertook the assault of the Malakhoff and the English the assault of the Redan Batteries. At the precise hour fixed on, the French soldiers rushed from their advanced places d'armes. They crossed the ditches with surprising agility, and, climbing on the parapets, attacked the enemy to the cry of "Vive l'Empereur!" At the Malakhoff Fort, the slopes on the inside being very high, the first arrivals stopped for a moment in order to form, then mounted on the parapet and leaped into the work. The contest, which had commenced by musket shots, was continued with the bayonet, butt-ends, and stones. The Russian artillerymen made use of their rammers as weapons; but they were everywhere killed, taken prisoners, or driven off, and in a quarter of an hour the French flag was floating on the conquered redoubt. This was the signal agreed on for the advance of the English to the Redan. The Light Division left the trenches, and moved across the ground under a withering fire of artillery, preceded by a covering party of 200 men and a ladder party of 320. On arriving at the crest of the ditch, the ladders were placed, and the men immediately stormed the parapet of the Redan, penetrating into the salient angle. A most determined and bloody contest was here maintained for nearly an hour. Young Massy, of the 19th, and Colonel Windham were particularly noticed for their courage in the face of the enemy; but, although the greatest bravery was displayed, it was found impossible to maintain the position. Chiefly, it was thought, from the want of flank support at the battery, the men in the salient were obliged to retreat and seek refuge with the main body of the army in the trenches. After this failure, the trenches were so crowded with troops that General Simpson was unable to renew the assault, but, after a conference with his officers, it was settled to make a new attempt the following morning. The retreat of the Russians made this unnecessary. A piquet party, creeping stealthily to the Redan after nightfall, found the place deserted. A series of tremendous explosions in the arsenals, and numerous fires, proclaimed about the same time that the enemy was preparing to leave the doomed city. "Soon afterwards," writes the Times' correspondent, "wandering fires gleamed through the streets and outskirts of the town—point after point became alight—the flames shone out of the windows of the houses—rows of mansions caught and burnt up, and before daybreak the town of Sebastopol, that fine and stately mistress of the Euxine, on which we had so often turned a longing eye, was on fire from the sea to the Dockyard Creek. At sunrise, four large explosions followed in quick succession, and at 5'30 Fort Alexander and the Grand Magazine, with all their deadly stores, were blown into the air. The former exploded with a stupendous crash, that made the very earth reel. All this time the Russians were marching with sullen tramp across the bridge, and boats were busy carrying matériel off from the town, or bearing men to the south side to complete the work of destruction, and renew the fire of hidden mines, or light up untouched houses. When the town could be safely entered, heaps of wounded and dead were found lying in stores to which they had been carried after the assault. Of all the pictures of the horrors of war ever presented to the world, the hospital of Sebastopol was the most horrible, heart-rending, and revolting. It cannot be described, and the imagination of a Fuseli could not conceive anything at all like unto it. How the poor human body can be mutilated, and yet hold its soul within, when every limb is shattered, and every vein and artery is pouring out the life-stream, one might study here at every step, and at the same time wonder how little could kill. In a long, low room, supported by square pillars, arched at the top, and dimly lighted through shattered and unglazed window frames, lay the wounded Russians, who had been abandoned to our mercies by their general." Between the 5th and the 8th, they lost 4 superior officers, 47 subalterns, and 3,917 soldiers, without reckoning the artillerymen who perished at the guns. "Taking advantage," writes Prince Gortschakoff, "of the superiority of their fire at short ranges, the enemy, after the concentrated action of their artillery for thirty days, commenced that infernal bombardment from their innumerable engines of war, and of a calibre hitherto unknown, which destroyed our defences, which had been repaired at night with great labour and at great loss, under the incessant fire of the enemy, the principal work having experienced considerable and irreparable damage. To continue, under these circumstances, the defence of the south side, would have been to expose our troops daily to a useless butchery, and their preservation is to-day more than ever necessary to the Emperor of Russia. For these reasons, with sorrow in my heart, but with a full conviction, I resolved to evacuate Sebastopol, and to take over the troops to the north side of the bridge constructed beforehand over the bay, and by boats. . . . Remember the sacrifice we made upon the altar of our country in 1812. Moscow was surely as valuable as Sebastopol. . . . It is not Sebastopol which we have left to them, but the burning ruins of the town, which we ourselves set fire to, having maintained the honour of the defence in such a manner that our great grandchildren may recall the remembrance thereof with pride to all posterity."

Thus ended this memorable siege of 349 days' duration. The besieging army had about 700 guns in battery during the various attacks, and upwards of 1,600,000 shots were fired. Our approaches, which were in many cases cut through the rock by means of gunpowder, had an extent of fully fifty miles. We employed 80,000 gabions, 60,000 fascines, and nearly a million of sandbags. The French lost in the Malakhoff attack 24 superior officers killed, 4 wounded, and 2 missing; 116 subaltern officers killed, 224 wounded, 8 missing; 1,489 sous-officers and soldiers killed, 4,259 wounded, and 1,400 missing: total, 7,551. The English lost at the Redan 385 killed, 1,886 wounded, 176 missing: total, 2,447.

10.—The news of the fall of Sebastopol reached England on the afternoon of this day (Monday), and gave rise to various patriotic demonstrations. The eventful intelligence was conveyed by express to the Queen at Balmoral, who caused a huge bonfire to be kindled on the summit of Craicowan in celebration of the victory. The guns were fired at St. James's Park and at the Tower. Intimation of the event was also made in the theatres during the evening; and special prayers relating thereto were offered up in the churches on the 30th.

10.—Influence of the fall of Sebastopol on the money market. The news was not published till after business hours, and in the earlier part of the day the effect of the announcement of the taking of the Malakhoff was partially counteracted by anxiety regarding the casualties that might possibly have been sustained in the assault on the Redan. Consols for money, which left off on Saturday at $90\frac{1}{2}$ to $\frac{1}{2}$, were first quoted at 91, but a tendency to relapse was soon observable, and after the appearance of the second edition of the papers, with the despatch from General Pélissier mentioning serious losses, a decline took place to $90\frac{1}{2}$ to $\frac{1}{2}$ for money, and $90\frac{1}{2}$ to 91 for the account, from which there was no alteration up to the official close. At a later hour, rumours began to circulate of the receipt of some further great intelligence, and transactions were again entered into at 91 to $\frac{1}{2}$ for the account. Among minor influences during the day on the unfavourable side, were the continued firmness of the corn market and the attempt on the life of the Emperor Napoleon, while, on the other hand, the market was supported by some arrivals of specie.

11.—The morning newspapers make the welcome announcement, "Sebastopol is in the possession of the Allies." Lord Panmure's telegram, dated Crimea, 9th, said: "The enemy during the night and this morning have evacuated the south side, after exploding their magazines and setting fire to the whole of the town." Another to Sir Charles Wood from Lord Lyons: "During the night the Russians have sunk all the remainder of the line-of-battle ships in Sebastopol harbour." Telegraphing on the 10th the capture of the Malakhoff, General Simpson announced, "The casualties, I regret to say, are somewhat heavy. No general officer killed. Names shall be sent as soon as possible."

— The Duke of Modena writes:—"Dear Forni, I answer a few words to yours of yesterday, which brought me the two sad telegraphic despatches relating to the Crimea. In this world, but only in this world, blackguards (i birbi) can triumph, and usually do triumph. For the rest, I believe that the Western Powers are at the highest point of their glory. Henceforward, as after the burning of Moscow, things will turn, please God, to their ruin. Meanwhile, we are to be prepared for revolutionary excitement, and for redoubled insolence on the part of the Western Powers. Austria is paralysed, and this is the most fatal thing for us."

12.—The United States' Attorney-General Cushing writes to the Attorney-General of the State of Philadelphia, regarding the alleged infraction of international law committed by Great Britain, in permitting in Canada the enlistment of subjects of the United States under the recently passed Foreign Enlistment Act: "This Government has, of course, addressed to that of Great Britain such demands of public redress and satisfaction in the premises as the national honour requires. But the Government of Great Britain, with extraordinary inattention to the grave aspect of its acts—namely, the flagrant violation of our sovereign rights involved in them—has supposed it a sufficient justification of what it has done, to reply that it gave instructions to its agents so to proceed as not to infringe our municipal laws; and it quotes the remarks of Judge Kane in support of the idea that it has succeeded in this purpose. It may be so; Judge Kane is an upright and intelligent judge, and will pronounce the law as it is, without fear or favour. But if the British Government has, by ingenious contrivances, succeeded in sheltering its agents from conviction as malefactors, it has, in so doing, doubled the magnitude of the national wrong inflicted on the United States."

14.—Lord Palmerston, in the course of an address at Melbourne, Derbyshire, said he had it on the best authority that the hospitals in the Crimea were now in the most admirable condition; they might in fact be almost regarded as models for the hospitals of London. The troops enjoyed every comfort compatible with a military campaign, and were in as good a condition as if they were in a peace establishment at home. "After what had occurred at Sebastopol, it was impossible," he said, "that the war could be brought to any other conclusion than that which would secure to Europe safety against the future aggression of Russia."

22.—The Revolutionary International Committee of the democratic and social Republicans meet in the Scientific Hall, John-street, London, to commemorate the anniversary of the proclamation of the first French Republic in 1792. The speeches at the meeting, which were extremely violent, were published in a Jersey newspaper called L'Homme, as was also an address to the Queen signed by the Committee of the Revolutionary Society. Rebellion and assassination were openly advocated both in the address and in the speeches. All the persons connected with the newspaper, and the refugees who advocated their principles, were driven from the island during a disturbance which took place the following month.

29.—Alderman Salomons elected Lord Mayor of London.

— The Sultan's troops defeat the Russians under General Mouravieff, at Kars. Colonel Williams reported that during this combat, which lasted nearly seven hours, the Turkish infantry, as well as artillery, fought with the most determined courage. The Russians left on the field more than 5,000 dead; but, notwithstanding this bloody repulse, they still clung to the blockade with extreme obstinacy, and continued to invest Kars on all sides, in the hope of compelling the garrison to surrender under the pressure of famine.

October 8.—Died, aged 72, Francis Magendie, French anatomist.

9.—Boiler explosion at the Walker Iron Works, near Newcastle, throwing down the most of the low rolling-mill and killing six of the workmen. Three were hurled into the Tyne by the force of the explosion, and others severely scalded and burnt.

12.—Miss Charlotte Hinds murderously assaulted and shot by some of her tenants when returning home on a car from the market of Ballyconnell, county Cavan. The lady had for months before been marked out as a victim by the members of a secret association on the estate.

14.—Commencement of a series of disorderly gatherings in Hyde Park to give expression to popular feeling regarding the present high price of provisions.

15.—The Emperor of Russia issues an ukase ordering a levy of 10 men for every 1,000 to recruit his army.

17.—Bombardment of Kinburn, in the Black Sea, by the allied fleet. All the forts, garrison of 1,500 men, and 70 guns taken; the prisoners sent to Constantinople.

—Siege of Kars. Dr. Sandwith writes: "Our troops suffering fearfully from their diet of bread and water. They are no longer the stout and hardy men who fought for seven hours against overwhelming odds, and drove back a magnificent Russian army. A visible emaciation is observed throughout the ranks, and the newly-opened hospitals are filling daily with men, whose only disease is exhaustion from want of nutriment. The high price of bread, too, in the town induces many poor fellows to sell half their rations, and those who yield to this temptation immediately sink at their posts and die.—21st. Swarms of vultures hover round our lines preying on the corpses that the hungry dogs which have forsaken the city have scratched out of their graves. The grass is torn up in all the open spaces, and the roots eaten by the soldiers and people."

22.—A young thief stolen by his comrades from the Middlesex Hospital, whither he had been conveyed after a fall when attempting to rob a house in Harley-street. His companions got over the garden wall of the hospital early in the morning, and entering the ward where the lad was lying, succeeded in carrying him off to a cab without alarm. They kept him concealed nearly a month, when the anxious searches of the police were rewarded by discovering him in an obscure lodging-house, still confined to his pallet by the broken limb.

—Died, aged 45, Sir W. Molesworth, (302)

Bart. M.P., Secretary of State for the Colonies, He was succeeded in his seat by Admiral Sir C. Napier, and in office by Mr. Labouchere.

24.—Exposure of Alice Grey the female impostor, at Wolverhampton Police-court. In the course of an inquiry into a charge made against two boys for stealing her purse, she was recognised as a woman who had made a similar charge at Birmingham. Likenesses of her were thereafter sent to different towns, which resulted in her detection as a systematic swindler. The earliest trace of her appeared at Dublin, where in 1849, under the name of Armstrong, she charged a man with robbing her, but failed to secure a conviction. In Yorkshire and Derbyshire she passed herself off as a clergyman's daughter. At Canterbury she was a Roman Catholic, persecuted by Baptists. In various parts of Scotland, and at Bristol, Bath, and London, she brought charges of robbery of imaginary trunks and purses against twenty-nine persons, sometimes obtaining a conviction, and nearly always money from the benevolent whom she interested in her story. She was committed for trial at the Spring Assizes, and there sentenced to four years' penal servitude.

25.—The engraved steel plates of various pictures by Landseer, Leslie, and Salter, mutilated to prevent further impressions being taken. The mutilated plates were exhibited to-day at the Albion, and the stock of copies in the hands of the proprietors submitted to public competition.

26.—Trial of Strahan, Paul, and Bates, at the Central Criminal Court, for fraudulently appropriating to their own use certain Danish bonds of the value of 5,000*l.* committed to their keeping as bankers, by Dr. Griffith, prebendary of Rochester. The case for the prosecution was stated by the Attorney-General. It was proved that Sir John Dean Paul instructed the Secretary of the National Insurance Company to sell Dr. Griffith's bonds; and Dr. Griffith deposed to conversations subsequent to the bankruptcy, from which it appeared that Mr. Strahan and Mr. Bates were accessory to the transaction. Sir F. Thesiger, who appeared for Mr. Strahan, defended him on the ground that the sale of the Danish bonds was effected solely by Sir John Paul; that he received the proceeds; and that there was no proof that Mr. Strahan was privy to the transaction; and further, that Mr. Strahan, having made a disclosure of the circumstances before the Court of Bankruptcy, was not (according to the Act of 7 and 8 Geo. IV.) liable to be indicted on account of such circumstances. Mr. Serjeant Byles, for Sir John Paul, admitted the facts as stated by Dr. Griffith, but said that it was his intention to replace the bonds, as was shown by his subsequently purchasing others to a similar amount. He also maintained, that Sir J. Paul having made a full disclosure in the Bankruptcy Court, was no longer liable to criminal proceedings. Mr. James, for Mr. Bates, rested his case upon his total ignorance of the transaction in question. The court then adjourned to the following morning, when Baron Alderson having charged the jury, after an absence of half an hour they returned a verdict of Guilty against all the prisoners. The judge proceeded to pass sentence. Commenting on the heinous nature of the offence, he observed that all the prisoners had been well educated, and moved in a high position of society. The punishment which was about to fall on them, therefore, would be far more heavy and more keenly felt than by persons in a lower condition of life. It would also, he regretted to say, afflict those who were connected with them. These, however, were not considerations for him at that moment: all he had to do was to say that he could not conceive any worse case of the sort that could arise under the statute upon which they had been convicted, and that being the case, he had no alternative but to pass upon them the sentence which the Act of Parliament provided for the worst class of offences arising under it; that was, that they be severally transported for the term of fourteen years.

November 1.—Murder of Robert Stirling, a young surgeon, assistant to Mr. Watson, of Byer's-green, near Newcastle. Stirling left his residence on the forenoon of this day to visit patients residing in the outlying districts of Thornley, Barlow, and Low Spen. He completed his last visit about 1 o'clock P.M. and was not seen alive afterwards. Mr. Watson, thinking his assistant had gone suddenly off to join the Turkish contingent, to which he had been appointed, took no immediate alarm, and, indeed, wrote to Stirling's friends in Scotland that he had left suddenly. The young man's father, doubtful that he would leave in this manner, set out for Byer's-green, and caused a search to be instituted in the neighbourhood. On the evening of the 6th the body was discovered in a copse near Derwent-bridge, a short distance from Gibside-park. The face was dreadfully beaten in and bruised, and it was found on examination that he had been shot through the abdomen. His watch was stolen, and his pockets rifled. It appeared that, on leaving the house of the patient last visited, young Stirling proceeded down a solitary lane leading past Derwent-bridge, and on passing a clump of trees was shot by some one lying in ambush, and dragged through a hedge to the plantation where his body was found. In this place the murderer seemed to have finished his victim, either by beating him about the head with the butt end of his gun, or with two large stones found near. The most anxious search could discover nothing but slight traces of the perpetrators of the crime. The time of the murder might be gathered from the testimony of a boy working in a neighbouring potato-field, who said that between 1 and 2 o'clock he heard a gun fired in Smaile's

Wood, and afterwards a voice shouting, "Oh, dear! oh, dear!" He thought some one had been firing at a hare, and that the gun burst. A farmer riding through the lane shortly before this met two men, but they were unknown to him. In a wood close by was concealed a large illicit whisky still, which brought a number of questionable characters into the vicinity. As many as were thought to be connected with it were arrested; among others, one known as John Cain, or "Whisky Jack;" but nothing appeared to attach the crime to any of them, until a boy, attracted to the scene of the murder, discovered among the leaves a glass button traced to have belonged to the waistcoat of "Whisky Jack," from which it was now missing. The farmer also thought he recognised in "Whisky Jack" and a companion, Richard Rayne, the two men whom he had seen in the lane; while a watch resembling that which belonged to Mr. Stirling was offered to a pawnbroker in Durham by a man very like "Whisky Jack's" companion. From other minute particulars traced by the police, the two prisoners were ultimately committed for trial. The case, which excited an interest far beyond the bounds of the locality where it occurred, came on at Durham Assizes on the 26th of July following. The evidence told more against "Whisky Jack" than his companion. Elizabeth Wilson, servant in a public-house in the Castle Garth, Newcastle, said that one morning, soon after the murder, Cain asked her to wash a shirt. She found it covered with blood both on the breast and on the sleeves, and the latter so much so as to appear as if they had been wrung out. She said to him, "Canny man, where have you been?" Cain replied, "It's no use saying anything, as I have been here, there, and everywhere. I have been skinning a hare; and if anybody asks you about the shirt, you must say so." His companion (whom she could not identify as Rayne), also gave her a shirt to wash, more bloody than the other. "Why," said the girl, "you have not both been killing a hare;" upon which the men laughed. They then asked for something to clean a gun, and left the house. A number of other circumstances were brought out in evidence against the prisoners, but the jury did not think they would warrant a conviction against either; they therefore returned a verdict of Not guilty.

2.—Between this date and the 28th about twenty cases of murder or attempted murder, at the instigation of secret Ribbon associations, are reported in the Irish newspapers. In one case four infuriated women set upon a process-server, at Ballylinan, Leinster, and, after failing in an attempt to hang him, beat him nearly to death with bludgeons. In only a few of the cases could witnesses be got to criminate the parties apprehended by the police.

3.—Dr. Hermann Francks, formerly editor of the Allgemeine Zeitung, commits suicide by throwing himself out of a window of the Royal Albion Hotel, Brighton. His son was found suffocated in his bedroom, but whether by his own hand, or his father's, or from natural causes, was never ascertained.

3.—The Saturday Review commenced, with the new and special features of leading articles and reviews only.

— Robert Philip, lately chief magistrate of Leith, sentenced by the High Court of Justiciary to fifteen years' transportation for improper practices with girls under age.

5.—The rate-payers of the metropolis reject a proposal made for establishing a free library and museum under Mr. Ewart's Act.

6.—Omer Pasha, in his march to the relief of Kars, forces the passage of the Ingour, and defeats the Russians, 16,000 strong.

8.—The Emperor of Russia visits his army in the Crimea. He left Nicholaieff on the 7th, passed through Perekop, and arrived at Simpheropol to-day. He inspected the different divisions of his army, and on the 10th visited the advanced position on the north side as far as Mackenzie's Farm. He returned to Nicholaieff on the 12th.

10.—General Simpson resigns the command of the British army in the Crimea, and is succeeded by General Codrington.

11.—Died, aged 73, Thomas Wilde, first Baron Truro; and Lord Chancellor from July 1850 to February 1852.

15.—Explosion in the camp, Sebastopol. The French magazine, which had been the supply-store to their works during the attack on the Malakhoff, and contained 3,000 kilogrammes of powder, 600,000 cartridges, 300 charged shells and rockets, and indeed every conceivable munition of attack, blew up with awful effect, setting fire to and exploding the adjoining British magazine. Our loss by the explosion was 21 killed, and 116 wounded; the French had 32 men killed, and several hundreds wounded.

20.—Mademoiselle Julie burnt to death in Plymouth theatre, by her dress coming in contact with a stage light when performing her part in a fairy extravaganza.

21.—John Parsons Cook poisoned at Rugeley. Attending Shrewsbury races, with his horse Pole Star, Cook was suddenly taken ill while drinking in company with his friend, William Palmer. Though not without suspicion that he had been "dosed," Cook, on recovering somewhat, permitted himself to be conveyed by Palmer to Rugeley, where a room was taken for him at the Talbot Arms. Mr. Jones, a surgeon at Lutterworth, was sent for by Palmer, who stated that Cook had been taken suddenly ill with a severe bilious attack. In company with another surgeon, Mr. Bamford, he attended upon Cook on the 20th, and left in the evening in the belief that he was improving.

(304)

Mr. Jones thus describes the end of the unfortunate man:—"When we had retired to arrange what should be given to him during the night, it was proposed between Mr. Palmer and Mr. Bamford, that the morphia pills should be repeated as on the previous night; and it was suggested by Mr. Palmer that Mr. Cook should not know what the pills contained, as he strongly objected to them on the previous night, because they made him so ill. I believe it was a little after eleven o'clock at night that Mr. Palmer came over and produced the pills, which he gave to Mr. Cook in my presence. I believe there were two pills. Mr. Cook made strong protestations against taking them, saying that he was certain they made him ill the night before. Almost immediately after he had swallowed the pills he vomited; and I and Mr. Palmer searched the vessel for the pills, but could not detect them. A few minutes before twelve o'clock I went to his bedroom, and, at his suggestion, slept in that room. After a short conversation I undressed and got into bed, and wished him good-night. At that time he appeared as comfortable as usual. I suppose I had not been in bed more than a quarter of an hour or twenty minutes, when he suddenly jumped up in bed uttering these words, 'Doctor, get up; I am going to be ill; ring the bell for Mr. Palmer.' I went to him and pulled the bell, and he called out to the chambermaid, 'Fetch Mr. Palmer directly.' Mr. Palmer came in the space of two minutes, making the remark that he thought he had never dressed so quickly in his life. Mr. Palmer lived opposite the Talbot Arms, where Mr. Cook was stopping. I believe Mr. Palmer gave him two pills which he brought with him, and which he told me contained ammonia. I could not see from Mr. Palmer's appearance whether he had been in bed. Immediately after taking the pills Mr. Cook uttered loud screams, and threw himself back on the bed in strong convulsions. He then requested to be raised up, saying, 'I shall be suffocated.' We endeavoured to raise him up, but he was so stiffened out with spasms that it was impossible to do so. When he found we could not raise him, he said, 'Turn me over,' and I turned him over on his right side. I listened to the action of his heart, which I found gradually to cease; and in a few minutes he died. I never heard of his having a fit before. I have never seen symptoms so strong before. They were symptoms of convulsions and tetanus; every muscle of the body was stiffened. I cannot say what was the cause of convulsions. My impression at the time was, that it was from over-excitement. I believe the jaw was fixed, and closed. His body was stretched out, and resting on his hands and heels. I never knew any one keep ammonia pills made up." At the coroner's inquest, medical witnesses who examined the body of the deceased deposed that they could find nothing which would account for his sudden death; nor were the symptoms those of apoplexy or any other known disease. Dr. Alfred S. Taylor, lecturer on Medical Jurisprudence and Chemistry at Guy's Hospital, and Dr. Rees, Assistant Physician at Guy's Hospital, examined the intestines of the deceased. They found antimony present in all parts in considerable quantities, and examined for morphia and strychnine, but without discovering any trace of either. The viscera of the deceased presented no appearance whatever to account for death from natural causes. After making some inquiries of the witnesses, Dr. Taylor declared that he was fully prepared to give his opinion as to the cause of death. "My belief is that he died from tetanus, and that tetanus was caused by medicine given to him shortly before his death. I believe that the pills administered on Monday night and Tuesday night contained strychnine. I do not believe that the medicine prescribed by Mr. Bamford could have produced any such effects as those I have heard described. It is not possible for them to have produced the effect. There is not the slightest indication of morphia in the body. Further than this, we find no mercury in the liver or other parts of the body, and I do not think that mercury could have been taken on the Monday and Tuesday nights without discovering traces in the liver: and there were none." The coroner's jury found that the deceased died of poison wilfully administered to him by William Palmer. Inquiries were subsequently made into the suspicious circumstances attending the death of various of Palmer's friends and acquaintances. The bodies of his wife and brother were exhumed, and a verdict of "Wilful Murder" pronounced against him in each case. The trial commenced on May 14th, 1856.

21.—William Henry Barber, transported in 1844 for his alleged complicity in the Fletcher will forgeries, and afterwards pardoned, was this day replaced on the rolls as an attorney. In delivering judgment upon his petition, Lord Campbell said, "the evidence to establish his connivance in the frauds was too doubtful for us to continue his exclusion any longer."

— Treaty concluded between France, England, and Sweden, for the avoidance of any complications which might arise from the interference of Russia in the affairs of Northern Europe.

22.—Surrender of Kars to the Russians under Mouravieff. The conditions were highly honourable to the besieged and famishing garrison, the second article being in these terms: "The garrison of Kars, surrendering prisoners of war, with the Commander-in-Chief of the Turkish army and all the military authorities, will leave the place with the honours of war, and deposit their arms, flags, &c., in a spot agreed upon previously, whence they will proceed to the destination indicated to them by the Russian commander-in-chief. As a testimony of the valorous resistance made by the garrison of Kars, the officers of all ranks are to keep their swords." To General Williams was reserved the right of designating at his choice, in a list to be submitted to the Russian commander, a certain number of persons to whom permission would be given to return to their homes. In his order of the day, General Mouravieff thus addressed the troops:—"At the price of your blood and your labour the bulwark of Asia Minor has been placed at the feet of his Majesty the Emperor; the Russian standard floats on the walls of Kars. It proclaims the victory of the Cross of the Saviour. The whole of the army of Anatolia, 30,000 strong, has vanished like a shadow. Its Commander-in-Chief, with all his Pashas and officers, and the English general who directed the defence, with his staff, are our prisoners. Thousands of Turkish prisoners who return to their homes will proclaim your deeds of arms."

29.—At Cwmannan Colliery, near Aberdare, a carriage, containing eight miners, is carried up beyond the pit-mouth, and, dashing against the pulley-wheel at the top, the men were capsized and fell down the shaft, a depth of 750 feet. They were all killed.

— Meeting in Willis's Rooms, presided over by the Duke of Cambridge, to organize a plan for presenting a testimonial to Miss Nightingale, in acknowledgment of her great services in the Crimean hospitals. Resolutions were proposed and carried to the following effect:—That the noble exertions of Miss Nightingale and her associates in the hospitals of the East, and the invaluable services rendered by them to the sick and wounded of the British forces, demand the grateful recognition of the British people; That it is desirable to perpetuate the memory of Miss Nightingale's signal devotion, and to record the gratitude of the nation, by a testimonial of a substantial character; and that, as she has expressed her unwillingness to accept any tribute designed for her own personal advantage, funds be raised to enable her to establish an institution for the training, sustenance, and protection of nurses and hospital attendants; That to accomplish this object on a scale worthy of the nation, and honourable to Miss Nightingale, all classes be invited to contribute; That the sums so collected be vested in trustees to be appointed by the Committee, and applied for the purpose expressed in the second resolution, in such manner and under such regulations as Miss Nightingale shall from time to time approve, the subscribers having entire confidence in her experience, energy, and judgment; That with a view to secure, under all circumstances, the appropriation of the funds raised to the purpose expressed in the second resolution, Miss Nightingale be requested to name a Council (selected from the Committee) to co-operate with her, and who may represent her until her return to this country, or in the event of any suspension of her labours.

30.—The King of Sardinia arrived at Dover on a visit to her Majesty, and was received with the enthusiasm due to one who had thrown the weight of his kingdom into the scale of the Western alliance against Russia. On the 2d of December he visited the City of London; and on the 3d was made a Knight of the Garter.

December 4.—General Codrington writes from Sebastopol:—"The enemy continue to fire occasionally, and sometimes heavily, on parts of the town. They must have expended a considerable quantity of valuable ammunition without causing us any loss or inconvenience. The winter broke upon us suddenly on the 26th and 27th, with snow, varied with gales and rain; a very deep state of the ground has damaged all communications."

7.—Came on for hearing in the Irish Court of Queen's Bench, the charge made against the Rev. Valdimir Petcherine, one of the Redemptorist Fathers of Kingstown, of causing a copy of the Scriptures to be contemptuously burnt, "to the high displeasure of Almighty God, and the great disrespect, discredit, and dishonour of the religion established by law." The Attorney-General prosecuted, and described the precise legal guilt the accused had incurred. A boy engaged in the work of burning deposed that, at the request of Father Petcherine, he wheeled a barrow full of books from the Father's lodgings, to the courtyard of the chapel. Another boy wheeled a second barrow. When Father Petcherine arrived, the books were tumbled out; and the Father, giving orders that they should be set on fire, went away towards the vestry. A crowd of persons was then collected. The fire was not lighted until the Father had gone. When the Father came back, the books were well burnt, but not consumed. Henry Lawson, labourer, said that he saw among the books Byron's Poems, some tracts, a New Testament, a Prayer-book, and a Bible. Mr. W. T. Darkin, sub-inspector of factories, and Police-officer Halpin, deposed that they saw a Bible and Testament in the fire; and the Rev. R. Wallace, Dissenting minister, produced a portion of the Books of Deuteronomy and Joshua, which he had rescued from the flames. The defence was a denial both of the intention and the fact. The defendant had, in the discharge of his religious duty, attempted to put an end to the circulation of immoral publications in Kingstown, and had required his flock to deliver up all such at his lodgings. They were sent there in quantities, and the rev. gentleman directed that they should be burnt. No doubt it would have been better if they had not been publicly burnt. There was little evidence to show that he had examined the books directed to be destroyed, so as to ascertain their nature individually, certainly none that he was cognizant of the presence of Bibles and Prayer-books, or rather of a Prayer-book and Bible, for one only had been deposed to.

Very possibly, the persons who attended the bonfire might have thrown a Protestant Bible and Prayer-book into the flames. It was also denied that the Roman Catholic Church had any hostility to the Scriptures translated into the vernacular tongues. The jury, which consisted of five Protestants and seven Roman Catholics, after some deliberation, acquitted the accused. The announcement was received with applause, taken up outside, and spreading far and wide. In the evening the streets occupied by Roman Catholics were illuminated.

7.—Came on at Durham Assizes, the trial of Joseph Snaith Wooler, charged with having murdered his wife by administering poison to her during a very long illness. The case lasted over three days, but the witnesses for the prosecution called to prove the administration of arsenic by the prisoner, broke down in cross-examination, and the jury, after an absence of ten minutes, returned a verdict of Not guilty.

11.—The Rev. W. D. Beresford, rector of the parish of Inniscarra, Cork, and heir to a peerage, sentenced at York Assizes to be transported for the period of his natural life, for uttering a forged bill of exchange for 100*l.* with intent to defraud John Cunliffe Kay, of Manningham Hall, near Bradford.

14.—Explosion of an iron furnace at Bilston, causing the death of five of the workmen. About six tons of molten iron and burning cinders were blown about the works.

18.—Died in his house, St. James's Place, in his 93rd year, Samuel Rogers, poet and banker.

21.—Carton House, Maynooth, the seat of the Duke of Leinster, destroyed by fire.

— Mr. John Thwaites elected Chairman of the new Metropolitan Board of Works.

22.—The Austrian Cabinet having acquainted Russia with a new scheme of negotiation to secure peace, that Power, in a despatch to its agents at foreign courts, thus expresses its willingness to treat:—"As soon as information reached the Government of his Majesty, that his enemies were disposed to take up again the negotiations of peace on the basis of the four points, such as they had been defined in the Conferences, the Imperial Cabinet did not hesitate to come forward frankly to meet these peaceful dispositions, and to seek frankly for a possible solution for the third point in the order of ideas which had appeared in turn satisfactory to all parties." The solution here alluded to consisted in an offer on the part of Russia to consent to an arrangement of the question of the Black Sea, on the following terms:—"The principle of the closing of the Straits of the Dardanelles to be maintained; no war flag to be admitted into the Black Sea except that of the forces which Russia and Turkey might judge it necessary to maintain there by mutual agreement. The amount of these forces to be fixed by a direct arrangement between Russia and Turkey, without the ostensible participation of the other Powers."

22.—The Edinburgh address to the King of Sardinia containing various expressions of theological acrimony relating to the Holy See, his Majesty caused the Marquis D'Azeglio to answer—"I cannot conceal from you that it is with extreme regret that his Majesty has been informed of the expressions of contempt by which your address stigmatizes the Court of Rome. The King, as well as his predecessors, has considered it a duty to maintain the civil power in his hand intact. He may have deplored profoundly the line of conduct which the Holy See has thought it its duty to adopt towards him of late years; but descended as he is from a long line of Catholic princes, and sovereign of subjects almost entirely Catholics, he cannot admit of words of reprobation thus severe, and, above all, injurious towards the head of that Church on earth."

26.—Thomas Carrigan, a foreman in the East India Company's warehouses, murders his wife by stabbing her in a house in the Minories, where they had been keeping Christmas. At the first examination at the Thames Police-court, the female witnesses of the occurrence appeared so terror-stricken that they could neither speak to the facts within their knowledge, nor look at the prisoner to identify him. He was tried at the Central Criminal Court and condemned to death, but respited on the morning fixed for the execution. It was thought he was labouring under an attack of delirium tremens at the time the crime was committed.

January 8.—At the Central Criminal Court, Edward Harvey and Harriet Ray were indicted for the wilful murder of Harriet Harvey, aged 5, by starving her to death. Dr. Letheby, who examined the intestines and stomach of the deceased, was of opinion that death was caused by a long-continued course of starvation. In the stomach were found some small pieces of wood apparently devoured in the extremity of hunger. The jury found the male prisoner guilty of manslaughter, and acquitted the woman.

—J. P. Collier makes affidavit in Judge's Chambers regarding a copy of Shakspeare's works known as the "Perkins folio," certain MS. emendations in which he had published as improvements on the text made by a person living near the date of publication, 1632. The affidavit had reference to the condition of the volume at the date of the purchase from Mr. Rodd, in 1849, and the past history of the book so far as the same could be ascertained.

11.—The morning newspapers publish the text of the Austrian proposals made to Russia.

On the subject of the neutralization of the Black Sea, the third article proposed:—"This sea shall be open to merchant vessels, closed but to war navies; and no military arsenals shall be created or maintained there. The protection of the commercial and maritime interests of all nations shall be assured in the respective ports of the Black Sea by the establishment of institutions conformable to international law, and to the customs sanctioned in such matters. The two Powers which hold the coast engage themselves to maintain only the number of light vessels, of a fixed force, necessary for the coast service. This convention, concluded separately between these two Powers, shall form part as an annex of the general treaty, after receiving the approval of the contracting parties. This separate convention cannot be annulled or modified without the consent of the signatories of the general treaty."

16.—George Waugh, solicitor, shot dead in Bedford-row by Charles Broadfoot Westron, clerk. Mr. Beecher, of Stationers' Hall-court, made the following statement before the coroner:—"This day, about half-past ten o'clock, I was proceeding along Bedford-street, Bedford-row. I saw a gentleman before me about to turn down Hand-court. I then saw the prisoner run across the road, lift up his hand, and fire. Mr. Waugh bounded about a foot up in the air, and fell on the ground, breaking his hat in the fall. A gentleman then came up and took hold of the prisoner's arm." He was tried at the Central Criminal Court, on the 7th of February, when the jury returned a verdict of Guilty, with a strong recommendation to mercy, on account of his predisposition to insanity. Sentence of death was afterwards commuted into penal servitude for life.

17.—The Times, in a second edition, publishes the following telegram from Vienna:—"Russia has unconditionally accepted the proposition of the Allies. This is authentic." The news produced a great commotion on the Stock Exchange, the funds experiencing a total rise of more than 3 per cent. The opening prices of Consols were 87 $\frac{3}{8}$ for money, and 87 $\frac{3}{8}$ for the account. On the publication of the news, a sudden rise occurred to 88 $\frac{1}{2}$ for money, then another to 90 $\frac{1}{2}$, while for the account bargains were entered into at 90 $\frac{1}{2}$. At the peace with France in 1801, the rise was from 59 $\frac{3}{4}$ to 70; after the Treaty of Amiens in 1802, from 70 $\frac{1}{4}$ to 79; after the Battle of Waterloo, from 53 $\frac{3}{4}$ to 59 $\frac{1}{4}$. To-day in the markets for Russian produce, there was great agitation. Tallow receded from 67s. per cwt. to 62s. 6d.

21.—At the sittings at Nisi Prius, Westminster, a cause was tried which placed in a strong light the depravity of Palmer, the Rugeley poisoner. The plaintiff in Padwick v. Sarah Palmer sued the defendant, Palmer's mother, upon a bill of exchange for 2,000*l.* drawn by William Palmer upon and accepted by Sarah Palmer, and endorsed by William Palmer to the plaintiff. The defence was that the bill was a forgery. Palmer was brought up from Stafford Gaol to give evidence. On the bill being placed in his hand, Mr. James said, "You applied to Mr. Padwick to advance money on that bill?—I did. Who wrote the acceptance 'Sarah Palmer'?—Ann Palmer. Who is she?—She is now dead. Do you mean your wife?—Yes. Did you see her write it?—Yes. You may now retire." The jury immediately returned a verdict for the defendant. Commenting on Palmer's case next day, the Times writes:—"Palmer has found numerous partisans in the town of Rugeley, the scene of his operations. The postmaster of the place is a spy in his interest, intercepts letters, and reports to him the contents. The very coroner of the adjacent county town, his judge, is for him as though he had been engaged as solicitor for his defence, receives from him intercepted evidence from the other side, shrewd suggestions in his favour, and a present of game. The case will be amongst the most remarkable in our criminal annals, not only from the unutterable atrocity of the crimes charged, but from the proof it affords that in this country great criminals can upon occasions break down all the barriers which society has raised for its protection."

22.—Three persons poisoned at dinner in the house of Provost M'Iver, Dingwall, by partaking of monkshood at table in mistake for horse-radish.

— Proclamation issued abolishing the practice of deducting the clothing supplied to recruits from their bounty-money.

23.—The Pacific steamship sails from Liverpool for New York, with 45 passengers on board, a crew of 141 men, and a valuable general cargo. She was not afterwards heard of, and was supposed to have struck on an iceberg, and foundered with all on board. Among the passengers were Mr. Eliot Warburton, and Mr. Catherwood, the explorer of Central America. The insurances on the vessel amounted to 2,000,000 dollars.

29.—Her Majesty's steam-sloop Polyphemus wrecked in a fog off the west coast of Jutland, and fourteen of the crew drowned by the upsetting of one of the life-boats.

31.—Parliament opened by the Queen in person. In the Royal Speech her Majesty referred to the negotiations recently resumed with the view of accomplishing a suspension of hostilities. Among the new measures recommended to the attention of Parliament were the improvement of the laws of partnership, local shipping dues, and law reform.

February 1.—Protocol signed at Vienna by the representatives of the Five Powers:—"In consequence of the acceptance by their respective courts of the five propositions contained in the document hereunto annexed, under the title of Draft Preliminaries, the undersigned, after having paraphrased it conformably to authorization received to that effect, have agreed that their Governments shall each nominate plenipotentiaries who, furnished with the full powers necessary for proceeding to the signature of formal preliminaries of peace, shall conclude an armistice and a definitive treaty of peace. The said plenipotentiaries shall assemble at Paris within the term of three weeks, dating from this day, or sooner if it can be done." The armistice in the meantime to extend from 29th February to 31st March.

1.—The docks of Sebastopol destroyed. Fort Nicholas was also destroyed on the 4th, and Fort Alexander on the 11th.

— In consequence of a difference with the Persian Court respecting the servants of the embassy, Mr. Murray, the British Minister, quits Teheran for Bagdad.

3.—William Bousfield, Portland-street, Soho, murders his wife and three children by cutting their throats, and, failing in an attempt upon his own life, walks to Bow-street station, where he delivered himself up to the constable on duty. The poor woman was last heard of in life by a neighbour, who knocked at the door late the preceding night, for the purpose of purchasing a little firewood in which Mrs. Bousfield dealt. She was heard to ask her husband to rise, but he sullenly refused to stir out of bed. He was known to be of lazy habits and morose disposition; but the inquiry did not show any precise motive for committing so dreadful an offence. Bousfield was tried at the Central Criminal Court in March, and condemned to be executed.

— Collision in the channel off Folkstone, between the Josephine Willis packet-ship with emigrants for Auckland, and the iron screw-steamer Maugerton, causing a loss of 90 of the passengers and crew of the former vessel.

5.—On the motion of the Lord Chancellor a bill was read a first time, by which power was given to the Queen's Bench in cases where in the opinion of the court such a course was desirable to remove the case to the Central Criminal Court.

7.—Destructive storm and flood in the west of Scotland. At Glasgow, during the night, a large range of workshops in the course of erection for the Caledonian Railway were reduced to ruins. At Whitinch the building sheds of Tod and M'Gregor were unroofed, and at Bowling the damage to the shipping in the dock was of the most serious description.

— The Governor-General of India issues a proclamation announcing the annexation of the kingdom of Oude:—"The time has come when the British Government can no longer tolerate in Oude those evils and abuses, while its position under the treaty serves indirectly to sustain or continue to the Sovereign that protection which alone upholds the power whereby such evils are inflicted. Fifty years of sad experience have proved that the treaty of 1801 has wholly failed to secure the happiness and prosperity of Oude; and have conclusively shown that no effectual security can be had for the release of the people of that country from the grievous oppression they have long endured, unless the exclusive administration of the territories shall be permanently transferred to the British Government."

7.—Discussion in the House of Lords on the subject of life peerages. Lord Lyndhurst moved, "That a copy of the letters patent purporting to create the Right Honourable Sir James Parke, Knight, a Baron of the United Kingdom for life, which has been laid upon the table, be referred to the Committee for Privileges, with directions to examine and consider the same, and report thereon to the House." The subject he said was one of no ordinary interest as it involved the question, whether the ancient hereditary character of the House should continue, or whether it should be broken in upon and new-modelled to the extent desired by, and according to the discretion and interest of, the Minister for the time being. The Lord Chancellor defended the appointment and opposed the motion, but on a division it was carried by a majority of 138 to 105. The Committee commenced to sit on the 12th, and called before it a number of officials to give evidence on the question. On the 22nd Lord Glenelg, supported by Government, sought to get the question referred to the judges, but was defeated on a division. On the same day Lord Lyndhurst moved that the Committee having, as ordered by the House, examined and considered the copy of the letters patent, report it as their opinion that neither the said letters patent, nor the said letters patent with the usual writ of summons issued in pursuance thereof, can entitle the grantee therein named to sit and vote in Parliament. In a speech of remarkable ability he sought to establish the two positions that there were certain limits to the power of the Crown in the creation of peers, and that the House of Lords had a jurisdiction and a right to decide on the validity of the patents by which commoners are admitted to the privilege of peers. Lord Grey proposed to substitute an amendment, "That the highest legal authorities having concurred in declaring the Crown to possess the power of creating peerages for life, and this power having in some cases been exercised in former times, the House of Lords would not be justified in assuming the illegality of the patent creating the Right Honourable James Parke, Baron Wensleydale for life, and in refusing upon that assumption to permit him to take his seat as a peer." On a division, the numbers were—for Lord Grey's amendment 57, against it 92. Lord Lyndhurst's resolution was then put, and agreed to. The Government soon after gave up the contest by creating Baron Parke a peer, with title to issue.

14.—Sir F. Kelly obtains leave to bring in a bill to consolidate the statute-law relating to offences against the person. "These statutes," he said, "were comprised in 40 folio volumes, and embraced from 18,000 to 20,000 different statutes. He proposed to subdivide and classify the whole of the subjects, and to re-enact the existing laws relating to each in one act, so that the Statute book, instead of 20,000 acts, would contain 200 or 300 only, each act embodying the whole statute law upon one particular subject."

15.—In the House of Lords, Lord Brougham presents a petition from the inhabitants of Carlisle, complaining of the conduct of the Bishop in not consecrating the burial-ground appropriated to Churchmen in consequence of the absence of any separation but a road between it and the rest of the ground. Earl Granville expressed a hope that the new Bishop of Carlisle would take a wider and more liberal view of the matter than had been taken by a very small portion of the Episcopal Bench.

17.—John Sadleir, M.P. for Sligo borough, commits suicide on Hampstead Heath, by swallowing a quantity of essential oil of almonds. The body was found early in the morning on the rise of a small mound at the back of Jack Straw's Castle, the head close to a furze bush, the clothes undisturbed, and the hat at a little distance. It had evidently been lying there the greater part of the night, as it was quite cold, and the rigor mortis completely established. The corpse was taken to Hampstead Workhouse. In the course of the inquest it came out that the deceased had been concerned in a series of gigantic embezzlements and forgeries. Two letters written by him before he left the house were laid before the jury. One of them addressed to Mr. Keating, M.P. for Waterford, was in these words:—"No one has been privy to my crimes; they sprang from my own cursed brain alone. I have swindled and deceived without the knowledge of any one. Stevens and Norris are both innocent, and have no knowledge of the fabrication of deeds and forgeries by me, and by which I have sought to go on in the horrid hope of retrieving. It was a sad day for all when I came to London. I can give but little aid to unravel accounts and transactions." The full extent of Sadleir's embezzlements and forgeries was never exactly known. One fraudulent transaction in respect of the Royal Swedish Railway, consisted of an over-issue of shares and obligations to the amount of at least 150,000*l.* In respect of the Tipperary Bank, the manager, his brother, had permitted him to overdraw more than 200,000*l.*, and, with other fraudulent mismanagement, the deficit of the bank exceeded 400,000*l.* The assets were stated to be little more than 30,000*l.* The misery caused by this infamous confederacy was unspeakable. Not only were the depositors in the South of Ireland—chiefly small farmers and tradesmen—defrauded of their savings, but the shareholders were stripped, for the most part, of everything they possessed. The means taken to entrap the last-named class, were unusually nefarious. On the 1st of February—one month before the crash—the Sadleirs published a balance-sheet and report, in which the concern was represented as most flourishing. A dividend, at the rate of 6 per cent. with a bonus of 3*l.* per cent., was declared, and 3,000*l.* was carried to the Reserve Fund, raising it to 17,000*l.* By means of this fabrication, a considerable number of persons, most of them widows, spinsters, and half-pay officers, were induced to become shareholders, and lost their all. Endless suits were brought by attorneys, who had purchased debts due by the Company, against these unhappy people. Some declared themselves insolvent, others fled to the United States with such of their property as they could hastily secure. Mr. James Sadleir absconded, under circumstances which gave rise to much discussion.

17.—Died, aged 82, John Braham, the famous tenor-singer.

20.—The Duchesse de Caumont-Laforce murdered in Paris by her groom, who, in a fit of passion at her interference, first knocked her down with his fist in the stable-yard, and then smothered her beneath a heap of litter.

— The emigrant ship, John Routledge, from Liverpool to New York, strikes upon an iceberg and founders. Most of the crew and passengers succeeded in getting into the boats, but between casualties from the storm and privations only a very few were saved. In one of the small boats launched with thirteen, Thomas Nye was the only survivor. He had not strength to throw the corpses overboard, when he was picked up at sea by the Germania, from Havre.

21.—Lord Panmure announces in the House of Lords that her Majesty had appointed, by the advice of her Ministers, a Board of general officers to inquire into the matters adverted to in the report made by the Commissioners sent out to the Crimea; the Board to have the power to receive and consider the statements of those officers whose conduct had been animadverted on in the report of Sir J. McNeill and Colonel Tulloch. In the Lower House Mr. Roebuck made an attempt to stop this inquiry, on the ground of its inefficiency, but withdrew his motion after discussion. The Court commenced its sittings in the Board-room of Chelsea Hospital on the 7th of April.

— William Tatham, a Liverpool merchant, commits suicide by cutting his throat in one of the apartments of the Exchange News-room, while in a state of nervous excitement caused by imaginary losses in business.

26.—Lord Palmerston announces in the House of Commons that the Government had resolved to withdraw their Local Dues on Shipping Bill, for the purpose of taking the whole matter into further consideration, previous to referring the complicated details to a Select Committee.

— Opening of the Peace Conference in (310).

Paris, under the presidency of Count Walewski; Great Britain represented by the Earl of Clarendon and Lord Cowley.

29.—The Earl of Albemarle, in moving for certain returns relating to the administration of justice in the Madras Presidency, called the attention of the House to the fact, discreditable to the East India Company and the British nation, that for fifty years a system had been in use, under which horrible tortures were inflicted on natives of India, on the plea of eliciting evidence, especially in enforcing the collection of taxes.

March 4.—The Earl of Stanhope moves an address to her Majesty for the formation of a National Portrait Gallery. The address was agreed to, the portraits “to consist, as far as possible, of the most eminent persons in British history.” The Gallery was established by a Treasury warrant dated Dec. 2.

5.—Covent Garden Theatre destroyed by fire. The alarm was raised about a quarter before 5 A.M., and in two hours the stately fabric was in ruins. During the operatic recess Mr. Gye, the lessee of the theatre, had sublet it to one Anderson, a performer of sleight-of-hand feats, and so-called “Professor.” He brought his short season to a close by an entertainment described as a “Grand Carnival Complimentary Benefit and Dramatic Gala, to commence on Monday morning and terminate with a bal masqué on Tuesday night.” On the last day of the show, the amusements proceeded with animation, and if with freedom still with decorum, until, as the night advanced, the more respectable or cautious withdrew, and the disreputable yielded to the temptation of excitement and wine. After midnight the theatre is said to have presented a scene of undisguised indecency, drunkenness and vice, such as the lowest places of resort have rarely witnessed. Between four and five o'clock the Professor thought it time to close the orgies, and commanded the band to play the National Anthem. The gas at the same time was turned down a little to warn the revellers to depart. At this moment the gasfitter discovered the fire issuing from the cracks of the ceiling, and amid the wildest shrieking and confusion the drunken, panic-stricken masquers rushed to the street. It was now hardly five o'clock, and yet in the few minutes which had elapsed the doom of the theatre was sealed. The flames had burst through the roof, sending high up into the air columns of fire, which threw into bright reflection every tower and spire within the circuit of the metropolis, brilliantly illuminating the whole fabric of St. Paul's, and throwing a flood of light across Waterloo-bridge, which set out in bold relief the dark outline of the Surrey hills. This glare operated as a speedy messenger in bringing up the fire-engines from every quarter of London at a tearing gallop to the scene of conflagration. There was no want of water; but neither engines nor water were of any avail in saving the property. The theatre blazed within its four hollow walls like a furnace; and at half-past five o'clock the roof fell in with a tremendous crash. The building was uninsured, no office having been willing to grant a policy after the fire of 1808. Mr. Gye had effected an insurance on his properties to the amount of 8,000*l.* and Mr. Anderson to the amount of 2,000*l.* Mr. Braidwood, the experienced superintendent of the London Fire Establishment, was of opinion that the fire had originated from spontaneous combustion among the masses of waste stuff accumulated in the workshops—an opinion strengthened by the evidence of Mr. Grieve, the scene painter, who stated that on a previous occasion he had called attention to a heap of such materials allowed to gather, and which, when removed by his authority, were found to be too hot for handling.

5.—The second reading of Sir William Clay's Church-rates Abolition Bill carried in the House of Commons by 221 to 178.

6.—Lord John Russell introduces a series of resolutions on the subject of education.

—Thomas Jones, sentenced to death at Winchester for the murder of Charles William Hope, surgeon on board the Stirling Castle, convict-hulk at Portsmouth. In revenge for being removed from one part of the ship to another by the surgeon's orders, the prisoner suddenly attacked him when stepping out of the surgery, and, with a ship's knife he had contrived to secrete, inflicted a wound in the neck from which Mr. Hope died in a few minutes.

—John Fowkes, labourer, sentenced to death at Leicester for shooting John Acres Fowkes at Snareston, on the 25th of November last. The murderer fired through the window at night and killed his victim in his own bedroom. The case was rendered unusually shocking from the circumstance that the murdered man was the murderer's nephew, and the principal witnesses against him were his brother and sister.

7.—Explosion of the Hatton Powder-mills, Hounslow, and loss of three lives. The accident appeared to have been caused by a spark from an oil-lamp used near the mixing-house.

10.—M. de Hinckeldy, chief of the Berlin Police, shot in a duel by M. de Rochow, a young member of the Jockey Club.

—Stormy discussions in the United States Senate concerning offences alleged to have been committed by England in enlisting subjects of the States.

13.—Admiral Sir Charles Napier moves for the appointment of a Select Committee to inquire into the operations of the Baltic Fleet during the last two years. The discussion partook in a great measure the character of an altercation between the mover and Sir James Graham. It was renewed on the evening of 4th April, when Sir James read to the House letters and statements in support of assertions he had made as to the conduct of Sir Charles Napier at St. Jean d'Acre.

13.—The barque Blake, of Liverpool, from the Mississippi to Cork, struck by a sea and completely disabled. Seven men were washed overboard, with all the provisions, water, and deck-gear. The vessel partly righted; but, as the masts were carried away by the deck, the survivors could do little or nothing to navigate her through the storm. They continued in a state of starvation and misery for seventeen days. On the 13th, the master reported:—“Another seaman died this day of starvation. We did not put him overboard, but reserved his corpse for our own use, and in this state we lingered for four days more, living off the body of our dead companion, but I must say very sparingly indeed, for the thoughts of it were almost as bad as death itself. We had not a dry place to lie in, and the sea was continually washing over us; some of us would drop off in a dozing state, dream of feasting, and then wake, shouting to see the dead body of our comrade hanging in the pale moonlight.” Of this miserable ship's company, the master and seven men were rescued by the Mercury, and brought to Torbay.

14.—Alexander Smart, a retired watch and clockmaker, commits suicide by throwing himself from the Whispering Gallery of St. Paul's. The verger said, he waited in the gallery till the clock struck twelve, and then, mounting the railing, gave three hysterical laughs, and leaped to the space below the dome.

—Samuel Cheshire, late postmaster at Rugeley, sentenced at the Stafford Assizes to twelve months' imprisonment for opening a letter, sent by Professor Taylor, London, to Mr. Gardner, attorney, concerning the analysis of Cook's stomach, and the non-discovery therein of arsenic or other poison. The facts of the letter Cheshire communicated to Palmer.

15.—The Royal nursery plate stolen in the course of its transmission to Windsor, whither it was being conveyed in a carrier's cart, instead of a private conveyance under the care of the yeoman of the silver pantry.

16.—The Empress of the French safely delivered of a son. In celebration of the event, the Emperor granted an amnesty to 1,000 political exiles.

30.—Shortly before the close of the sittings of the Conference, Count Walewski said that it was desirable that the Plenipotentiaries, before they separated, should interchange their ideas on different subjects which required to be settled, and which it might be advantageous to discuss in order to prevent fresh complications. He alluded particularly to the abnormal state of Greece, the Papal States, Italy, and Naples. His remarks on the Belgian press give great offence in that country. He remarked that quite recently Belgian newspapers had ventured to extol the society called "La Marianne," the tendencies and objects of which were known; and that all these publications were so many implements of war directed against the tranquillity of France by the enemies of social order, who, relying on the impunity which they found under the shelter of the Belgian legislation, retained the hope of eventually realizing their culpable designs. Lord Clarendon said, as one of the representatives of a country in which a free press was, so to say, one of the fundamental institutions, he could not agree to measures of coercion against the press of another state. At the same time, he was willing to admit that the authors of the execrable doctrines referred to were undeserving of protection. Count Orloff said that the powers with which he was furnished having for their sole object the restoration of peace, he did not consider himself authorized to take part in a discussion which his instructions had not provided for. The reference to Naples gave rise to some sharp correspondence between that Power and the other Cabinets of Europe. Before separating, the Conference also agreed to the following important resolutions on the subject of maritime law in time of war:—"1. Privateering is, and remains, abolished; 2. The neutral flag covers enemies' goods, with the exception of contraband of war; 3. Neutral goods, with the exception of contraband of war, are not liable to capture under enemy's flag; 4. Blockades, in order to be binding, must be effective, that is to say, maintained by a force sufficient really to prevent access to the coast of the enemy." The Government of the United States also accepted the resolutions, with the exception of the first, relating to privateering, which, Mr. Marcy argued, was as clear a right as the use of public-armed ships, or any other right appertaining to a belligerent.

30.—Treaty of Peace signed at Paris. The territories conquered or occupied during the war to be reciprocally evacuated; Turkey to be admitted to participate in the public law and system of Europe; the Black Sea to be neutralized, its waters and its ports are thrown open to the mercantile marine of every nation, and formally and in perpetuity interdicted to the flag of war either of the Powers possessing its coasts, or of any other Power; and the Emperor of Russia and the Sultan engage not to establish, or to maintain upon that coast, any military-maritime arsenal. At 10 P.M., intimation of the important event was given to the metropolis by the firing of the guns in St. James's Park, and at the Tower. The bells of many of the churches also rang out merry peals in celebration of the good news. The Lord Mayor proclaimed the event the next day in front of the Mansion House and at the Royal Exchange. Throughout the nation the rejoicings were spontaneous and enthusiastic. At Paris, when the last signature was affixed, the guns of the Invalides fired a salute of 101 guns, and in the evening the city was brilliantly illuminated.

31.—Frightful scene at the execution of Bousfield, the Soho murderer. When placed under the beam he appeared to be so utterly powerless that he could not stand, and the halter was put round his neck when seated on a chair on the scaffold. Scarcely had the dull heavy sound of the falling drop been heard, when an exclamation issued from the crowd, "He is up again!" To the horror of the spectators it was seen that Bousfield had made an extraordinary muscular effort, by which he raised his lower limbs to the level of the drop, both his feet resting on the edge, while he was trying to raise his pinioned arms to the rope. One of the officers instantly rushed upon the scaffold, and pushed the wretched man's feet from their resting-place; when by another marvellous effort, he threw himself towards the other side, and again succeeded in getting both his feet on the edge of the drop. Calcraft, the executioner, who had left the scaffold, now returned, and forced his feet from the scaffold, so that he remained suspended. The dreadful scene was not yet over. The short relief the criminal obtained had probably enabled him to breathe, and, to the astonishment of the spectators, he, for the third time, succeeded in placing his feet upon the edge of the scaffold. Calcraft and other officers again pulled off his feet from their rest, and held the body from further exertion until it had ceased to live.

April 5.—Discussion in both Houses on the terms of the treaty of peace.

—Peace proclaimed amid much rejoicing at the allied camp, Sebastopol. No notice was taken of the event by the Russians on the north side.

8.—Mrs. Sarah Kelly shot on her estate of Ballinderry, in the county of Wexford, by two men disguised in women's clothes. Her nephew, Stevens, who managed the property, was taken into custody for being concerned in the crime, but afterwards liberated.

9.—At the Central Criminal Court, Elizabeth Anne Harris was sentenced to death for the murder of her two children by throwing them into the canal near Uxbridge; and next day Celestina Sommer, aged 24, was sentenced to a similar fate for murdering her daughter, aged 10 years and 6 months, by cutting her throat in the cellar of her house at Islington. In both cases, the punishment was mitigated to transportation for life. The dissatisfaction long felt by the public at the uncertainty of the sentences of courts of justice, and the still greater uncertainty whether the sentences passed would be really inflicted, led to much public discussion, and repeated reference was made in Parliament to these unexpected reprieves.

11.—The House of Commons having resolved itself into a Committee of the whole House to consider the present state of education in England and Wales, rejected, by a majority of 260 to 102, the resolutions submitted by Lord John Russell on the 6th of March. His proposal was to extend, revise, and consolidate the Minutes of Council on Education; to provide for an inquiry into the state of education in every part of England and Wales, by the addition of eighty sub-inspectors; that on the report of the inspectors and sub-inspectors, the Committee of Privy Council should have power to form school districts consisting of parishes or parts of parishes; and that the sub-inspectors should be instructed to report on the state and means of the education of the poor in each district. He also proposed that the power of the Charitable Trusts Commissioners should be enlarged, so as to apply their funds to the education of the middle and poorer classes. The resolution giving rise to the greatest opposition was the 8th, declaring that after the 1st of January, 1858, when any school district shall have been declared to be deficient in adequate means for the education of the poor, the Quarter Sessions of the Peace for the county, city, or borough, should have power to impose a school-rate.

12.—Grand banquet to the members of the Peace Congress at Paris. The Emperor proposed the following toast:—"To the union so happily established by the Sovereigns. May it be durable; and it will be so if it reposes on truth, justice, and the true and legitimate interests of the peoples."

13.—Fire at the Caledonian Distillery, Edinburgh, destroying machinery, stock, and buildings, valued at 30,000*l*.

— The bands commence to play in Kensington-gardens on Sunday afternoons.

15.—Government defeated on Mr. Spooner's motion that the House should go into Committee "for the purpose of considering the Acts for the endowment of the College of Maynooth, with a view to the withdrawal of any endowment out of the Consolidated Fund, due regard being had to vested rights or interests." On a division, there appeared for the resolution 159, against it 133. On the main question, the introduction of the bill, the numbers were, ayes 159, noes 142. On the 25th June, when the bill was brought up for a second reading, Mr. Henry Herbert moved that it be read a second time that day six months. This was negatived by 174 to 168. This, however, was the last triumph, Mr. Spooner next day moving that the order for the second reading be discharged, as, in consequence of the hostility of its opponents, further progress with the bill was hopeless during the session.

16.—Her Majesty visits the military hospital at Chatham, to manifest her interest in the wounded soldiers brought home from the Crimea.

17.—An Italian refugee named Foschini attacks three of his countrymen with a dagger, in a coffee-house in Rupert-street, Haymarket.

They were all severely wounded, one of them, Ronelli, lying long at the point of death. The assassin succeeded in effecting his escape.

23.—A naval review takes place at Spithead, in the presence of her Majesty, on an unprecedented scale, both as to the amount of vessels engaged, and the number of spectators whom it attracted. The members of both Houses of Parliament were to have been present to take up a prominent position, but a succession of mal-arrangements prevented them reaching the rendezvous till the display was nearly over. The fleet was illuminated in the evening.

28.—In the House of Commons, Mr. White-side moves, "That while this House feels it to be its duty to express its admiration of the gallantry of the Turkish soldiery, and of the devotion of the British officers at the siege of Kars, it feels it to be equally a duty to express its conviction that the capitulation of that fortress, and the surrender of the army which defended it, thereby endangering the safety of the Asiatic provinces of Turkey, were in a great measure owing to the want of foresight and energy on the part of her Majesty's Administration." The debate extended over three nights, and ended by a division, showing 227 in favour of Ministers, in a House of 479.

29.—During the "waking" of a corpse in a house in Cork, the floor of the room gave way, and the whole of the company—men, women, and children—about 60 in number, as well as the corpse, were precipitated to the ground-floor. Eight were found to be quite dead, and eleven died after removal to the hospital.

— Public announcement made of the intended marriage of the Princess Royal with Prince Frederick William of Prussia.

May 2.—Baron Brunnow arrives in London from Russia on a special mission to Queen Victoria.

3.—Amnesty granted to the Monmouthshire Chartists convicted in 1840, and to such of the Irish political offenders as had not broken their parole.

6.—Died, aged 68, Sir William Hamilton, Professor of Moral Philosophy in Edinburgh University.

— Bursting of the City Canal, West India Dock. At the Limehouse end of the canal, the outer gates of the lock were under repair, so that the whole pressure of the water was sustained by the inner pair. About half-past nine o'clock the tide in the river was nearly at its lowest ebb, the entrance lock as far as the inner gate being almost dry. On the other side of the gate there was a depth of about twenty feet of water. Suddenly the whole neighbourhood was aroused by a tremendous crash caused by the bursting of the lock. The whole of the ponderous gates, weighing about twenty tons, were crushed outwards and swept in fragments into the river, and the waters of the canal burst down the lock with overwhelming fury. With the torrent, craft of every description were swept from their moorings and carried as masses of wreck into the Thames. Large vessels stranding in the mud, were less damaged. The canal was dry in about ten minutes.

8.—Thanks of both Houses of Parliament voted to the soldiers and sailors engaged in the late war.

— The members of both Houses proceed in procession from Westminster to Buckingham Palace, to present the addresses agreed upon regarding the treaty of peace.

— Royal message brought up requesting the concurrence of each House in conferring a pension of 1,000*l.* a year on Major-General Sir William Fenwick Williams, K.C.B., "for his eminent and distinguished services, particularly in the defence of Kars."

10.—In answer to remonstrances from the Archbishop of Canterbury, Lord Palmerston states that steps will be taken for discontinuing the bands playing in Kensington Gardens and in the parks on Sundays.

14.—Commenced at the Central Criminal Court, before Lord Chief Justice Campbell, Baron Alderson, and Mr. Justice Cresswell, the trial of William Palmer for the Rugeley poisonings. The Attorney-General appeared for the Crown, and Mr. Serjeant Shee for the prisoner. The trial excited the most intense interest throughout the kingdom, and during the twelve days over which it extended, the Old Bailey was crowded by an assembly such as rarely gathers within its walls. The first case proceeded with was the poisoning of Cook. The Crown alleged murder by strychnia, but admitted that none was found in the body. The proof was therefore of an entirely circumstantial character, illustrating minutely the pecuniary transactions of the prisoner, the probable motives which might actuate him to commit the crime, the opportunities he had for administering the poison, and the evidence of medical men and professional chemists as to the nature and action of that poison. Soon after two P.M., on the twelfth day, the Lord Chief Justice concluded his summing-up in these words:—"Gentlemen, the case is now in your hands; and, unless upon the part of the prosecution a clear conviction has been brought to your minds of the guilt of the prisoner, it is your duty to acquit him. You are not to proceed even upon a strong suspicion. There must be the strongest conviction in your minds that he was guilty of this offence; and if there be any reasonable doubt remaining in your minds, you will give him the benefit of that doubt; but if you come to a clear conviction that he was guilty, you will not be deterred from doing your duty by any considerations such as have been suggested to you. You will remember the oath you have taken, and you will act accordingly. Gentlemen, I have performed my task; you have now to discharge yours, and may God direct you to a right finding." The jury retired at eighteen minutes past two P.M., and returned into court at twenty-four minutes to four P.M., with a verdict of Guilty. As the jury entered and were about to deliver their verdict, it was observed that the prisoner looked pale, and his countenance exhibited some show of anxiety, but he almost instantly recovered his self-possession, and heard the verdict delivered with perfect calmness. The Lord Chief Justice solemnly adjudged the prisoner to be executed at Stafford on the 14th of June.

14.—A Court of Proprietors of the East India Company sanction a proposal of the Court of Directors to allow Lord Dalhousie a pension of 5,000*l.* per annum, in consideration of his eminent services.

15.—Mr. Charles Russell, late chairman of the Great Western Railway Company, commits suicide by shooting himself.

19.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer introduces his Budget. The total expenditure for 1855-6 was 88,428,355*l.*, exclusive of the 1,000,000*l.* loan to Sardinia; and the income 65,704,491*l.* The total expenditure in two years of war was 155,121,307*l.*; and in the preceding two years of peace, 102,032,596*l.* The present he considered still a year of war expenditure, in consequence of the preparations that had been incurred. The probable expenditure he estimated at 82,113,000*l.*, and the income from all sources at 71,740,000*l.* He would not propose any new taxes at this time, but would make up the deficiency by a loan.

21.—Died, aged 61, Augustin Thierry, French historian.

29.—Peace rejoicings. Throughout the kingdom the day was marked by a cessation from work, and during the night illuminations and fireworks were all but universal. In London the display was most costly and effective, the places selected being Hyde Park, the Green Park, Victoria Park, and Primrose-hill.

30.—Great inundations in France. In consequence of excessive rains, large tracts of country from Paris to Lyons and onwards to the sea were laid under water. Roads and railways were rendered impassable. Human bodies, cattle, furniture, and agricultural produce were borne along the flood, and the streets of many towns were only passable in boats. When the Emperor visited Lyons to sympathise with and encourage the inhabitants, he had to give up his horse and be rowed from place to place. At the Orleans railway station the water reached the fourth storey, and at Tours it was ten feet deep. At Angers the immense slate quarries were inundated, and ten thousand men thrown out of employment. In some places whole villages were swept away. At a sitting of the Legislative Body, 2,000,000 francs were voted for the relief of the sufferers, and the Council of Ministers applied a new credit of 10,000,000 francs to the same purpose. Public subscriptions were set on foot in all directions ; one raised in England reached 40,000*l*.

June 1.—Corporal Niven, of the 56th Foot, shoots Sergeant Robinson, on board the hired convict ship Runnymede, lying in Plymouth Sound. He was tried at Bodmin for the offence, found guilty, and executed on the 11th of August.

— The misunderstanding between Great Britain and the United States on the enlistment question became so serious that Mr. Crampton, the British Minister, left Washington, and arrived at Liverpool to-day.

2.—Her Majesty lays the foundation-stone of Wellington College. A review of the troops brought from Aldershot was a prominent feature in the day's proceedings.

12.—Sir George Grey brings forward the Educational Estimates, and moves that a sum of 151,000*l*. be voted for that purpose in addition to the 300,000*l*. usually given. In defence of the extended vote he reviewed the course of public education, showing the increase of expenditure since 1839, when it was 30,000*l*., and 1850, when it was 200,000*l*. Since the latter year, pupil teachers had increased from 4,660 to 8,524 ; Queen's scholars, from 39 to 972 ; inspectors, from 19 to 36 ; and children, from 214,873 to 569,076.

14.—William Palmer executed at Stafford. The criminal slept his last sleep quietly, and in the morning, when the chaplain entered his cell, declared himself to be comfortable and quite prepared. When asked by the High Sheriff whether he was prepared to acknowledge the justice of his sentence, he replied with energy, "No, sir, I do not ; I go to the scaffold a murdered man." He moved forward to the drop with a slight step, and nothing but the pallor of his face showed any undercurrent of feeling. He died, to all appearances, instantaneously.

18.—First display of the great fountains at the Crystal Palace in presence of her Majesty, and a gathering of about 20,000 people.

19.—William Lewis tried at the Central Criminal Court for feloniously attempting to induce a seaman to revolt and piratically take possession of the ship Stebonheath, on the voyage from Melbourne. The felonious proposal of the prisoner, with all its details of blood and massacre, were minutely related by one of the seamen whom he had taken into his confidence. The jury returned a verdict of Guilty, and Lewis was sentenced to transportation for life.

24.—Demonstration in the King's Park, Stirling, for the purpose of adopting resolutions in support of the erection of a monument to Sir William Wallace, on the Abbey Craig. The gathering was presided over by the Earl of Elgin.

24.—The President of the United States recognises the filibuster Walker as President of Nicaragua.

July 1.—Conclusion of the debate on Mr. Moore's motion, "That the conduct of her Majesty's Government in the differences that have arisen with America on the question of enlistment, has not entitled them to the approbation of the House." Majority of 194 for Ministers in a House of 354.

6.—Collision at the mouth of the Mersey, between the Excelsior and Mail Irish steamboat. The bow of the Excelsior knocked off the figure-head of the Mail, entered the port-bow near the bowsprit, and tore its way through the spar-deck as far as the foremast. In the fore part of the Mail lay a number of deck passengers, chiefly Irish, coming to the harvest in England. They were nearly all asleep, with their heads close up to the bows of the ship. Five were killed instantly, three died in a short time, and six were injured. The Mail kept afloat till assistance arrived to tow her up the river.

7.—The Tipperary Militia mutiny at Nenagh, and refuse to give up their clothes or arms till additional bounty-money is paid. In the course of the disturbance three of the mutineers were shot, and one soldier of the 41st ; being completely overpowered by the regular troops, the ringleaders were seized and brought to trial. The man who shot the soldier was sentenced to death, subsequently commuted to transportation for life ; five men to twenty-one years, five to fifteen, and two to twelve years' transportation.

9.—Public entry of the Guards into London on their return from the Crimea.

12.—Final evacuation of the Crimea by the British forces. All the remaining stores and establishments having been embarked, a company of the 50th Regiment was posted outside the town of Balaklava to receive the Russian troops, and on their approach marched in with the Russian Guard, composed of about fifty mounted Cossacks, and a similar number of Infantry Cossacks. The usual form of salutes took place ; the Russians placed sentries where they wished, and the English troops marched on board H.M.S. Algiers. General Codrington embarked with his personal staff at the same time.

14.—Debate in both Houses on the condition of Italy. Lord Lyndhurst, in the Lords, and Lord John Russell, in the Commons, urged the necessity of our Government taking steps to mitigate, as far as possible, the evils which were rampant over the entire peninsula.

15.—The Barratt family tried at Bedford for starving Helen Barratt, aged 18, now dead, and two younger girls now in the work-house. The mother and eldest daughter compelled the younger members of the family to work at lace, and if they failed in their allotted task, they were altogether deprived of their miserable allowance of bad food. They were also beaten and otherwise shamefully abused. The father, who pleaded ignorance, was sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment, and the two women to two years' penal servitude each.

15.—Explosion in the Cymmer Colliery, near Pontypridd, and loss of 114 lives. In the course of the investigation which followed, it was clearly established that this calamity was occasioned by a total absence of all the precautions provided by the Act of Parliament. Though many parts of the pit were known to be dangerous, safety-lamps were not used, and the ordinary way of testing a "heading" was to place a lighted candle in it.

—The Lord Chancellor explains the nature of the Government Bill framed to permit the retirement of the Bishops of London and Durham upon an allowance. The bill was objected to on the ground that it legalized simony, but ultimately passed as introduced. In the House of Commons the retiring allowance of the Bishop of London was fixed at 6,000*l.*, and of the Bishop of Durham at 4,500*l.*, being the sums proposed by these prelates respectively.

16.—Came on at York Assizes, the trial of William Dove, of Leeds, for poisoning his wife by administering strychnia in her medicine. The case lasted three days, and ended in a verdict of Guilty being returned against the prisoner, with a recommendation to mercy on the ground of defective intellect. He appeared to have been excited to the crime partly from an innate love of cruelty, and partly from the effects of the disclosures in Palmer's case on an ignorant, superstitious mind. After his conviction, he made a declaration, describing the manner in which the crime was committed, and imputing the chief guilt to a Leeds "wizard" named Harrison, whom he was in the habit of consulting, and who told him that he would never have any happiness till his wife was out of the way. One letter, written with his own blood, was in these words:—"Dear Devil,—If you will get me clear at the assizes, and let me have the enjoyment of life, health, wealth, tobacco here, more food and better, and my wishes granted till I am sixty, come to me to-night. I remain your faithful subject, WILLIAM DOVE." On reconsidering the case, the Home Secretary did not think there was anything which took it out of the category of wilful and deliberate murder, and the sentence was therefore carried into execution.

17.—Collision near the Camphill station of the North Pennsylvanian line, U.S., causing the death of 100 children starting on a picnic excursion. The locomotives rose on end, and were locked together, while the foremost cars of the excursion train were first ground to splinters, and then set on fire from the engine.

22.—Earl Granville appointed Ambassador (316)

Extraordinary, to attend the coronation of the Emperor of Russia.

24.—Sir Edmund Lyons raised to the peerage as Baron Lyons of Christchurch, in the county of Southampton.

26.—Dr. Rae and his companions declared to be entitled to the reward of 10,000*l.* offered by Government to ascertain the fate of the Franklin exploring party.

29.—Parliament prorogued by Commission. After noticing the most important measures passed during the session—the Borough Police Act, the Act for Improving the University of Cambridge, and the Act for regulating Joint-stock Companies, the Royal speech proceeded:—"Her Majesty commands us to congratulate you on the favourable state of the revenue and upon the thriving condition of all branches of the national industry; and she acknowledges with gratitude the loyalty of her faithful subjects, and that spirit of order and that respect for law which prevail in every part of her dominions." During the parliamentary session thus terminated the number of Ministerial bills introduced into both Houses was 130; of which 95 passed into law, while the remaining 35 were either withdrawn or rejected.

—Died, at Endenich near Bonn, Robert Schumann, musical composer, aged 46.

30.—Disorderly proceedings in Christ Church, West Hartlepool, arising out of differences between Mr. R. W. Jackson, who had erected the fabric, and the incumbent, Rev. J. H. Burgess. An attempt being made to build up the doors of the church, a company of idle men and women took possession of the building, and kept up a scene of indecent disorder and clamour till late in the evening, when they dispersed, on an intimation from the incumbent that, whether consecrated property or not, he was determined to retain possession.

31.—Sir William Fenwick Williams of Kars entertained by the Corporation of London and presented with the freedom of the City and a sword.

August 1.—Tried in Edinburgh the case of M'Laren v. Ritchie and Russell, being an action to recover 1,000*l.* in name of damages for having been "calumniously and injuriously ridiculed" during the late election contest in that city. The plaintiff was a keen partisan of the defeated candidate, Mr. Brown Douglas, and the defendants proprietors of the Scotsman newspaper, zealous supporters of Mr. Adam Black. It was complained that the Scotsman had greatly exceeded the language of fair criticism, Mr. M'Laren being often mentioned as a "reptile" and sometimes as a "viper." It had also sought to nail the epithet with Scripture, by applying to him the words "On thy belly shalt thou go, and dust thou shalt eat all the days of thy life." For the defence, a witness was called who said that the name "snake" had been given to

Mr. M'Laren as long ago as 1812, and was frequently applied to him good-naturedly. It was alleged also that the writing on Mr. M'Laren's side was equally personal and violent, He had himself at a former election called his present friend Mr. Douglas "a calumniator," and his supporters "betrayers," "slanderers" and "snakes." The jury awarded 400*l.* damages, the amount being fixed by taking the average of what was proposed by the entire jury.

3.—Dedea Redanies, a Servian soldier in the British Foreign Legion, murders the sisters Caroline and Maria Back, by stabbing them while walking on the beach near Folkestone. The act was not seen by any person, and the girls when found were quite dead. The motives actuating the murderer to this crime were somewhat confusedly set forth in a letter addressed in German to Mrs. Back:—"On the first lines, I pray to forgive me the awful accident to the unlucky Dedea Redanies which I committed upon my very dear Caroline and Maria Back, yesterday morning at five o'clock. Scarcely I am able to write, by heartbreak for my ever memorable Caroline and Mary Ann. The cause of my deed is:—1. As I heard that Caroline is not in the family way, as I at first believed; 2. Because Caroline intends going to Woolwich; 3. Because I cannot stay with my very dear Caroline, it made my heart so scattered that I put into my mind at last that Caroline rather may die from my hands than to allow Caroline's love being bestowed upon others. However, I did not intend to murder also Mary Ann, her sister; but not having another opportunity, and as she was in my way, I could not do otherwise—I must stab her too. Dear Mother Back, Saturday evening when I came, I had not at least any intention to commit this awful act, but as I learned that my dear Caroline gave me back my likeness, and as she told me she would leave, I did not know any other way in my heartbreak than that leading to the cutlers, where I bought a poniard, which divided the hearty lovers. Arm by arm, I brought both my dearest souls in the world over to the unlucky place near the road before Folkestone, and requested them to sit down, but the grass being wet they refused to do so, and I directed then Caroline to go forward, and I went behind Mary Ann, into whose heart I ran the dagger. With a dull cry she dropped down. With a most broken heart I rushed then after Caroline, lifting the poniard in my hand towards her. 'Dear Dedea,' cried she with half dead voice, and fell down with weeping eyes. Then I rushed over her and gave her the last kisses as an everlasting remembrance. I could not live a more dreadful hour in my life than that was, and my broken heart could not tell where my senses were gone, and I took both the black shawls of Mary Ann and my dear Caroline, as a mourning suit for me, leaving the awful spot with weeping eyes and a broken heart. Never shall I forget my dear Caroline and Mary Ann, and the poniard will be covered with the blood of Mary Ann and Caroline with me until it be put in my own breast, and I shall see again my dear Mary Ann and Caroline in the eternal life. Farewell, and be careless about the blissfully deceased angels of God, and forgive the unhappy, ever weeping, Dedea Redanies." The murderer failed in the attempt upon his own life, and was at once secured. He was tried at the Maidstone Assizes, convicted and executed.

8.—Died, aged 59, Madame Vestris, actress.

12.—Broadwood's pianoforte manufactory, Horseferry-road, Westminster, destroyed by fire. The peculiar construction of the workshops—built to obtain the best possible light, and consisting of distinct floors several hundred feet long, without a break of any kind—rendered them an easy prey to the flames. 200 instruments were saved, but 1,000, in various stages of manufacture, were lost, as also a stock of precious woods, and the whole of the tools belonging to the workmen. Only a portion of the north shops was saved.

13.—Explosion at the Ramrod-hall Colliery, Worcestershire, causing the death of three men in the pit, and of eight in the descending shaft, who were blown into the air by the force of the explosion.

14.—Died, aged 72, Dr. Buckland, Dean of Westminster, and an eminent geologist.

20.—A Reformatory Union Conference commences its sittings at Bristol, under the presidency of Lord Stanley.

21.—The Queen-mother of Oude, with her grandson and brother of the King, arrive at Southampton, to institute an inquiry in this country as to the appropriation of their territory.

25.—Dinner to the Guards in the Surrey Music Hall.

30.—Died, aged 79, Sir John Ross, Arctic navigator.

— The Earl of Cardigan entertained at a banquet at Leeds, and presented with a sword of honour.

31.—Died, aged 72, William Yarrell, the eminent naturalist.

September 2.—Prussia attempts, unsuccessfully, to get her authority recognised in the Republic of Neuchatel. Several Royalists being thrown into prison, Prussia mustered an army to deliver them by force.

3.—Fall of an old house in Little Swan-alley, Tokenhouse-yard. The whole of the inmates were overwhelmed in the ruins, but eventually dug out alive, with the exception of one man and three of his step-children.

— Failure of the Royal British Bank. The share capital in this country was stated to be 300,000*l.*, of which 150,000*l.* was described as "paid up." The debts due to depositors were upwards of 500,000*l.*; the assets consisted of bills discounted and other securities. It soon became known that the greater part of these securities were worthless; that more than 100,000*l.* had been advanced, under extraordinary circumstances, to a Welsh coal mine, which was not worth one-third of the value; and that the directors, manager, and auditors had been helping themselves to the funds without scruple. Mr. Gwynne, a retired director, was indebted 13,600*l.*; John M'Gregor, M.P., the founder of the bank, 7,000*l.*; Humphrey Brown, M.P., upwards of 70,000*l.*; Mr. Cameron, the manager, about 30,000*l.* The position of affairs was, that when the shareholders had paid up their calls, there might be about 8*s.* or 10*s.* in the pound for creditors, with the entire loss of the capital of the bank. An attempt was made to wind up the Company under the Winding-up Act. The official manager got in large sums of money, and also made a call upon the shareholders of 75*l.* per share; but another set of creditors resolved to have the affairs of the Company wound up by the Court of Bankruptcy, and a fiat was accordingly issued and assignees appointed. This step was resisted on the ground that the Winding-up Act being in operation the power of the Bankruptcy Court was superseded; but it did not appear that there was any express provision to that effect, and the official assignee proceeded to enforce his call of 50*l.* per share upon the unhappy shareholders. Many of them, unable to meet the call, passed through the Insolvent Court, or went out of the country. The investigation into the affairs of the Bank showed that it had been conducted in a manner too scandalous to be overlooked, and, in the following year, Government instituted criminal proceedings against the directors.

7.—Coronation of the Emperor of Russia at Moscow. The ceremony took place in the Uspenski Ssabor, and the act of crowning was performed by Archbishop Philaret, the Metropolitan of Moscow. Among the special ambassadors present were Earl Granville, Prince Esterhazy, M. Costalbaregona, and the representative of the Sultan. An immense crowd assembled in the Kremlin Palace, and great enthusiasm was everywhere manifested. The ringing of bells, the firing of cannon, the parade of troops, the ceremonial of the church, the procession to the palace, and the decorations of the city, rendered the display remarkable, even among state ceremonies of Russia.

15.—After an attempt to get up a procession, which met with only indifferent success, the Chartists of London gather on Primrose-hill to present an address to John Frost on his return from exile.

17.—Discovery of Robson's frauds on the Crystal Palace Company. It was communicated to the Stock Exchange in the laconic sentence, "Something wrong with Crystal Palace shares; Robson, the clerk, has decamped." The immediate effect was a fall in price. A reward of 500*l.* was offered for his apprehension, which took place at Copenhagen, on the 7th of October.

18.—The Times announces that the Bishop of Ripon is to be translated to the vacant see of Durham, and that Dr. Tait, Dean of Carlisle, will be elevated to the see of London, in room of Bishop Blomfield, resigned.

—Ten workmen tried before Baron Bramwell, at the Central Criminal Court, for misdemeanour, in having unlawfully conspired together to prevent and intimidate certain workmen from entering into the employment of Young, Magnay, and Young, shipbuilders. The learned judge thus laid down the law:—"It was quite competent for either masters or workmen to combine together for their mutual protection, and for the advancement of their mutual interests. A master is at liberty to say that he will not give employment except upon certain terms, and workmen are equally at liberty to refuse their labour except upon certain conditions. Neither party, however, has a right to go beyond this; and the law will not permit persons who choose to accept other terms to be obstructed; and still less will it permit them to be intimidated." The evidence for the prosecution fully established the lawless proceedings of the unionists; and, on the advice of their counsel, the prisoners retracted their plea of "Not guilty," and admitted their offence. Under these circumstances, Baron Bramwell was content to order them to put in recognizances to appear to receive judgment when called upon.

24.—Died at South Park, Tunbridge Wells, aged 71, Henry Lord Hardinge, formerly Governor-General of India.

26.—Six men suffocated in a Worcester brewery from foul gas, while engaged in clearing out a vat.

October 1.—Brynmallo coal mines, Wrexham, inundated by water from the old workings, and thirteen men drowned.

8.—At Canton, a party of Chinese in charge of an officer boarded the lorcha Arrow, a vessel registered under an ordinance passed at Hong-Kong eighteen months before, tore down the British flag, and carried off the Chinese crew, refusing to listen either to the remonstrances of the master or of the Consul, and insisting that the vessel was not British, but Chinese. Her papers were at that time in the Consulate, but her register had expired more than a month before. The Arrow was known to the Chinese authorities to have been built in China, Chinese-owned, Chinese-manned, and of evil repute for piracy and smuggling. The right to use the British flag she possessed by an Act of the Colonial Legislature, framed mainly if not altogether for vessels of another class. The Chinese Commissioners afterwards assented to reparation in a form described by Consul Parkes as "very proper." As it appeared desirable, however, to Sir John Bowring that British influence should be increased at Canton, he wrote on the 24th to Sir Michael Seymour, the naval commander on the station:—"I cannot doubt that the Imperial Commissioner will now feel the absolute necessity of complying with the demands which have been made, and I have to add, that if your Excellency and the Consul should concur with me in opinion that the circumstances are auspicious for requiring the fulfilment of treaty obligations as regards the city of Canton, and for arranging an official meeting with the Imperial Commissioner within the city walls, I shall willingly come to Canton for that purpose." On the plea that the Imperial Commissioner Yeh paid little attention to the remonstrances of the British Consul, Admiral Seymour commenced on the 23d to exact satisfaction by destroying the forts on the river. On the 25th, the island and fort of Dutch Folly were taken and occupied without opposition. So far from convincing Yeh that he had been guilty of any irregularity, these proceedings made him the more obstinate, and he at length offered a reward of thirty dollars for the head of every Englishman.

9.—Died, aged 69, N. Cabot, founder of Icaria.

12.—An earthquake, extensive in its operations, and destructive in its effects, felt on the islands and eastern shores of the Mediterranean. In the city of Valetta scarcely a building escaped injury, and at Civita Vecchia the dome of the cathedral was rent, and the belfry much injured. At Thyrc and Candia the ruined buildings took fire and many lives were lost.

17.—In connexion with recent cases of insubordination and practical joking at Brighton barracks, the Gazette to-day intimates that, "Cornets Lord Ernest Vane Tempest and William J. Birt of the 4th Light Dragoons are dismissed from her Majesty's Army, in consequence of conduct unbecoming officers and gentlemen, and subversive of good order and military discipline."

19.—Accident at the Surrey Gardens Music Hall. An enormous audience having assembled there to hear Mr. Spurgeon preach, some person in the body of the hall raised an alarm of fire, and an instant rush was made to the doors. In the lower part of the building escape was comparatively easy; but the people in the first gallery, disregarding the other means of descent, ran in a body to the staircase in the north-west tower. On the landing at the top of this staircase, they met with the stream of people who were rushing from the upper galleries. The way speedily became blocked, and as the pressure from behind increased, many of those in front stumbled or were trodden down. In this manner five persons lost their lives. In spite of the cries of the wounded, the crowd behind pressed still more till the balustrades of the staircase gave way, and many fell to the passage below. This accident on the stairs had the effect of lessening the crowd behind, and the officials in charge of the building succeeded in their efforts to get the people back to the galleries, there being no fire whatever in the building. It was then found that the killed amounted in all to seven, the majority being females. At the inquest on the bodies a verdict of accidental death was returned.

20.—Robert Marley, or Jenkins, a surgical instrument maker, murders Richard Cope, jeweller, Parliament-street, by beating him in the shop with a life-preserver. The victim lingered in hospital till the 9th of November, and was able to make a declaration identifying the prisoner as the person who had attacked him. Marley, whose object was supposed to be plunder, was scared during his attack, and on leaving the shop was followed by two or three people till he was seized in Palace-yard. He was tried on the 28th of November following, found guilty, and executed.

22.—Dr. Lushington, as assessor to the Archbishop of Canterbury, delivers the judgment of the court assembled under the Church Discipline Act, within the diocese of Bath and Wells, to try the case of Ditcher v. Denison. The principal charge was contained in the 9th article of complaint, that the defender taught "that the Body and Blood of Christ, being really present after an immaterial and spiritual manner in the consecrated bread and wine, are therein and thereby given to all, and are received by all who come to the Lord's table." The court found that this charge had been established in evidence, and that it was contrary to the 28th and 29th Articles. Archdeacon Denison was sentenced to be deprived of all his ecclesiastical promotions. Notice was given of appeal to the Court of Arches.

—Ten oil paintings, valued at 10,000*l.*, stolen from the Earl of Suffolk's gallery, at Charlton Park. The thief contrived to elude detection for many months; but in February 1858, the pictures were traced to the residence of a person formerly employed as a valet in the house, and who appeared to have sold them for trifling sums to pawnbrokers and picture-dealers. They had been cut out of their frames at Charlton, and were now found rolled up and hidden in obscure corners.

31.—Circular letter addressed by the Russian Government to its agents at foreign courts, justifying its proceedings on the Bessarabian frontier.

November 1.—In announcing the commencement of hostilities between Great Britain and Persia, the Governor-General of India writes:—"While the British Government has faithfully and constantly adhered to the obligations which it accepted under the agreement of January 1853, the Government of Persia has manifested a deliberate and persevering disregard of the reciprocal engagements by which, at the same time, it became bound, and is now endeavouring to subvert by force the independence of Herat, which was the declared object of the agreement in question." On the 10th Dec. the fleet, under the command of Admiral Sir Henry Leek, attacked and captured the fortified town of Bushire on the Persian Gulf. During the four hours' cannonading, although the hull, masts, and rigging of our ships were frequently struck by the enemy's shot, not a single casualty occurred to life or limb. The British colours were hoisted at the Residency, and the town of Bushire was declared to be a military post under British rule, and temporarily subject to martial law. The traffic in slaves was abolished.

1.—W. J. Robson tried at the Central Criminal Court for larceny and forgery upon the Crystal Palace Company. He pleaded guilty to the charge of larceny. On the charge of forgery the case went to proof. From the address of Mr. Serjeant Ballantine, the following appeared to be the manner in which the proceeds of the forgery were obtained:—Robson directed a Mr. Clement, stockbroker, to sell 100 shares in the Company—50 to one person and 50 to another. For these shares the broker received 295*l.*, which he paid over, less commission, to Robson. The document by which these shares were transferred purported to convey the shares from one Johnson, the prisoner's brother-in-law, to the purchasers. The signature to the deed, where the name of the transferrer should be, was that of Henry Johnson, written by the prisoner, and also witnessed by him. From the report of the accountants, it appeared that the gross amount of money thus appropriated by the prisoner was 27,000*l.* The jury found Robson guilty, and Mr. Justice Erle sentenced him to twenty years' transportation for the larcenies, and fourteen years' for the forgery.

4.—At Washington, the votes of the Electoral College for President were found to be—Buchanan, 163 (112 Southern States); Col. Fremont, 126; and Mr. Fillmore, 8 (all Free States).

—Died, aged 59, Paul Delaroche, French painter.

10.—At the Lord Mayor's inaugural dinner, Lord Palmerston spoke in decided terms with reference to the points supposed to be in dispute between the Russian and British authorities as to the precise interpretation of the Treaty of Paris:—"We were convinced that the people of England would willingly forego the prospect of future military and naval glory when they were satisfied that the objects of the war had been successfully accomplished. It now remains that the conditions of the Peace shall be faithfully executed and honourably observed, and I trust that the peace of Europe will be placed upon a secure and permanent foundation."

14.—George Little, cashier of the Great (320)

Western Railway, Ireland, found murdered in his office at the Broadstone Station, Kingston. Between 400*l.* and 500*l.* in money was carried off. No indication was left by which to trace the murderer, except some supposed smears of blood on a door-post of the basement storey, far distant from the scene of the tragedy. As the murderer had not succeeded in opening the door, it was presumed that he returned to a window in the corridor opening on to the platform, and which was marked as though a person had gone out by it. A hammer, such as might have struck the heavy blows, and a razor were found in the adjoining canal; but the precautions taken by the murderer long baffled the most searching inquiries of the police.

15.—Discovery of the immense frauds perpetrated by Leopold Redpath on the shareholders of the Great Northern Railway. To maintain himself in a position of show and expense, Redpath, who had charge of the stock register-books of the Company, was in the habit of altering the sums standing in the name of some bonâ fide stock-holder to a much larger amount. The surplus stock thus created, Redpath sold in the stock market, forging the name of the supposed transferrer, passing the sum to the account of the supposed transferee in the register, and either attesting it himself, or causing it to be attested by a young man, a protégé and tool, but who appeared to be free from guilty cognizance. By these processes the number of shareholders and the amount of stock on the Company's register became greatly magnified, while, as the actual holders of stock remained credited with their proper investments, there was no occasion for suspicion on their part. But the Directors, finding that the amount paid for dividends was rapidly exceeding the rateable proportion to the capital stock, a Committee of Investigation was appointed, which continued its labours till the whole gigantic fraud was revealed. The gross amount appropriated was set down at about a quarter of a million sterling. Redpath fled in the first instance to Paris, but afterwards returned to London, and was apprehended by a constable in a house in the New-road. His residences in Chester-terrace and at Weybridge were taken possession of by railway officials.

19.—Collision on the Waterford and Kilkenny Railway at Dunkitt. A mail train from Dublin, going at the rate of forty miles an hour, ran into some ballast wagons, drawn up at a siding, where the points had improperly been left open. When the collision was seen to be inevitable, the men in the ballast train jumped out, and attempted to run up a steep embankment. Several tumbled back again, and being caught by the train were cut to pieces; and one, who was the only victim who showed signs of life after the collision, had his arms cut off. In all seven persons were killed, and nearly every one in the mail train more or less injured. The coroner's jury returned a verdict of manslaughter against the pointsman, Michael Brien.

26.—The first session of the first Parliament of the colony of Victoria opened in Melbourne, by General M'Arthur, the officer administering the government.

December 3.—An action brought by the Earl of Lucan in the Court of Exchequer against the Daily News for libel, contained in an article in that paper, on July 26, with reference to his lordship's conduct in the Crimea, decided in favour of the Daily News.

5.—In the Court of Arches, Sir J. Dodson gives judgment in the case of Ditcher v. Denison, dismissing the appeal of Archdeacon Denison (see Oct. 22, 1856; April 23, 1857).

10.—Dr. Livingston, a distinguished African missionary and traveller, arrives in London. He was presented with the Gold Medal of the Royal Geographical Society on the 15th.

—The English Cathedral at Montreal destroyed by fire; origin unknown.

—Died, at Queenstown, aged 67, Rev. Theobald Mathew, the "Apostle of Temperance." Between 40,000 and 50,000 people attended his funeral.

15.—Marley executed at Newgate for the murder of Cope, the shopman, in Westminster.

19.—The Liverpool and American packet-ship New York wrecked on the American coast. The crew and passengers, 301 in all, were got ashore; but before leaving, a number of the seamen engaged at Liverpool rose in mutiny, and after nearly murdering the captain, robbed the ship and passengers of all the valuables they could lay their hands on. One of them, known as "Philadelphia Jim," was afterwards murdered by his companions for interfering to save the mate.

—After a debate protracted from about midday till midnight, the Edinburgh Town Council, by a majority of 28 to 12, decline to reconstruct Trinity Church after the original design; and resolve, by 26 to 14, to erect a new church "suitable for the district."

—At the Maidstone Winter Assizes, Private Thomas Mansell was sentenced to be executed for the murder of Alexander M'Burnie, of the 49th Regiment, in the camp near Dover. The Crown in this instance experienced a considerable difficulty in procuring a conviction, from the number of jurymen known to be opposed to capital punishment. Certain objections taken by prisoner's counsel at the trial were made the foundation of a writ of error, and the points were afterwards argued with much ingenuity before the judges at Westminster. They were unanimously of opinion that the prisoner had had a fair trial, and the sentence was carried into execution seven months after it was pronounced.

20.—Judgment given in the Arches Court, by Sir J. Dodson, in the Knightsbridge Church (321) case, known as Westerton v. Beale. The learned judge confirmed the decision of Dr. Lushington in the court below in every particular, holding that nothing could be put up or used in church which could not be shown to have been used by authority of Parliament in the second year of Edward the Sixth.

23.—Lugava, Barbalano, and Pettrici, three Italian sailors, executed at Winchester for murder and piracy.

24.—Died by his own hand at Portobello, in his 54th year, Hugh Miller, geologist and journalist. His health had for some time been shattered by attacks of illness, presenting indications of mental disease, and the toil incident to the preparation of his new book, "The Testimony of the Rocks," aggravated all the previous symptoms. Fits of somnambulism, to which he had been subject in his youth, returned, and he got little refreshing sleep. On awaking in the morning he felt as if he had been "abroad in the night-wind, dragged through places by some invisible power, and ridden by witches." The evening of his last day was spent with his family. He read aloud Cowper's "Castaway," the sonnet to Mary Unwin, and some lighter verses. Miller then retired to his own separate bedroom, where he appeared to have passed through one of his harrowing trances. On awaking he wrote on a sheet of paper, in a hand much larger than usual, the following lines to his wife: "Dearest Lydia, my brain burns. I must have walked; and a fearful dream rises upon me. I cannot bear the horrible thought. God and Father of the Lord Jesus Christ have mercy upon me! Dearest Lydia, dear children, farewell! My brain burns as the recollection grows. My dear, dear wife, farewell!—HUGH MILLER." In order to facilitate the fatal pistol shot, he had opened his shirt and flannel vest, and placed the muzzle close to his breast. The report was not heard, but next morning the body was found stretched on the floor. Death was supposed to have been instantaneous.

—Died, aged 81, Dr. J. A. Paris, President of the College of Physicians.

—The Queen causes to be set up in the Church of St. Thomas, Newport, a monument "To the memory of the Princess Elizabeth (daughter of King Charles the First), who died at Carisbrook Castle, on Sunday, September 8, 1650, and is interred beneath the chancel of this church. This monument is erected as a token of respect for her virtues, and of sympathy for her sufferings, by Victoria R., 1856."

26.—A rumour being current that Lord Palmerston had openly interfered in the election contest now going on at Southampton, between the two Liberals—Mr. Andrews and Mr. Weguelin—his lordship writes to the former that there was no doubt he had, in conversation, expressed an opinion in favour of Mr. Weguelin, but it was entirely in a personal and private way, and involved no disparagement to Mr. Andrews.

January 1.—The new year was ushered in with a succession of storms causing great damage and loss of life. At Rhyl, on the Welsh coast, six wrecks were visible from one point. The Point of Ayr life-boat, manned with thirteen experienced seamen, was lost with all on board. On the north-east coast there were at least sixty vessels on shore, and it was computed that no fewer than fifteen had foundered with all on board. The gale reached its height on the night of the 4th and morning of the 5th. The Northern Belle, a vessel of 1100 tons, was wrecked in the Downs; crew saved, but a Margate lugger, when attempting to render assistance, went down with all on board. The Violet steamer, trading between Ostend and Dover, went also down with all hands. The loss of this vessel was attributed to a mistake of the light, caused by the blinding nature of the snowstorm.

2.—Died in London, aged 78 years, Dr. Andrew Ure, author of many well known works on Chemical Science.

3.—Assassination of Monseigneur Sibour, Archbishop of Paris, while celebrating the Feast of St. Geneviève in the church of St. Etienne du Mont. After the procession was over, and when the Archbishop had turned round to bless the people, before entering the vestry, one Verger, a priest under censure, rushed forward and plunged a large Catalan knife into the prelate's breast, exclaiming, as he delivered the blow, "No Goddess." The Archbishop fell with a cry of "Le malheureux !" and being carried into the vestry expired immediately after receiving absolution. The assassin was at once arrested, and, being questioned as to the meaning of his words, replied, that he wished to protest against so impious a doctrine as that of the Immaculate Conception. He was subsequently brought to trial, and after a display of great violence, in consequence of which he was several times removed from the court, he was found guilty of the crime of murder without extenuating circumstances. The defence set up by his counsel was lunacy. He was executed on the 30th in the Place de la Roquette. The funeral of the Archbishop was attended by an immense crowd of people.

5.—Sir Robert Peel delivers a lecture at the opening of the new Library, Adderley Park, in which he afforded his audience much amusement by an eccentric description of the ambassadors present at the coronation of the Emperor Alexander. It was afterwards severely commented on by Russian and French journals, and formed the subject of a parliamentary debate.

6.—The Commission at Paris, convened for settling differences which had arisen in connexion with the Treaty of Paris, agree on terms settling the dispute, so far as respects the Danubian Principalities and the Isle of Serpents.

9.—Dr. Dionysius Wielobycki, homœopathic physician, tried before the High Court of Justice, Edinburgh, for forgery, and uttering a forged will with intent to defraud the heir of Isabella Darling. He was sentenced to fourteen years' transportation.

— Rev. Arthur Penrhyn Stanley, Canon of Canterbury, gazetted to the chair of Regius Professor of Ecclesiastical History in the University of Oxford.

12.—The West India Royal Mail Company's steamer Tyne runs ashore near St. Alban's Head, when coming up the Channel. Her crew, passengers, and cargo were got ashore with difficulty; and on the 12th March the measures taken to float the vessel proved successful, the Tyne once more taking her place among the regular passenger ships of the Company.

13.—Came on at the Central Criminal Court the trial of Pierce, Burgess, and Tester, for the bullion-robbery committed on the South-Eastern Railway, during the night of May 15, 1855. The principal witness was Agar, then undergoing penal servitude at Portland for another offence, who had been induced to turn king's evidence upon his companions in consequence of Pierce neglecting to pay over to Fanny Kay and her child a sum of money at stated seasons out of Agar's estate. He described with great minuteness every feature of the plot; how they became acquainted with each other; what part each of them played; how the wax impressions were obtained to make false keys; and how the plunder was divided on their return to London. Pierce and himself, he said, on reaching London, hired a horse and cart, and conveyed the bars of gold to Cambridge Villas, where he lived. "The bags were first put into the parlour, but were afterwards removed to a trunk in my bedroom. Pierce took back the horse and cart, and I saw no more of him that day. A day or two later Pierce came to my house and cut off 100 ounces of gold from one of the bars, and sold it for 3*l.* per ounce. I had the proceeds of that, namely 300*l.* We then determined to make a furnace and melt the gold. This was done in my first-floor back-room. We took out some of the stones of the floor for the purpose, and replaced them with fire-bricks. The brick now produced is one of them, and on it small particles of gold can now be detected, from the running over of the melting-pot. The melted gold was poured into an ingot prepared to receive it. In removing one of the crucibles from the fire I met with an accident. The crucible broke, and the gold was scattered about the floor, which was burnt. While we were thus occupied, Fanny Kay, on one occasion, complained of the great heat, and asked what we were about. I told her never to mind, as we were engaged about our own business. Pierce stayed all day and took his meals with me, but he went home to sleep. When we had melted the gold, and run it into ingots, I began to sell it. I first sold 200 ozs. to a man named Saward. I have known him for some years. When I first knew him he had chambers at No. 4, Inner-court, Temple. He was a barrister, I understood; indeed, I have seen him pleading in Westminster Hall as a barrister (see March 5, 1857). I first saw him about this business at a public-house near Ball's Pond. He gave me 3l. 2s. 6d. an ounce for the gold, and I gave him 6d. or 1s. commission. After the 200 ounces I sold him another of 500 ounces. About this time I had a quarrel with Fanny Kay, in consequence of which I left her, and took lodgings at Kilburn; I went there under the name of Adams. We had previously removed all the gold to Pierce's, who also went to live at Kilburn. I lived with him a short time there, and afterwards I took lodgings at Stanley-grove, Paddington-green. While I was at Pierce's for a short time, Burgess and Tester came up, and we divided the proceeds of the robbery as far as they had been realized. Pierce, Tester, and I had 600l. each, and Burgess 700l. The money divided was in notes, which had been obtained by Pierce in exchange for the gold which I received from Saward. My notes were in a trunk at my lodgings at Stanley-grove, Paddington-green, where I was arrested. The rest of the gold, which was unsold, was buried by Pierce in a hole which he dug in his pantry, under the front steps of his house." Other witnesses having been examined, the jury, after an absence of little more than ten minutes, returned a verdict of Guilty on the second count (larceny) against Pierce, and Guilty on the first count (stealing the property of their employers) against Burgess and Tester. The first, after a censure by Mr. Baron Martin for cheating the paramour and child of his confederate, was sentenced to two years' imprisonment with hard labour—three of the months to be passed in solitary confinement. Burgess and Tester were sentenced to fourteen years' transportation.

13.—Destruction of the old bridge, at Rochester, by gunpowder. Three shafts were excavated in the piers to depths ranging from 15 to 24 feet, in which were placed charges of gunpowder of 60 lbs., and two lesser charges of 30 lbs., the total amount used being 300 lbs. The destruction of the piers was most complete, although the only sight visible to the spectators was the upheaving of the water, and the disappearance of the masonry.

15.—The Chinese baker A-lum attempts to poison Sir J. Bowring and other British residents at Hong-Kong by mixing arsenic in their bread. It was used in such large quantities as to defeat the end in view, though all who partook of it suffered severe pains. The bread was analysed by Liebig, and in each pound from 38 to 40 grains of arsenic found.

16.—Leopold Redpath tried at the Central Criminal Court, and sentenced to transportation for life for his frauds on the Great Northern Railway Company. J. C. Kent, a clerk in the office, accused of abetting Redpath in his forgeries, was acquitted.

20.—Lord Campbell pronounced the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench in the case of Alicia Reece v. the Hampstead School. The child was the daughter of a sergeant of marines who was killed in the attack on Petropaulovski in 1854. He was a Protestant, and wrote, for the guidance and comfort of his wife, a letter full of pious instructions regarding his children, a few hours before the commencement of the action in which he fell. Mrs. Reece was a Roman Catholic, and now sought—under priestly influence, it was said—to withdraw her daughter from an institution in which she had been placed by the Commissioners of the Patriotic Fund in 1855. The girl, who was under eleven years of age, was unwilling to leave the school, and strongly objected to attend a Roman Catholic place of worship. It was pleaded on her behalf, that her religious conviction ought to be respected, and also that the rule generally observed in all military and naval schools was to bring up children in the religion of their father. Lord Campbell decided that the child was not of an age at which she was entitled to exercise the responsibility of electing what school she should attend, and that she must therefore be given into the custody of her mother as her guardian for nurture. "At the same time (said his lordship) the Court must express a hope that she would be treated in that tender way which her father hoped for, when he wrote that letter so honourable to a Christian soldier expecting to fall in the service of his country."

23.—Indian Mutiny.—Major-General Hearsey, commanding the Presidency division, informs the Indian Government that at Dumdum, near Calcutta, an uneasy feeling existed among the Sepoys, caused, as they alleged, by the belief that the grease used in the preparation of their cartridges, consisted of a mixture of fat of cows and pigs—animals abhorrent to both Hindoos and Mahomedans.

26.—Died, at Paris, the Princess Lieven, celebrated for the part she took in the secret diplomacy of Europe during the past half century.

27.—Died, after a short illness, in his 70th year, Baron Alderson.

28.—The Court of Queen's Bench gives judgment that a rule must be made absolute for a mandamus, compelling the judge in the Arches Court to hear the appeal in the case of Ditcher v. Denison.

February 3.—Parliament opened by Commission. The Royal Speech made reference to the final adjustment of the Treaty of Paris, the settlement of the Neufchâtel difficulty, the cessation of diplomatic intercourse with Naples, the commencement of hostilities with Persia and China, and the renewal of the Bank Charter. Her Majesty commanded her Commissioners "to express the gratification which it afforded her to witness the general well-being and contentment of the people; and to find that, notwithstanding the sacrifices unavoidably attendant upon such a war as that lately terminated, the resources of the country remain unimpaired, and its productive industry continues unchecked in its course of progressive development." An amendment to the Address, proposed in the House of Lords by Earl Grey, censuring Ministers for not having called Parliament together earlier to inform them of the state of affairs in Persia, was negatived by 45 votes to 12. In the House of Commons the Address was carried without a division, although in the course of a debate Mr. Disraeli made serious charges against the Ministry in connexion with a secret treaty, said to have been concluded between France and Austria regarding the possessions of the latter in Italy. Lord Palmerston denied that any such treaty was ever made known to her Majesty's Government.

5.—John Paul, assistant clerk to the Guardians of the Poor of the City Union, sentenced to fourteen years' transportation for embezzling an order for the payment of 378*l.*, the property of his employers. From an official statement subsequently submitted to the Poor-law Board by the Guardians, it appeared that their losses through the frauds committed by the prisoner and the late collector, between the years 1843 and 1856, amounted to over 22,400*l.*

6.—In the Court of Common Pleas, Captain Ling recovers 1,000*l.* damages from Major Croker, of the 14th Light Dragoons, for seducing his wife, although the defendant pleaded "leave and licence" on the part of the husband. A series of disgraceful letters, purporting to be written by Captain Ling to his wife, were treated as forgeries designed to damage his case.

— The Gazette announces the nomination of trustees appointed for the formation of a Gallery of Portraits of the most eminent men in British history.

— A Sepoy informs the officers of the 34th N. I. at Barrackpore that he had become cognizant of a plot amongst the men of the four regiments at that station; that they were apprehensive of being forced to give up their caste and be made Christians; that, consequently, they were determined to rise against their officers, and commence by either plundering or burning the bungalows.

9.—Sir George Grey states the intention of the Government on the subject of Secondary Punishment. Admitting, to some extent, the justice of the complaints made against ticket-of-leave men, he said the Government, after full consideration, proposed to give effect to the recommendation of the Committee of the House of Commons, that the sentence of penal servitude should be lengthened so as to make it of the same duration as that of transportation under the old law; and they proposed to abolish all obstacles to the removal of convicts sentenced to penal servitude to any possession of the Crown, so that such a sentence should carry with it, though not necessarily, removal from the country—the Government being thereby enabled to send convicts to Western Australia, or to avail themselves of any additional facilities for their transportation to other penal settlements. With regard to convicts under sentence of penal servitude, who would be kept at home, he indicated his views as to the rules which should govern remissions of the sentence, and proposed to maintain the power, which he thought useful to retain, of granting the conditional licences called tickets-of-leave.

9.—In the House of Lords, the Earl of Cardigan complains of the strictures passed upon his professional conduct in Major Calthorpe's "Letters from Head-Quarters, by a Staff Officer." Lord Panmure replied that, (the book being anonymous, no notice could be taken of it by the war authorities.

10.—The Lord Chancellor (Lord Cranworth) introduces the first instalment of his promised law reforms, in the shape of a series of bills dealing with the jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Courts—the Courts of Probate, Divorce, and Clergy Discipline.

13.—In introducing his Budget, the Chancellor of the Exchequer (Sir G. C. Lewis) said that the Government proposed to fix the Income-tax, for the next three years, at 7*d.* per pound, as originally done by Sir Robert Peel. The effect would be that the Exchequer would receive twenty-one instead of twenty millions. The total revenue for the ensuing year he estimated at 66,365,000*l.*, which would leave a surplus over the expenditure of 891,000*l.* The total amount of taxes remitted was 11,971,000*l.* If the liabilities of the next three years were discharged, and the accruing liabilities met, the entire debt of 40,000,000*l.*, arising out of the war, would be extinguished in twenty years. A resolution, proposed on the 20th, by Mr. Disraeli, for "adjusting the estimated income and expenditure in the manner best calculated to secure the country against the risk of a deficiency in the years 1858–59 and 1859–60, and to provide for such a balance of revenue and charge respectively in the year 1860 as may place it in the power of Parliament at that period, without embarrassment to the finances, altogether to remit the Income-tax," was, after a lengthy debate, negatived by 286 to 206.

19.—Expulsion of James Sadleir, M.P. for Tipperary, from the House of Commons. No opposition was offered to the resolution moved by the Attorney-General for Ireland, "That James Sadleir, Esq., a member of this House, having been charged with divers frauds and fraudulent practices, and bills of indictment for certain misdemeanours having been found against him, and warrants issued: for his apprehension—and the said James Sadleir having failed to obey an order of this House, that he should attend in his place on Thursday, the 24th day of July last, and having fled from justice, that the said James Sadleir be expelled this House."

19.—Mr. Locke King's motion for leave to bring in a Bill to reduce the franchise in counties to occupiers of tenements rated at 10*l.* thrown out by a majority of 192 against 172. Lord Palmerston voted against the proposal for two reasons—that it sought to identify the right of voting in boroughs and counties, and that in the present state of public business there was no likelihood of passing such a measure this session.

— Frightful explosion and loss of 189 lives at the Lundhill Colliery, near Barnsley. As usual on such occurrences, the machinery for ascending and descending the shaft was destroyed, and it was, therefore, some time before the few resolute volunteer searchers could enter the workings. When a descent was made, they found clustered at the bottom—some of them much burnt—the few workmen out of 200 who had escaped the fatal effects of the explosion. As the pit was on fire over a very wide surface, it was impossible to penetrate any distance, and after many days of daring perseverance the task was given up as hopeless. In order to preserve the mine, and continue employment to the people, an attempt was made to subdue the fire by closing over the pit-mouth, so as to exclude the atmospheric air, but it was only partially successful; and on the advice of the most eminent coal-viewers, a neighbouring brook was turned into the workings. This succeeded in the course of two or three weeks, clouds of steam coming constantly from the shaft to show how great was the body of fire below. On emptying the pit, which was done by large cisterns, holding 600 gallons each, the bodies were gradually recovered, but identification was impossible, and the task of attempting it was gradually given up. A large sum was raised for the relief of the suffering families.

23.—The "Tabernacle" in Tottenham-court-road, erected by George Whitefield, destroyed by fire, originating in the overheating of a flue running from a stove used for warming the school.

24.—Commencement of debate in the House of Lords on the series of resolutions moved by the Earl of Derby, censuring Government for their proceedings in China. He made an elaborate analysis of the paper submitted to Parliament in justification of the war, and pointed out numerous incidents in which the Government had not only overstepped their own legitimate sphere of action, but acted with great harshness, if not positive cruelty, towards the Chinese. He concluded with an eloquent appeal to the episcopal bench to aid the hereditary peerage. "I should deeply deplore," he said, "upon such an occasion, if the Church, as represented by the right reverend bench, should give an uncertain sound; if their sanction should be extended to deeds of violence, which in their consciences they cannot approve, or if they should allow any feelings of whatever character to overbear what must, I think, be their solemn convictions on this question. (Cheers.) I make my appeal to those who have done me the honour of listening with patience—with exemplary patience—to the long and painful statement which I have laid before you. To the hereditary peerage I turn humbly, earnestly, but with confidence (and this is the last word with which I shall trouble your lordships); I appeal to them by their vote this night to declare that they will not sanction the usurpation by foreign authorities of that most awful prerogative of the Crown—the declaring of war; that they will not tolerate, nor by their silence appear to approve, upon light and trivial grounds of quarrel, and upon cases of doubtful justice as far as regards the merits of our first demands, the capture of commercial vessels; that they will not tolerate the destruction of the forts of a friendly country; that they will not tolerate the bombardment and the shelling of an undefended and commercial city, and that they will not on any consideration give the sanction of their voice to the shedding of the blood of unwarlike and innocent people without warrant of law, without moral justification." The noble lord, who resumed his seat amid loud and general applause, concluded by proposing the following resolutions:—"That this House has heard with deep regret of the interruption of amicable relations between her Majesty's subjects and the Chinese authorities at Canton, arising out of the measures adopted by her Majesty's Chief Superintendent of Trade to obtain reparation for alleged infractions of the supplementary treaty of the 8th of October, 1843; That in the opinion of this House, the occurrence of differences on this subject rendered the time peculiarly unsuited for pressing on the Chinese authorities a claim for the admittance of British subjects into Canton, which has been left in abeyance since 1849, and for supporting the same by force of arms; That in the opinion of this House operations of actual hostility ought not to have been undertaken without the express instructions, previously received, of her Majesty's Government; and that neither of the subjects adverted to in the foregoing resolutions afforded sufficient justification for such operations." The debate continued over two nights, when the division showed: Contents, present 53, proxies 57—110; non-contents, present 71, proxies 75—146. Majority against resolutions, 36.

25.—Indian Mutiny.—At Berhampore, when the 19th N. I. were ordered to parade on the following morning, and percussion caps were, according to the usual custom, about to be issued to them, the men refused to receive them, saying that there was some doubt as to how the cartridges were made. On the same night they broke open the places where their arms were piled, and, taking possession of their muskets and ammunition, carried them to their lines. The cavalry and artillery being called out to suppress this insubordination, the men laid down their arms, and the regiment was afterwards disbanded.

26.—Explosion of the fog signal factory of the Eastern Counties Railway Company, near the Stratford Junction Station. The signal-house itself was blown to pieces, and three men killed. There was about 160 lbs. of gunpowder, and over 5,000 percussion caps in the building.

— Student riots in Edinburgh, arising out of rival lectures on temperance by Professor Laycock and Dr. McCulloch. The magistrates at one period caused the college gates to be closed, and turned the students into the street.

— Commencement of the debate on Mr. Cobden's motion, "That this House has heard with concern of the conflicts which have occurred between the British and Chinese authorities in the Canton river; and, without expressing an opinion as to the extent to which the Government of China may have afforded this country cause of complaint respecting the non-fulfilment of the treaty of 1842, this House considers that the papers which have been laid upon the table fail to establish satisfactory grounds for the violent measures resorted to at Canton in the late affair of the Arrow; and that a select committee be appointed to inquire into the state of our commercial relations with China." Disowning any personal or party object in his motion, and expressing the utmost desire to avoid giving pain to Sir John Bowring, with whom he had been acquainted for twenty years, Mr. Cobden succinctly related the facts connected with the seizure of the Arrow and the bombardment of Canton. He agreed with Lord Lyndhurst that the Chinese Governor was right in respect to the seizure, and contrasted the severity of our Government with the slight provocation alleged to have been given in the blue book, ostentatiously described, "Correspondence respecting insults in China." On the one side, as Lord Derby said, there had been courtesy, forbearance, and temper; on the other arrogance and presumption. It was not, he thought, for the benefit of traders at Canton that they should be able to summon an overwhelming force to their aid. There might be too much protection for British merchants as well as for British agriculture. "Civis Romanus sum" was not a very conciliatory motto to put over counting-houses abroad. Urging the extension of commerce throughout China by peaceable means, he asked Parliament to show by their votes that we had done an injustice to an ingenious and civilized people who were learned when our Plantagenet kings could not write—who had logic before Aristotle and morals before Socrates. Mr. Cobden was followed on the side of the Government by Mr. Labouchere, Mr. Lowe, and Sir R. Bethell, and on the Opposition side by Sir E. L. Bulwer and Lord John Russell.

27.—The Opposition meet to-day at Lord Derby's residence, and resolve to give a combined support to the vote of censure on the Ministry on the China question. Referring to a charge of coalition now being brought against the Conservative party, Lord Derby said that when members from identity of sentiment were frequently drawn together into the same lobby, it was impossible to doubt that a band of political union was established which no party could refuse to acknowledge.

March 2.—This afternoon Lord Palmerston called his supporters together to the number of about 180, and addressed them on the present position of affairs. The tone of the meeting was one of confidence in the noble lord's administration, and indicative of a desire to support him against the combined attacks being made.

3.—Defeat of the Government on Mr. Cobden's China resolutions. On this, the fourth night of the debate, Lord Palmerston defended the conduct of the Government, and avowed his intention to treat the vote as one of "no confidence." The chief speakers on the opposition side were Mr. M. Gibson, Mr. Gladstone, and Mr. Disraeli; the latter touching with some severity on the Premier's alleged hostility to coalitions—himself an infant Hercules picked out of a Whig cradle, who had been connected with every party in the House, and accustomed to command majorities without the assertion of a single principle. "Let the noble lord (he said) not only complain to the country, but let him appeal to it. I hope that my constituency will return me again; if they do not, I shall be most happy to meet him on the hustings at Tiverton. I should like to see the programme of the proud leaders of the Liberal party—no reform, new taxes, Canton blazing, Peking invaded. I hope the House will not for a moment be influenced by the languid menaces of the noble lord. I hope that honourable members will feel to-night that they have a duty to perform which will be remembered long after this Parliament has ceased to exist; and that, not frightened by the menace of a minister, they will dare to vindicate the course of justice, and lay down a principle without the observance of which the empire of which we are so proud may soon be questioned." Mr. Cobden briefly repudiated the charge of conspiring to drive the ministry from office, but declared at the same time that he never knew of a change there from which the people did not benefit; and, much as he admired the general conduct of the Premier, he thought he would make a most excellent bargain for the country if he disposed of him for the 2,000,000/.

of remitted taxation which might follow his dismissal. The vote was then taken, and showed, as had been anticipated for some days, a majority against the Government, the numbers being 263 and 249. As soon as the clerk at the table handed the statement to Mr. Cobden there was a loud cheer, suspended for a moment while the numbers were being read, and then repeated and continued for several minutes. Certain routine business was then transacted, but the Premier made no formal statement of the intention of Government. An analysis of the division showed, For the resolution—Conservatives, 198; Liberals, 35; Peelites, 22; Irish, 10. Against—Liberals, 228; Conservatives, 21.

4.—Celebrated with great pomp at Gunnersbury Park, near Chiswick, the marriage of Miss Leonora, eldest daughter of Baron Lionel Rothschild, of London, and Baron Alphonse, eldest son of Baron James Rothschild, of Paris. It was reported, perhaps without truth, that the Rothschild family, independently of formal settlements, presented the newly married couple with a gift of 1,000,000*l.*

—Treaty of peace between her Majesty and the Shah of Persia signed at Paris. The ratifications were exchanged at Bagdad on the 2d of May. His Majesty engaged to abstain hereafter from all interference with the internal affairs of Afghanistan, to recognise the independence of Herat, to refer disputes to the friendly offices of the British Government, and to receive back the British mission to Teheran with the necessary apologies and ceremonies.

5.—Lord Palmerston intimates that in consequence of the vote on the China dispute, ministers had advised her Majesty to dissolve Parliament at the earliest period consistent with the due discharge of public business. He thought the circumstances in which the ministry were placed were so peculiar as to warrant a dissolution instead of a resignation. "Looking on the one hand to the simple result of the debate, we might say that we had lost the confidence of this House; yet on the other hand, looking to the divisions which took place shortly before on questions involving very important portions of the policy of the Government, the result was of a very different character. And I feel myself free to say that some of those who concurred in the vote on Tuesday night made it understood that that vote was not to be considered as implying a want of confidence on their part in her Majesty's Government. We had proposed to arrange certain taxes for three years; we shall now propose to determine them for only one year. We shall propose to the House to vote sums on account of the estimates for only a portion of the year, and to pass a Mutiny Act for a similar period; thus leaving the new Parliament, which may probably assemble towards the end of May, free to deal with all these great matters according to its discretion." Mr. Disraeli admitted that the course proposed would be the best for the public service, and he would give every facility for carrying it out. Mr. Cobden, and many of his supporters, thought the Executive Government had no right to continue in office unless they were prepared to shape their China policy in conformity with the vote of the House. Lord Palmerston would not promise this—the policy of the Government was to maintain the rights and defend the lives and properties of British subjects, and to improve our relations with China. So far as the dissolution was concerned, Mr. Cobden predicted such a winnowing of parties in the House and throughout the country as would be of great use to them all.

5.—James Townsend Seward (see January 13, 1857, alias "Jem the Penman,"—described in the indictment as a labourer, but in reality a barrister of the Inner Temple—and James Anderson, servant, tried at the Central Criminal Court for forging and uttering a bank cheque for 100*l.* with intent to defraud Messrs. Hankey and Co. From the preliminary statement made by Sir F. Thesiger, it appeared that this was but one of a series of frauds, which, for skill in combination and daring in execution, had never been surpassed. Seward, as has been already mentioned, was mixed up with the great gold dust robbery, at least to the extent of disposing of the plunder; but Agar was not the only thief he had dealings with. Seward was apprehended on the 26th of December, by two City officers named Moss and Huggett. They went to a coffee-shop in John-street, Oxford-street, where they inquired for a Mr. Hopkins, when a woman said he had gone to a public-house in Oxford-market. They went there; Huggett entered the house, Moss remained a little behind, and presently observed a door open rather gently; he immediately opened the door fully, and found Seward there. He said, "My name is Hopkins." "No!" said Moss, "your name is Seward." He said, "You are mistaken." Shortly afterwards Moss said, "You are James Seward." Seward said, "I know nothing at all about him." Huggett then said, "I must apprehend you for forgery, for forging a bill of 1,000*l.* upon Messrs. Heywood and Co., and with also being concerned with Anderson, Hardwicke, and Atwell." Seward said, "I don't know any such persons." The officers then apprehended Seward, and searched him; they found two blank cheques of the St. James's branch of the London and Westminster Bank. Seward said to Huggett, "Of course you have no desire to do anything with them." A little while after, as he was being taken in the cab, Seward said, "I suppose I need not hold out any longer. My name is Jem Seward." At least three others—Hardwicke, Atwell, and Anderson—had been the means of bringing him blank cheques, the produce of robberies, which cheques he contrived with great dexterity to fill up for different large sums in the name of customers of different banks in London. (327)

Bills of exchange were dealt with in the same way; and to such an extent was the conspiracy carried, that it was beginning to affect the security of the entire mercantile community. The cheques were generally taken to the bank by young persons innocent of the fraud, and watched at different points of their journey by confederates, who gave the gang the signal of good or ill success. They all changed their names and residences frequently, and generally laid their plans in some quiet public-house or obscure lodging. Lawyers were repeatedly their victims, a copy of their signature being always obtained by one of the gang employing him to recover a debt from another, usually paid by a cheque to a third. Hardwicke and Atwell, then undergoing imprisonment for their share in a fraud attempted at Yarmouth, now appeared in the witness box, and described the whole details of the scheme. Their evidence was corroborated by waiters whom they had despatched from the Magpie, the White Hart, and the Four Swans, public-houses in and about Bishopsgate-street. The jury, after a short deliberation, found both prisoners guilty, and they were sentenced to be transported for life.

7.—Came on at Oxford Assizes the case of Coglan v. La Mert, the action being in the form of an interpleader to try in whom lay the right of property in the horse called Gemma di Vergy, formerly belonging to Palmer of Rugeley. The plaintiff, who appeared to have passed a troubled career on the turf, said he purchased the horse from the Honourable Mr. Lawley, now absent from the country in consequence of pecuniary difficulties, and represented in court by a person reputed to be a common crossing-sweeper. The question before the Court was whether the sale from Lawley to Coglan was a bonâ fide proceeding. Verdict for the plaintiff.

9.—The Speaker of the House of Commons (Sir J. S. Lefevre) intimates his intention of retiring from the chair at the close of the present session. "It is now nearly eighteen years (he said) since I first had the honour of being elected Speaker of this House; and I cannot contemplate the end of my official career without great pain. Nor can I allow it to close without offering to the House my sincere and grateful acknowledgments for that uniform confidence and support which I have received, not only from all parties in this House, but I may say with perfect truth from every member of it. It has been my constant endeavour, as is well known to the House, to improve and simplify their forms of proceeding; but, at the same time, I have striven to maintain unimpaired all their rights and privileges, together with all those rules and orders sanctioned by ancient usage which long experience has taught me to respect and venerate, and which I believe never can be relaxed or materially altered without prejudice to the freedom and independence of the House of Commons." Next day, Lord Palmerston, seconded by Mr. Disraeli, formally conveyed to the Speaker the thanks of the House for his eminent services. An annuity of 4,000*l.* was afterwards voted, and at the dissolution her Majesty raised him to the peerage, with the title of Viscount Eversley.

12.—The railway suspension bridge crossing the Des Jardins Canal between Toronto and Hamilton, gives way under a train which had gone off the rails, and the carriages, filled with passengers, were precipitated into the abyss beneath. Out of 97 only 20 people were saved.

14.—Treaty between Denmark and the principal States of Europe for the abolition of the Sound dues signed at Copenhagen. Each maritime State agreed to pay to Denmark an equivalent for the amount of duty paid by the ships of their respective countries calculated on an average of five years, and capitalised at the rate of four per cent. The portion of England was 1,125,206*l.*

— In his address to the electors of the City of London, Lord John Russell justified his vote on the China debate on these grounds:—1. That the audience demanded with the Commissioner was grafted upon a quarrel which might otherwise have been amicably settled; 2. That it led to scenes of bloodshed and destruction wherein many innocent persons perished; 3. That such a demand ought to have been addressed to the Emperor, and that due time should have been allowed for an answer; 4. That before hostilities were commenced, due preparation should have been made in concert with the authorities at home for the protection of the lives and properties of British subjects; 5. That the command of access to the Commissioner was not authorized by the instruction of the Secretary of State.

— Overpowered apparently with the responsibilities laid upon him in connexion with the Persian expedition, Major-General Stoker commits suicide at Bushire this morning by shooting himself. Commodore Ethersey followed the sad example three days afterwards.

15.—Conference held in Paris to arrange the dispute of Prussia with Neufchâtel. The King resigned his claim on obtaining a nominal pecuniary compensation, but retained the title, without political rights, of Prince of Neufchâtel.

16.—The Austrian Ambassador withdrawn from Turin in consequence of the violent language used by the Sardinian press towards Austria. A week later the Sardinian Ambassador was recalled from Vienna.

17.—The Lords Justices give judgment in the case of Stourton v. Stourton,—a plea concerning the custody of a minor. Mr. Stourton, a Roman Catholic, died in 1847, leaving an infant son. Five years afterwards Mrs. Stourton, the widow, became a convert to the English Church, and had since been bringing up her child in that faith. The present action was raised to set aside the mother as guardian, and appoint another to bring up the child in the faith of its father. Their lordships, after an interview with the child, decided that the mother should continue its guardian.

17.—In his address to the electors of Buckingham, Mr. Disraeli wrote:—"Lord Palmerston is an eminent man who has deserved well of his country, but as a prime minister he occupies a false position. He is the Tory chief of a Radical cabinet. With no domestic policy, he is obliged to divert the attention of the people from the consideration of their own affairs to the distractions of foreign politics. His external system is turbulent and aggressive, that his rule at home may be tranquil and unassailed. Hence arises excessive expenditure, heavy taxation, and the stoppage of all social improvement. . . . The general policy which I should enforce at this juncture may be contained in these words:—"Honourable peace, reduced taxation, and social improvement." There is an attempt at the present day to play off the parties which exist, and have always to a certain extent existed, in the Church against each other, for political objects. This is a dangerous cause for Churchmen to sanction. The Church which, irrespective of its higher functions, is one of the great guarantees of English happiness, has foes enough without seeking for them in her own bosom; and it would appear to me that instead of quarrelling among themselves Churchmen should evince mutual forbearance, unite on the common ground of ecclesiastical polity, and oppose all efforts to impair the integrity of that Reformed Church of England which is the best security for the religious liberty of all classes and creeds of her Majesty's subjects."

19.—The Registration Association having started four commercial candidates for the representation of the City of London, Lord John Russell addresses the electors to-day, complaining of his exclusion. "If a gentleman were disposed to part with his butler, his coachman, or his gamekeeper,—or if a merchant were disposed to part with an old servant, a warehouseman, a clerk, or even a porter,—he would say to him, 'John (laughter), I think your faculties are somewhat decayed; you are growing old; you have made several mistakes; and I think of putting a young man from Northampton in your place.' (Laughter and cheers.) I think a gentleman would behave in that way to his servant, and thereby give John an opportunity of answering that he thought his faculties were not so much decayed, and that he was able to go on at all events some five or six years longer. That opportunity was not given to me. The question was decided in my absence, without any intimation to me, and I come now to ask you and the citizens of London to reverse that decision."

20.—At the Stafford Assizes, James Tunni-

cliff was sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment for fraud and imposition, in so far as he had undertaken to free a Mr. Charlesworth, of Bromley Hurst, his wife, servants, and cattle, from the charm of witchcraft, under which "the wise man" said they were labouring. The witch in the case was said to be Charlesworth's own mother, who had been displeased with his marriage. The wizard extracted 37*l.* from his dupes for charms and exorcisms.

21.—Parliament prorogued by Commission, preparatory to its dissolution.

—Mr. Pemberton Leigh delivers the judgment of the Privy Council, on the appeal from the Arches Court regarding the decorations of St. Paul's, Knightsbridge, and St. Barnabas. He drew a distinction between crosses used as architectural ornaments, and crosses or crucifixes used as images for superstitious purposes; and reversed the judgment, in so far as it directed certain crosses within the building to be removed. He also drew a distinction between a stone "altar," which involves an idea of sacrifice, and a "table," or God's board, whereat the Lord's Supper is eaten; and he confirmed the judgment ordering the removal of the stone altar and wooden cross attached to it, which stands in St. Barnabas' Church, and the substitution of a movable table of wood. With regard to "credence tables," it was determined that they were not improper adjuncts of a Communion table, when used as side tables for the bread and wine before consecration. It was thought that the question whether coloured cloths are suitable or not, must be left to the Ordinary; but the sentence of the Court below, ordering the removal of embroidered linen cloths fringed with lace, and used at the time of the ministrations of the Holy Communion, was confirmed, as embroidery and lace were not consistent with the meaning of the expression, "a fair white linen cloth," which the rubric and canon prescribed.

23.—In his address to the electors of Tiverton, Lord Palmerston writes: "An insolent barbarian, wielding authority at Canton, violated the British flag, broke the engagements of treaties, offered rewards for the heads of British subjects in that part of China, and planned their destruction by murder, assassination, and poison. The British officers—civil and naval—on the station took those measures which appeared to them to be proper and necessary to obtain satisfaction and redress; and her Majesty's Government had approved the course pursued by those officers in vindication of the national honour, and for the assertion of our national rights. A combination of political parties, not till this last session united, carried a resolution, declaring the course pursued by our officers in China unjustifiable, and consequently censuring her Majesty's Government for having approved that course; but, if that course was unjustifiable, the British Government, instead of expecting satisfaction, ought to offer compensation to the Chinese Commissioner; and this course the combined opponents of the Government, if their parliamentary victory had installed them in office, must, in consistency, have been prepared to pursue. Will the British nation give their support to men who have thus endeavoured to make the humiliation and degradation of their country the stepping stone to power?"

26.—The British troops attack the Persians in the fortified position of Mohammerah and capture the place with trifling loss. They also took possession of all the tents and camp equipments, and seventeen guns which the retreating force left behind them.

— The General Election. The first members returned to the new Parliament were Sir De Lacy Evans and Sir John Shelley for Westminster. At Manchester, the "Peace party," Messrs. Bright and Gibson, were defeated by two Conservative candidates, Messrs. Potter and Turner; Mr. Cobden also sustained a galling defeat at Huddersfield, whither he had fled from the West Riding. Only two members of Lord Palmerston's Administration lost their seats—Admiral Berkeley at Gloucester, and Mr. Frederick Peel at Bury. At Kidderminster, Mr. Lowe was re-elected, but nearly paid the penalty of his life for his success; an infuriated mob making a savage attack on himself and friends when leaving the south polling-booth on Blakeway-green. The new Parliament contained 189 new members; the first under the Reform Bill had 275; that of 1835, 139; of 1841, 181; of 1847, 211; of 1852, 199.

— Died at Dublin, aged 50, John M. Kemble, Esq., a distinguished Anglo-Saxon scholar, Editor of the Codex diplomaticus, &c.

28.—The Sultan makes a state visit to Admiral Lord Lyons on board the Royal Albert, lying in the Bosphorus. He wore the Ribbon and Star of the Order of the Garter. He begged Lord Lyons to inform her Majesty how grateful he was for the prompt assistance which had been rendered to his country, and for having sent such a man as the Admiral to be one of the defenders of Turkey. The captains and commanders of the fleet were presented to his Imperial Highness.

31.—Mr. Bright having been informed of the result of the Manchester election, writes from Florence:—"In taking my leave of you and of public life, let me assure you that I can never forget the innumerable kindnesses I have received from my friends among you. No one will rejoice more than I shall in all that brings you prosperity and honour; and I am not without a hope that, when a calmer hour shall come, you will say of Mr. Gibson and of me, that as colleagues in your representation for ten years, we have not sacrificed our principles to gain popularity, or bartered our independence for the emoluments of office or the favours of the great."

April 2.—Proclamation issued prohibiting the importation of cattle or hides from places bordering on the Gulf of Finland, or any other part of the Baltic Sea between the Gulf and the city of Lubeck, infected with cattle murrain.

8.—Indian Mutiny. Mangal Pandey executed at Barrackpore for insubordinate conduct, and attempting to incite the Sepoy troops to mutiny.

11.—The Times publishes an Indian telegram, making mention of the mutiny of the 19th N. I. regiment at Moorshedabad, and its suppression by a small force of cavalry and artillery.

13.—Abolition of Greenwich Easter Fair, in compliance with a memorial to the Home Secretary signed by 2,000 of the inhabitants.

14.—At Buckingham Palace this afternoon, at a quarter before two o'clock, the Queen was safely delivered of a Princess (Beatrice).

— Wreck of her Majesty's frigate Raleigh, 50 guns, between five and six miles south of Macao. The vessel struck on a sunken rock, and sustained such serious injury that it was necessary to run her ashore on the east side of Ko-ho Island. The crew were relieved by a French vessel of war attracted to the spot by the signals of distress. The commander, Captain Keppel, was honourably acquitted of all blame.

23.—Sir John Dodson delivers the judgment of the Court of Arches in the appeal of Denison v. Ditcher, absolving Archdeacon Denison from the sentence pronounced against him in the Archbishop's Court at Bath, on the 22d October last, on the ground that more than two years had been allowed to elapse between the commission of the alleged offence and the raising of the action.

30.—Died, aged 81, the Duchess of Gloucester, the last of the family of George III.

— Meeting of the new Parliament. John Evelyn Denison, Esq., M.P. for North Nottinghamshire, unanimously elected Speaker.

May 3.—Died, aged 45, Alfred de Musset, French poet.

5.—The Exhibition of Art Treasures at Manchester opened by Prince Albert. The magnificent collection, gathered together by the Executive Committee, was arranged with consummate skill to constitute one vast work of art divided into seven principal sections:—1. Paintings by Ancient Masters; 2. Paintings by Modern Masters; 3. British Portrait Gallery; 4. Sculpture; 5. Museum of Ornamental Art; 6. Water-Colour Drawings; 7. Historical Miniatures. "You have done well" (said his Royal Highness) "not to aim at a mere accumulation of works of art and objects of general interest, but to give to your collection, by a scientific and historical arrangement, an educational character; thus not losing the opportunity of teaching the mind as well as gratifying the senses. And manifold are the lessons which it will present to us! If art is the purest expression of the state of mental and religious culture, and of general civilization of any age or people, an historical and chronological review given at one glance cannot fail to impress us with a just appreciation of the peculiar characteristics of the different periods and countries the works of which are here exhibited to us, and of the influence which they have exercised upon each other. In comparing these works with those of our own age and country, while we may well be proud of the immense development of knowledge and power of production which we possess, we have reason also for humility in contemplating the refinement of feeling and intensity of thought manifested in the works of the oldest schools." The Exhibition was afterwards visited by her Majesty, and continued through the summer the greatest resort of visitors in the kingdom.

7.—In the Royal Speech, at the opening of Parliament, her Majesty commanded her Commissioners to express regret that at the date of the latest advices from China, the differences which had arisen between the High Commissioner at Canton, and her Majesty's civil and naval officers in China, still remain unadjusted. "But her Majesty has sent to China a plenipotentiary fully intrusted to deal with all matters of difference, and that plenipotentiary will be supported by an adequate naval and military force, in the event of such assistance becoming necessary."

8.—The new Reading Room at the British Museum opened to the public. The first column was raised in January 1855, and the entire dome was roofed in, and the copper covering laid in September of the same year. The dome is 140 feet in diameter, and 106 feet in height. The reading-desks give comfortable accommodation to 300 readers, and the whole arrangements are a credit to the country and to all concerned.

9.—Fall of three houses in Tottenham Court-road, between Grafton-street and Tottenham-place. Byng, a clerk, was crushed to death in bed; Ann Briscoe, engaged at the moment in preparing breakfast, was hurled down with the ruins and also killed; three of the workmen engaged in making the alterations which led to the disaster, were taken out dead; and the son of the contractor was so fearfully injured that he died without recovering consciousness. An inquiry into the cause of the accident resulted in a verdict attributing it to the improper removal of a wall; and indirectly to the defective state of the law with respect to the public surveyors.

10.—Indian Mutiny. This (Sunday) evening, the native regiments stationed at Meerut rise in mutiny, fire upon their officers, break open the jail, and relieve the prisoners confined on the 9th for insubordination. Every European residence was attacked, and a great number of officers, together with women and children, were barbarously murdered by the Sepoys before the English troops had time to come up. When the alarm first reached them they were preparing for church-parade, and they immediately marched on the native lines, pouring on them a fire of grape and musketry. The 3d Light Cavalry and 20th Native Infantry fled towards Delhi, being pursued a short distance by the Carabineers, and a considerable number of them cut down. At Delhi the remnant entered by the Calcutta gate without opposition, and instantly began to attack every European they met. They were soon joined there by mutineers from all quarters. Many of the Europeans fled for protection, or were taken by force and butchered in the presence, or with the knowledge, of the aged King and his blood-thirsty sons. Children were tossed on the points of bayonets before their mother's eyes, ladies were dragged naked through the streets, and exposed to the most shocking indignities at the bazaar. In a few days the Sepoys had the entire city at their mercy, the magazine having been blown up to save it falling into their hands. The British besieging force took up their quarters about two miles north of Delhi, with the old cantonment in front, a canal in their rear, and the river Jumna on their left.

12.—Mr. Dillwyn obtains leave to bring in a Bill making better provision for the prevention and punishment of aggravated assaults upon women and children. He proposed to substitute flogging for imprisonment.

13.—Thomas Fuller Bacon, and Martha Bacon, his wife, tried at the Central Criminal Court, for the murder of their two children, by cutting their throats in a house in Four Acre-street, Lambeth, on the 28th of December last. At one of the preliminary investigations Mrs. Bacon sought to fix the entire guilt on her husband, but it was now found there was no evidence to connect him with the crime beyond his own ill-advised conduct in supporting the first false story told by his wife, to the effect that the murders were committed by a burglar, who forcibly entered the house, and took away some of her property. A verdict of Not Guilty was recorded against Bacon. Mrs. Bacon, known in her lucid moments to be a gentle affectionate mother, was acquitted on the ground of insanity, and ordered to be confined during her Majesty's pleasure. The unfortunate woman had only been a few weeks out of St. Luke's Asylum. She subsequently confessed that she alone committed the murder. Bacon himself, who had some time before been acquitted at Stamford on a charge of arson, had afterwards sentence of death recorded against him there for poisoning his mother by administering prussic acid during the summer of 1855. The body was exhumed, and traces of the poison discovered by Dr. Taylor.

14.—In answer to Lord Shaftesbury's question as to the legality of the sale of opium in India, the Lord Chancellor said a case had been drawn up by the legal advisers of the Board of Control, and was about to be submitted to the law officers of the Crown. On the 24th August an opinion was presented that the trade was not illegal.

16.—Indian Mutiny. The Governor-General of India issues a proclamation warning the army of Bengal that the tales by which the men of certain regiments have been led to suspect that offence to their religion, or injury to their caste, is meditated by the Government of India, are malicious falsehoods. "The Government of India has invariably treated the religious feelings of all its subjects with careful respect. The Governor-General in Council has declared that it will never cease to do so. He now repeats that declaration, and he emphatically proclaims that the Government of India entertains no desire to interfere with their religion or caste, and that nothing has been, or will be, done by the Government to affect the free exercise of the observances of religion or caste by every class of the people."

— The first official intimation given in the Staats Anzeiger (the Prussian Gazette), of the intended marriage of H. R. H. Prince Frederick William of Prussia to the Princess Royal of England.

19.—Addresses in answer to her Majesty's message are moved in both Houses of Parliament with reference to the approaching marriage of the Princess Royal. The House of Commons afterwards voted her Royal Highness a marriage portion of 40,000*l.*, and an annuity of 4,000*l.* a year.

— In the House of Commons, the second reading of the Ministers' Money (Ireland) Bill carried by a majority of 313 to 174. It was afterwards carried through the House of Lords, and received the Royal Assent.

25.—The Hon. John Russell Colvin, Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces of India, issues a proclamation to the rebel Sepoys which gave rise to much hostile criticism on account of its mistimed leniency:—"Soldiers engaged in the late disturbances, who are desirous of going to their own homes, and who give up their arms at the nearest Government civil or military post, and retire quietly, shall be permitted to do so unmolested. Many faithful soldiers have been driven into resistance to Government only because they were in the ranks, and could not escape from them, and because they really thought their feelings of religion and honour injured by the measures of Government. This feeling was wholly a mistake, but it acted on men's minds. A proclamation of the Governor-General now issued is perfectly explicit, and will remove all doubts on these points. Every evil-minded instigator in the disturbance, and those guilty of heinous crimes against private persons, shall be punished. All those who appear in arms against the Government after this notification is known shall be treated as open enemies."

17.—The Morning Advertiser amuses the town as the victim of a wicked correspondent, who sought to support certain editorial remarks on the "Westerton" judgment, identifying the Cross with the Pagan phallus, by the testimony of "a very ancient MS. discovered some years since in a cellar belonging to the Monastery of Apati, a Catholic establishment," in the Levant. "The MS.," wrote the audacious "G. Allan Saunders," "is in possession of my friend, Signor P. Montomini, an authority of great weight in these matters, now engaged on a new edition of the 'Auctores Priapici.' As the contents of this curious MS. will be discussed in an elaborate note to this work, I will now merely state that it is therein related that a certain monk, Amphilius by name, who lived at Edessa in the latter part of the fourth century, noticing the great popularity which Priapus enjoyed among the 'Dii minores' of these parts, conceived the audacious idea of supplanting his worship by that of the Cross." The joke was capped by the mythical Pietro Montomini writing next day from the Craven Hotel:—"I have read the letter of Mr. Allan Saunders on the subject of the emblem which has been put forth as that of the Christian religion; and I have also read the leading article on the same subject in your impression of yesterday, in which you refer to a certain 'Israelitish monarch,' and to the image which he adored, and which you rightly conjecture to have represented the aforesaid emblem. That your view, sir, was perfectly correct, I am happy to be able to bring forward, out of the work I am at present editing, the following passage to prove:—

'Φέρουσι δὴ οἱ Ἴωνες, ὅτι ὁ βασιλεὺς ὁ μέγας τῶν Ἰουδαίων, τὸν Θεὸν, τῆς φύσεως προσκυνῶν, καὶ φιλήμασι τὴν εἰκόνα ἐμπλεκόμενος, ἐχέρηττα, καὶ τὸν κόπρον ἐν ταῖς ἀναξήρῃσι, κ. τ. λ.'

The above has been erroneously attributed to Athenæus, but I am in a position to prove that it is of a much later period. I will not take up your space with further remarks on the resemblance between Popish and Pagan ceremonies. Their name, sir, is Legion; and you are probably as well acquainted with them as myself."

23.—Epsom races: the Derby Stakes, won by Blink Bonny.

29.—Argued in the Court of Queen's Bench, at sittings in banco, the case of the Attorney-General v. the Provost and College of Eton, and Clark (clerk)—an action of quare impedit, involving the right of the Crown to presentation to benefices vacated by the appointment of colonial bishops. To the declaration on behalf of the Crown, the Provost and College of Eton pleaded that they were seised in fee of the advowson of the living of Stratford-Mortimer, under a charter and letters patent of King Henry VI., confirmed by Parliament, and that on the avoidance of the benefice by the consecration of the former incumbent as Bishop of Christchurch, in New Zealand, they presented the other defendant Clark to the living, and he was duly admitted, instituted, and inducted, as perpetual vicar and incumbent.

For himself, Clark pleaded that the Queen ought not to sue him, because, though it was true that the former incumbent had been consecrated to a bishopric, yet such bishopric was situated wholly in parts beyond the seas, and not within any part of the United Kingdom. To these pleas the Crown demurred, and thus raised the two questions before the court: (1) Whether on the avoidance of a living by the consecration of the incumbent as a colonial bishop, the Crown had the power to present to the living so vacated; and (2) Whether in this particular case the claim was not inconsistent with the original grant of the advowson to the College.

29.—A party of eight young men, who had been attending the Lancashire hirings, drowned while crossing Ulverstone Sands at night in a cart.

30.—The Grand Duke Constantine, of Russia, visits her Majesty at Osborne. On the following day the Queen took her guest for a cruise among the fleet at Spithead.

— Indian Mutiny. At Lucknow the mutiny broke out in cantonments amongst the lines of the 71st N.I., and soon became general. The Sepoys burnt down some of the buildings, and fired into the mess-room of the officers of the 71st. One or two officers were afterwards shot dead; and it was not until a part of the 32d had charged the rebels, and the artillery opened upon them, under the personal direction of Sir Henry Lawrence, that they gave way and quit the cantonments. They retired to Moodripore, where they were joined by the 7th Light Cavalry, who murdered one of their officers on the spot. The state of Lucknow now became threatening in the extreme; but Sir Henry Lawrence hoped by vigorous measures of repression to strike terror into the minds of the inhabitants, and prevent a general rising. Numbers of men convicted of tampering with the troops were hanged on a gallows erected in front of the Mutchee Bhawn, and two members of the royal family at Delhi, and a brother of the ex-King of Oude, were arrested and imprisoned there. The Residency itself was crowded with women and children, and every house and outhouse was occupied. Preparations for defence were continued, and thousands of Coolies employed at the batteries, stockades and trenches, which were everywhere being constructed. The treasure and ammunition, of which fortunately there was a large supply, were buried, and as many guns as could be collected brought together. The Residency and Mutchee Bhawn presented most animated scenes. There were soldiers, Sepoys, prisoners in irons, men, women, and children, hundreds of servants, respectable natives in their carriages, Coolies carrying weights, heavy cannons, field-pieces, carts, elephants, camels, bullocks, horses, all moving about hither and thither, and continual bustle and noise was kept up from morning to night. There was scarcely a corner which was not in some way occupied and turned to account.

30.—The King of the Belgians adjourns the Legislative Chambers in consequence of the popular feeling against an Act, passed by a majority in the Chambers, by which the power of the Roman Catholic clergy would be much increased.

June 3.—Fall of the new Roman Catholic Cathedral at Plymouth. The recently-finished roof fell in with a crash, and the building, with its lofty western front standing apart from the roof which connects the transept with the chancel of the church, presented the appearance of a ruin.

5.—Statute promulgated at Oxford for extending academic education to the middle-classes.

— The House of Commons consent to the proposal of the Chancellor of the Exchequer for the vote of 1,125,206*l.*, as the proportion to be paid by Great Britain to Denmark for the redemption of the Sound dues, the Danish Government undertaking the maintenance of light-houses, and other buildings of similar character, for the benefit of commerce.

6.—Indian Mutiny. At Allahabad, while the English officers were at mess, utterly unsuspecting of danger, the alarm bugle suddenly sounded, the Sepoy mutineers fired and afterwards attacked them with sword and bayonet. Out of 17 officers at mess 14 were butchered on the spot, some of them mere youths who had just joined the regiment. The treasury was plundered, the gaol broken open, and the station set on fire and destroyed. It was reported that not less than 50 Europeans were murdered at Allahabad the first night. By the end of this month the Sepoy troops had mutinied at twenty-two stations throughout the Bengal Presidency. On the 14th, at Gwalior, they shot down the officers at their lines, and afterwards set fire to the houses occupied by Europeans. The Maharajah here behaved with loyalty and firmness. He temporised with the rebels, in order to give the Europeans the opportunity of escaping, and had carriages and palkis prepared to convey some of them on the road to Agra.

— The morning newspapers publish telegrams from India, announcing that the 3d Bengal Cavalry at Meerut were in open mutiny.

7.—Sixty-two people killed at Leghorn, through a panic caused by an alarm of fire in the Teatro degli Acquedotti, during the performance of a piece entitled "The Taking of Sebastopol."

8.—Died at his residence, Kilburn Priory, aged 54, Douglas Jerrold, wit, dramatist, and satirist.

— Discussion in the House of Lords in the case of W. F. R. Sheddon, occasioned by Earl Grey presenting a petition complaining that, by a decision of the Court of Session in Scotland in 1803, confirmed by the House of Lords in 1808, Sheddon had been wrongfully deprived of his status as a natural-born subject, and stigmatized as illegitimate. On a division, the motion for inquiry was rejected by 19 to 11.

9.—Fire at the premises of Messrs. Pickford, at the Camden-town railway-station. A large quantity of merchandise was consumed, but the large stud of draught horses—with one exception, known as “The Man-hater,” who refused to allow any one to approach him—was got out in safety, and galloped off in the direction of Hampstead.

11.—In committee on the Divorce and Matrimonial Causes Bill, a clause proposed by the Bishop of Oxford to the effect that it will be lawful to pass on the guilty parties, or either of them, sentence of fine or imprisonment, as though such parties had been guilty of a misdemeanour at common law, was carried by 43 to 33. This was omitted on the third reading, by 49 to 29. An amendment proposed by the Lord Chancellor, permitting the woman to marry after divorce, was carried by 46 to 24. An addition proposed by Lord Wensleydale, providing that the adulterer and adulteress should not marry with each other, was rejected by 37 to 28.

—Died, aged 77, Moritz Retsch, German illustrator of Shakspeare, Goethe, and Schiller.

14.—Indian Mutiny. Sir Hugh Wheeler writes from Cawnpore to Mr. Gubbins, at Lucknow, the letter being cunningly secreted on the person of a Hindoo messenger, who contrived to elude the manifold perils which beset the road:—“We have been besieged since the 6th by the Nana Sahib, joined by the whole of the native troops, who broke out on the morning of the 4th. The enemy have two 24-pounders, and several other guns. We have only eight 9-pounders. The whole Christian population is with us in a temporary intrenchment, and our defence has been noble and wonderful; our loss heavy and cruel. We want aid, aid, aid! Regards to Lawrence.” It being thought impossible to send aid from Lucknow at this time, Captain Moore, of the 32nd, writes on the 18th, that “Sir Hugh regrets you cannot send him the 200 men, as he believes with their assistance we could drive the insurgents from Cawnpore and capture their guns.” While expressing an intention of holding out to the last, Captain Moore closed his epistle with the touching declaration, “Any news of relief will cheer us.”

15, 17, 19.—Handel Festival at the Crystal Palace, Sydenham, preparatory to the commemoration of his death in 1859.

16.—Decided in the Court of Exchequer, the great revenue case of the Attorney-General v. Allen, the defendant being charged under 30 counts with incurring penalties to the extent of 375,000*l.*, for infractions of the excise laws, committed in his malting works at Worthing, Moulsey, and Horsham. Having had their attention directed to the first-mentioned place, the Excise officers made a strict search, and found a trap-door opening into an underground passage, at the end of which were two vaults completely fitted up with malting cisterns and couch-frames of a capacity nearly equal to those above which had been regularly entered. At the other works similar contrivances were discovered. All the malt and barley found were seized, and proceedings instituted to recover penalties for using unentered premises and irregularly working those which had been entered, as well as to recover treble value of the malt seized, and to cause its condemnation. Verdict entered for the Crown for the sum of 100,000*l.*

17.—Oxford Statutes affecting professors settled in Congregation. They were all passed with the exception of one, allowing professors to hold prælectorships, if permitted by decree of Convocation. This was put to the vote in connexion with six different professors, and rejected by majorities varying from 32 to 62. The Craven statute was rejected by 54 votes to 31, the main objection being the assignment of these scholarships to physical science. The statute altering the Bampton Lecture Trust, was rejected by 49 votes to 38. The form of statute establishing an examination for the middle classes, was read and submitted to the vote. The main provisions of the statute were carried by 81 votes to 16, and the title of Associate in Arts by 62 to 38.

22.—In bringing up the report on the Oaths Bill, Mr. S. Fitzgerald proposed a clause, providing that no Jew should hold the office of Regent of the Kingdom, Prime Minister, Lord Chancellor, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, or Commissioner to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland. The clause was adopted by Government.

—Heard in the Court of Queen’s Bench, the case of Sidebottom v. Adkins—a claim made by a Manchester millowner to recover from a professional gambler the sum of 6,525*l.*, lost through the use of false dice. Verdict for the amount claimed.

—In the Court of Common Pleas, the jury give a verdict for 100*l.* damages, against the Honourable James William Macdonald for crim. con. with Mrs. Armitage, who had for years been living separate from her husband, the plaintiff.

23.—The Marriage and Divorce Bill read a third time in the House of Lords. In the debate on the second reading in the House of Commons, Mr. Walpole supported the Government, affirming that the measure had been misunderstood and misinterpreted. The relations of marriage, he said, were in no degree loosened by it, the only object being to substitute one good tribunal for three tribunals, in one of which the proceedings were a scandal and a disgrace to the country. The second reading was carried by a majority of 208 to 97. The third reading was carried without a division. The amendments made in committee were afterwards discussed in the House of Lords and approved of, with the exception of one introduced by Lord J. Manners against the wish of the Government.

23.—The 100th Anniversary of the Battle of Plassey, celebrated by a meeting of noblemen and gentlemen to organize measures for raising a monument to Lord Clive on a conspicuous spot near Shrewsbury, the chief town of his native county. The meeting was presided over by Lord Hill.

24.—South Kensington Museum opened.

25.—The Bribery Election Committees commence their inquiries. In Mayo county it was shown in evidence that the priests were the ringleaders of the mob, and had cursed Colonel Higgins and his supporters from the altar.

— Lord Campbell's Bill for suppressing the sale of obscene prints and publications, giving the police power to enter premises and search under a magistrate's warrant, read a second time in the House of Lords. Lord Lyndhurst withdrew an amendment rejecting the bill on the understanding that it would be amended in Committee, so as to exclude from its operation the possession of ancient works of art, or literary treasures.

— At a Court at Buckingham Palace this day, the Home Secretary was ordered to prepare for her Majesty's signature Letters Patent conferring upon Prince Albert the title and dignity of Prince Consort.

26.—The Montreal steamship, trading between Quebec and Montreal, burnt soon after leaving the first-mentioned city. Out of about 400 people understood to be on board, only 170 were saved.

— In Hyde Park this forenoon, her Majesty, attended by a brilliant circle, makes the first distribution of the Victoria Cross for signal acts of valour in the presence of the enemy. The recipients of the much-prized honour were sixty-two in number, and as each passed up to get the cross pinned on his breast by the Queen, the cheering from the immense assembly of spectators was loud and general.

27.—Indian Mutiny. News arrives that Delhi is in possession of the mutineers; that the Europeans had been massacred without regard to age or sex; that the bank had been plundered; and the son of the late Mogul Emperor proclaimed as king. The intelligence caused the greatest anxiety in official, commercial, and private circles. On the 24th, Consols opened at 93½ to ¼; and on the 30th had fallen to 92½ to ¼.

28.—At the Lewisham station on the North Kent Railway, the 9:30 train runs into another stopped there by an exhibition of the danger signal. The break-van and next open passenger carriage of the stationary train were smashed to pieces, and 11 persons either killed on the instant or injured, so that they died before removal. Besides these, 163 passengers were more or less injured. The stoker and driver of the train were committed for trial, but acquitted. The shareholders were heavily mulcted in a series of actions for compensation by those injured, and by the relatives of the killed.

29.—The alarming position of the British Government in India, as indicated by the intelligence received from that country, forms the subject of inquiry in both Houses of Parliament, by Lord Ellenborough and Mr. Disraeli. The President of the Board of Control (Mr. Vernon Smith) said that 14,000 additional men would be in India by the middle of next month. "He could not concur," he said, "with some members who had spoken as to our Indian Empire being imperilled by the present disaster. On the contrary, he was sanguine that it would be effectually suppressed by the force already in the country. He also defended Lord Canning, who, he considered, had behaved in the emergency with all the vigour and judgment which was to be expected from so distinguished a servant of the Crown."

— The Cagliari, a Sardinian mail boat, which had been taken possession of by an armed party on board, and directed to Ponza, where the Neapolitan prison was broken open, is now seized by a Neapolitan squadron, and, though not within the jurisdiction of Naples, all hands are taken into custody. The case of two English engineers, Watt and Park, gave rise to much correspondence between the Governments, and also to several debates in Parliament.

30.—Commenced before the High Court of Justiciary, Edinburgh, the trial of Madeleine Hamilton Smith, for poisoning Pierre Emile L'Angelier, by administering prussic acid in food given him on three separate occasions between the 19th of February and the 23d of March last. The case excited considerable interest throughout the kingdom from the social position of the accused, and the purely circumstantial character of the evidence by which the Crown sought to connect her with the crime. The Lord Advocate (Moncrieff) conducted the case for the Crown, and the Dean of Faculty (Inglis) defended the panel. Evidence was led at great length to show the relation in which the accused stood to the deceased—a relation illustrated by the production of above 100 letters, prints, portraits, and books, showing that a guilty intercourse had been carried on for months between them, in the prospect of an early marriage. It was also shown that the deceased died from the effects of prussic acid; that the prisoner was known to have purchased and kept poison of that kind in her possession; that though there was no witness of any interview, he was seen proceeding in the direction of prisoner's house on the night when poison was last administered; that she had opportunities for administering it; and that she had a motive for his removal in the fact that she was at the time of his decease about to contract marriage with a person of higher social standing. The evidence for the prosecution was continued over five days and a portion of the sixth; exculpatory evidence completed the sixth day. The seventh was taken up by the speech of the Lord Advocate, marked throughout by a rare spirit of moderation and feeling. On the ninth day the Dean of Faculty addressed the Court for the prisoner in a speech of great power. "The charge against the prisoner," he began, "is murder, and the punishment of murder is death; and that simple statement is sufficient to suggest to us the awful solemnity of the occasion which brings you and me face to face. But, gentlemen, there are peculiarities in the present case of so singular a kind—there is such an air of romance and mystery investing it from beginning to end—there is something so touching and exciting in the age, and the sex, and the social position of the accused—ay, and I must add, the public attention is so directed to the trial, that they watch our proceedings, and hang on our very accents, with such an anxiety and eagerness of expectation, that I feel almost bowed down and overwhelmed by the magnitude of the task that is imposed on me. You are invited and encouraged by the prosecutor to snap the thread of that young life, and to consign to an ignominious death on the scaffold one who, within a few short months, was known only as a gentle, confiding, and affectionate girl, the ornament and pride of her happy home. Gentlemen, the tone in which my learned friend, the Lord Advocate, addressed you yesterday, could not fail to strike you as most remarkable. It was characterised by great moderation—by such moderation as I think must have convinced you that he could hardly expect a verdict at your hands; and in the course of that address, for which I give him the highest credit, he could not resist the expression of his own deep feeling of commiseration for the position in which the prisoner is placed—an involuntary homage paid by the official prosecutor to the kind and generous nature of the man. But, gentlemen, I am going to ask you for something very different from commiseration; I am going to ask you for that which I will not condescend to beg, but which I will loudly and importunately demand—that to which every person is entitled, whether she be the lowest of her sex or the maiden whose purity is as the ununsunned snow. I ask you for justice; and if you will kindly lend me your attention for the requisite period, and if Heaven grant me patience and strength for the task, I shall tear to tatters that web of sophistry in which the prosecutor has striven to involve this poor girl and her sad strange story." After a most careful examination of the evidence, and the degree in which it bore on the prisoner, the Dean concluded his speech, of four hours' duration, by an expression of unwillingness to part with the jury:—"Never did I feel as if I had said so little as I feel now after this long address. I cannot explain it myself except by a strong and overwhelming conviction of what your verdict ought to be. I am deeply conscious of a personal interest in your verdict, for if there should be any failure of justice, I could attribute it to no other cause than my own inability to conduct the defence; and I am persuaded that, if it were so, the recollection of this day, and this prisoner, would haunt me as a dismal and blighting spectre to the end of life. May the Spirit of all Truth guide you to an honest, a just, and a true verdict! But no verdict will be either honest, or just, or true, unless it at once satisfy the reasonable scruples of the severest judgment, and yet leave undisturbed, and unvexed, the tenderest conscience among you." The Lord Justice Clerk proceeded to sum up the evidence, resuming when the Court opened next morning (the tenth day of trial), and continuing till one o'clock. The jury then retired to consider their verdict, and were absent about half an hour. On returning, their chancellor gave in the following:—"The jury find the panel not guilty of the first charge in the indictment by a majority; of the second charge, not proven, by a majority; and of the third charge, also, not proven, by a majority." The verdict was received with great applause, which the officers of Court attempted in vain to suppress.

July 1.—The Fox screw-steamer, fitted out by Lady Franklin, and commanded by Captain M'Clintock, sails in search of the Franklin Expedition.

2.—The new statutes for the regulation of Oxford Colleges published in the Gazette.

—Sir Henry Lawrence wounded by a shell, which burst in the room occupied by him in the Residency, Lucknow. He lingered in great agony till the morning of the 4th, when this wise ruler and gallant soldier expired.

3.—Ten persons drowned at Shrewsbury, when leaving M. Jullien's musical fête, held on the Island of Poplars. During the rush of spectators to reach the shore at the close of the performance, the bridge of boats gave way, and about 150 were thrown into the river. The majority were speedily rescued by persons who thronged the bank, but those swamped beneath the centre punt, which had been maliciously upset, being unable to extricate themselves, were drowned.

20.—The Transit, Government steamship, ends a long series of disasters by running ashore at Banca. The failure of this and two sister ships, the Urgent and Perseverance, was the subject of frequent discussion in Parliament. The Transit had been selected to convey the House of Lords to the memorable Naval Review at Spithead, in 1855, and, as many anticipated, duly failed. When she now struck she was engaged in conveying troops to China. She left Spithead with 700 on board, on April 7, but on the following night, while anchored near the Needles, swung on to her anchors and knocked a hole in her bottom. This damage was repaired, and she sailed again, on her voyage across the Bay of Biscay, but shipped so much water that she half drowned her passengers in their berths, and put into Corunna in great distress. She lay there some time undergoing repairs and alterations, and then sailed for the East. To-day she put a final close to all speculations as to her seaworthiness by running on a reef in the Straits of Banca. Assistance was sent from Singapore, and the troops and crew were transferred to another vessel without any casualty.

10.—The Bill introduced by Government for admitting Jews into Parliament thrown out on the second reading in the House of Lords, by a majority of 173 to 139; the proxies in the minority numbering 48, and in the majority 64.

— Indian Mutiny. Letters arrive in London this evening with intelligence of the rapid spread of the mutiny in the Bengal provinces. A Trieste despatch, in anticipation of the Overland Mail, brought news from Calcutta to the 7th June, and from Bombay to the 15th. By the latter route there was news from Delhi to the 8th June, when the heights around the city were in possession of the British troops. At the time the mail left, news of the capture of the place was hourly expected.

11.—Cabinet Council called to consider the alarming intelligence received from India. The command of the troops was offered to Sir Colin Campbell, who took his departure next day.

— The Queen lays the foundation stone of the Royal Victoria Patriotic Asylum, to be erected by the Royal Patriotic Fund Commissioners, on Wandsworth Common, for the accommodation of 300 daughters of soldiers, sailors, and marines. From a statement made by the Royal Commissioners, it appeared that the total subscriptions to the Fund amounted to 1,458,000*l.* Of this sum England and Wales contributed 384,990*l.*; Scotland, 149,746*l.*; Ireland, 60,046*l.*; Army, Navy, Dockyards, &c., 12,099*l.*; British Possessions, 315,389*l.*; British residents and others in foreign countries, 30,771*l.* Besides giving immediate relief to about 4,000 widows and 5,000 children, the Commissioners had purchased for 25,000*l.* eighteen nominations to the Wellington College for the education of the sons of military men; for 3,000*l.* five nominations to the Cambridge Asylum for widows of non-commissioned officers and privates; also, eleven presentations to the Naval and Military School at Portsmouth, and thirteen to that of Plymouth. The payment to the widows of non-commissioned officers ranged from 5*s.* to 7*s.* a-week, with 2*s.* for the first, and 1*s.* for every additional child. The widows of colonels and the corresponding ranks, received 66*l.* a year, with 16*l.* for each child; those of ensigns, 27*l.* a-year, and 10*l.* for each child.

13.—Sir Frederick Thesiger opens the great contest for the Earldom of Shrewsbury by addressing the House of Lords on behalf of the claimant, the Right Honourable Henry John Chetwynd.

13.—The freedom of the City of London presented to Prince Frederick William of Prussia. In acknowledging the honour he expressed a hope that the future happiness of the Princess Royal, his affianced bride, might prove equal to his endeavours to secure it, and to the devoted and hearty attachment which he bore to the Queen, her mother.

14.—The Government accept Lord Goderich's motion, "That the experience acquired since the issuing of the Order in Council of 21st May, 1855, is in favour of the adoption of the principle of competition as a condition of entrance to the Civil Service; and that the application of that principle ought to be extended in conformity with the resolution of the House agreed to on the 21st April, 1856."

15.—Indian Mutiny. Massacre of Cawnpore. The mutiny here broke out on the forenoon of 7th of June, and from that day to the 24th an almost incessant fire was kept up on the entrenched camp, where General Wheeler and the whole of the Europeans had congregated. On the last-mentioned day a message was sent by Nana Sahib, chief of Bithoor, offering to allow them all to go to Allahabad in safety, if they would abandon the intrenchment, and give up the treasures and stores in the camp. The proposal was assented to by General Wheeler, and for the two days following the frightened residents in the intrenchment enjoyed comparative quiet to prepare for the journey. "On the 26th," writes Lieutenant Delafosse (one of only four survivors of this treacherous scheme), "a committee of officers went to the river to see that the boats were ready and serviceable; and everything being reported ready, and carriages for the wounded having arrived, we gave over our guns, &c., and marched on the morning of the 27th of June, about seven o'clock. We got down to the river and into the boats without being molested in the least, but no sooner were we in the boats, and had laid down our muskets, and taken off our coats to work easier at the boats, than the cavalry gave the order to fire. Two guns that had been hidden were run out and opened on us immediately, while Sepoys came from all directions and kept up a fire. The men jumped out of the boats, and instead of trying to get the boats loose from their moorings, swam to the first boat they saw loose. Only three boats got safely over to the opposite side of the river, but were met there by two field-pieces, guarded by a number of cavalry and infantry. Before these boats had got a mile down the stream, half our small party were either killed or wounded, and two of our boats had been swamped. We had now only one boat, crowded with wounded, and having on board more than she could carry. The two guns followed us the whole of the day, the infantry firing on us the whole of that night." Those in the boats who were not killed by the fire of the Sepoys, were seized and carried back to Cawnpore, where the men were all shot, and the women carried to a building which had been formerly used as an assembly room, and kept close prisoners. They were not kept long in suspense as to their fate. The Nana having learned on the 15th that the British troops had carried the bridge over the Pandoo Nuddee, and that nothing could stop the irresistible march of Havelock's column, issued, through the Begum, a frightful order to slay the entire company. His instructions were but too faithfully obeyed. The Begum approached the building in which the Europeans were confined, accompanied by five men, each armed with a sabre; two of them appeared to be Hindoo peasants; two were known to be butchers, Mahomedans; and one was dressed in the red uniform of the Maharajah's body-guard. The horrible work commenced by half-a-dozen Sepoys discharging their muskets at random through the windows upon the defenceless victims. The five men armed with sabres were then observed to enter the building quietly, and close the doors. What next took place no one was spared to relate. Shrieks and scuffling were heard at significant intervals, acquainting those outside that the hired executioners were earning their pay. The one in the red uniform was observed to come to the door twice, and obtain a new sabre in exchange for one he handed out hacked and broken. The noise gradually lessened, and at nightfall the executioners could lock the doors and retire from the building, with the feeble moans of a few half-slaughtered women ringing in their ears. Three at least survived till the morning (the 16th), when the doors of the slaughter-house were once more opened, and the naked bodies and dismembered limbs dragged ignominiously across the compound to a dry well situated behind some trees which grew near by. The three (writes Mr. Trevelyan) prayed for the sake of God that an end might be put to their suffering. Their prayer was heard. Their bodies were cast with the others into the well, and the bloody work fitly finished by the slaughter of two fair-haired children, who in some unknown manner had escaped the sword the night before, and were now moving in childish terror about the well. One person was of opinion that the man who threw them in first took the trouble to kill the children—others thought not. An officer in Havelock's corps thus describes the appearance of the place when the avenging army entered the town on the 17th:—"I was directed to the house where all the poor miserable ladies had been murdered. It was alongside the Cawnpore Hotel, where the Nana lived. I never was more horrified. The place was one mass of blood. I am not exaggerating when I tell you, that the soles of my boots were more than covered with the blood of these poor wretched creatures. Portions of their dresses, collars, children's socks, and ladies' round hats, lay about, saturated with blood; and in the sword-cuts on the wooden pillars of the room, long dark hair was carried by the edge of the weapon, and there hung their tresses—a most painful sight. I have often wished since that I had never been there, but sometimes wish that every soldier was taken there, that he might witness the barbarities our poor countrywomen suffered. Their bodies were afterwards dragged out and thrown down a well outside the building, where their limbs were to be seen sticking out in a mass of gory confusion." Nana Sahib did not venture to make a stand at Bithoor, whither he first fled after the massacre, and General Havelock, after occupying Cawnpore, took possession of his palace without firing a shot. Leaving General Neill, who came up from Benares, in charge of Cawnpore, Havelock set out towards Lucknow, dealing out to the rebels as he went along a full measure of stern retribution.

16.—Mr. Roebuck's motion, declaring the authority of the House weakened by the Government entering on a war with Persia without laying papers before members, rejected, after two nights' discussion, by a majority of 352 against 38.

—Died, aged 77, Béranger, national poet of France. The body was honoured with a State funeral next day.

17.—In consequence of the fitting out of a French expedition at Marseilles, Lord Brougham moves an address to her Majesty, praying that she would give no encouragement to the scheme of importing Africans to her own tropical dominions, and would use her influence with her allies to discountenance any such project. Address agreed to.

20.—The exhibition of the eighty-three competitive designs for the Wellington monument to be erected in St. Paul's, thrown open to public inspection in Westminster Hall. The designs shown were generally considered inappropriate and trifling, and none of them worthy to be accepted by the public as a full expression of their feelings towards the late Duke.

—Great excitement in the metropolis, caused by the false announcement, said to be sent through Russian sources, that the whole of the Bombay army had revolted and united itself to the Bengal mutineers.

21.—The contest for the City of Oxford results in Mr. Cardwell polling 1,085 votes against Mr. Thackeray's 1,018.

—As the result of various negotiations and brief debates in the House since the rejection of the Oaths Bill by the Lords, Lord John Russell obtains leave to introduce another bill, permitting members to take the oaths in the form and manner most binding on their conscience.

24.—The opposition to the Divorce Bill having manifested itself by repeated attempts to get it thrown out on points of order, Lord Palmerston intimated to-night—at the close of a long discussion on Mr. Henley's motion, to defer further consideration of it for a month—that in order to carry it among certain other important measures, he proposed to continue the session, if necessary, to September. "I hope," he added, "it may be unnecessary to sit for so long a period, but it is trifling with our duties—it is trifling with the great interests committed to our charge—to say that because it happens now to be the 24th of July we are not to take into consideration a measure so important in itself, so anxiously expected by the country, and which for years has occupied public attention." Mr. Henley's motion was negatived by 217 to 130.

27.—At the Durham Assizes, Robert Baleny, a magistrate of the county, was sentenced to pay a fine of 200*l.* or suffer one year's imprisonment, for having unlawfully and by colour of his office extorted the sum of one pound sterling from two men brought before him on a charge of trespassing upon his lands in pursuit of game.

— Debate in the House of Commons on our recent policy in India raised by Mr. Disraeli's motion for the immediate production of papers connected with the present outbreak. Noticing the trifling importance which had been attached to the mutiny by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, as a mere sudden impulse occasioned by superstitious feeling, and also Lord Dalhousie's statement made at the close of his administration, that the condition of the native soldier had long been such as hardly to admit of improvement,—Mr. Disraeli entered at great length into the character of the treaties we had compelled native princes to enter into, and referred particularly to the circumstances connected with the annexation of Oude. He recommended the issue of a Royal Commission to inquire into Indian grievances, and a Royal Proclamation declaring that the Queen was not a sovereign who would countenance the violation of treaties. To allow of a sufficient force being sent out at once, he recommended the calling out and embodying of the militia. He asked ministers to make a declaration of their Indian policy, to avoid the necessity of again appealing to the country. "If this is not done, I for one will not shrink from responsibility. I will then appeal with confidence to an indignant people, and to a determined Parliament, and I will ask them with united energies to save an endangered empire." Lord John Russell proposed, as an amendment, an address to her Majesty assuring her of support—"One of those dry constitutional platitudes," said Mr. Disraeli in reply, "which in a moment of difficulty the noble lord pulls out of the dusty pigeon-holes of his mind, and shakes in the perplexed face of the baffled House of Commons. He was not a stormy petrel, but the halcyon brooding on the waters, who, when the Government was in any difficulty produced a card—a conciliatory card. It was one of those amendments which nobody can support, and nobody can oppose." The amendment was carried without a division.

30.—Thomas Pooley, a labourer in Liskeard, tried at Bodmin assizes, for writing blasphemous expressions on public places in the neighbourhood where he lived. He was found guilty, and sentenced to imprisonment for one year and nine months. Efforts being afterwards made for Pooley's liberation, on the plea of insanity, Mr. Justice Coleridge wrote to the Home Office:—"There was not the slightest suggestion made to me of his being other than perfectly sane, nor was there anything in his demeanour at the trial, or in the conduct of his defence by himself, which indicated it; nor did I collect it from the manner in which he, as it seemed, habitually committed the offence. But I see no reason whatever why he should not receive a free pardon under the circumstances stated in your letter. Had I been informed of anything which had led me to inquire into his sanity, during the trial, it is probable I might have discovered enough to have led to an acquittal on the ground of insanity, which, on such a charge, I should have been very glad to have arrived at." Pooley was thereafter pardoned. This case acquired some notoriety from a violent attack on Mr. Justice Coleridge's decision by Mr. Buckle in an article in Fraser's Magazine. (See May 21, 1859.)

31.—After a debate, which extended over two nights—Mr. Gladstone making a long speech in opposition—the second reading of the Divorce Bill was carried by a majority of 208 against 97.

August 1.—General Havelock, finding himself not strong enough to advance nearer Lucknow than Unao, where he had defeated the rebels on the 29th, and being besides encumbered with sick and wounded, abandons the idea of relieving the Residency till reinforcements should come up. He therefore fell back on Mungulwar, about six miles from the left or Oude side of the Ganges, opposite Cawnpore. In a communication made a few days afterwards to the commander-in-chief, he said that the enemy was in such force at Lucknow that to encounter him five marches from that position would be to court annihilation. On the 5th, and again on the 11th, he attacked the rebels at Bushertungge, and drove them out of the town with great loss. He then crossed to Cawnpore, and uniting his wearied forces with those of General Neill, made another successful attack on the rebels near Bithoor, on the 17th, being the ninth engagement since the 12th July. The force was now reduced to 700 men in the field, exclusive of detachments which guarded the entrenchments at Cawnpore, and kept open communication with Allahabad. Before deciding to return to Cawnpore a letter was conveyed to the besieged garrison at Lucknow informing them of the advance of troops, and promising relief in five or six days. This welcome intelligence reached the garrison on the twenty-sixth day of the siege, and a messenger was instantly despatched to request that, on the evening of the arrival of the troops at the outskirts of the city, two rockets might be sent up in order that they might take the necessary measures for assisting them while forcing their way in. It was not till the 29th of August, thirty-five days later, that the besieged knew how the relieving force, after performing prodigies of valour, were compelled to turn back and await reinforcements.

1.—Explosion in the Hays Colliery, near Ashton, causing the death of forty workmen.

3.—Lord Panmure introduces a bill, afterwards carried through both Houses, enabling Government to embody the militia without having to call Parliament together.

5.—Fire in James's Court, Edinburgh, destroying, among other interesting relics of the old town, the houses occupied by David Hume, Dr. Blair, and James Boswell. By this occurrence no fewer than 150 poor people were thrown on the charity of the affluent.

— Died, aged 71, the Right Rev. Charles James Blomfield, late Bishop of London.

— The shore end of the Atlantic telegraph cable fixed at Valentia with much ceremony, in the presence of the Earl of Carlisle, Lord Lieutenant. The vessels engaged in the service were the British Agamemnon, 91 guns, and the American frigate Niagara. On the morning of the 11th, when 300 miles had been sunk, Mr. Bright, the chief engineer, found it necessary to go on deck to learn the rate of progress the Niagara was making, and left the care of the break in the hands of one of his subordinates. Shortly after his departure the vessel gave a heavier pitch than usual, and the strain on the drum not having been sufficiently relaxed, the cable snapped. This was fatal to the expedition.

6.—The Emperor and Empress of the French visit the Queen at Osborne. They remained four days, during which the utmost privacy was observed.

— Tried at Paris, the Italians Tibaldi, Bartolotti, and Grilli, charged with being engaged in an attempt to assassinate the Emperor, planned by Mazzini, Ledru-Rollin, Campanella, and Massarenti. The confession of Grilli was principally relied on, supported as it was by the possession of arms, both on the part of himself and his accomplices. That prisoner said he was instructed by Mazzini to carry out this "affair of Paris," as it was termed, by making himself acquainted with the habits of the Emperor, and striking the blow whenever he found a favourable opportunity. Tibaldi was sentenced to transportation, and the two others to 15 years' imprisonment. Mazzini, and the other reputed projectors, were afterwards tried in their absence, and sentenced to transportation.

— In committee on the Divorce Bill, Mr. Drummond moves that the clause relating to the constitution of the Court be struck out, with the view of making the judge of the Court of Probate judge also in matrimonial causes, with an appeal to the Privy Council—suits applying to the County Courts to have appeal only to the Court of Probate. This, he said, would get rid of the objections to the original Court, and provide a cheap remedy to the poorer classes. Rejected by 139 to 80.

7.—James Spollen tried at Dublin for the murder of Mr. Little, the railway cashier, at the Broadstone station, on the 13th Nov. last. The prisoner was employed at the station, and had access to the different apartments. It was established in evidence—partly by his own children—that he was close to the cashier's room on the night in question; that he was seen to carry away from it some round thing wrapped in a bag; that he secreted this in the top of a chimney in the grease house; that the stolen money was found there, wrapped in a piece of calico taken off one of his children's bonnets; and that a razor discovered by the police, with which the wounds might have been inflicted, was the prisoner's property. Evidence of a secondary nature was also adduced to show that Mrs. Spollen knew of her husband's guilt, but was not permitted to hold intercourse with any one prior to her death, which took place about a week before his apprehension. Spollen's own declarations accounting for his movements that night, agreed neither with each other nor with the evidence. After a trial extending over six days, the jury, to the amazement of many in court, brought in a verdict of Not guilty. Spollen afterwards came before the public as a lecturer on the mysterious murder, but public indignation against him was so strong that he was compelled to withdraw from the platform.

— In committee on the Divorce Bill, Mr. Gladstone made an elaborate speech against Clause 25, providing that on adultery of wife or incest of husband, petitions for dissolution of marriages might be presented. "You are going," he said, "to give the remedy of divorce to women in cases where the husband is guilty of adultery, provided that it be combined with cruelty, such as would procure an ecclesiastical divorce in an ecclesiastical court. Now, what is the meaning of cruelty? I have made some inquiries on this matter, and I understand that there is no doubt whatever among the highest ecclesiastical authorities, in accordance with the dictum of Lord Stowell, that cruelty for which divorce is to be given in those courts must import danger to life, limb, or health, or a reasonable apprehension of such danger. Is that the only kind of cruelty which prevails in civilized society? Is that the only kind of cruelty which finds its way into the hearts of educated and refined women? Is not the cruelty of insult just as gross, just as wicked, just as abominable, as the cruelty of mere force? and is not that a very common kind of case? Is it not too notorious that there exists a multitude of instances in which no remedy has been sought for, or none granted, by our law—instances in which the adulteries of the husband have not only been occasional, but continuous—not only continuous, but open—not only open, but committed under his very roof, and in connexion with persons placed in the closest relations with the wife? And is not the insult inflicted in these cases one which sends the iron into the soul as deeply, and far more sharply, than any material instrument can send it into the body? On what principle, then, is it that you give a remedy to the wife in a case of bodily cruelty on the part of the husband, while, where the cruelty is directed to the soul, though this may inflict tenfold greater torture, you declare there shall be no remedy at all? On a division, the clause, as originally proposed, was carried by 125 to 65.

10.—The vacancy in the representation of Birmingham, caused by the death of Mr. Muntz, filled up by the election of Mr. John Bright, in his absence.

11.—Mr. Sullivan, the British Minister at Lima, shot in his own house by an unknown assassin, who succeeded in making his escape.

12.—Colonel Inglis writes to General Havelock from the beleaguered fortress of Lucknow:—"It is quite impossible, with my weak and shattered force, that I can leave my defences. You must bear in mind how I am hampered, that I have upwards of 120 sick and wounded, and at least 220 women, and about 230 children, and no carriage of any description, besides sacrificing 23 lacs of treasure, and about 30 guns of all sorts. In consequence of the news received, I shall put this force on half rations. Our provisions will last us then till about the 10th of September. If you hope to save this force, no time must be lost in pushing forward. We are daily being attacked by the enemy, who are within a few yards of our defences. Their mines have already weakened our post, and I have every reason to believe they are carrying on others. Their 18-pounders are within 150 yards of some of our batteries, and from their position, and our inability to form working parties, we cannot reply to them, and, therefore, the damage is very great. My strength now in Europeans is 350, and 300 natives, and the men dreadfully harassed: owing to part of the Residency having been brought down by round shot, many are without shelter. If our native force, who are losing confidence, leave us, I do not know how the defences are to be manned." This letter reached General Havelock at Cawnpore on the 23rd.

13.—The calm summer weather was, after a long continuance, rudely put an end to by a succession of violent and destructive thunderstorms. They came sweeping from the south-west, and spread their ravages principally over the central and south-eastern districts of England.

14.—The Louvre, commenced in 1541 by Francis I., inaugurated with great ceremony by the Emperor of the French.

14.—Sir Colin Campbell, the newly appointed commander-in-chief of the Indian army, arrives at Calcutta.

20.—Captain Henry Rogers, of the British ship Martha Jane, the mate Miles, and second mate Seymour, tried at Liverpool Assizes for the murder of Andrew Rose, a seaman shipped at Barbadoes, between the 11th May and the 5th June. The cruelties to which Rose had been subjected by the ship's officers were of the most cruel and revolting description—beating him with rods, hanging him with ropes, starving him in a barrel over the ship's side, baiting him with dogs, and finally thrusting his own excrement down his throat. When death relieved the wretched sufferer, he was such a mass of sores that none of the crew would touch him, but dragged the body along the deck with ropes and threw it overboard. These facts were fully proved in all their horrible details by the crew; and a verdict of Guilty was returned against all the prisoners. The punishment of the first and second mate was subsequently commuted to transportation for life, but Captain Rogers was executed at Liverpool, on the 11th September, in the presence of a crowd of people calculated at 50,000.

— Wreck of the clipper ship Dunbar off Sydney Head. In a night of unusual darkness, with heavy squalls, Captain Green appeared to be unable to make out his exact position, and in bearing up, as he thought, for the harbour, the vessel ran on to the rocks under the Head Light, and went to pieces almost instantly. Of the passengers and crew, numbering in all 122, only one was saved, this solitary survivor being thrown upon the ledge of a rock, where he contrived to maintain his footing for thirty hours; the Sydney pilots by that time were made aware of the wreck, and drew him up with a rope to the summit of the rock, a distance of 200 feet.

— The Divorce Bill read a third time in the House of Commons, and taken up to the Lords, where Lord Redesdale at once moved "That the Commons' amendments be discussed that day six months." It was found that this motion could not be put in the absence of the ordinary notice, and the discussion of the amended clauses was proceeded with and agreed to, with trifling exceptions, the Bill being finally passed into law by the Commons on the 25th.

21.—News arrives that Delhi had not been taken; that General Barnard and Sir H. Lawrence were dead; that the whole of the troops in Oude had mutinied; and that the rumours regarding the massacre of Europeans at Cawnpore had greatly understated the calamity. The intelligence caused the most intense excitement. The funds, however, remained unaffected, at 90¼ to 90¾. The feeling of horror and indignation was heightened to a most painful degree of intensity by the Times' private despatch five days later:—"Sir Hugh Wheeler has been killed at Cawnpore. The garrison, pressed by famine, surrendered the place to Nana Sahib, by whom, in violation of his solemn promise, all were massacred." (See July 15, 1857.)

23.—A series of riots between Protestants and Roman Catholics commence at Belfast, which leads the Lord Lieutenant to place the town under the operation of the Crime and Outrage Act. The most prominent zealot appeared to be Hanna, a Protestant preacher, who, in the course of the disturbances, issued a violent address to his followers, announcing his intention to persevere "in the vindication of their blood-bought and cherished rights." The assaults mostly took place in the evening, and each party being plentifully provided with guns, the firing was frequent and serious. The military and constabulary were on active duty for about a fortnight endeavouring to suppress the feud. A Commission was appointed by Government to inquire into the cause and extent of the disturbance, as well as to suggest measures to prevent a repetition.

25.—Meeting at the Mansion House to organize an Indian Relief Fund. By next night's post the Lord Mayor was able to send out 20,000 rupees in aid of the suffering soldiers, women, and children. The Queen, with Prince Albert and the Duchess of Kent, subscribed 1,400*l.*, the French Ambassador 1,000*l.*, and the Sultan, 1,000*l.* The Indian Relief Fund ultimately reached a very large sum, England and Wales subscribing 285,000*l.*, Scotland, 10,276*l.*, and Ireland, 22,696*l.* Up to February 1858 there was received a total of 342,929*l.* There had been then sent to Calcutta, 41,049*l.*, Bombay, 15,428*l.*, Agra, 10,356*l.*, Oude, 5,178*l.*, Delhi, 5,344*l.*, Lahore, 6,000*l.*, and the Lawrence Asylum, 2,000*l.* About 8,000*l.* was granted to sufferers in this country.

28.—Parliament prorogued by Commission. The Royal Speech referred to the present peaceable state of Europe, the delay in fulfilling the stipulations of the Treaty of Paris, the barbarities inflicted on her Majesty's subjects in India, the redemption of the Sound dues, and to various of the Acts passed during the session. The House of Commons this session sat 116 days, the average duration of each sitting being over seven hours.

September 2.—The Glasgow Polytechnic Institution destroyed by fire, Watt's first steam-engine being among the curiosities destroyed.

8.—The Evangelical Alliance commences its sittings at Berlin. The members visited the King on the 11th by invitation, when he expressed a hope that the "period of their intercourse might be as that of the disciples after the first day of Pentecost."

10.—The Rt. Hon. T. B. Macaulay gazetted Baron Macaulay, of Rothley, in the county of Leicester: "an honour," said the Times, "which belongs peculiarly to the man, and which is a fitting, if not an adequate, return for a life spent (342) in the public service, and devoted to literary labour of the most dignified order."

12.—The steamship Central America foundered during a gale in the Gulf of Mexico, carrying with her between 400 and 500 persons, and specie to the value of 2,500,000 dollars. The vessel got disabled two days before, and, though heroic attempts were made by the officers, and indeed by all on board, to get her once more head on, she was the most of this day drifting helplessly about the Gulf. The Marine—herself greatly damaged—sighted the sinking ship, and, with the consent of all on board—many of them rough Californian miners—managed to take off the women and children. When the last boat had gone, a terrific sea broke over the steamer, and she plunged and sank with all on board. Of these only a few survivors were picked up, three of them being found in a most miserable condition on a feeble raft 600 miles from the scene of the catastrophe.

16.—General Sir James Outram joins Havelock with reinforcements at Cawnpore. In gratitude, he said, for the admiration of the brilliant deeds of arms achieved by General Havelock and his gallant troops, he would waive his own rank and accompany the force to Lucknow in his civil capacity, as Chief Commissioner of Oude, tendering his military services as a volunteer. The march commenced on the 19th, the entire relieving force consisting of two Infantry and one Artillery Brigades, amounting altogether to about 2,500 men and 17 guns. They came upon the enemy in position at Mungulwar, and after an obstinate conflict of four hours, completely routed them, and captured four guns. The next encounter was at Alumbagh, on the 24th, where our troops were also successful.

18.—Antonio de Salvi placed at the bar of the Central Criminal Court for the murder of Robert Henderson Robertson, by stabbing him in the neck with a small knife, during an interview in the Queen's Prison relative to the settlement of a debt due to the prisoner. He had previously been tried and sentenced to fifteen years' penal servitude for wounding with intent to do grievous bodily harm; but as Robertson died the day after the trial, De Salvi was now arraigned on the capital charge. He first pleaded not guilty, but afterwards substituted a plea of autrefois acquit, on the ground that, as the jury at his former trial had acquitted him of the intent to murder, he could not be tried again on an indictment which involved the same intent. The case was adjourned to the next sitting of the Court on the 30th October, when the judges overruled the plea on the ground that it only applied when the second charge was entirely identical with the former one. De Salvi was found guilty of manslaughter, and sentenced to fifteen years' penal servitude, the time to be reckoned from the date of the second conviction.

20.—Capture of Delhi. The besieging force, composed almost exclusively of such troops as could be collected in the Punjaub and North-west, received the long looked-for siege-train from Meerut on the 4th. No time was lost in arming our batteries, and in order to overcome the fire from the walls in front of the intended attack, fifty-four siege guns were placed in position in different batteries. Fire was opened on the 11th; two days afterwards the Cashmere Gate was blown up, the feat being accomplished by a handful of brave men in the face of what seemed certain annihilation. During the next few days a determined opposition was kept up in the city, and our troops were able only slowly to make good their progress; but on the morning of this day they got possession of the Lahore Gate, and then gradually advanced upon the other bastions and gates, until the whole of the external defences of Delhi were in our hands. The King fled from the palace, and nearly the whole of the rebels rushed in confusion out of the city, across the bridge of boats into the Doab, abandoning their camp-property, many of their sick and wounded, and the greater part of their field-artillery. General Wilson established his head-quarters in the palace, about noon. The old King was captured next day, and two of his sons shot, by Lieutenant Hodson.

22.—Died, aged 53, Daniel Manin, Italian patriot.

24.—The Great Northern express-train from Manchester to London runs off the rails on the viaduct crossing the Newark and Tuxford road. Five passengers killed.

— A Royal Proclamation issued commanding a solemn fast on the 7th day of October, in consideration of "the grievous mutiny and disturbances which have broken out in India."

25.—General Havelock relieves the garrison at Lucknow, after being besieged by the rebel Sepoys for eighty-seven days. The fighting during the day was so severe that at nightfall Sir James Outram proposed to halt till morning, within the courts of the Mehal. "But," writes General Havelock, "I esteemed it to be of such importance to let the beleaguered garrison know that succour was at hand, that with his ultimate sanction I directed the main body of the 78th Highlanders, and the Regiment of Ferozapore, to advance. This column rushed on with a desperate gallantry, led by Sir James Outram and myself, and Lieuts. Hudson and Hargood of my staff, through streets of flat-roofed loop-holed houses, from which a perpetual fire was kept up, and, overcoming every obstacle, established itself within the enclosure of the Residency. The joy of the garrison may be more easily conceived than described; but it was not till the next evening that the whole of my troops, guns, tumbrils, and sick and wounded, continually exposed to the attacks of the enemy, could be brought step by step within this enceinte and the adjacent palace of the Fureed Buksh. To form an adequate idea of the obstacles overcome, reference must be made to the events that are known to have occurred at Buenos Ayres and Saragossa. Our advance was through streets of houses such as I have described, and thus each forming a separate fortress. I am filled with surprise at the success of the operation, which demanded the efforts of 10,000 good troops. The advantage gained has cost us dear. The killed, wounded, and missing—the latter being wounded soldiers, who, I much fear, some or all, have fallen into the hands of a merciless foe—amounted, up to the evening of the 26th, to 535 officers and men." Amongst those who were killed was General Neill, shot dead by a bullet, than whom no better or braver soldier fell in India this year. Although the beleaguered garrison at the Residency was thus nominally relieved, it was impossible to extricate the helpless mass of women and children, and non-combatants, from their perilous position by attempting to march back upon Cawnpore. The Generals, therefore, determined to remain at Lucknow, strengthening the garrison by the troops they had brought, and to wait until Sir Colin Campbell, the new commander-in-chief, should come up and secure their safety. (See Nov. 17, 1857.)

25.—Interview at Stuttgart between the Emperors of France and Russia.

30.—William Reid, late teller, and Thomas Gentles, accountant, in the Commercial Bank at Falkirk, sentenced to eighteen months' imprisonment, for aiding Henry Salmon, manager, in schemes for appropriating the money of the bank to his own use. When examining the books in May last, the inspector discovered a deficiency of between 25,000*l.* and 30,000*l.*; Salmon then absconded, and committed suicide by hanging himself in a stable at Conway.

— Died at Paris, aged 59, M. Auguste Comte, French metaphysician and philosopher, founder of the Positive School.

— Doncaster.—The St. Leger Stakes won by Mr. John Scott's Impérieuse.

October 1.—Interview at Weimar between the Emperors of Russia and Austria.

2.—Discovery of the great tea frauds perpetrated in Belfast by the person trading under the name of John James Moore and Co. The bonded warehouse where Moore stored the tea consigned to him adjoined his own premises, and when the outer gate of the latter was shut the warehouse was enclosed from observation. To the back of this warehouse Moore had a false key, and, when the business of the day was over and the gate shut, his habit was to enter with his assistants, remove what chests suited him, and replace them by his own old chests filled with bricks or turf to the marked weight. The scheme, known to customers as well as assistants, was in operation for about twelve months, and tea valued at from 10,000*l.* to 12,000*l.* had been removed. The proceedings of the authorities were so dilatory that Moore succeeded in making his escape.

7.—The national fast and humiliation appointed for this day was observed with general and deep solemnity. In the Crystal Palace, a sermon was preached to an immense assembly by the Rev. Mr. Spurgeon.

9.—Discovery of human remains on one of the abutments of Waterloo-bridge. In the grey of the early morning two lads rowing up the river discovered a carpet bag locked and corded, with a considerable portion of the cord hanging down into the water. The boys carried off what they believed to be a prize, but when the bag was opened it was found to contain the mutilated fragments of a human body. Twenty pieces of what had recently been a living creature were exposed to view. Limbs had been sawn into bits, flesh hacked from the bones, the trunk was disembowelled, and the head wanting. A quantity of clothing, bloody and pierced as if with a dagger, was also in the bag, but no marks left on them by which they could be identified. The remains were removed to Bow-street Police-station, and a minute investigation made. It was at first thought that the whole affair was a joke on the part of some medical students, but the reports of Mr. Poynter, the divisional surgeon, and Professor Taylor, upset this hypothesis. The conclusions of the latter were as follows:—“1. The remains are those of a person of the male sex, of adult age, and in stature of at least 5 feet 9 inches. That they present no physiological or pathological peculiarities by which they can be identified. The only fact observable under this head is, that the portions of skin remaining are thickly covered with dark hairs on the wrist and right knee, and that the deceased was therefore probably a dark hairy man; 2. That the remains present no mark of disease, or of violent injury inflicted during life, with the exception of one stab in the space between the third and fourth ribs on the left side of the chest. This stab was in a situation to penetrate the heart and to cause death. It presents the character of a stab inflicted on a person either living or recently dead; 3. That the remains have not been dissected or used for the purposes of anatomy. All those parts which are useful to the anatomist have been roughly severed and destroyed by a person or persons quite ignorant of the anatomical relations of parts. They have been cut and sawn before the rigidity of death had ceased, i.e. in from eighteen to twenty-four hours after death, and in this state have been partially boiled and subsequently salted. The body of the deceased has not been laid out or attended like that of a person dying from natural causes, which body might be lawfully used for anatomical purposes; 4. That the person of whose body these remains are a part may have been dead for a period of three or four weeks prior to the date at which they were examined by me—namely, on the 21st of October.” With regard to the other contents of the bag, he thought that the person who wore the clothes must have been subjected to great violence; that blood flowed from his body while he was alive; that his corpse had become rigid and the limbs contracted before the clothes were removed; and that it was probable the clothes were those of the man under examination.

12.—The anxiously-expected telegram, in anticipation of the Overland Mail, published this morning, announces that “The safety of the garrison of Lucknow might be looked upon as perfectly secured.”

—The first meeting of a new body calling itself the Social Science Association, held in Birmingham, under the presidency of Lord Brougham.

17.—Exhibition of Art Treasures at Manchester closed. The entire number of visitors was 1,335,000, and the receipts 100,000*l.* The expenditure was 4,000*l.* over the income, but against the deficiency there was the Exhibition building.

24.—Accident to the bell “Big Ben” of Westminster. On ringing, as was customary, for a short time at one o'clock on Saturdays, it was noticed that the tone was not the old familiar E, but a cracked uncertain sound. On examining minutely, with a lighted candle, a crack was noticed to extend from the rim about half-way up the side. The bell, since its arrival, had been kept in a temporary position, and when the accident occurred every preparation was completed for hoisting it to its proper lofty eminence in the Clock Tower.

26.—News received at the Foreign Office of the fall of Delhi. The Funds advanced $\frac{1}{4}$; but outward commercial intelligence from New York was adverse to any activity in the money market.

27.—Tried at the Central Criminal Court, Thomas Diamond Evans, formerly a clerk in the Submarine Telegraph Company, and “Captain” Henry Thorne, on the charge of conspiring to obtain money from the Hon. F. W. Cadogan, Deputy-Chairman of the Company, by threatening to send to the Times, for publication, a letter accusing him of tampering with the telegraphic messages for the private benefit of himself or friends. The prisoners pleaded a justification, and sought to show that the accusation against Mr. Cadogan was well-founded. In examination the latter admitted that he was frequently in the instrument-room, and had looked at messages on various occasions, but never used them to any private advantage. He had on one occasion, and one only, given precedence to a message sent by Baron Rothschild. The jury returned a verdict of Guilty upon the counts charging the conspiracy and attempt to extort, and the Recorder passed a sentence of twelve months’ imprisonment upon each of the prisoners.

28.—Lord Brougham entertained at a banquet, in Penrith, “to commemorate his eminent services in the cause of educational and social improvement.”

29.—A tiger, in the course of conveyance from the London Docks to the establishment of Mr. Jamrach, a dealer in animals, bursts out of the van and attacks a boy in the street. One of the attendants overpowered the brute with a crowbar, and got it back to the cage. The boy recovered, and brought an action against the owner, his counsel pleading in aggravation that the tiger was then being exhibited as the one "that ate the boy in the Minorities."

— The ancient church of St. Deniol, Harwarden, destroyed by fire, supposed to be the work of an incendiary.

November 1.—At Kadjwa, 24 miles distant from Futtehpore, the English naval brigade under Captain Peel, along with a small military force under Captain Powell, defeats a large force of rebel Sepoys.

3.—First attempt to launch the Leviathan from the yard of Mr. Scott Russell at Millwall. At half-past one o'clock the daughter of the Chairman of the Company, Miss Hope, appeared, and, dashing a bottle of wine on the bows, bade the Leviathan God speed, amid the cheers of thousands assembled about the works and on the river. The huge mass at first showing no signs of moving, powerful rams were applied, which pushed her forward three or four feet; but even they latterly failed to have any effect, and the launch was not completed till months had elapsed, and the aid of almost every appliance of mechanical art tested. Some days she was moved a few inches with comparatively little strain, and on others she remained immovable with all that could be applied. On one occasion a hydraulic ram gave way at a pressure of 12,000 lbs. to the square inch. When she had been brought to a point where she sat in from eight to ten feet at high water, it was thought advisable to suspend further operations till the high tides of January could materially assist the final effort.

5.—The Non-Regent House, Cambridge, by a majority of 73 to 20, reject the proposal of the Council to abolish the Heresy Board.

6.—Massacre of European missionaries at Terra del Fuego. The natives rise upon them during divine service, and having put them to death with clubs, take possession of the mission ship, the Allen Gardiner, which had brought the party from the Falkland Isles. The cook was the only one who escaped, and he was kept and treated with kindness by the savages till a ship appeared in the offing, when he was sent aboard.

7.—Freedom of the City of London presented to the Duke of Cambridge. He was afterwards entertained by the Lord Mayor in the Mansion House.

9.—Sir Colin Campbell, who had hurried up from Calcutta, as soon as the work of organization was completed, starts from Cawnpore with reinforcements to effect the release of the Lucknow garrison. By a rapid march he joined the troops under General

Hope Grant about six miles from the Alumbagh on the same day. He waited there for reinforcements until the 12th, when he advanced; and, after a short skirmish with a body of rebels who attacked his vanguard, and the capture of their guns, he reached the Alumbagh in the evening, and pitched his camp close to the place.

9.—Failure of the Western Bank of Scotland. This, the first of a series of commercial disasters of unusual magnitude, was reported, in the first instance, to be owing to the disarrangements of American commerce, and the consequent absence of the usual remittances from that country. Further and exact inquiry showed that the Bank had for years been in an insolvent condition, owing to the immense advances made by the late manager to speculating firms whose assets were of a merely nominal character. On the 24th June, when the last annual report was issued, the profits for the preceding year were represented to be 145,826*l.* 5*s.* 6*d.*, and a dividend of 9 per cent. was paid, absorbing 135,000*l.*; the balance, 10,826*l.* 5*s.* 6*d.*, was carried to the "rest," then put down at 226,776*l.* 3*s.* 3*d.* The bank was experiencing serious difficulties all through the summer and autumn. On the 17th October, the Directors, "having taken into consideration the alarming financial position of the Bank, consequent on the mismanagement of their affairs by Mr. Taylor, the late manager, deputed James Dunlop, Esq., one of their members, to go to Edinburgh, and ask assistance from the Bank of Scotland in the present emergency, explaining to Mr. Blair, the treasurer, at the same time, the state of the Western Bank." The required assistance was refused, except to a limited extent, and on the condition that the business of the bank was wound up. Various other proposals were made by the Western directorate, from time to time, during the next three weeks, without resulting in anything; and the final request for 1,000,000*l.*, made on the 6th November, was of so speculative a character that the Edinburgh banks were unanimously of opinion that it could not be entertained. The Western Bank, unwilling to succumb, managed to tide on till Monday the 9th, when a telegraphic message from Edinburgh informing the Directors that the banks there adhered to their original resolution, led to a closing of the doors at two o'clock. The occurrence caused the wildest excitement in the city, and next day, when the other banks opened, a "run" was commenced upon them, which threatened to end in the most disastrous results. By the timely arrival of gold from London they were all able to satisfy the demands upon them, with the exception of the City of Glasgow, which shut its doors on the 11th, and for a few weeks suspended payment. Several attempts were made and meetings held, both by shareholders and depositors, for the purpose of resuscitating the Western Bank Company, but their intentions received a sudden check when, on the 17th December, a committee of inquiry made public the alarming statement, that the estimated loss on the whole operations of the Bank amounted to 2,020,584*l.* The total liabilities amounted to 8,911,932*l.*

10.—Serious fluctuation in the Funds. On the 4th general dullness prevailed, Consols opening at 89 $\frac{3}{4}$ to $\frac{3}{8}$; a struggle was made against the depression, but the rise on the following day in the rates of discount to 9 per cent. brought them down to 87 $\frac{3}{4}$, the lowest point reached during the week. A recovery, however, immediately commenced, and they closed on the 7th at 88 $\frac{3}{4}$ to $\frac{3}{8}$. The further rise in the rate of discount and the Glasgow failures caused a temporary fall of $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on the 9th, but to-day the public becoming large buyers, an absolute buoyancy set in, and having touched 89 $\frac{1}{4}$ they closed at 89 for money. On the 11th, the announcement of the fall of the house of Sandeman, and other great commercial disasters, brought Consols down to 88 $\frac{3}{4}$.

— The Master of the Rolls gives judgment in the case of Swinfen v. Swinfen, in which the question raised was how far the principal to a suit could be bound by a compromise entered into without plaintiff's consent by her counsel, with or without the tacit, implied, or expressed authority of her attorney. His Honour was of opinion, that no case had been made out for specific performance of the compromise entered into by Sir Frederick Thesiger, but the case must be sent back to a law court to try the issue, devisavit vel non.

11.—Burning of the transport ship Sarah Sands, about 400 miles off the Mauritius. She had on board upwards of 300 rank and file of the 54th Regiment. When the fire was first observed in the after-hold among the Government stores, every effort was made to reach its seat, but without avail; the most that could be done to save the vessel from instant destruction was to clear out the magazine in the same quarter of the vessel. All was got out except two barrels of powder, which in exploding blew away the port quarter of the ship, and spread the flames from the main rigging to the stern. The bulk-head fortunately withstood the shock, and enabled the brave people crowded forward to play the water with such effect on the burning mass as to prevent it spreading beyond midships. Rafts were prepared, and the boats launched with the utmost order by the crew, while the soldiers mustered on deck to be told off for special duties with as much order as if on the parade ground. After the fire had been raging for twenty-four hours, it showed signs of abatement, and was completely extinguished by daylight next morning. The wind getting up, a battle now commenced with the waves to keep the ship afloat, by passing hawsers under her bottom, and stopping up the yawning hole in the port quarter with sails and blankets. The desperate fight for life was continued without intermission till the evening of the 13th, when the sea moderated a little, and permitted the vessel to be trimmed to the wind. After eight days' sail, under the unceasing directions of the commander, Captain Castle, the wreck reached the Mauritius without the loss of a single life.

12.—In the metropolis, and throughout the large seats of manufacturing industry, the commercial pressure is so severe as to lead Government to suspend, for a time, the operation of the Bank Charter Act of 1844. The failure of banking companies and private firms was of a magnitude hitherto unheard of. The estimated liabilities of a few of the more important were:—Liverpool Borough Bank, 5,000,000*l.*; Northumberland and Durham, 3,000,000*l.*; Wolverhampton, 1,000,000*l.*; Sanderson, Sandeman, and Co., 5,298,997*l.*; Dennistone and Co., 2,143,701*l.* From the statement of affairs made by 146 firms and 5 banks, the total liabilities might be set down at 41,427,569*l.*, and the deficiency at 7,754,900*l.* On the 8th of October, the bank rate of discount stood at 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.; it was then raised to 6. On the 12th, to 7; the funds then falling 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. On the 19th, discount was 8 per cent.; and on the 4th of November it advanced to the unprecedented rate of 9 per cent. On the 11th, the bullion in the Bank had diminished to 7,171,000*l.*, while the notes in circulation, and the liabilities of the Bank on private deposits and securities, amounted to 60,000,000*l.* In these threatening circumstances the following letter was to-day forwarded to the Governor and Deputy-Governor of the Bank of England:—“Her Majesty's Government have observed, with great concern, the serious consequences which have ensued from the failure of several joint-stock banks in England and Scotland, as well as several large mercantile houses, chiefly connected with the American trade. The discredit and distrust which have resulted from these events, and the withdrawal of a large amount of the paper circulation authorized by the existing Bank Acts, appear to her Majesty's Government to render it necessary for them to inform the Bank of England that if they should be unable, in the present emergency, to meet the demands for discounts and advances on approved securities, without exceeding the limits of their circulation prescribed by the Act of 1844, the Government will be prepared to propose to Parliament, upon its meeting, a bill of indemnity for any excess so issued. In order to prevent this temporary relaxation of the law being extended beyond the actual necessities of the occasion, her Majesty's Government are of opinion that the bank terms of discount should not be reduced below their present rate. Her Majesty's Government reserves for future consideration the appropriation of any profits which may arise upon issues in excess of the statutory amount. Her Majesty's Government are fully impressed with the importance of maintaining the letter of the law, even in a time of considerable mercantile difficulty; but they believe that, for the removal of apprehensions which have checked the course of monetary transactions, such a measure as is now contemplated has become necessary, and they rely upon the discretion and prudence of the Directors for confining its operations within the strict limits of the exigencies of the case. (Signed) PALMERSTON. G. C. LEWIS." The permission given in terms of this letter was attended with the most beneficial results. The Issue Department issued to the Banking Department 2,000,000*l.* in excess of the statutable amount; but the latter issued to the public only 928,000*l.* in excess, the largest excess being issued the day after the permission was granted. On the 1st of December, the over-issue was entirely returned, there being 2,000,000*l.* of reserve in the Banking Department. Public confidence was further restored by the announcement that Parliament would be called together on an early day, to consider the alarming financial condition of the country.

16.—The three Siamese Ambassadors received at Windsor Castle by her Majesty. The peculiar mode of approaching Majesty enjoined by Siamese etiquette was adopted on this occasion by the Ambassadors. They approached the Royal Throne in a position between crouching and crawling, and pushed their presents before them as they advanced.

17.—Relief of Lucknow. Early on the morning of the 15th the British advanced to attack the Secunderbagh, north of the canal. On the head of the column marching up the lane to the left, fire was opened by the rebels, and a sharp fight commenced on both sides, lasting for about an hour and a half. It was then determined to carry the place by storm, through a small breach which had been made. "This," writes the Commander-in-chief, "was done in the most brilliant manner by the remainder of the Highlanders, with the 53d and the 4th Punjab infantry, supported by a battalion of detachments under Major Barnston. There never was a bolder feat of arms, and the loss inflicted on the enemy, after the entrance of the Secunderbagh was effected, was immense. More than 2,000 of the enemy were afterwards carried out. The officers who led those troops were Lieutenant-Colonel L. Hay, H.M.'s 93d Highlanders; Lieutenant-Colonel Gordon, H.M.'s 93d Highlanders; Captain Walton, H.M.'s 53d Foot; Lieutenant Paul, 4th Punjab Infantry (since dead); and Major Barnston, I.I.M.'s 90th Foot. Captain Peel's Royal Naval Siege Train then went to the front, and advanced towards the Shah Nujjeef, together with the field battalion and some mortars, the village to the left having been cleared by Brigadier Hope and Lieutenant-Colonel Gordon. The Shah Nujjeef is a domed mosque with a garden, of which the most had been made by the enemy. The wall of the enclosure of the mosque was loopholed with great care. The entrance to it had been covered by a regular work in masonry, and the top of the building was crowned with a parapet. From this, and from the defences in the garden, an unceasing fire of musketry was kept up from the commencement of the attack. This position was defended with great resolution against a heavy cannonade for three hours. It was then stormed in the boldest manner by the 93d Highlanders, under Brigadier Hope, supported by a battalion of detachments under Major Barnston—who was, I regret to say, severely wounded; Captain Peel leading up his heavy guns with extraordinary gallantry within a few yards of the building to batter the massive stone walls. The withering fire of the Highlanders effectually covered the Naval Brigade from great loss, but it was an action almost unexampled in war. Captain Peel behaved very much as if he had been laying the Shannon alongside an enemy's frigate. This brought the day's operations to a close." Next day a building called the Mess-house, which was of considerable size, and defended by a ditch and loopholed mud wall, was taken by storm; "and then," says the Commander-in-chief, "the troops pressed forward with great vigour, and lined the wall separating the Mess-house from the Motee Mahal, which consists of a wide enclosure and many buildings. The enemy here made a last stand, which was overcome after an hour, openings having been broken in the wall, through which the troops poured, with a body of Sappers, and accomplished our communications with the Residency. I had the inexpressible satisfaction, shortly afterwards, of greeting Sir James Outram and Sir Henry Havelock, who came out to meet me before the action was at an end. The relief of the besieged garrison had been accomplished." While the Commander-in-chief was thus winning his way to the Residency, by his own admirable strategy and the resistless gallantry of his troops, General Havelock and the garrison pent up within its walls were not idle. Mines were driven under the outer wall of the garden in advance of the palace, which had been already breached in several places by the rebels; and also under some buildings in the vicinity; and as soon as it became known that Sir Colin Campbell was attacking the Secunderbagh these mines were exploded. Two powerful batteries, which had been erected in the enclosure, masked by the outer wall, were then brought into play, and poured shot and shell into the palace. At last the advance sounded. "It was impossible," wrote General Havelock, "to describe the enthusiasm with which the signal was received by the troops. Pent up in inaction for upwards of six weeks, and subjected to constant attacks, they felt that the hour of retribution and glorious exertion had returned. Their cheers echoed through the courts of the palace responsive to the bugle sound, and on they rushed to assured victory. The enemy could nowhere withstand them. In a few minutes the whole of the buildings were in our possession, and have since been armed with cannon and steadily held against all attack." Sir Colin Campbell's great object now was to effect the removal of the non-combatants from the Residency, including the sick and wounded, without exposing them to the fire of the enemy. For this purpose he formed a line of posts on the left rear of his position, which were maintained unbroken, notwithstanding many attacks and a vigorous fire kept up by the rebels. He thus describes the masterly evolutions that followed: "Upon the 20th, fire was opened on the Kaiserbagh, which gradually increased in importance till it assumed the character of regular breaching and bombardment. The Kaiserbagh was breached in three places by Captain Peel, R. N., and I have been told that the enemy suffered much loss within its precincts. Having thus led the enemy to believe that immediate assault was contemplated, orders were issued for the retreat of the garrison through the lines of our piquets at midnight on the 22d. The ladies and families, the wounded, the treasure, the guns it was thought worth while to keep, the ordnance stores, the grain still possessed by the commissary of the garrison, and the state prisoners, had all been previously removed. Sir James Outram had received orders to burst the guns which it was thought undesirable to take away; and he was finally directed silently to evacuate the Residency of Lucknow at the hour indicated. The dispositions to cover their retreat and to resist the enemy, should he pursue, were ably carried out by Brigadier Hon. A. Hope; but I am happy to say the enemy was completely deceived, and did not attempt to follow. On the contrary, he began firing on our old positions, many hours after we had left them. The movement of retreat was admirably executed, and was a perfect lesson in such combinations. Each exterior line came gradually retiring through its supports, till at length nothing remained but the last line of infantry and guns, with which I was myself to crush the enemy, if he had dared to follow up the piquets. The only line of retreat lay through a long and tortuous lane, and all these precautions were absolutely necessary to ensure the safety of the force. It was my endeavour that nothing should be left to chance, and the conduct of the officers in exactly carrying out their instructions was beyond all praise. During all these operations, from the 16th inst., the remnant of Brigadier Greathead's brigade closed in the rear, and now again formed the rear-guard as we retired to the Dilkoosha." The Dilkoosha was reached at 4 A.M. on the 23d inst. by the whole force.

20.—Came on, in the Court of Chancery, the case of Brook v. Brook, involving the question whether the marriage of a British subject with his deceased wife's sister at Altona, where such marriages were legal, was valid in England, and consequently whether, according to the law of England, the children of such marriage were legitimate. Mr. Justice Creswell gave judgment on the 4th Dec. that the marriage was void. (See April 17, 1858.)

21.—Memorial set up at Cawnpore "To the women and children of her Majesty's 32d Regiment, who were slaughtered near this spot on the 16th of July, A.D. 1857. This memorial was erected by twenty men of the same regiment who were passing through Cawnpore."

— Commencement of the diplomatic involvement known as "the affair of the Charles et Georges." The English consul at Mozambique having informed the authorities that there was a vessel in Portuguese waters supposed to be taking in slaves, a Portuguese vessel of war proceeded to the ship indicated, and found on board forty negroes who had just been shipped from the Portuguese coast. Eleven of them had their arms tied, and all asserted that they had come on board against their own free will. This ship—which proved to be the French Charles et Georges, Captain Rouxel, of St. Malo—was taken to Mozambique, where the governor appointed a special commission to inquire into the circumstances, and decide whether the case ought to be handed over to the judicial tribunals. The commission decided that there was a prima facie case against the vessel, and in due time a judicial tribunal pronounced a sentence by which the ship was condemned to be sold by public auction, and the captain sentenced to three years' imprisonment. Count Walewski, with the knowledge of Lord Malmesbury, afterwards coerced the Portuguese Government to restore the vessel and indemnify the captain. The affair gave rise to much correspondence between the Courts, and formed the subject of debate in both Houses of Parliament early in the session of 1859.

23.—Explosion of a boiler at the Upper Apsley Mill, near Huddersfield, killing seven women and one man on the spot, and injuring four others so severely that they died in a few days. The disaster was traceable to the misconduct of the engineer, who, for the purpose of getting up steam rapidly, had screwed down the steam-valve, cutting off all communication with the boiler and safety-valve.

25.—Died in the camp at the Dilkoosha, from dysentery, General Havelock, aged 62.

27.—The Commander-in-chief commences his march from Alumbagh to Cawnpore, with a portion of his force and the whole of the families who had been rescued at Lucknow, besides the sick and wounded, amounting to a helpless body of not less than 2,000 souls. In the course of his march he was able to afford much-needed aid to General Williams, who in an attack on a large body of rebels on the Pandoo Nuddee had been compelled to fall back upon his intrenchments with the loss of a portion of his tents and camp equipage.

30.—Great loss of life among the fishermen on the Banffshire coast. In the morning, 14 boats went out from Port-Knockie, 29 from Buckie, and 5 from Port-Gordon, with nine men in each; while engaged in fishing they were suddenly caught in a gale, and an attempt was at once made to get within the headlands. Five of the boats were lost, and forty-two fishermen drowned within sight of their homes and families.

December 3.—Parliament opened by the Queen in person. "Circumstances," said her Majesty, "have arisen connected with the mercantile interest of the country which have induced me to call Parliament together before the usual time. The failure of certain joint-stock banks, and of some commercial firms, produced such an extent of distrust as led me to authorize my ministers to recommend to the Directors of the Bank of England the adoption of a course of proceeding which appeared necessary for allaying the prevalent alarm. As that course has involved a departure from the existing law, a bill for indemnifying those who advised, and those who adopted it, will be submitted for your consideration." Reference was also made to the Indian mutiny, the affairs of the East Indian dominions generally, and "My Lords and gentlemen" were informed that during the session their attention would be called "to the laws which regulate the representation of the people in Parliament, with a view to consider what amendments may be safely and beneficially made therein." In the debate on the Address, the conduct of the ministry in declining to send out strong reinforcements to India during the early stages of the insurrection was sharply commented on by Lord Derby in the House of Lords, and Mr. Disraeli in the House of Commons. The Address was agreed to without a division.

—Died at Dresden, aged 80, Professor Christian Rauch, an eminent German sculptor.

7.—The Lord Chancellor communicates to the House of Lords a message from her Majesty, announcing her intention of conferring a pension on General Havelock of 1,000*l.* a-year. The House afterwards agreed to continue the annuity to his son.

9.—The Probate and Administration Bill passed last session having abolished, among other venerable institutions, the Prerogative Court of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the last sitting was held to-day, under the presidency of Sir John Dodson, judge.

10.—Lord John Russell obtains leave to bring in a bill to substitute one oath for the oaths of allegiance, supremacy, and abjuration, and for the relief of those professing the Jewish religion. The chief feature of the new bill was the addition to the proposed oath of the words, "on the true faith of a Christian," and a clause permitting them to be omitted when a Jew was sworn.

11.—In the House of Commons, the Chancellor of the Exchequer moves for the reappointment of a Committee of Inquiry into the Bank Charter Act, which was carried against Mr. Disraeli's motion, that further inquiry was unnecessary, by a majority of 295 against 117.

—The Bank Charter Indemnity Act read a third time in the House of Lords, and passed without a division. Parliament thereafter adjourned to the usual period of meeting for the despatch of business—February 4.

15.—Atwell, the thief (see March 5, 1857), tried at the Central Criminal Court for stealing from a cab, on the 22d of January, 1856, a trunk containing various articles of jewellery, the property of the Countess of Ellesmere, and valued at 15,000*l.* His companions, Saint and Whitby, who had assisted at the seizure and shared in the plunder, sold in most cases for trifling sums, were not yet in custody; but as there was no reason to doubt the truth of Atwell's own statement, so far as it criminated himself, six months was added as a prolongation of his current period of imprisonment. Lady Ellesmere's stays and linen were given by Whitby to a female known as "Polly Gentleman;" the other articles of apparel were sold under the instructions of a colleague called "California" to one Britton, and the gems landed among the Jews, or were thrown away in terror into obscure corners about Spitalfields and Whitechapel.

16.—Earthquake, extending from the Mediterranean to the Adriatic with varying violence, but inflicting the greatest damage at Naples. It was thought that as many as 10,000 lives were sacrificed in this visitation, complete villages being in some cases engulfed in the yawning fissures.

—At the Exeter Assizes, Jonathan Roone was indicted for feloniously assaulting Jane Stone, and causing injuries to life with intent to murder her, at Torquay, on the 11th of November last. The shocking barbarity of the crime, and the almost providential manner in which the victim's life was saved, gave this case unusual interest. For the purpose of concealing the result of an illicit intercourse, the prisoner seized the girl in a garden on the night in question, and having rendered her almost insensible by blows on the head and face, thrust his hand down her throat for the purpose of choking her. The feeble screams her strength permitted the victim to make were heard in the adjoining house by a little dog, which barked so long as to excite the attention of the inmates, and bring assistance to the poor girl. Nobody expecting her to recover, she made a formal declaration regarding the person who made this attempt upon her life. She now appeared in court with her head and face beaten out of all form, and apparently held together only by the dressing. The jury found the prisoner guilty of the attempt to do serious bodily harm, and Mr. Justice Wills sentenced him to transportation for life.

23.—News received at the Foreign Office of the relief of Lucknow by Sir Colin Campbell, and of the retirement of the sick and wounded, with the women and children, to Cawnpore on the 20th November.

24.—John Thompson, alias Peter Walker, tailor, found guilty, at the Glasgow Circuit Court, of poisoning Agnes Montgomery, at Eaglesham, by administering prussic acid in a drink of beer. The first link in the chain connecting the prisoner with the offence was supplied by a little girl, who, although too young to be produced in evidence in court, prattled out at home words of such significance as induced her mother to get the body disinterred and subjected to a medical investigation. This was about a fortnight after the poisoning, when Thompson was away from Eaglesham, and had made a second attempt on two lives in the house where he lodged in Glasgow. Thompson was executed at Paisley on the 14th January. He confessed his guilt before he died, and attributed the deed to his desire to possess the girl's money. It seemed, however, not improbable that the great poisoning case tried in Edinburgh in July had produced an effect on a morbid mind not unlike that exhibited by Dove after Palmer's trial.

25.—This Christmas was celebrated with unwonted cheerfulness, in consequence of the welcome news that Lucknow had been relieved by Sir Colin Campbell on the 17th November. The death of Major-General Havelock on the 25th was not yet known.

29.—Capture of Canton by the British and French forces. At daybreak on the 28th, a slow dropping fire was opened from the ships lying on the southern side of Canton. The guns bore on the south-west and south-east angles of the old and new city wall, swept the eastern rampart, and breached the wall of the south. From the Dutch Folly—a fort in the centre of the river—four mortars and two rockets played upon Magazine Hill and the other heights inside the north gate, as well as upon Gough Fort, Blue Jacket Fort, and the heights beyond. While this fire of shot and shell was destroying the defences of the city, General Von Straubenzee was preparing to land his men, Admirals Seymour and Genouilly co-operating. Before nightfall, not only were the whole 5,700 men and a large amount of materials and stores landed, but Fort Lin was in our possession, the Chinese having left early in the day, when they saw they were likely to be surrounded. It was agreed that the escalade should take place at nine o'clock on the morning of the 29th, and in order to ensure success, the French and English gunboats near the French Folly at the south-east corner of the city were to enfilade the wall from the east to the north-east gate till the hour of assault. At five o'clock in the morning, the troops were under arms. A temple was seized close to the walls by McClure and Osborne; Captain Bate, in a daring reconnaissance to select the best place for the scaling ladders, was struck by a gingall, and died on the spot. From an excess of zeal or desire to gain credit by a manœuvre, the French troops were at the foot of the walls before the English. When the English general gave the word, the blue-jackets and red-coats rushed on, scaled the walls, and planted our flag on the battlements of Canton. Division after division clambered swiftly up the ladders, formed at the top, and swept along the rampart to the northward. Within an hour and a half the whole eastern half of Canton from the north gate to the south gate was in our hands. Our loss was merely nominal—fifteen men killed, and 113 wounded. Commissioner Yeh was captured on the 5th January, and conveyed on board the Inflexible. He strenuously denied his identity, and it was not till Mr. Parkes had several times the satisfaction and triumph of assuring his old enemy of his personal safety that he grew composed. Then all his old arrogance returned. He posed himself magnificently in his chair, laughed at the idea of giving up his seals or of being led away. He would wait there, he said, to receive the men Elgin and Gros. They searched all his packages for papers, and found among other things the original ratification of the treaties with England, France, and America. They were, as Yeh intimated, too unimportant documents to be sent to Paris. Yeh was conveyed to Calcutta, where he died in April following. The inhabitants generally did not show much opposition to the barbarian invaders. The force at the disposal of Lord Elgin being greatly insufficient to control the people, and at the same time carry on the government of the city, Governor Pihkwei was re-installed into office, and undertook to carry on affairs under conditions laid down by his lordship till peace was concluded.

31.—Certain jewels, collected by George II., George III., and Queen Charlotte, sent back to Hanover, under the terms of an award by Lord Wensleydale, Sir Page Wood, and Sir Laurence Peel.

The summary vengeance inflicted on Sepoy rebels by blowing them from guns gave occasion for criticism hurtful to the well-earned reputation of our troops for humanity in the hour of victory. The scene at one station was thus described by a spectator:—"The doomed five were marched to the five fatal guns. They were bound by the arms to the wheels, but their legs were free, and the end man—the only one I could entirely see from my place on the flank—leaned his back against the muzzle, as loungers lean against a mantel-piece. I fixed my eyes intently on that man, not fifty yards away, and in a moment the signal was given. There was a roar, and the whizzing of a bullet, far away from the firing party; a bank of white smoke, and a jet and shower of black fragments, sharp and clear, which leaped and bounded in the air; this, and a fearful sound from the spectators, as if reality so far exceeded all previous fancy, that it was intolerable; then a dead stillness. I walked straight to the scattered and smoking floor before the guns. I first came to an arm, torn off above the elbow, the fist clenched, the bone projecting several inches, bare; then the ground sown with red grisly fragments, then a black-haired head and the other arm still held together—this was the man I had watched. Close by lay the lower half of the body of the next, torn quite in two, and long coils of entrails twined on the ground. Then a long cloth in which one had been dressed, rolled open like a floor-cloth and on fire. One man lay in a complete and shattered heap, all but the arms; the legs were straddled wide apart, and the smashed body on the middle of them; the spine exposed; the head lay close by, too. The last body was that of a native officer, who was the arch-fiend of the mutiny; he was a short man with a cruel face. His head had been cut clean off; but the muscles of the neck had contracted round the throat like a frill. His face was half upturned and calm, the eyes shut. I saw no expression of pain on any of them. What had been his body lay on its face, the legs, as usual, not shattered, but all the flesh torn like cloth from a sharp angle in the hollow of the back, off and off, till it merged in one mangled heap."

January 1.—The metropolis divided into ten postal districts for the purpose of facilitating the delivery of letters.

2.—Died at Acton, Dr. Forbes Royle, F.R.S., a distinguished Indian botanist.

— In consequence of certain recent scandals attached to the name of the Marquis of Clanricarde, his admission into the Cabinet as Lord Privy Seal caused much comment. Today the Daily News writes:—"Men of high honour, of elevated sentiments, of public morality, and of deep interest in the country, cannot do otherwise than accept this act of Lord Palmerston as indicative of a personal recklessness and disregard of enlightened public opinion, wholly unsuited to the position to which the generous feelings of the country have raised him."

— Sir Colin Campbell, being opposed by the rebels at the bridge over the Kalee Nuddee, on his march to Futteghur, attacks and defeats them this day with heavy loss and the capture of seven guns, two of them 8-pounders. Futteghur was occupied without opposition on the 4th. The British guns were found in position, and much property belonging to the gun and clothing agencies. Goruckpore was taken on the 6th, by the forces under the Maharajah Jung Bahadoor. The enemy had intrenched themselves strongly, but made a feeble resistance. Seven guns were taken, and 200 men killed.

3.—Died, at Cannes, aged 38, Madame Rachel, the queen of French tragedy.

5.—Died, at Milan, aged 92, Field-Marshal Radetzky, Commander-in-chief of the Austrian army in Italy.

6.—Christian Sattler sentenced to death at the Central Criminal Court for shooting Charles Thain, of the City of London Police, while being conveyed from Hamburg on a charge of felony committed in this country.

7.—Publication of a telegram from India, announcing that General Havelock had died on the 25th November, from dysentery, brought on by exposure and anxiety.

8.—Calcutta correspondents write:—"Our prospects brighten rapidly. In almost every part of the disturbed districts we have encountered the rebels and defeated them. In almost every part we have succeeded in opening the roads, and the communication with Delhi is now direct."

— The wounded of the relieved garrison at Lucknow, with the women and children, are landed at Calcutta, from the steam-ship Madras, and received with all the honour which their heroism and sufferings commanded.

13.—Mr. John S. Rarey, the American horse-tamer, exhibits his skill before her Majesty in the Riding-school, Windsor.

14.—Orsini and others attempt to assassinate the Emperor and Empress of the French, by throwing shells filled with detonating powder beneath the carriage conveying them to the Opera. The first bomb was thrown when the vehicle entered the Rue Lepelletier. It did not touch the Emperor, nor even the vehicle, but it wounded about twenty persons. On this the coachman whipped up his horses, but almost immediately a second bomb burst, and one of the horses, being struck by three projectiles, fell to the ground. A third bomb, thrown with more precision, fell beneath the carriage itself and burst with tremendous force, smashing part of it in pieces. The splinters of this bomb wounded the second horse, which expired some hours after. The coachman, Ledoux, was wounded in the head. The only person in the carriage with the Emperor and Empress was General Roguet, who received a slight injury. The escape of their Majesties was almost miraculous. The Emperor received a slight cut on the side of the nose by a piece of glass from the carriage-window. Another piece of glass struck the Empress at the corner of the left eye, but left no trace. Superintendent Hébert, of the police, who opened the door of the Emperor's carriage at the moment of the third explosion, was dangerously wounded. The pieces of iron flew on every side to a vast distance, marking the front of the houses and the pillars of the theatre to a great height, and breaking a considerable number of windows.

(351)

The stupor at the first moment was indescribable, as no one could tell what had really occurred; and the persons who saw their neighbours falling around them did not know but at the next moment it might be their own turn. The carriage itself was taken into the courtyard of the Tuileries, and visited by great numbers of persons. All the under part and front of the vehicle had the appearance of being blown to pieces. At the moment of the last explosion a man was seen to rush to the carriage, armed with a dagger and revolver, and was caught full in front by a sergent-de-ville; the murderer made a desperate attempt to escape, and during the struggle wounded his captor. He was searched, and another revolver was found on him. Another man was also arrested on the spot, carrying a carpet-bag containing pistols and daggers, and a small box. He had in his pockets 270 francs in gold. A third, a well-dressed man, in white gloves, who was seen to raise his hat and wave it, perhaps as a signal, was also arrested. Five minutes previous to the explosion M. Hébert recognised, at the corner of the Rue Lepelletier, an Italian, named Piéri, who was expelled from France in 1852, but had recently returned to Paris with a false passport. He was found to carry on his person a six-barrelled revolver, a bomb similar to those exploded, and a long dagger. After having lodged Piéri in the guard-house, M. Hébert was in time to open the door of the Emperor's carriage, as mentioned above. At three o'clock in the morning Felix Orsini was arrested in his lodging in the Rue Mont Thabor. He confessed that he threw one of the bombs. They were of cast iron, oblong, in the form of a pear, and in the widest part from four to five inches in diameter. The bombs were loaded with detonating gunpowder, and each bomb was armed with several caps, the contact of which with a hard substance necessarily caused an explosion.

16.—The Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes sit for the first time, Sir Creswell Creswell acting as Judge Ordinary. The first case heard was Deane v. Deane, a suit for divorce, by reason of adultery, promoted by Mrs. Deane against her husband.

17.—In his speech at the opening of the Chambers, the Emperor thus referred to the assassination plot:—"Such plots convey a useful lesson. In the first place, those who have recourse to them betray their own weakness and impotence. In the second place, assassination never serves the cause of the assassins. Neither they who struck Julius Cæsar, nor they who struck Henri IV., profited by their murder. God sometimes permits the death of the just, but never allows the triumph of crime. These attempts can neither disturb the present nor the future. If I live, the Empire will live with me; if I fall, the Empire will be confirmed even by my death, for the indignation of the French people and army will afford a fresh prop to the throne of my son. Let us look upon the future with confidence. Let us betake ourselves, without disquieting pre-occupation, to the labours of each day, for the advantage and improvement of the country. Dieu protège la France." In his reply to the address of the diplomatic body, the Emperor said:—"I flatter myself that all the sovereigns of Europe regard my existence as necessary to the maintenance of tranquillity."

20.—Hostile feeling in France towards England for harbouring assassin refugees. Count Walewski, Minister for Foreign Affairs, writes to Count Persigny, French Ambassador in London:—"It is no longer the hostility of misguided parties manifesting itself by all the excesses of the press and every violence of language; it is no longer even the labours of factions seeking to agitate opinion and to provoke disorder: it is assassination reduced to a doctrine, preached openly, practised in repeated attempts, the most recent of which has just struck Europe with stupefaction. Ought, then, the right of asylum to protect such a state of things? Is hospitality due to assassins? Ought English legislation serve to favour their designs and their manœuvres, and can it continue to protect persons who place themselves by flagrant acts without the pale of the common law, and expose themselves to the law of humanity? . . . Full of confidence in the exalted reason of the English Cabinet, we abstain from all indication as regards the measures which it may be suitable to take. We rely on them in this matter for a careful appreciation of the decision which they shall judge most proper; and we congratulate ourselves in the firm persuasion that we shall not have appealed in vain to their conscience and their loyalty." On the 23d, in answer to a deputation informing him of an address voted to the Emperor by the corporation of the City of London, M. de Persigny said:—"My country too well understands what is honourable feeling ever to demand from the friendship of England anything which could touch her honour. Permit me, then, to tell you what is the true question; it does not lie in the attempts at assassinations in themselves, nor even in the crime of the 14th of January, which your Government would have hastened to warn us against, if it could have known it before-hand; the whole question is in the moral situation of France, which has become anxiously doubtful of the real sentiment of England. Reasoning by analogy, popular opinion declares that if there were in France men sufficiently infamous to recommend at their clubs, in their papers, in their writings of every kind, the assassination of a foreign sovereign, and actually to prepare its execution, a French administration would not wait to receive the demands of a foreign government, nor to see the enterprise set on foot. To act against such conspiracies, to anticipate such crimes, public notoriety would be sufficient to set our law in motion, and measures of security would be taken immediately. Well, then, France is astonished that nothing of a like nature should have taken place in England, and Frenchmen say, Either the English law is sufficient, as certain lawyers declare; and why then is it not applied? Or it is insufficient, which is the opinion of other lawyers; and in this case why does not a free country, which makes its own laws, remedy this omission? In one word, France does not understand, and cannot understand, this state of things, and in that resides the harm; for she may mistake the true sentiments of her ally, and no longer believe her sincerity. Now, gentlemen, if ever that mutual confidence between nation and nation which is the true foundation of a stable alliance, should be impaired, it would be a deplorable misfortune for both countries, and for the whole of civilization; but, thank God, for two nations interested in preserving cordial relations between their two governments, who esteem one another, and are continually displaying towards each other the most friendly sentiments, the occurrence of such an evil is, I am persuaded, almost impossible." The congratulatory addresses presented by the army bristled with offensive remarks concerning England. The 5th Lancers:—"The army is afflicted that powerful friends whose brave armies so lately fought by our side, should, under the name of hospitality, protect conspirators and assassins surpassing those who have gone before them in all that is odious." The 59th Regiment:—"But in our manly hearts indignation against the perverse, succeeding to our gratitude to God, moves us to demand an account from the land of impurity which contains the haunts of the monsters who are sheltered by its laws. Give us the order, Sire, and we will pursue them even to their strongholds." The Rouen division:—"Let the miserable assassins, the subordinate agents of such crimes, receive the chastisement due to their abominable attempts; but let also the infamous haunt in which machinations so infernal are planned be destroyed for ever." These addresses caused so much irritation in England that Count Walewski formally apologized for their publication. "They are," he writes to Count Persigny, "too much opposed to the language which the Emperor's Government has not ceased to hold to that of her Britannic Majesty, for it to be possible to attribute them to anything else than inadvertence caused by the number of these addresses. The Emperor enjoins you to say to Lord Clarendon how much he regrets it."

25.—Marriage of the Princess Royal and Prince Frederick William of Prussia. The ceremony was performed at the Chapel Royal, St. James's, by the Archbishop of Canterbury, in presence of the Queen, the most illustrious princes and princesses of the two Royal households, and a brilliant gathering of invited guests. The drive from Buckingham Palace to St. James's was crowded with spectators, who cheered the Royal party with great enthusiasm as they passed to the chapel. In the evening the City was illuminated, and rejoicings were general all over the kingdom. The Royal couple proceeded to Windsor in the afternoon by railway, and were received at the station by Eton boys, who dragged the carriage to the Castle. They left England for Prussia on the 2d of February; their journey through the metropolis, where they were received by the Mayor and Corporation, taking place during a heavy fall of snow.

27.—Resolution carried at the Court of the East India Company, "That the proposed transfer of the governing powers of the East India Company to the Crown is fraught with danger to the constitutional interests of England, is perilous to the safety of our Indian empire, and calls for the resistance of the Corporation by all constitutional means." A petition to Parliament embodying these views was also agreed to.

28.—Sir Hugh Rose drives the rebels out of Ratghur, one of the strongest forts of Central India. The place was afterwards given up to the Ranees of Bhopal, who had remained steadfast to our cause in the midst of the general declension.

31.—The Leviathan launched on the Thames, and towed down to her moorings at Deptford. The original company having exhausted their capital of 640,000*l.* in building the hull, a new company was formed to complete the vessel, which purchased her for about a fifth of the original cost.

February 1.—The Emperor of the French sends a message to the Chambers, designating the Empress as regent, and providing for the establishment of a Council of Regency, in the event of his demise.

2.—Explosion at Bardsley colliery, near Ashton-under-Lyne, causing the death of fifty-two workmen. Twenty colliers met their death at Lower Dufferyn colliery, near Newport, on the 24th.

4.—The Houses of Parliament resume their sittings in pursuance of the adjournment from December.

5.—The Archbishop of Canterbury introduces a bill for legalizing special services in unconsecrated buildings, in connexion with the Church of England.

—The House of Commons consent to the Chancellor of the Exchequer's resolution for granting pensions of 1,000*l.* per annum to Lady Havelock, and Sir H. M. Havelock, eldest son of the late General.

—Lord Justice Knight Bruce delivers the judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, dismissing the appeal from the Court of Arches in the case of Ditcher v. Denison.

A A

6.—Publication of Lord Canning's despatch of December 11, vindicating himself from charges brought against the policy he had pursued during the Mutiny.

8.—Resolutions submitted to both Houses of Parliament thanking the civil and military officers of India for the energy and ability displayed by them in suppressing the Mutiny. Lord Derby in the one House, and Mr. Disraeli in the other, moved the omission, in the meantime, of the name of Lord Canning, till an opportunity had been given of discussing his policy. The resolutions, however, were carried as introduced by Government.

9.—Lord Palmerston introduces the new Conspiracy to Murder Bill, removing conspiracy from the class of misdemeanours to that of felony, punishable with penal servitude for five years, as a minimum, or for life, as a maximum. Mr. Kinglake moved an amendment, "That this House, while sympathizing with the French nation in its indignant abhorrence of the late atrocious attempt against the life of the Emperor, and anxious upon a proper occasion to consider any amendment of the criminal law which may be likely to defeat a repetition of such attempts, deems it inexpedient to legislate in compliance with the demand made in Count Walewski's despatch of the 20th of January, until further information is before it of the communications between the two Governments subsequent to the date of that despatch." After a discussion, leave was given to bring in the bill by a majority of 299 to 99. In anticipation of the second reading, Mr. Milner Gibson submitted as an amendment, "That this House hears with much concern that it is alleged that the recent attempt on the life of the Emperor of the French has been devised in England, and expresses its detestation for such a wicked enterprise; and that, while the House is ready at all times to assist in remedying any defects in the criminal law which after due investigation are proved to exist, it cannot but regret that her Majesty's Government (previously to wanting the House to amend the laws relating to conspiracy at the present time) have not felt it to be their duty to make some reply to the despatch received from the French Government, dated Paris, January 20, 1858, and which they had laid before Parliament."

10.—Lord John Russell's Oaths Bill read a second time without any debate.

— The two Houses of Convocation of the Province of Canterbury assemble for the despatch of business.

11.—Orsini writes from the prison of Mazas to the Emperor Napoleon, entreating him to use his influence to promote the independence of Italy.

— Collision in the Channel, off Holyhead, between the American ship Leander and the steamer North American. The Leander sunk with ten of her passengers and crew.

12.—In the House of Commons, in answer to Mr. Stirling, Lord Palmerston denied that any portion of the legacy left by the first Napoleon to Cantillon, for attempting to assassinate the Duke of Wellington, had been paid by the present Emperor. The commissioners appointed to deal with the will in 1854 refused to make any issue, alleging that, in their opinion, the testator must have been in a state of mental aberration when he made the bequest. The only money Cantillon ever received under the deed had been small sums paid to account between the years 1823 and 1826. Mr. Stirling afterwards wrote to the Times:—"In the Monitor of Sunday, May 6, 1855, No. 126, in the list of 64 legatees, Cantillon appears to have received of capital and interest 10,343 francs, or 343 francs more than the original legacy; 31 persons had received sums to account; 32 had as yet been paid nothing. One legatee only had received, or was to receive, his full legacy, and that one was Cantillon, who had received more than his legacy."

— Lord Palmerston introduces a bill for transferring the government of her Majesty's dominions in the East from the East India Company to the Crown. The course of double government which had been established, he described as exceedingly cumbrous. The East India Company had from the first been treated as a commercial body, until the year 1833, when the Company became a phantom in that respect. They now carried on political functions without ministerial responsibility. There was no responsibility to Parliament, to public opinion, or to the Crown; and the persons enjoying these functions were simply persons holding so much Indian stock. They were elected by bodies and gentlemen who knew nothing about India, and yet the Company had the power of removing the Governor-General at any moment. The bill he proposed was confined entirely to a change in the home administration, and would not make any change in the government of India. The functions of the Court of Directors and the Court of Proprietors were to cease, and the government would be administered by a Minister responsible to Parliament, assisted by a Council. Mr. Baring moved as an amendment, that it was not expedient at present to legislate on the government of India. After a debate adjourned over three nights, leave was given to bring in the bill by a majority of 318 to 173.

13.—Dr. Livingstone, the African traveller, entertained by the President and Members of the Geographical Society in Freemasons' Hall, previous to leaving this country in the capacity of British consul to the Portuguese settlements in Southern Africa.

14.—Dr. Simon Bernard arrested in his lodgings, Park-street, Bayswater, on a charge of complicity in the recent attempt to assassinate the Emperor of the French. The examinations commenced next day at Bow-street, and were adjourned from time to time till it was thought evidence sufficient had been produced to justify his committal on the charges of murder, and as an accessory before the fact.

16.—Wreck of the Peninsular and Oriental Company's steamer Ava on Pigeon's Island, off Trincomalee. The mails were lost, but all the passengers—many of them ladies of the Lucknow garrison—were saved, as was also a portion of the treasure intended for the Bombay Government.

18.—At the Lancaster Assizes, Thomas Monk, surgeon, magistrate of the borough of Preston, and also a deputy-lieutenant, sentenced to penal servitude for life for felony, in forging, and uttering, knowing it to be forged, what purported to be the will of one Edward Turner, reedmaker, deceased.

19.—Defeat of the Ministry on the Conspiracy to Murder Bill, Mr. Milner Gibson's amendment being carried against them, on the proposal for a second reading, by a majority of 234 against 215. Lord Palmerston wound up the debate with a sharp attack on Mr. Milner Gibson in his new character of defender of the honour of England, and, amid much interruption from an impatient House, appealed to it not to stultify the vote it had given for introducing the bill. The majority was composed of 146 Conservatives, 84 Liberals, and 4 Peelites—Gladstone, Graham, Cardwell, and Herbert. The announcement of the division was received with great cheering by the majority. As the result of a Cabinet Council held next day, Lord Palmerston placed his resignation in the hands of her Majesty, who at once sent for the Earl of Derby, and confided to him the duty of forming a Ministry. On the 23d, intimation of the resignation was made in both Houses of Parliament, and an adjournment made to the 26th.

20.—Earl Cowley to the Earl of Clarendon:—"Having learnt by telegraph that certain resolutions imputing blame to H.M. Government for not having made any reply to Count Walewski's despatch to Count Persigny, dated Jan. 20, had been affirmed by a majority of the House of Commons, I think it a duty to your Lordship to place on record that, although I have not been charged to make any official communication to the French Government in answer to that despatch, I have been enabled, by your Lordship's private instructions, to place before the French Government the views of H. M. Government far more fully, and, I cannot but believe, more satisfactorily, than would have been the case had my language been clothed in more official garb. . . . I know not what may be the result of last night's vote, but, at all events, I lose no time in stating my conviction that to your Lordship's judicious and prudent conduct at a very critical moment it is owing that, without the shadow of the sacrifice of a single principle, our relations with this Government have not received a check which might have been fatal to the friendship which yet happily prevails between the two nations."

20.—As usual, the defeat of Ministers on a question of international policy caused considerable fluctuation in the Funds. To-day (Saturday) Consols opened at 97 $\frac{3}{8}$, fell to 96 $\frac{1}{8}$, then advanced to 97, and closed at 96 $\frac{3}{8}$ to $\frac{5}{8}$. On Monday, when the uneasiness concerning the irritation in France was at its height, they fell to 96, being the lowest point reached, but recovered greatly next day.

22.—Mr. Roebuck obtains the appointment of a Select Committee to inquire into the alleged unparliamentary conduct of Mr. Isaac Butt in having corruptly entered into an agreement with the Ameer Ali Moorad to prosecute and to advocate his claims in the House of Commons to recover the territories of which he had been deprived by annexation. After taking evidence, the Committee agreed to a resolution acquitting Mr. Butt of the charge made against him. It was established that various sums of money had been paid by the Ameer to Mr. Butt, but not that it had reference to proceedings in Parliament.

24.—Héloïse Thaubin, a French prostitute, murdered by Giovanni Lani, in a brothel off the Haymarket. The murderer was discovered leaving this country on board the barque Pride of the Thames, and brought back to London with a portion of the property stolen from the deceased and found among his luggage. He was tried at the Central Criminal Court for the offence, found guilty, and executed.

25.—Commenced at Paris, before the Court of Assizes, the trial of the conspirators charged with attempting to take the life of the Emperor and Empress on the evening of the 14th Jan. last. Five persons were directly accused as authors of the plot; viz. Orsini, Pierri, Rudio, Gomez, and Bernard (the last not in custody). The three first-named, who threw the shells, were further accused of the murder of divers persons who had died from the wounds received. The court was presided over by M. Delangle. The prisoners were each subjected to an examination and cross-examination, with the view of making them explain their movements prior to, as well as on the day the attempt was made. The trial lasted two days, the jury at the close returning a verdict of Guilty against all the prisoners, and admitting extenuating circumstances in favour of Gomez only. The three chief conspirators were sentenced to be executed as parricides, and Gomez to hard labour for life. The punishment of Rudio was afterwards commuted to penal servitude for life.

26.—Resenting certain remarks made in the House of Lords on the opinion he had expressed regarding the English law of aliens, Sir R. Bethell took occasion to enlarge to-night on the inconvenience that would arise if in any nation possessing two deliberative assemblies, the members did not observe the rules of decency and regularity, reciprocally abstaining from personal and offensive criticism. He then intimated, with the circumlocution technically demanded in such cases, that certain of the judges in the House of Peers had repeatedly been guilty of a practice which might have been pardoned in younger members, but not in grave, reverend, and aged men, who ought to be examples of order, regularity, and decency. (Some amusement was afforded by Sir Richard Bethell's ingeniously-measured expressions of intense vituperative retaliation.) The practice, he said, had been repeatedly pursued, frequently remonstrated against in private, forborne to be noticed in public; and, for his own part, he avowed he felt a great deal of pity for the irritable feeling that prompted these observations. He mentioned three cases in which the Lord Chief Justice had reflected upon himself as Solicitor-General or Attorney-General, in August last, in discussing the Trustees Relief Bill; subsequently, in discussing the Supreme Court of Appeal, where Sir Richard was represented as attacking the judicial jurisdiction of the Peers; and in his recent statement of the English law of aliens. In the first case, Lord St. Leonards had mentioned a Solicitor-General as having spoken "with a confidence that belonged to him." Now, the individual alluded to unquestionably felt a good deal of pity for the irritable feeling prompting these observations. In the second, Lord Campbell had spoken of the same Solicitor-General as "never likely to be satisfied till he sat on the woollen sack"—a species of personality indicating great want of good breeding and good manners. With reference to the observations of the noble lords on his statements as to the law of aliens, Sir Richard remarked: "It is the province of the judges of the land to declare a law, but to declare the law in their courts, after argument, upon a judicial occasion, and after grave deliberation. (Cheers.) It is most deeply to be deplored if there should happen to be in any country a judge of the greatest eminence and authority, who must know well that, in a particular conjuncture of circumstances, he might be called upon to sit in judgment upon a particular case, and who yet, with reference to that case, before it came before him, gratuitously and unnecessarily rushed into public, and declared that the law which governed the case was so-and-so, and that all who held a different opinion committed such grievous errors that it gave him the most acute pain to observe the blunders into which they had fallen. (Hear, hear! and a laugh.) Well, Sir, if there is a man who should have done such a thing, and if such a man should be clothed with the ermine of the highest station, I think this House will be of opinion with me that he would disqualify himself from sitting as a judge to hear and determine that question, if the case on which he had thus given an opinion and decision should arise. (Cheers.) There is nothing more to be deplored in the judges of the land than that they should be 'incontinent of tongue.'"

27.—The members of Lord Derby's Ministry take formal possession of their offices.

— Came on in the Court of Queen's Bench, Guildhall, before Lord Chief Justice Campbell and a special jury, the trial of the Directors of the Royal British Bank. Humphrey Brown, Edward Esdaile, H. D. Macleod, Alderman R. H. Kennedy, W. D. Owen, James Stapleton, and Hugh James Cameron, were placed at the bar, charged with a conspiracy to defraud. Loran de Wolfe Cochran was also included in the indictment, but he did not surrender. The indictment was framed on an ex-officio information filed by her Majesty's late Attorney-General (Sir Richard Bethell), and was in substance as follows:—The first count charged a conspiracy to publish and represent to such of the shareholders as were ignorant, &c., that the bank and its affairs had been during the half-year ended the 31st of December, 1855, and then were, in a sound and prosperous condition, producing profits divisible, &c., the defendants well knowing the contrary, &c., with intent to deceive and defraud such of the shareholders as were not aware of the true state of its affairs, and to induce them to continue customers and creditors of the bank. The count then set out the following overt acts:—1st overt act, publishing a false report for the half-year to December 31, 1855, declaring a dividend of six per cent., and that new shares would be issued at a premium; 2d overt act, issuing new shares, showing the bank to be in a failing condition; 3d overt act, publishing a balance-sheet for the year, false in the amount of assets, in the provision for bad debts, and in the profit and loss account; 4th overt act, paying a dividend when no profits were made; 5th overt act, buying the bank's shares with the bank's money, to keep up the price; 6th overt act, publishing a circular, September 10, 1855, to the shareholders, to induce them to buy new shares, when the bank was in a failing condition; 7th overt act, publishing an advertisement inviting persons to open accounts when the bank was approaching insolvency; 8th overt act, publishing an issue of 2,000 more shares when the bank was failing. The 2d count charged a similar conspiracy against the customers and creditors of the bank; and contained seven overt acts, similar to Nos. 1 to 7 in the 1st count. The 3d count charged a similar conspiracy against the Queen's subjects generally; the overt acts were similar to those in the 1st count. The 4th count charged a conspiracy to cheat and defraud such of the shareholders as were ignorant of the true state of the bank, by inducing them by false pretences to purchase and hold additional shares in the bank, the defendants knowing the bank to be in a dangerous condition and approaching insolvency, and that the shares were unsafe and might be ruinous to the holders; the overt acts were the same as Nos. 1 to 5 in the 1st count. The 5th count charged a similar conspiracy against the Queen's subjects generally; the overt acts were the same as Nos. 1 to 5 in the 1st count. The 6th count charged a general conspiracy to cheat and defraud John Arundel, and several other persons named, of their money. The jury found all the defendants guilty, recommending Stapleton, Kennedy, Owen, and Macleod strongly to mercy. On Brown, Esdaile, and Cameron, the Lord Chief Justice passed a sentence of one year's imprisonment, adding that they had been convicted, "on the clearest evidence, of an infamous crime;" on Kennedy, nine months' imprisonment; on Owen, six months; on Macleod, three months; on Stapleton, "I cannot conscientiously order you to do more than pay a fine of one shilling to her Majesty, and be discharged.

March 2.—The Commander-in-chief in India having received the whole of the convoy and siege-trains from Agra, sets out on his second march from Cawnpore to Lucknow, where the rebels were again entrenching themselves. He despatched Sir James Outram across the Goomtee on the 6th, and took up a position himself at Dilkoosha. Sir James crossed with 6,000 men and thirty guns, and on the 21st was attacked by the rebels, who swarmed in great force, flanking two sides of his position, and having a heavy column in the centre. He moved out on the approach of the enemy, cut off both their flanks, took two guns, and forced them to retreat. Frank's column had also a decided action. To prevent a junction between two insurgent corps, he marched on the 29th February in advance of Budlapoore, and encountered the enemy separately near Shandina, killing or wounding 2,800 men, and taking all the rebel guns.

3.—The Governor-General of India issues a proclamation from Allahabad, addressed to the chiefs and people of Oude:—"The army of his Excellency the Commander-in-chief is in possession of Lucknow, and the city lies at the mercy of the British Government, whose authority it has for nine months rebelliously defied and resisted. The resistance begun by a mutinous soldiery has found support from the inhabitants of the city and of the province of Oude at large. Many who owed their prosperity to the British Government, as well as those who believed themselves aggrieved by it, have joined in this bad cause, and ranged themselves with the enemies of the State. The first care of the Governor-General will be to reward those who have been steadfast in their allegiance at a time when the authority of the Government was partially overborne, and who have proved this by the support and assistance which they have given to British officers." The proclamation then specified the names of six talookdars, or land-owners of Oude, including two rajahs, and declared that they "are henceforward the sole hereditary proprietors of the lands which they held when Oude came under British rule, subject only to such moderate assessment as may be imposed upon them, and that those loyal men will be further rewarded in such manner and to such extent as, upon consideration of their merits and their position, the Governor-General shall determine. A proportionate measure of reward and honour, according to their deserts, will be conferred upon others in whose favour like claims may be established to the satisfaction of the Government." The Governor-General further proclaims to the people of Oude that, with the above-mentioned exceptions, the proprietary right in the soil of the province is confiscated to the British Government, which will dispose of that right in such manner as it may seem fitting. "To those talookdars, chiefs, and landholders, with their followers, who shall make immediate submission to the Chief Commissioner of Oude, surrendering their arms and obeying his orders, the Right Hon. the Governor-General promises that their lives and honour shall be safe, provided that their hands are unstained by English blood murderously shed. But as regards any further indulgence which may be extended to them, and the conditions in which they may hereafter be placed, they must throw themselves upon the justice and mercy of the British Government. To those among them who shall promptly come forward and give to the Chief Commissioner their support in the restoration of peace and order, this indulgence will be large, and the Governor-General will be ready to view liberally the claims which they may thus acquire to the restitution of their former rights. As participation in the murder of Englishmen and Englishwomen will exclude those who are guilty of it from all mercy—so will those who have protected English lives be specially entitled to consideration and leniency." When the proclamation was forwarded to Sir James Outram, the Chief Commissioner of Oude, he was so strongly impressed with the impolicy of publishing it in all the naked severity of the terms it imposed upon the landholders, and making confiscation of their proprietary rights the rule, instead of the exception, that he at once resolved to remonstrate. He therefore directed his secretary to write to the Government of India, and plead for a modification of the provisions it contained. In this letter, which was dated, "Camp, Chintah, March 8," he said, "The Chief Commissioner desires me to observe, that, in his belief, there are not a dozen landholders in the province who have not themselves borne arms against us or sent a representative to the Durbar, or assisted the rebel Government with men or money. The effect of the proclamation, therefore, will be to confiscate the entire proprietary right in the soil; and this being the case, it is, of course, hopeless to attempt to enlist the landholders on the side of order; on the contrary, it is the Chief Commissioner's firm conviction that as soon as the chiefs and talookdars become acquainted with the determination of the Government to confiscate their rights, they will betake themselves at once to their domains and prepare for a desperate resistance. The Chief Commissioner deems this matter of such vital importance that, at the risk of being deemed importunate, he ventures to submit his views once more, in the hope that the Right Honourable the Governor-General may yet be induced to reconsider the subject. He is of opinion that the landholders were most unjustly treated under our settlement operations, and, even had they not been so, that it would have required a degree of fidelity on their part quite foreign to the usual character of an Asiatic to have remained faithful to our Government under the shocks to which it was exposed in Oude. In fact, it was not till our rule was virtually at an end, the whole country overrun, and the capital in the hands of the rebel soldiery that the talookdars, smarting as they were under the loss of their lands, sided against us. The Chief Commissioner thinks, therefore, that they ought hardly to be considered as rebels, but rather as honourable enemies, to whom terms, such as they could without loss of dignity accept, should be offered at the termination of the campaign. If these men be given back their lands they will at once aid us in restoring order, and a police will soon be organized with their co-operation, which will render unnecessary the presence of our enormous army to re-establish tranquillity and confidence. But if their life and freedom from imprisonment only be offered, they will resist; and the Chief Commissioner foresees that we are only at the commencement of a guerilla war for the extirpation, root and branch, of this class of men, which will involve the loss of thousands of Europeans by battle, disease, and exposure. It must be borne in mind that this species of warfare has always been peculiarly harassing to our Indian forces, and will be far more so at present, when we are without a native army. For the above reasons the Chief Commissioner earnestly requests that such landholders and chiefs as have not been accomplices in the cold-blooded murder of Europeans may be enlisted on our side by the restoration of their ancient possessions, subject to such restrictions as will protect their dependants from oppression. If his Lordship agree to this proposition, it will not yet be too late to communicate his assent by electric telegraph before the fall of the city, which will probably not take place for some days. Should no such communication be received, the Chief Commissioner will act upon his present instructions, satisfied that he has done all in his power to convince his Lordship that they will be ineffectual to re-establish our rule on a firm basis in Oude." The Governor-General was not convinced by this reasoning, but in consequence of so strong an expression of opinion by an officer whose views as to the policy proper to be pursued in Oude were entitled to so much weight, he consented to add to the intended proclamation, after the paragraph which ended with the words "justice and mercy of the British Government," the following clause: "To those among them who shall promptly come forward and give to the Chief Commissioner their support in the restoration of peace and order, this indulgence will be large, and the Governor-General will be ready to view liberally the claims which they may thus acquire to a restitution of their former rights."

4.—The Earl of Malmesbury answers the despatch of Count Walewski:—"Your Lordship will remark to Count Walewski that his Excellency, in stating that the attempt which has just providentially failed, like others which have preceded, was devised in England; in speaking, with reference to the 'adeptes de la d'imagogie' established in England, of 'assassination elevated to doctrine, preached openly, practised in repeated attempts; and in asking 'whether the right of asylum should protect such a state of things or contribute to favour their designs and their plans,' has not unnaturally been understood to imply imputations, not only that the offences enumerated are not recognised as such by the English law, and may be committed with impunity, but that the spirit of English legislation is such as designedly to shelter and screen the offender from punishment. Her Majesty's Government are persuaded that had Count Walewski known, when his Excellency held with your Lordship the conversation to which I have adverted above, that such construction was put upon certain portions of his despatch of January 20, he would have had no difficulty in adding to the assurance then given—the assurance that nothing could have been further from his intention than to convey an imputation injurious alike to the morality and the honour of the British nation."

5.—Jeremiah Carpenter tried at the Hertford Assizes for the murder of John Starkins, a member of the Herts constabulary, stationed at Stevenage. The deceased had been appointed to watch the prisoner by a farmer at Norton Green, who, from time to time, had been missing small quantities of wheat from his barn, and the presumption was that an encounter had taken place between them in the Cooper's Braches field. The body was found lying there in a pool; the skull and face frightfully disfigured. It was set forth in evidence that the accused was seen to leave his work in the Railway field a little earlier than usual on the night in question; that he proceeded in the direction of Norton Green farmhouse; that he must have passed through Cooper's Braches field before his return home to Stevenage; that a quantity of seed wheat, found at the scene of the struggle, was similar to that stolen from Norton Green, and also to some found in prisoner's house; that he was seen to return home later than usual and a little lame; that he changed his clothes, and pretended an accident in his garden to account for his lameness; that a portion of his clothes found were spotted with blood, and that his knife, which had been carefully washed, also showed traces of blood. Notwithstanding these suspicious circumstances, the jury returned a verdict of Not guilty—impressed, apparently, by Serjeant Parry's argument, pleaded in defence, that even if the jury should be of opinion there was no moral doubt in the case, still, if the evidence was not conclusive, they ought to acquit the prisoner.

6.—The mansion of Wynnstay, in North Wales, the seat of Sir Watkin Williams Wynn, destroyed by fire; the greater part of the jewels, plate, furniture, paintings, and books, being also destroyed. The Countess Vane, and some other guests, made a narrow escape with their lives. The loss was estimated at 70,000*l*.

10.—The Times of this morning contains the following advertisement:—"Fifty Pounds Reward. It having come to the knowledge of the Committee of the Army and Navy Club that a caricature, with most coarse and vulgar language appended thereto [Punch's cartoon of "The crowing Colonel"], was sent to an officer in command of a French regiment, accompanied with a forged message from the Club, the above reward will, within six weeks from this date, be paid by the Secretary of the Club on due conviction and punishment of the offender."

11.—Publication of the Imperial pamphlet, "L'Empereur Napoléon III et l'Angleterre." Describing the facilities afforded in England for concocting treasonable schemes, the writer says:—"There is a coffee-house near Temple-bar, in London, where the question to be discussed in the evening is announced in the morning. The public are invited to take part in the discussion. This coffee-house is called 'Discussion Forum.' People eat and drink there, and, at the same time, talk politics. A man, paid by the proprietor, presides and directs the debates. In the month of November, the following order of the day was publicly posted:—"Is regicide permitted under certain circumstances?" The question was publicly discussed. This is, moreover, not a transitory or isolated fact; and that which has taken place since, and takes place every day, aggravates it still more. On the 9th of February last, the French club which meets at Wyld's Reading-rooms, Leicester-square, held a sitting at which Simon Bernard, the accomplice of Orsini, expressed himself with the greatest violence. He declared that the Emperor, his ministers, M. de Persigny—all the high French functionaries—were out of the pale of the law, and he invited all those listening to him, to rush upon them by all means in their power. This speech, in which the ignoble contends with the horrible, was hailed with enthusiastic applause."

12.—Intimation is made in both Houses of Parliament, that the painful misconceptions which have subsisted for a time between the French and English Governments have terminated in a friendly and honourable manner.

—Disturbance in Dublin between the students and police, on the occasion of the Earl of Eglinton's entry into the city as the new Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.

13.—Orsini and Pierri executed at Paris. At the scaffold, Orsini was supported by the chaplain of the Conciergerie, and his calmness never abandoned him for a moment. When he appeared on the platform it could be seen from the movement of his body and of his head, though covered with a veil, that he was looking out for the crowd, and probably intended addressing them; but they were too far off. The greffier then directed the usher to read the sentence of the Court condemning the prisoners to the death of parricides. The usher, who was an old man, over 60, was evidently much moved at having to perform this duty, and he trembled as much from emotion as from cold while reading the document, which no one listened to. After this formality was terminated, Orsini and Pierri embraced their spiritual attendants, and pressed their lips on the crucifix offered to them. They then gave themselves up to the headsman. Pierri was attached to the plank in an instant, and executed first. The moment his veil was raised, and before his head was laid on the block, it was affirmed that he cried, "Vive l'Italie! Vive la République!" Orsini was then taken in hand; his veil was raised, and his countenance still betrayed no emotion. Before he was fastened to the plank he turned in the direction of the distant crowd, and, it is said, cried "Vive la France!" It was but five minutes past seven when the second head fell into the basket. A cold shudder ran among those whose attention was fixed upon what was passing on the scaffold, and for an instant there was deep silence. It passed off, however, very soon. When all was over, men went to their work, and parties who had gone together to the spot from distant quarters of the town, hastened home to breakfast. The morning was becoming clearer every moment. The troops began to move as if about to leave the ground. The guillotine was lowered and taken off; the crowds gradually thinned; some few groups lingered about the spot; but the cold was bitter, and the snow began to fall. In a few hours the place was deserted.

20.—William Davies was this day sentenced to death for the murder of an old woman, named Ann Evans, residing at Wenlock, Shropshire, under circumstances curious for the light they shed upon the superstitions of large parts of the population. The deceased had the reputation of being a witch, and contrived to exercise an influence in this way over the prisoner, who acted as her servant. Her reputation, even apart from her alleged dealings with the devil, was by no means good. She had been known under several names, and did not appear always under the same designation, even in the proceedings at the trial. In a fit of passion, to which she was frequently subject, the prisoner was provoked to knock her down in her own house, and, fearful of her curses if she recovered, he stabbed her in the throat, and fled in terror from the place. Her reputation for supernatural power was so firmly established, that the mother of a little girl, one of the witnesses, would not allow her to stand alone in the witness-box when under examination, so certain was she that the influence of the witch could still be made powerful. The extreme sentence of the law was afterwards commuted.

22.—Sir Colin Campbell establishes himself again in Lucknow. "On the 19th," he writes, "a combined armament was organized. Sir James Outram moved forward directly on the Moosabagh, the last position of the enemy on the line of the Goomtee. Sir J. Hope Grant cannonaded the latter from the left bank, while Brigadier Campbell, moving right round the western side from the Alumbagh, prevented retreat in that direction. The rout was now complete, and great loss was inflicted on the enemy by all these columns. On the 16th, for the last time, the enemy had shown in some strength before the Alumbagh, which that day was held by only two of our regiments. Jung Bahadoor was requested to move to his left up the canal, and take the position in reverse from which our position at the Alumbagh had been so long annoyed. This was executed very well by his Highness, and he seized the positions, one after another, with very little loss to himself. The guns of the enemy, which the latter did not stop to take away, fell into his hands. On the 21st, Sir E. Lugard was directed to attack a stronghold, held by Moulyie, in the heart of the city. This he occupied after a sharp contest, and it now became possible to invite the return of the inhabitants, and to rescue the city from the horrors of this prolonged contest." "These stately buildings," writes the Times correspondent, "which had never before been entered by a European foot, except by a Commissioner of Oude on a state-day, were now open to the common soldier, and to the poorest camp-follower of our army. How their splendours vanished like snow in sunshine! The destruction around one, the shouting, the smashing noises, the yells of the Sikhs and natives, were oppressive. I was glad to get away just as our mortars began to thunder away at the enemy's works again. There were burning stockades, and thousands of pounds of powder near at hand. In every court there was abundance of all kinds of ammunition, except 6-pounder shot, which, as well as many 9-pounder balls, were rudely made of hammered iron. In one court we found a large brass mortar, with heaps of live brass and stone shells near it, but I could not find any fuses, as the enemy seldom used shell, notwithstanding that I saw a good many
